New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. L. DOTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME I. NUMBER 48. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1852. OFFICE, 56 GRAVIER ST.

The Angels of the Seven Planets,

Reading the Star of Bethlehem.

BY LONGFELLOW.

THE ANGELS.

The Angels of the planets Seven,
Across the shining fields of Heaven
The natal star we bring!
Dropping our seven-fold virtues down,
As priceless jewels in the crown
Of Christ, our new-born King.

RAPHAEL.

I am the Angel of the Sun.
Whose flaming wheels began to run
When God's almighty breath
Said to the darkness and the night,
Let there be light and there was light!
I bring the gift of Faith.

GABRIEL.

I am the Angel of the Moon.
Darkened, to be rekindled soon
Beneath the azure cope!
Nearest to earth, it is my ray
That best illumes the midnight way,
I bring the gift of Hope!

ANGEL.

The Angel of the Star of Love,
The Evening Star, that shines above
The place where lovers be,
Above all happy hearts and homes,
On roofs of thatch or golden domes,
I give him Charity.

ZOBIACHEL.

The Planet Jupiter is mine!
The mightiest star of all that shine,
Except the Sun alone!
He is the High Priest of the Dove,
And sends from his great throne above,
Justice, the Shield Stone!

MICHAEL.

The Planet Mercury, whose place
Is nearest to the Sun in space,
In my allotted sphere!
And with celestial ardor swift
I bear upon my hands the gift
Of heavenly Prudence here!

PAUL.

I am the Minister of Mars,
The strongest star among the stars!
My songs of power prelude
The march and battle of man's life,
And for the suffering and the strife,
I give him Fortitude!

ANATHIEL.

The Angel of the uttermost
Of all the shining, heavenly host,
From the far-off expanse
Of the Saturnian, endless space,
I bring the last, the crowning grace,
The gift of Temperance!

NOTES FROM ABROAD.

CHAMONIX, THE VILLAGE OF—THE MER DE GLACE—THE VALLEY OF THE ARVE—UNCLOUDED VIEW OF MOUNT BLANC—SWISS GUIDES.

CHAMONIX, Aug. 30, 1851.

MY DEAR M.: Chamonix is a little village at the base of Mt. Blanc. Here I arrived yesterday. The road from Geneva to this place was mostly in the valley of the Arve, a river that rises in a glacier of the Alps. The valley was from a hundred yards to a quarter of a mile wide, smiling and lovely: we were in fact riding for fifty miles through an apple orchard, the trees frequently forming an arbor over the road. On each hand were terrific sides of mountains, with cascades foaming from as far up as you could see, down to the valley, and shining against the deep green of pines and larches as a thread of silver lace on green velvet. Sometimes a mountain slope, for half a mile up, would be covered with vines, grain, orchards and Swiss cottages; then, all would be impracticable to human cultivation, or even approach.

Early this morning I arose and looked out the window to see if there was prospect of fair weather. At forty degrees above me I saw a rock, the size and shape of a camel, up in the sky—impending, like a falling meteor; the whole mountain, above and below, excepting this mass, was enveloped in cloud.

My first and only Alpine excursion was to the Mer de Glace, one of the great, indeed the greatest, glaciers of the Alps. This glacier is not a broad, smooth, glistening mass of ice, as I had supposed; it is a river of ice ten or twelve miles long, a mile wide, and from 200 to 2000 feet in thickness. It fills, or rather chokes up a great gorge which lies between snow-capped mountains, and mores down one foot every day, descending at an angle of thirty degrees. As the mass melts at the lower end, where its drippings forms a swift river, the ice from above presses its way down; the motion cracks it transversely and opens ten thousand chasms, each of which is a blue, bottomless abyss. Its surface looks like mountain-blocks of marble split from the quarry, and standing on edge irregularly together. Boulders of granite, weighing five hundred tons, lie lightly on the glacier, like pebbles on an ice-pond, and are borne down by it to the valley. Imagine a mountain with a motion of one foot per day! Really the speed seems as great as that of the floods of Niagara.

After looking at this terrible momentum, the wonder comes how it could be stayed; whether it be not easier to say, even to the ocean, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further." Walking out upon it you see death within a step, and feel yourself an atom. One visit is enough.

The sides of these high mountains are always shedding snow, ice and rocks, which all together form a glacier. There are many of them amongst the Alps. From these melt-ings the Arve, the Arveiron and other streams take their rise.

There is a class of men, or rather a race, who make it the business of life to understand the Alps, and to guide parties passing from one point to another. Without their coolness and experience to aid, travelers could do nothing in the way of exploring, or even visiting these savage solitudes. They are a sober, virtuous class, and win upon every one by their very noble qualities. From all that I hear, I doubt not they would die if necessary to the safety of those who put themselves under their guidance. These guides are ready even to ascend Mt. Blanc. Jaques Balmat, one of the most daring and experienced, was the man who first made the ascent when he was 70 years old. He started forth alone to explore some ice gorge far in amongst its almost inaccessible and unapproachable peaks. The old man was never heard of more. Whenever you read of any one's making the ascent of Mt. Blanc, you may set it down that the guides ascended it for him; that is, guides have been employed. They have gone before and behind him, told him where to put his pike or place his foot, tried for him every loose, dangerous stepping place, cut out steps for him on the very steep of the summit, and even carried him along, and lifted him up, and maybe brought him down, and thus secured to him the eclat and glory of having performed the hardy, perilous feat of ascending Mt. Blanc. All the guides get are the not being mentioned, and the stipulated sum. As twenty of them are usually employed, it costs about $500 to ascend the king of the Alps. All the travelers are waiting to see his hoary crown, for he seldom reveals his august head. The clouds rise and seem to be moving right off, and ready to lift their misty curtain, but when they are almost gone they let themselves down again, as if to screen him at his bidding. As we all watched anxiously their sublime hesitation, I understood what David has said of God, "Clouds and darkness are round about Him."

SEPTEMBER 31.

This morning I took a last look at Mount Blanc: the sun came out clearly, and there was not a cloud in the valley or upon the mountains; pure, lofty, uncompromising, enduring, unapproachable seemed this the highest of the Alps—like unto Him who made it; yet, as the sun lighted it up and fringed its top, was beautiful as a mountain of silver, and as if one might easily ascend and step off from it into Heaven. Every peak and dome and needle gleamed with white glory, and all the circle of mountains gave witness to the majesty of Jehovah.

"Above me are the Alps,
The palaces of Nature, whose vast walls
Have pinnacled in clouds their snowy scalps,
And throned Eternity in icy halls
Of cold sublimity, where forms and falls
The Avalanche—the thunderbolt of snow!
All that expands the spirit, yet appals,
Gather around these summits, as to show
How earth may pierce to Heaven, yet leave
Vain man below."

K.

The Literary Attractions of the Bible.

BY REV. JAMES HAMILTON,

Minister of the Scotch Church, Regent Square, London. Delivered before the Young Men's Christian Association, in Exeter Hall, Nov. 27, 1849.

[Continued.]

But instead of quoting illustrative passages from what may be called the pastoral and descriptive poetry of Scripture, I shall read one which, while a graphic description, like most kindred portions of holy writ, owes its sublimity to its moral power: and I quote it the rather because our own translation does not bring out its entire significance. It is the 28th chapter of Job, and the question is, Where is wisdom to be found? and, What is the abode or hiding-place of understanding? Is it in deposit hidden in the bowels of the earth—a treasure for which we must ransack the caverns underneath, or rummage in the rifted rock? Is it a secret for which we must bribe the graves or which death alone can whisper in the ear? And so it commences with a magnificent account of the miner's doings underground:

"Truly there is a mine for the silver,
And a place for the gold so fine:
Iron is dug up from the earth,
And the earth pours forth its copper.
Man digs into darkness,
And explores to the utmost bound
The stores of dimness and death shade;
He breaks up the veins from the matrice,
Which, unthought of, and underfoot,
Are drawn forth to gleam among mankind
The surface puts forth bread,
But the subterranean winds a fiery region.
Its stones are the sapphires' bed,
And it hides the dust of gold.
It is a path which the eagle knows not,
Nor has the eye of the vulture scanned.
The lion's whelp has not tracked it,
Nor the raveuing lion pounced on it.
The miner thrusts his hands on the sparry ore,
And overturns the mountains by their roots.
He cuts a channel through the rock,
And espies each precious gem.
He binds up the oozing waters,
And darts a radiance through the gloom.
But O, where shall Wisdom be found?
And where is the place of Understanding?
Man knows not its source,
For it is not to be found in the land of the living
The sea says, 'It is not in me;'
And 'Not in me,' echoes the abyss.
Solid gold cannot be given for it,
Nor silver be weighed for its purchase,
It cannot be bought for the ingot of Ophir,
For the precious onyx or the sapphire.
The burnished gold and crystal cannot equal it,
Nor golden trinkets match it.
Talk not of corals or pearls,
For the attractions of wisdom is beyond rubies.
The topaz of Ethiopia cannot rival it,
Nor the purest bullion barter it.
Whence, then, cometh Wisdom?
And where is the place of Understanding?
Hid from the eyes of all living,
And unseen by the fowls of the air.
Destruction and Death say,
'We have heard its fame with our ears,'
God understands its track;
He knows its dwelling-place;
For to the ends of the earth he sees,
And under all heaven surveys.
When he weighed out the air
And meted out the water;
When he fixed the course of the rain,
And the path of the hurricane,
Then did he eye it and proclaim it;
He prepared it and searched it out,
And unto man he said,
'Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is Wisdom,
And to depart from evil is Understanding.'"

It would consume all this evening were I reading from the prophets and the psalms those passages of grandeur which make the sacred text so awful and august; and of that class I shall read no more. But perhaps the sublime, though the highest order of literary effort, is not, after all, the most popular. Were we putting it to the world at large, we should probably find that the books they like best are those which are less exalted above the every-day level, and whose simple incidents, and cheerful glimpses, and human pathos, bring them home to every man's comprehension and feeling. In this sort of narrative that world's book, the Bible, abounds. Do you ask for tenderness? "And Ruth said to her mother-in-law, Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me." Do you ask for pathos? "And Cushi said, Tidings, my lord the king; for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that arose up against thee. And the king said unto Cushi, Is the young man Absalom, safe? And Cushi answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise up against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is. And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went thus he said, O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son." Or do you ask for natural, simple and affecting narrative? "A certain man had two sons; and the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living. And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living. And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want. And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks which the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him. And when he came to himself he said, How many hired servants of my father's house have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. But the father said unto his servants, Bring forth the best robe and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf and kill it; and let us eat and be merry; for this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."

I could willingly extend these remarks to other species of composition, and would like to show particularly how many models of eloquent argument and engaging discourse are contained in the New Testament. But on the wide field of revelation, with its intellectual opulence, I forbear to enter. I can easily understand how the Bible was one of the four volumes which always lay on Byron's table: and it would be easy to fill a lecture with the testimonies, witting or unwitting, which painters, sculptors, orators and poets have rendered to the most thought-suggesting book in all the universe. It never aims at fine writing. It never steps aside for a moment for the sake of a felicitous expression or a good idea. It has only one end—to tell the world about God's great salvation: and yet the wonder is, that it has incidentally done more to supply the world with powerful and happy diction, and literature with noble thoughts and images, and the fine arts with memorable subjects, than perhaps all other books that have been written. The world's Maker is the Bible's Author, and the same profusion which furnished so lavishly the abode of man, has filled so richly and adorned so brilliantly the book of man.

And just as that Bible is the great storehouse and repertory of intellectual wealth, so I must add that its vital truth is the grand source of intellectual power. When Sir Samuel Romilly visited Paris, immediately after the first French revolution, he remarked, "Every thing I saw convinced me that, independently of our future happiness and our sublimest enjoyments in this life, religion is necessary to the comforts, the conveniences, and even the elegances and lesser pleasures of life. Not only did I never meet with a writer truly eloquent who did not at least affect to believe in religion, but I never met with one in whom religion was not the richest source of his eloquence." I am persuaded that in things intellectual the rule will hold, that piety is power. I am persuaded that no productions of genius will survive to the end of all things, in which there is not something of God; and I am further persuaded, that no book can exercise a lasting ascendency over mankind on which his blessing has not been implored, and in which his Spirit does not speak. Of all the powers and faculties of the human mind, the noblest is the one which God has created for himself; and if that reverential or adoring faculty do not exist, or be by suicidal hands extirpated, the world will soon cease to feel the man who had no fear of God. The stateliest compartment in this human soul is the one which, in creating it, Jehovah reserved for his own throne-room and presence-chamber; and however curiously decorated or gorgeously furnished the other compartments be, if this be empty and void, it will soon diffuse a blank and beggarly sensation over all the rest. And thus, while the Voltaires and Rousseaus, of atheist memory, are waxing old and vanishing from the firmament of letters, names of less renown, but more religion, brighten to a greater lustre. So true is it that no man can long keep a hold of his fellow men, unless he himself first has hold of God.

But if a sincere and strenuous Theism be thus important, such natural faith in God as buoyed the wing of Plato in his long and ethereal flights, or bulged the Saxon muscle of Shakspeare in his mightiest efforts, incomparably more prevalent is that intellectual prowess which a scriptural faith produces. He is no unknown God whom the believer in Jesus worships, and it is no ordinary inspiration which that God of light and love supplies to his servants. And were it not for fear of tediousness, I would rejoice to enumerate one genius after another which the Gospel kindled, if it did not create. That Gospel, beyond all controversy, was our own Milton's poetic might. This was the struggling energy which, after years of deep musing and wrapt devotion, after years of mysterious muttering and anxious omen, sent its pyramid of flame into old England's dingy hemisphere, and poured its molten wealth, its lava of gold and gems, fetched deep from classic and patriarchal times, adown the russet steep of Puritan theology. This was the fabled rod which struck from the sward of Cowper's mild and silent life a joyous Castalian fountain deep as Milton's fire, and like it tinctured with each learned and sacred thing it touched in rising, but soft and full as Siloah's fount, which flowed first by the oracle of God. And that Gospel was the torch which, on the hills of Renfrewshire, fired a young spirit, Pollok—himself both sacrifice and altar-pile—till Britain spied the light, and wondered at the brief but brilliant beacon. But why name the individual instances? What is modern learning, and the march of intellect, and the reading million, but one great monument of the Gospel's quickening power? Three hundred years ago the classics were revived; but three hundred years ago the Gospel was restored. Digging in the Pompeii of the middle age, Lorenzo and Leo found the lamps in which the old classic fires had burned; but there was no oil in the lamps, and they had long since gone out. For models of candelabra and burners, there could not be better than Livy and Horace and Plato and Pindar: but the faith which, once, filled them, the old Pagan fervor, was long since extinct, and the lamps were only lit for the shelf of the antiquary. But it was then that, in the crypt of the convent, Luther and Zwingle and Melancthon observed a line of supernatural light, and with lever and mattock lifted the grave-stone, and found the Gospel which the Papist had buried. There it had flamed. "a light shining in a dark place," through unsuspected ages, unquenchable in its own immortality, the long-lost lamp in the sepulchre. Jupiter was dead, and Minerva had melted into ether, and Apollo was grey with eld, and the most elegant idols of antiquity had gone to the moles and the bats. But there is One who cannot die, and does not change; and the Fountain of Scriptural learning is He who is also the Fountain of life, the Alpha and Omega, Jesus the Son of God. From his Gospel it was that the old classic lamps, when filled with fresh oil, were kindled again; and at that Gospel it was that Bacon and Locke and Milton and Newton and all the mighty spirits of modern Europe, caught the fire which made them blaze the meteors of our firmament, the marvels of our favored time.

And should any one now chance to hear me who is ambitious to be the lasting teacher or the extensive light of society—to paint or think or sing for a wider world than our railway readers, let him remember that nothing can immortalize the works of genius if there be no Gospel in them. The facts of that Gospel are the world's main stock of truth—the fire of that Gospel is the only Promethean spark which can ignite our dead truths into quenchless and world quickening powers.

For practical and devotional purposes, we could desire no better version of the Bible than our own, truthful and time-hallowed translation. But for those purposes to which we have this evening adverted—for the sake of its intelligent literary perusal, we have sometimes wished that, either in the originals or in English, some judicious editor would give us, each in a separate fasciculus, the several contributions of each sacred penman: As it is, with the sixty-six volumes of the Bible all compressed into a single tome, we are apt to regard them, not only as homogeneous inspiration, which they are, but as contemporary compositions, which they are not. We forget that, in point of time, there is the same interval between Moses and Matthew as there is between the close of the canon and the compilation of the Augsburg confession. And with each portion divided into those numbered paragraphs which we call verses, we are apt to lose sight of the characteristic style of the various compositions. An epistle looks like a poem, and a history reads like a collection of adages or apothegms. But allowing one book to contain the minor prophets, and another the general epistles, there would still remain upwards of twenty inspired penmen whose writings might, much to their mutual illustration, be bound up in separate volumes, and preserved in their individual identity. We should thus have in one volume all that Moses wrote, and in another, chronologically arranged, all the writings of Paul. One volume might contain all the psalms of David: another, those psalms, nearly as numerous, which were indited by Moses and Asaph and others. In one cover might be bound up the Gospel, the Epistles, and the Apocalypse of John; and in another that divine song, those confessions of a converted philosopher, and that ancient "wealth of nations," which were written down by Solomon. And under such an arrangement might we not hope that books, usually read in chapters or smaller morsels, might sometimes be read continuously, taken down from the shelf, as another attractive book would be taken, on a leisure evening, and read through at a single sitting? Might we not hope, in such a case, that while those who now read the Old and New Testaments would read them still, some who at present do not read the Bible might be tempted to read Paul, Moses and Isaiah? And is it too sanguine too expect that, as the searching of scriptures and sacred knowledge thus increased, some who first resorted to the book for literary entertainment might learn from it the lessons which make wise to life everlasting!

[To be continued.]

JEWS PREACHING THE GOSPEL.—Three hundred converted Jews are now engaged in various parts of the world, in preaching that Jesus Christ is "He that was to come."

The transition from joy to sorrow is easiest in pure minds; as the true diamond, when moistened by the breath, recovers its lustre sooner than false ones.

HOPE.—A bright and beautiful bird is hope; it comes to us mid darkness and storm, and sings sweetest when our spirits are saddest; and when the lone soul is weary and longs to pass away, it warbles its sweetest notes, and lightens again the slender fibres of our hearts that grief has been wearing away.

ON A WEDDING.

You are to be married Mary?
This hour as I silent lie
In the dreamy light of morning,
Your wedding hour draws nigh
Miles off you are rising dressing,
To stand amid the bridal throng
In the same old room we played in,
You and I—when we were young

Your bridesmaids—they were our playmates,
Those old rooms—every wall
Could speak of our childish frolics,
Love, jealousies grand and small
Do you mind how puzzles changed us,
And smiled on the word "forget"
'Twas a romance—yet some where
I've kept my fancy yet.

Do you mind our verses written
Together! our dreams of fame;
Of love—how we shared all secrets
When the sweet mystery came?
It is no mystery now, Mary,
It is unveiled year by year;
Till—this is your marriage morning,
And I am lying here.

I cannot picture your face, Mary,
The face of the bride to-day;
You have outgrown my knowledge
In years that have slipped away;
I see but the girlish likeness,
Brown eyes and brown falling hair
God knows, I did love you dearly,
And was pleased that you were fair

I am glad that you are happy, Mary!
These tears, did you see them fall,
Would show, though you have forgotten,
I have remembered all.
And though my cup is left empty,
And yours with its joys runs over,
God keep you its sweetness, Mary,
Brimming forever more!

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"Reduce the Price of the Books,"

Methodist looks, of course, as that is the thing we're going to talk about, as old father Axley said when he brought up Judge White "all standing," about chewing and spurting his tobacco over the house of God. Yes, this is the voice from the north, south, east and west of our beloved Methodism, "Reduce the price of our books." It did very well. I have no doubt, in the early days of Methodism, to sell our books for as much as we could get for them. But, Mr. Editor, you have been apprised, time and again, that we live in a progressive age; and hence it will not do for us to travel in Pennsylvania wagons, as the lamented Cookman would say, when we can traverse the globe by steam, and talk by electricity. We must keep pace with the times, or the times will leave us far in the rear. Aye, no, sir, it would not do for us to sit upon undressed slab-benches in the house of God: neither will it become us to sit promiscuously, as did our fathers, when we go to Church. Why, then, should we not ask progression—yes, that's the word pro hâc vice—I suppose, however, my Bro. F., of Eutaw, Ala., would call it "reform," in the price of our books? If we do not, it is quite evident to my mind we will, ere long, very sensibly feel it. Yea, do we not now already feel it? If not, why this voice from every point of the compass, "Reduce, reduce the price of our books!" The brethren stationed in the city full, do not know altogether how to appreciate such calls as are now being made in reference to this subject. The call is not made, I apprehend, because our people have not books at all; it is because they have not our books. And why, you may ask, have they not our books? Not because the preachers can not, or will not supply them, but because they can get others cheaper. For instance, they can get them from twenty-five to fifty per cent cheaper from the American Tract Society than from us; and, sir, I presume you have no idea of the vast multitude of books this benevolent Society is scattering broadcast over the face of the land, and especially amongst our Methodist people; and all this, Mr. Editor, not because their books are better, but merely because they are cheaper than ours.

But, it may be inquired, how may this evil—for evil in one sense it is—be remedied? To my mind the remedy is easy. Just let us change our policy on this subject, as has already been suggested, time and again, and more recently by the Rev. P. P. Smith, in the N. O. C. Advocate of Nov. 15. The suggestions there thrown out by him contain more truth than poetry, and are entitled to our consideration, because they are practical, and this is what we want. What harm would there be in trying the progressive principle of cheapness, to this subject? If, as Brother Smith says, and I do not doubt his word, as I believe him to be a man of veracity, and as I have some experience myself in trying to sell our books, he could sell five copies to one of Clarke's Commentary, and ten to one of Wesley's Sermons, how much, we ask, would be gained by the operation? In the first place, five, instead of one family only, would be blessed with the Commentary, and ten instead of one with Wesley's Sermons. In the second place, suppose the Commentary now to be sold for eighteen dollars. This eighteen dollars, then, would be all the money realized by our present policy; but now change the policy, and sell them for ten dollars, and here you have the next progression, by reduction, of fifty dollars. So with Wesley's Sermons. One copy now is sold for three dollars. Three dollars is all, then, that is realized by our present policy. Change the policy and sell them for two dollars, and it brings up, as by magic, the sum total to twenty dollars.

This looks finely, Mr. Editor, on paper, does it not? Well, sir, I am fully convinced it would work admirably if we could only see it in operation. Reduce the price of them, then; instead of making an annual dividend, as is now our custom, to the several Annual Conferences, let the revenue arising from the sale of said books be applied as a bonus, upon which the price is to be annually reduced. For in the name of common sense what benefit do we, as Methodist preachers, expect to derive from the mere pittance that is annually dealt out to us from this source? It is but a drop in the bucket; and I am clearly of the opinion that this policy of our Book Concern has been more detrimental than otherwise to those who have always been its beneficiaries. For thousands of dollars, I have no doubt, have been hindered in our Conference collections, arising from this very fact or policy of an annual dividend. For it is the opinion of many of our people, that if they do not pay the preachers on their respective circuits their just dues, that it will be paid at Conference, out of the funds of this Book Concern. I speak the things that I know; hence many of them trouble not themselves about making provision to pay their preacher. Remove now, we say, this difficulty or objection, and you will, I doubt not, see a convalescent state, to some extent, in the support of our ministry; for they would then have no excuse for not purchasing our books, and then the old hackneied excuse for not paying quarterage will be out of the way, and every year's sale would enable the publishers to reduce them to the lowest possible price, so that all our people could be blest with our very best publications.

But let no one think that low prices will not bring in a large revenue to the Church. Many of our citizens thought that a reduction of postage would bring the treasury largely in debt. But what is the practical result? Why, so well does this new postal arrangement work, that there will be a still further reduction prayed for, I understand, at the approaching session of Congress. It works so admirably; and now is not somewhat of the same principle involved in this new postal system, involved, also, in the reduction of the price of our books?

JAMES A. CLEMENT.

Glennville, Ala., Nov. 24, 1851.

From the Christian Advocate and Journal.

LIFE AND WRITINGS OF DR. OLIN.

MR. EDITOR: Since the death of Dr. Olin, much regret has been expressed that he left no more of the productions of his pen. Doubtless there is not so much cause for regret here as was at first thought. It is believed that from various sources, printed and unprinted, enough might be gathered together to make several volumes of works. Olin paid much attention to belles lettres while pursuing his collegiate course, and ever after was in the habit of writing when his health and strength would permit. He delighted in the exercises, and wrote with such care and accuracy, that his first draughts frequently, if not in most cases, went to the press; and that too with very little erasing or interlining. Such being the facts, it is probably the case that much left by him in manuscript is already fit for the press, and that more would need but little revising. It appears, from a communication in the last Advocate, that of late years the Doctor has written considerable that he left unpublished. The author of that communication speaks of Olin's thinking with his pen since he wrote his travels. This he was in the habit always of doing, though he may have cultivated that habit more of late years.

He employed his pen in religious composition in the early part of his ministry. Some years ago, the writer of this article was shown by Bishop Andrew, in a bound file of the Wesleyan Journal, several articles over the signature of Timothy, of singular richness and beauty, written by Olin. On his leaving Franklin college, Ga., for Randolph Macon, Va., several communications appeared in the Georgia papers relative to the supply of the professorship which he vacated. Judge Longstreet was brought forward by the Methodists; and it was thought that he was unjustly rejected to make way for a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, which denomination was considered as having more than its share of influence in the College, it being a State institution. Olin's name was so freely used that he felt compelled to enter the controversy. He chose for his organ a paper in Augusta, called, I think, the Constitutionalist, and gave to the public some communications of much grace and dignity, and decidedly effectual in vindicating the positions taken by himself and his friends.

Papers of superior excellence, written by him on the state of the Church, its usages and various enterprises, appeared in the Advocate in 1834 and 1835. They won unbounded approbation at the time, and were united not simply to the condition of things then existing, but might now be republished with, perhaps, the same good effects that attended them then. His inaugural address on entering upon his duties at Randolph Macon College was published in pamphlet form, and was no doubt one of the best expositions and vindications of classical learning ever given to the world. There is his controversy with Dr. Robinson relative to archæological discoveries at Jerusalem; and various other miscellaneous articles written from time to time—all of which, or well-nigh all, might (and ought they not?) be gathered up and embodied in his works.

His memoirs will doubtless be published; and will not somebody be employed to collect and publish his writings both printed and unprinted?—and cannot that one, who may be thus employed, be placed in such circumstances as to be able to devote his whole time and undivided attention to the business, till he has brought forth his works, not partially, but wholly completed?

Frequent mention has been made of Olin's connection with Tuberuncle Academy, in South Carolina. The circumstances that conducted him thither seem plainly providential, as though God designed to bring him there, for the purpose of turning him away from the meshes and gloom of scepticism, from the vain aspirations of worldly glory, and of directing him to the cross and service of the Redeemer. Dr. Olin's own words, in once relating these circumstances, were nearly as follows; the relation being given in Augusta, Ga.:—"On leaving College I came to this State with the view of teaching, and expected to be employed in Putnam county, but was disappointed in obtaining a situation there. I was stopping, without any employment, at a public-house in this city; and, on taking up a paper, my eye lit upon an advertisement for a teacher in Tabernacle Academy, in Abbeville district, South Carolina, which lies up the river from this place. Guided by the light of that advertisement, I made my way up the river, and arrived at the place of the location of the Academy; a place which I found, to my astonishment, to be almost bare of houses, it being more country place. I inquired for some suitable one to whom I might make known my business, and was directed to the frame of a new building partly covered, where I should find one of the trustees of the Academy. I there found a man at work on the building, with his coat off, and shirt sleeves rolled up, whom I found to be the trustee to whom I was directed—a Rev. Mr. Gleun, whom I afterwards found, whatever may have been my first impressions, to be a strong and excellent man." The Doctor gave quite an amusing account of this his first interview with Mr. Gleun, and of the soldier-like dinner taken at this half-covered building. Learning that this gentleman was a Gospel minister, it was with some surprise that he heard him express himself thus: "We cannot do much this week; to-day is Friday, to-morrow is Saturday, and we will go and drive,"—that is, hunt deer. "I cared nothing about driving," said Olin, "but concluded that I would accept of the invitation. I took my station as they directed, for I knew nothing of the business myself; and there I stood and guarded my part of the woods; while others scoured the forest, but in the whole day did n't even see a deer."

The account of his engagement and commencement in teaching there was as follows: "On inquiring where the Academy was, I was pointed to a log cabin as being the building; but, said Mr. Gleun, 'our new Academy,' meaning the building then in process of erection, will be finished this fall. You will teach in that till the new one is finished.' I engaged for $700 per year. I began in the log cabin. The door was hung on a couple of sticks, and the windows were miserable. I drew my table to the wall; where I was supplied with light that came in between two logs. In a few weeks the school was removed to the new building. I had a large number of scholars, and continued in that Academy three years."

It may be proper to remark, in reference to Mr. Gleun's connection with driving deer, that ministers in the South are not given to idle amusements. Indeed, driving is not always entered upon as a mere matter of amusement, but sometimes as a means of obtaining a useful article of food. In this instance it may have been proposed for the purpose of affording a pleasing and diverting amusement suited to the age and condition of a stranger.

I wish to make a remark respecting Dr. Olin's mental habits. From some things written, it would seem that some have imbibed the impression that such were his extraordinary mental powers, that he had only to rise before an audience, and, without any previous meditation, deliver a powerful, well-arranged discourse. There never was a greater mistake. Dr. Olin was a laborious, continuous thinker. His masterly pulpit efforts were preceded by the most thorough preparation. His surpassing mental powers were qualified for such preparation, by severe, thorough, systematic education.

AN ACQUAINTANCE.

Nov. 25th, 1851.

The Newspaper.

In no other way can so much, so varied, so useful information be imparted, and under circumstances so favorable for educating the child's mind, as through a judicious, well-conducted newspaper. To live in a village was, once, to be shut up and contracted. But now a man may be a hermit, and yet a cosmopolite. He may live in the forests, walking miles to a post-office, having a mail but once a week, and he shall be found as familiar with the living world as the busiest actor in it! For the newspaper is a spy-glass by which he brings near the most distant things—a microscope, by which he leisurely examines the most minute—an ear-trumpet, by which he collects and brings within his hearing all that is said and done all over the earth—a museum, full of curiosities—a picture gallery, full of living pictures from real life, drawn not on canvas, but with printer's ink on paper. The effect, in liberalizing and enlarging the mind of the young, of this weekly commerce with the world, will be apparent to any who will ponder it. Once, a liberal education could be completed only by foreign travel. The sons of the wealthy only could indulge in this costly benefit. But now the poor man's son can learn as much at home, as a hundred years ago, a gentleman could learn by journeying the world over! For, while there are some advantages in going out into the world, it is the poor man's privilege to have the world come and see him! The newspaper is a great collector, a great traveler, a great lecturer. It is the common people's encyclopædia, the lyceum, the college. [Rev. H. W. Beecher.

SABBATH LETTER-WRITING.—"Strange," said a postmaster, not long since, on Monday morning, as he emptied a huge mass of letters from his box, "that people will not attend church on the Sabbath instead of staying at home to write letters." The ordinary number of packages made up on other days was stated to be about 40; on Mondays they sometimes amounted to 125, and usually are double the number of those on other days of the week. How many of these letters are consistent with the command to "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

St. James does not contradict St. Paul, but they both very well agree. One tells us of the principle, and the other of the practice; and both refer to the same thing, and the distribution of the same blessing, that wherever grace reigns, it will reign through righteousness.

Every thing has its snare—and even things lawful may be enjoyed in an unlawful and unwarrantable manner.

The actor is allowed to represent imaginary things as though they were real; while the minister of the truths of God is often stigmatised as a madman, unless he represents real things as though they were imaginary.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 3.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THIBODAUX, La., Dec. 31, 1851.

MY DEAR PRO TEM.: There is great room for improvement in traveling facilities in Louisiana, as our journey to this place proves. I trust that the Convention appointed in your city, for next Friday, on Railroads, will not end in resolutions.

Taking the steamboat Dr. Batey at 5 P. M., on Monday, we awoke at Donaldsonville. At this point the Mississippi spills out, through a breach in its west bank, a streamlet of water—the bayou Lafourche. A Frenchman last night told me that this name, meaning a "fork," was given it because of its shape. After running about seventy miles the bayou prongs, and in about twenty miles more empties into the Gulf of Mexico. I found it much smaller than I expected—too shallow, just now, at its river end, for our steamer to pass in. Its channel is uniformly narrow, and the banks even and sloping. One is constantly struck with the canal appearance of the bayou. This illusion is strengthened by the canal arrangements in actual use, at such a season of low water as this. On each side is a tow-path and crafts of various dimensions, from heavy flatboats to gondolas, are going up and down, cordelled or drawn by long ropes attached to horses on shore.

Our journey from Donaldsonville to this place, 35 miles, was a novel and lively chapter of incidents. The Bishop and his party were moving off in the only land carriages the village afforded, as our party came ashore on Tuesday morning. Your humble servant proposed we should buy a well-trimmed Lady of the Lake looking skiff, and row ourselves, taking it by turns. But when the strongest and largest one of the party, Bro. E. R. P., of whom the most was expected in the way of propelling, objected to the proposition, it was withdrawn. The end of all projects for getting to the seat of Conference in time for its opening, was the acceptance of terms made by Henry, a negro boy, speaking now French, now English, to take us, twelve in all, in his scow, at $2 a head, on the cordelling plan. Passengers and carpet-bags were soon stowed away in a float that seemed at no point ever to have felt the carpenter's plane; withal, it was thoroughly soaked. A line was put out, and on the farther shore appeared our locomotive—a leaf, uncurried grey mare, bestrode by a Creole lad, rejoicing in the name of Jean Baptiste.

Time and space would fail me to tell of the disasters that befel us. Notwithstanding our Englishman was at the dim, as he called it, and G——n before the mast, we got on badly. The grey mare was slow, and the path heavy, the cordelle hitched over stumps and stakes times more than I can tell, and the rain came down in drenching torrents. We were forced to seek shelter, and disembarked in a gusty storm. The disembarkation scene—hats blown off, cloaks flying, umbrellas turned inside out, and slipping travelers climbing slippery slopes and mounting over the levee—would have been a subject for Cruikshank. The transfer from Arkansas, Th—t, was along, and was sadly disconcerted at this initiation into Louisiana Conference itinerancy. M. Litorey, a sugar planter, received us and showed us no small kindness. Being warmed by his hospitable fire, and invigorated by a basket of loaves and other things which the thoughtful F—z—e had provided, we were again under way. Night overtook us at Napoleonville—just half way. This morning at 11½ we reached this place, and made our way to the Methodist Church, arriving just as the annual sermon, by Dr. Rivers, was concluded.

CONFERENCE—MONDAY.

Conference was opened by Bishop Paine at 9 A. M., with religious exercises. The Conference elected P. M. Goodwyn Secretary, and after appointing Committees, and attending to some other preliminary business, the examination of character was entered upon. Complaints were made of an elder, as holding and preaching heterodox views on the subject of Baptism. A special committee was appointed on the case.

As yet I hear of but few additions to the traveling connection on probation. The brethren hail with high satisfaction the transfers that have been made to their ranks. One member of the Conference has died during the year—B. Benton. His obituary appeared in the "Advocate" a month or two ago.

I have just returned from an interesting meeting to-night. At the close of services, the end of the year having been alluded to, this hymn was delightfully sung—

"Come, let us anew our journey pursue,
Roll round with the year," etc.

And so it is: the sun will never rise more on 1851. Its history is written—in heaven. In many respects it has been an eventful year. What are its net results to the Church of Christ?

H. N. McTYEIRE.

Mississippi Conference.

COMMITTEE OF EXAMINATION.—First Year, O. L. Nash, H. M. Booth, G. W. Morris.

Second Year.—G. C. Light, J. L. Forsythe, W. H. Seat.

Third Year.—A. T. M. Fly, H. Williamson, L. Wiley.

Fourth Year.—P. Cooper, L. D. Ercanbrack, John C. Miller.

Visiters to Centenary College.—G. C. Light, J. L. Forsythe, W. H. Seat.

Sharon Female College.—L. Pearce, P. Cooper, O. L. Nash.

South-Western Bible Society,
OF NEW ORLEANS, LA.

This Society held its second anniversary on the 31st, in the First Presbyterian Church, of this city. The President, J. A. Maybin, Esq., presiding, called the meeting to order by introducing the Rev. Charles Goodrich, of the Episcopal Church, who opened the exercises by reading a select portion of Scripture and an appropriate and fervent address to the throne of grace.

An appropriate hymn was sung by the choir and congregation, after which the annual report was presented and read by W. H. Foster, Esq., the Corresponding Secretary.

The report contains many points of interest and exhibits the society in a prosperous condition; but as the report will be published we defer further remarks thereon, till we have a copy before us.

A motion to adopt the report was made by James Saul, Esq., and seconded by Wm. M. Randolph, Esq., who supported the resolution and report at some length, in a truly eloquent, forcible and effective address.

The power and influence of Bible truth were beautifully and forcibly illustrated by example, and the importance of the diffusion of that truth, enforced with zeal and ability.

Mr. R. was followed by the Rev. Dr. Scott, of the Presbyterian Church, who addressed the audience in support of the report in his usual, happy and feeling manner.

Dr. S. commenced by reading two articles, selected from our city journals, exhibiting the commercial advantages which the geographical position of New Orleans gives to it, and the importance of cultivating and improving those advantages, and, from these as a text, the preacher argued, still greater importance of improving the advantages the position New Orleans gives it in a moral and religious sense. Hundreds of thousands of dollars and years of labor were being expended in the erection of a Customhouse in this city. He was no friend of Customhouses and passports; he much preferred the Bible House. A Bible House erected in New Orleans would do more good than all the Customhouses from St. Petersburgh to Cape Horn. Dr. S. forcibly illustrated the power and influence of the Bible upon national progression and national happiness by comparison of Mexico and New England, of Scotland and Italy.

Differences existed between these nations which difference of race could not account for: origin of blood could not do it: he believed much more in the Bible than in Saxon blood.

The Bible was the foundation of our liberties, the origination of our charities, and of all the kindly and benevolent feelings of society, and with zeal and eloquence he exhorted the audience to give their aid and co-operation to the object of the society.

The report was then unanimously adopted. The meeting was one of decided interest and we regret that the inclemency of the evening prevented a more general attendance.

We publish this week a very interesting communication from our beloved Dr. Boring, the indefatigable missionary in California. We shall have something to say on this subject in our next.

A RIGHT SPIRIT.

The true and plain theory of development of the kingdom of God is from within. Upon this the Saviour acted in establishing his Church: to this many of his discourses are directed. "Make the tree good" was his prescription for securing good fruit. Men are slow to learn, but it is even so, that a corrupt tree can not bring forth good fruit. It may be stuck on, but it did not grow there. Many things will make it evident, even to a casual observer, that it is an assumption and not a production. Such fruit will be out of season and out of character; tasteless; something worn rather than borne. All outward manifestations of piety, disconnected from an inward, living experience, are liable to an irregularity and unnaturalness, not to say awkwardness, that detects them. Who has not heard a shout in a religious assembly that was dry, harsh and grating even upon ears used to glad sounds and not fastidious! A louder noise, that seems to come from the heart and not the throat only, gives no offence.

Notwithstanding a few set phrases, "the fullness of the heart" will supply the mouth with those very words, and enough of them, too, that give character to speech. This fountain, ever seeking vent, will find it somehow, somewhere, at some time: no human vigilance, ingenuity or power can repress it. When the lips are opened and the tongue is set agoing, the genuine issues will find their way out. The unguarded moment comes, the unlooked for event is sprung upon him who is acting a part, and all unconsciously the revelations of the inward man are made.

The "wise man" regulated the issues of life by regulating the heart. It is the easiest way, the shortest way, the surest way, the only way of controlling them. Can one always pick his words and measure them so as to speak kindly of others when his heart is full of bitterness toward them? Can he treat them courteously, affectionately, when his spirit is surcharged with envy, pride or hatred? Let him love them; let him have charity; let him seek humility, esteeming others better than himself; let him get an answer to David's prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me;" then shall the gall not be found on his lips; then shall his rebukes be pointed, but not poisoned.

In a certain state of the heart no amount of watchfulness will avail for avoiding sin: washing cannot be superceded by watching. The volcanic eruption must take place at some point on the surface of that mountain whose inward fires are unquenced. There are more exposed points in life than the most wary can guard when the spirit is not right. Any occasion will be enough for "bringing forth sin," where murders, thefts, adulteries and evil thoughts abound in the heart, ready to proceed forth.

That is spiritual empiricism which stops short of this seat of disease. The rules of holy living which do not begin at a clean heart, a right spirit, will be found defective in practice because they are so in principle. He that follows them faithfully will have a weary go-round of it, and be taken up in exchanging one form of sin for another—but all the while it is sin, sin. On the contrary, the outgoings of life that take their start from a "right spirit," will be likely to take their direction from it, too. The fountain that is sweet can not send forth bitter waters.

The Bible on the Pacific.

Who will not rejoice at the early and systematic diffusion of the Word of God that has obtained already in California! We gather from the C. C. Advocate the following statistics of the San Francisco Bible Society, which were presented at its late anniversary. Rev. D. O. Shattuck is President of the Society:

Number of volumes sold at Depository and by Colporteurs	714
Number in English	268
" Foreign languages	446
Total	714
Number of volumes distributed by donation	327
Number of volumes in Chinese, mostly copies of Evangelists and Acts of the Apostles	515
Number of ships supplied with Scriptures	25
Amount of sales during the year by Colporteurs, and at the Dep'y	$943 95
Amount of sales reported by Rev. Mr. Douglas	100 40
" " " Rev. Mr. Willey	97 50
" " San Jose Bible Society	90 00
	$1231 85
Total sales of the Bibles and Testaments of Am. Bible Society	1130 85
Amount received from donation and subscriptions	$730 10
Amount of books received from Am. Bible Society, as per invoices	$1991 74
Amount repaid A. B. S.	938 18
Amount still due A. B. Society	$1053 56
Amount of books on hand at Dep'y	632 93
Amount of books at different local depositories, viz.: Sacramento, San Jose, Stockton, Los Angeles, San Diego, Sonoma, Napa, Sonora, Benicia, Jamestown, Maquolumne Hill, Nevada, Marysville	$292 83
	$925 76

From the foregoing statistics, it will be seen that nearly one thousand copies of the Bible, and portions of the Word of God, have been circulated the past year among foreign population, including the Chinese, in addition to those in English. To many it has come as an unknown book; others have received it as a treasure long desired. Some, after gratifying an idle curiosity, will lay it by and perhaps forget it. Others, and may God grant the number may be many, will read with interest; and precious results may attend this circulation of the truth, followed by the Spirit of God, and the sympathies and prayers of the Christian church.

PRINCETON COLLEGE.—The triennial catalogue of the Princeton College gives the following summary of all the officers and graduates of that institution, from its foundation in 1748 to the last commencement: Graduates 3184; admitted to honorary degrees, 530; graduates clergymen, 588; graduates in public offices, 200; graduates deceased, 1282; graduates surviving, 1952. Since its formation, the college has had 9 presidents, 132 trustees, (of whom only 26 are living,) 37 professors, and 128 tutors, and has had 21 governers of the province and State, as ex-officio president of the board of trustees.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERY.—Alexandor von Humboldt publishes, in the Gazette de Spener, some particulars of his interesting discovery, at Athens, of the council-chamber where the five hundred hold their deliberations. At a depth of one foot below the surface, he had come upon a large mass of inscriptions, columns, statues, etc., which forbid a doubt that there had been the seat of that building. The explorations have not gone on as rapidly as they might, on account of the expense. There is little doubt, however, that the discovery is of extraordinary importance.

From the New York Observer.

KOSSUTH AND METHODIST CLERGY.

On Wednesday of last week, a deputation of about 100 clergymen, representing the clergy of the Methodist Episcopal denomination in the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh and vicinity, was received by Gov. Kossuth. Rev. Dr. Bangs spoke in behalf of the delegation. He said, he and his associates were present as ministers of that religion which has its seat in the heart, and congratulated Kossuth on the noble stand taken by him when he rejected the proffer of freedom from the Turkish government, on condition of the abjuration of his religion. Other instances were called to mind, in which he had stood out as an exponent of the principles of the Christian religion. Dr. Bangs expressed the pleasure with which they had beheld his acknowledgment of the God of all grace, and his invocation of His aid in behalf of himself, his fellow exiles, and suffering countrymen. There are plain indications said the reverend speaker, that God will, some time or other, pour out His blessing upon Hungary, and release its people from the thraldom in which tyrants have bound her. He concluded by invoking the blessing of Almighty God upon Kossuth and his people.

KOSSUTH'S REPLY.

The sentiments which I have just heard I would reply to, but I have already addressed several large assemblies, and my body is so weak and my chest so very much oppressed that it is entirely impossible to speak. Should I go on speaking, I could not be heard. Scarcely could I speak worse in my life. The organs of inspiration are suffering weakness already, and my strength is weakened very much. I raise blood if I speak too much, so I beg leave that you will allow me to give a written answer to your address. If you give me a copy, so that I may know the sentiments in which you are pleased to address me.

In relation to the circumstance that happened at Kutahia,—there is no need to speak of it. There is no merit in it. Every honest man must be obedient to his religion, and—

Rev. Mr. Bangs (interposing.) But begging your pardon for interrupting you, will you please tell us whether that is a fact or not? We heard of such an offer being made.

M. Kossuth: It is a fact. I take no merit for what I did. Every honest man would do the same—that is not worthy of being mentioned. If a man be not truly faithful to his God, and to his religion, would he be faithful to his country! [Applause.] I have always acknowledged, and will ever acknowledge my unspeakable confidence in God, as the richest source of consolation, and the most solemn of all my hopes for the future. I am so entirely convinced of the justice of my cause, that it seems not possible but that the blessings of the Almighty God must fall upon it. [Murmurs of approbation.]

Every act of Divine Providence takes a course which apparently cannot be understood by weak men's minds. But by-and-by circumstances break forth, which, even in our misfortunes, make us realize the Christian's trust, and show us that God blesses the world. All our misfortunes are only the means to come to that end which God in his divine providence has marked for us. And now I have full confidence for my country's future. I have very strong reasons to convince me of that. These reasons form the motives of my hope, and trust, and confidence, and nothing gives me such consolation as that there is a God in heaven who is a just and good God, and who will not allow a just cause to die, to become annihilated. It is out of the soul that I draw all my force and strength, which enables me to go on in all duty and honor for my country's cause; a duty sanctified by religion; a duty prescribed by our religion to every member of mankind—prescribed by the great injunction which is the foundation of Brotherhood on earth—"Thou shalt love one another."

This is my principle, and this is the principle which gave me the hope that when I came to the United States, I would find here the great people of this country acting on this principle, which is not only theoretical but practical—[applause]—which requires us to love our neighbor by deed as well as by word. This is my hope even now. So, therefore, I confidently hoped that the more of religious sentiments I would find in the United States, the more I would find those hopes realized toward my nation, and toward every other nation in Europe, in such a manner that though, be the policy of your country whatever it may, yet moved by this Christian principle, which never can be denied, they would see to the development of this great truth.

M. Kossuth, who spoke all through in a very weak voice, evidently the result of the great labors which he went through yesterday, concluded by shaking hands with Rev. Dr. Bangs, and thanking him.

Rev. Mr. Bangs—May the Lord bless you, and preserve you for the great work you are about to perform. We are here a hundred ministers, from this city, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, and Jersey, of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion, who sympathize with you, and pray most earnestly for the salvation of you and the liberty of your country.

The assembly then retired.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

From the R. C. Advocate, we gather the following information. Ten were admitted on trial in traveling connection; two located. Increase in white membership 433; a decrease of colored of 356. Collected for missions upwards of $4 000. The dividend for the superannuated preachers, widows, etc., was less than 40 per cent.

Appointments of Preachers.

RALEIGH DISTRICT—H. G. Leigh, P. E.
Raleigh—P. Doub, B. T. Blake, sup'y.
Raleigh City Mission—D. Culbreth.
Raleigh Circuit—J. W. Floyd.
Henderson—T. B. Reek.
Granville—To be supplied.
Person—Ira T. Wyche.
Clarkesville—Wm. A Brame.
Hillsboro' Station—To be supplied.
Hillsboro' Circuit—Wm. H. Barnes, A. H. Johnson.
Chapel Hill—S. M. Frost.
South Lowell Academy—J. A. Dean.

GREENSBORO' DIST.—Wm. Burringer, P. E.
Greensboro'—J. Jamieson, S. D. Bumpass, supernumerary.
Guilford—Charles H. Phillips.
Randolph—Thos. W. Postell.
Montgomery—T. B. James.
Haw River—T. C. Moses.
Pittsboro' Station—W. W. Allen.
Franklinsville—J. D. Lumsden.
Rockingham—E. E. Freeman.
Wentworth—D. W. Doub.
Deep River—J. W. Finnin.
G. F. College—C. F. Deems.
Normal College—A. S. Andrews, Professor.

SALISBURY DISTRICT.—Wm. Carter, P. E.
Salisbury—J. P. Simpson.
Rowan—Geo. W. Farabee.
Mocksville—Lemon Shell.
Iredell—A. C. Allen.
Taylorsville—Wm. W. Neshitt.
Wilkes—To be supplied.
Jonesville—A. J. Tomlin.
Surry—J. M. Gunn.
Stokes—J. M. Westbrook.
Forsythe—To be supplied.
Davidson—John Tillett.
Blue Ridge Mission—To be supplied.

DANVILLE DISTRICT—T. S. Campbell, P. E.
Pittsylvania—A. Norman, S. S. Byrant, sup'y.
Caswell—Wm. M. Jordan.
Halifax—Robert P. Bibb.
Banister—J. H. Jefferson.
Meadsville—J. Goodman.
Staunton—Z. Rush.
Franklin—J. W. Lewis.
Alleghany Mission—To be supplied.
Patrick—Joshua Bethel.
Henry—L. L. Hendren.

WASHINGTON DISTRICT—Wm. Closs, P. E.
Washington—H. H. Hudson.
Roanoke—J. B. Martin, R. O. Burton, sup'y.
Plymouth—L. S. Birckhead.
Tarboro'—R. J. Carson, F. H. Baring.
Columbia—Alexander Gattis.
Mattamuskeet—Henry Gray.
Bath Mission—Wm. M. Walsh.
Portsmouth—J. M. Shurpe.
Neuse—M. N. Taylor, J. J. Hines.
Currituck—T. W. Guthrie.

NEWBERN DISTRICT—D. H. Nicholson, P. E.
Newbern, Centenury—N. H. D. Wilson
Newbern, Andrew Chapel Mission—T. P. Ricaud
Snow Hill—P. J. Carraway, N. Anderson.
Smithfield—L. W. Martin, G. A. Gowin.
Duplin—John D. Montague.
Onslow—R. R. Dunkley.
Trent—H. H. Gibbons.
Beaufort—A Weaver.
Straits and Cape Look Out Mission—John Jones.

WILMINGTON DISTRICT—J. Ried, P. E.
Wilmington—R. T. Heflin, W. H. Bobbitt.
Topsail—W. S. Chaffin.
Sampson—Jeremiah Johnson.
Fayetteville Station—J. H. Wheeler.
Fayetteville Circuit—C. P. Jones.
Bladen—J. T. St. Clair.
Cape Fear Mission—J. L. Fisher.
Smithville—Wm. J. Langdon.
Smithville Academy—J. H. Brent.
Whitesville—J. W. Tucker.

James M. Fulton, Missionary to California.
Addison Lea, transferred to Memphis Conference.

John H. Robinson, David D. Byars, James T. Munds and Abner Ervin, transferred to South Carolina Conference. [R. C. Advocate.

MISSIONARY MONEY.—Rev. S. S. Bryant, Treasurer of the North Carolina Conference Missionary Society, reports:

"The result of the year shows a great increase of interest in our Conference on the subject of missions. Last year's report was less than $2 000; this year over $4 000; being more than double not only the amount of last year, but our collections for several years past. This increase does not arise from the territory acquired at the last General Conference: for while that district made a good report, about $800, there is still an increase from our old field of operations of about $1 500. This is cheering, and shows that love for missions is increasing among our preachers and people.

"This is well, but we feel convinced that we can do better; and therefore it was 'resolved' to raise for missions in 1852 the sum of $5 000. With energy and faith it can easily be done."

CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7, 1851.

REV. H. N. McTYEIRE:

MY DEAR BRETHREN.—It has long been my purpose to avail myself of your kind offer to present the claims of the California mission to our people in the regions of the circulation of your valuable Church paper, through its columns. Like many other good purposes, however, it has been deferred from time to time, in the hope of finding a more leisure hour, until you have perhaps given me over to hardness of heart. It is due you and your readers to say, that such are my engagements, having both a pastoral and general charge, to which must be added the cares of a large family, in a country the very nature of which renders all these duties difficult, that I have found it thus far impossible to keep pace with the demands upon me. I can safely say that I have not known the pleasure of a relaxed, easy state of mind, for a single day since my arrival in California. I sometimes sigh for some secluded place and quiet days, that I might sit down and relax the tension of mind and feeling under which I have so long been hurried onward, but am satisfied that this cannot be granted me yet, perhaps never, until the work of life is done. But it was not my intention, in this communication, to refer to any thing pertaining to myself or labors. My object was, and is, to furnish your numerous readers such facts and information as may be conducive to their happiness and the interests of their mission.

Permit me, then, first of all to say, that by far the most of the Southern people have been deceived, and still labor under great misapprehensions, as to the real character of California. It may not be best here to inquire how and why, and by whom they have been thus deceived. This is a question partly for others, and partly for the future (and that future most likely not very distant) and I shall not, therefore, now attempt its solution. But of the fact, I conceive it a duty to apprise all concerned.

This has most disingenuously been represented as a most sterile region of mountains and rocks, having nothing to invite the husbandmen, or others, except such as adventurers for a few years in quest of gold. It has been proclaimed in high places, that in an agricultural view California was utterly worthless. Now whatever may have been the design of these representations, one thing is certain as to the effect, and that is, the prevention of the agriculturist, particularly of the Southern States, from coming; and yet it is doubtful if an equal can be found in the United States for diversity and salubrity of climate, or fertility of soil. Instead of a few very limited sections of arable land, as has generally been said, and by many believed, we have a vast amount of the most productive we have seen or read of, and land which more certainly, easily and richly remunerates the farmer than any now known to the world. The vast stores of California products now to be seen in every city and town of the country attest the correctness of these statements. In few words, we have all the resources and facilities which can be desired to render a country great and happy. The mineral deposits, too, although much has been said of them, and much that is extravagant, are far greater, as to extent and durability, than has been believed; the developments of almost every day go to demonstrate the fact that "the half has not been told," and that centuries will find here the hungry miser and industrious laborer in quest of gold. Think of five millions of gold dust being shipped from a single port, per month, to say nothing of the vast sums carried away by private persons returning home, and the amount left for all business purposes in the country.

With such a soil and climate, such mineral resources and commercial and maritime advantages, the "wayfaring man, though a fool," can safely predict the high destiny of the country, unless it shall be smitten by an Almighty power. What, then, is the question naturally arising from these facts? I put it to the philanthropist, to the Christian, and above all the Christian minister. Here are opened up and being opened fountains for good or evil which must affect the world. Shall they go out as the turbid, bitter waters of death, to poison the nations of the earth and multiply the citizenship of hell? Or, will the Church avail itself of the occasion, and by making pure those mighty resources, send out east, west, north and south, the streams of life and salvation? These are at this moment fiercely contested questions, and questions of stupendous magnitude, upon the solution of which swelling multitudes of deathless spirits are now trembling between the extreme destinies of an eternal world. We stand here upon a dizzy point of elevation, whence the world is surveyed, and see gathering around us, in sublime array, the battling hosts of light and darkness, of heaven and hell, preparing each for the world's conquest, and feel as if every moment lost, every opportunity neglected, partakes of the eternal and infinite in consequences to follow.

But we forbear pursuing further this train of thought, lest we should seem enthusiastic, or perhaps weary our friends, or both. We have appealed to the Church for help, and greatly rejoice to find, by recent tidings, that our appeal is heartily entertained. We thank you, my brother, for your warm and pointed editorial on this subject. God reward you tenfold in your own soul. But we want at least one more man from Louisiana; two if you can well spare them. What say you? can we have them? Answer soon.

It is a pleasure to be able to say that the missionaries and families are all well, and the good work in a prosperous state. The missionaries recently sent out are all at their posts, and doing well—Brother Gober in Sacramento City, Brother Malone in Sonora, and Brother Blythe in Nevada.

We look with great solicitude to the coming of a strong re-enforcement this winter, and the organization of our Conference in the spring.

And now, my brother, we want an editor and preacher, etc.; yes, we want an editor, for we intend having a "San Francisco Christian Advocate" by March or April next. (See prospectus in the Southern Christian Advocate.) What say you to this? Can we have him? and can we find him in your city?

"And now if ye (you) will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me; and if not, tell me; that I may turn to the right hand or to the left." Yours, in Christ,

J. BORING.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Perils of River Navigation.

MR. EDITOR: The burning of the steamboat Montgomery, one of our best managed packet boats, a few weeks since, and the sinking of the Clermont, lately, reminds me that the time is approaching when we may expect to have many disasters on the river Mississippi, and none more fatal to the lives of passengers than that of the burning or snagging of the steamboat, which is generally accompanied by the drowning of sometimes a large number. The loss of life by drowning from boats, within a year past on the Mississippi, has not been less than one hundred; all, or nearly all of which, might have been saved, had the boats been supplied with proper life-boats, placed on deck, or life-preservers hung up in the state-rooms or the cabin. I believe, Mr. Editor, if some of our fine packet boats would expend one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars for life-preservers of some kind about the boat, where passengers could conveniently get them, such boats would have a preference by persons leaving home, over boats that were not furnished with them, and in a few trips would be fully remunerated for their extra outlay by the increased number of passengers.

Something should be done to protect the lives of persons from the hazard of drowning, either by laws of the United States, by the State laws, or by the public.

If the Congress of the United States was petitioned by the citizens affected so much by the loss of life from steamboat disasters, as the people living on and near the Mississippi river are, they certainly would pass laws compelling steamboats to have life-preservers at least: and if Congress will not pass laws for the preservation of lives on board of steamboats, the different State governments should pass such laws as will make the owners or captains of boats liable for damages in a civil suit in law to the widows, children or creditors of persons drowned from on board steamboats that are burned or snagged within the jurisdiction of the State.

There was an act passed through the House of Representatives of the last Congress, if it had passed the Senate and become a law, so far as relates to life-preservers, would have saved many lives within the last year.

Dec. 24. PASSENGER.

Interesting Statistics.

The following interesting statistics are taken from the report of Rev. Dr. Baird, delivered before the Evangelical Alliance Society. They present the numerical strength, condition and prospects of the different denominations in this country:

The last 36 years, according to Doctor B., have constituted the most prosperous era of our religious history. In this period the last ligament which united the Church and the State was sundered—in Connecticut in 1816, in Massachusetts in 1833. The area of the country has been made to reach an extent of about 3¼ millions of square miles, and the population an aggregate of more than 23 millions. At the rate of increase thus far, the population, fifty years hence, will be far more than one hundred millions. These statements were made to show the greatness of the church's responsibility in this country. After going at considerable length into a history of our national advancement in material and educational interests, Dr. B. proceeds to give the results of his investigations into the progress and present state of religion in the United States.

The oldest branch of the Protestant Church in this country is the Protestant Episcopal. Its history begins in 1607 with the colonizing of Virginia. It continued to labor under very serious embarrassments until after the Revolution. In 1800 it had 320 churches, 260 ministers, and 16,000 communicants; in 1850, 1,550 churches, 28 bishops, 3 missionary bishops, 1,504 ministers, and 73,000 communicants. In the first half of this century, therefore, it has about quintupled its churches, more than quintupled its ministers, and nearly so its members.

The Congregational branch of the one true church of Christ comes next. In 1850, it had 1971 churches, most of them in the Northwestern States, 1,687 ministers, and 197,196 communicants.

The Baptist branch of the church of Christ is third in order of time. Due reference is made to the opposition and persecution this church suffered in consequence of the intolerance of the civil governments of Massachusetts and Virginia. They never experienced this in Pennsylvania or New Jersey. In 1791, there were 1,150 churches, 891 ministers, and 65,345 members; in 1850, the regular Baptists are put down at 10,441 churches, 6049 ordained ministers, and 754,652 members. Add to these the Seventh Day, Free-Will, Six Principle and Campbellite, Baptists, and Dr. B. reaches an aggregate of 13,455 churches, 8,018 ministers, and 948,867 members. One hundred years ago, there were only 58 Baptist Churches in the whole of what is now the United States. In the last sixty years, exclaims Dr. Baird with astonishment, the Baptists have increased their Churches ten-fold, their members more than thirteen-fold, and their ministers nine-fold.

The Presbyterians come next. The first ministers came from Scotland and the north of Ireland. A presbytery was formed in 1705, consisting of seven ministers, and in 1800, there were 500 churches, 300 ministers, 40,000 communicants. The division took place in 1838. The Old School branch has 23 synods, 134 presbyteries, 2,9[illegible] ters, 618 licentiates and students churches, and 210,306 members; the School branch, 21 synods, 104 pres[illegible] 1,489 ministers, 204 students in the seminaries and licentiates, 1,579 and 140,060 members. Together, the ber 44 synods, 238 presbyteries, 3,[illegible] ters, 822 licentiates and student churches, and 350,366 communicant increase has been increased in its nearly twelve-fold, churches eight and and nearly nine-fold in its members the smaller branches, none of which to much in 1800, and the presbyteria of churches, all but the Dutch speaking the language, and having origin, will rise to 4 general synods, 360 presbyteries, 4,578 1,014 students and licentiates, 5,652 and 490,259 communicants.

The last, in order of time, of the religious bodies that arose, was the Episcopal Church. It was organized and in 1800 had 40,000 members. quent increase has been immense. spreads all over the country, and, its conferences, districts and circuits the whole land. The division took 1844. In 1850, the northern branch the "Methodist Episcopal Church" ministers, and 666,310 members; dist Episcopal Church, South, 1642 and 504,520 members; making a 5,546 ministers, and 1,170,830 members adding smaller bodies, there will be at least 6,000 regular preachers than 8,000 local preachers, and upwards million and a quarter of members. reason to believe, says Dr. B., that the bership of this communion has more than six times as fast as the of the country has done since 1781.

In addition to the above large denominations, which speak the English there is a group of churches which, exceptions, use the German language are ten in number, and consist of the branches of the Protestant Church rica, almost all of them offshoots of bodies in Europe. They have about regular ministers, 550 local preachers congregations, and 333,000 members these, not before computed, must be 500 congregations or "meetings" of ety of Friends, of whom 300 are supposed be Orthodox, and 200 Hicksite. The body does not increase perceptibly.

The result of Dr. B's. investigations that there were last year in the United in the several branches of the Protestant Church, that may be termed evangelical less than 53,614 ministers, (besides 9,000 Methodist local preachers) 53,[illegible] gregations, and 3,292,222 communicants.

The non-evangelical churches are as man Catholics, with 4 archbishops, 30 1,073 churches, 1,081 priests, and a tion of 1,500,000; the Unitarians with 300 churches, 250 ministers, and 30,000 bers; the Christians, with 1,500 churches as many ministers, and 150,000 members; the Universalists, with 540 preaching churches, and 375 societies. The Swedenborgians, with about 40 small churches, 40 ministers, and 10,000 members, and the Lutheran churches that are Societies. portions of the Friends. Of all the evangelical bodies, says Dr. B., the Catholic and Unitarians are alone account. "The former have their perfect gauization and consummate tact; the their cultivated intellect, minds, and

I will hazard the assertion that no or ever will become truly eloquent, being a constant reader of the Bible, admirer of the purity and sublimity language. [Fisher Ames.

OBSERVING ANSWERS TO PRAYER.—We fail to observe answers to prayer, make them occasions of praise, may expect that God will, as a matter of and chastisement, send answers to prayer abundant, less marked! Our Lord with the wicked for not considering erations of His hands: how much cause for anger He has, when his own children not recognizing in His with them, tokens of His love and ness as the hearer of prayer! "We seek," said a brother to me lately in "we should seek to meet God in circumstance." In every circumstance may add, by way of applying the tion, seek to meet God as the prayer. Praying without ceasing, ing without ceasing, the believer out ceasing, walk with God. [Herald

MY CHILDREN STILL.—A young recently called upon an eminent in the course of conversation, asked many children he had? "Four," the reply. At the supper table perceived two beautiful children the side of the mother. Turning vine, he said, "I thought you had dren, sir; where are the other raising his eyes, the holy man of upwards, while a sweet smile countenance, "They are in heaven," peated slowly and calmly, "yet not still; not dead, but gone before."

CONSTANT FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.—think that God is only to be worshipped their knees in the closet, around hearth, and in the place of public but if we think like them, we shall godly lives in Christ Jesus. We worship God whenever He is present that is always, at all times. We ship Him wherever he is present, everywhere, in all places. Whenever company, we ought to keep company with God than with them. What to others, we ought to say it more to them. It is our privilege and as Christians to strive by all means up constant fellowship with God, in the light of His countenance; when, like the Psalmist, we can say have set the Lord always before me.

My life is full of misery, and few days to live: happy miseries joy: happy joys that have end, that ends in eternity.

EMIGRATION.—The Red river papers [illegible] of the rapid emigration into Texas. roads have been crowded with emigrants Gazette says that they are passing through thousands, pouring a tide of population unprecedented numbers. Most of them [illegible] bers of slaves and other evidences of wealth.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Hymeneal.

MARRIED—By Rev. C. H. Oliver, on 24 December, near Auburn, Mr. RICHARD DAVIS, to Miss MARTHA PADGETT.

By the same, in Auburn, on 14th, Mr. JOS. FLETCHER, to Mrs. COTTERO.

By the same, on 23d, in Auburn, Mr. WESLEY HARPER, to Miss MARTHA HARVEY.

By the same, on 25th, near Auburn, Mr. H. STEPHENS, to Miss CAROLINE POULEDGE.

Obituary Notice.

WILBUR FISKE, eldest son of the Rev. J. A. and Sarah James, and at his father's house, near Waterproof, La., on the 7th of Nov., 1851, aged 12 years 4 months and 7 days.

Six lovely children have been borne from the bosom of this family in that world of blessedness which is the inheritance of the "pure in heart." Three of these sleep in one grave—called almost in the self-same hour from a world too imperfect and stained for their love." The writer of this notice was for a length of time an inmate of the house of Rev. J. A. James and had the happiness to know little Wilbur long and well. He was dedicated to God in infancy, and from infancy was taught his obligations and his duty to God. He was all that pious parents could wish a child. To his natural sweetness of disposition, were added all the charms which religion throws around its votaries. He was a hard student, and though so young in years, his literary attainments were varied and extensive. His reading was all of that kind that tends to elevate, ennoble and dignify. Wilbur is in heaven!

An angel band his home above
His sinless spirit to its starry home;
That blissful home where all is love.
Where cares and anguish never come
The tears we shed above thy grave
Are not the tears of hopeless grief;
The God who took thee is the God who gave;
His gracious promises give sweet relief.

HENRY T. LEWIS.

Princeton, Miss., Nov., 1851.

General Intelligence.

Railroad Convention.

The NewOrleans and Opelousas Railroad Convention met in the Lyceum Hall yesterday morning, and organized by the appointment of the following officers:

President—MARSHEL WHITE.

Vice Presidents—J. H. Overton, of St. Landry; General Declouet, of St. Martin; Governor Mouton, of Lafayette; H. Conrey, of St. Mary; J. M. Tucker, of Lafourche; Sandridge, of Assumption; W. J. Minor, of Terrebonne; Duncan F. Kenner, of Ascension; Landeau, of St. Charles; Wright Crossman, of First Municipality; J. Matthews, of Second Municipality; Emile Lasere, of Third Municipality; A. Buyster, of Gretna; A. B. Seger, of Algiers; H. E. Lawrence, of Lafayette City; G. Leroy, of Jefferson; Dr. J. L. Satterfield, of Avoyelles; Charles H. Flower, of Rapides; Gen T. G. Williamson, Desoto; Gen. Henry Phillips, of Saline.

Secretaries—John E. King, of St. Landry; D. Hawkins, of St. Mary; B. F. Flanders, of NewOrleans; W. A. Gordon, of NewOrleans; John M. Burns, of NewOrleans; Robert Taylor, of Lafayette; and F. Gates, of Lafayette.

The President, owing to hoarseness, desired Mr. King to read an address which he had prepared for delivery to the Convention. It was as follows:

Gentlemen—I must greet and welcome you here. The objects of this Convention you are fully acquainted with. The reports of the different committees, the surveys, estimates, and charts of the several routes, so far as they have been able to obtain them, will be laid before you. It is not my intention to offer you any outline, as you will receive all necessary information from the documents themselves. The gentlemen charged with the "preliminary business have been indefatigable in the performance of their duties, as you will presently perceive. I beg leave, respectfully, to commend to you unity of action a firm, persevering energy in the prosecution of whatever, after due deliberation, you may determine upon.

I believe we are most of us practical men, who have come here with a definite purpose in view—the result of which may hereafter tell upon the fortunes and prosperity of millions, should we be successful in carrying out our great designs, in obtaining the charter and adequate means for the completion of this great road, which is one day or other to unite the Atlantic with the Pacific in bonds of iron, we must set; act and let our acts live when we shall be no more. I will add but a word or two. Choose no man for your servant from favor or affection, or hope of reward; but the duties he may be called to perform, so that our great enterprise may prosper in the go ahead spirit of our country. I have from years patriotic and liberal mind an earnest God speed.

At the conclusion of the address, the President said that the first business in order would be the report of the Executive Committee.

M. M. Cohen, Chairman of the Committee, reported verbally, its proceedings since the date of its appointment. He was followed by Col. B. H. Payne, who addressed the Convention at some length, respecting his recent visit to Texas, made by direction of the Convention in June last.

Mr. Blanchard presented his report of the survey of the route of the road.

Judge Overton offered a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, authorizing the President to appoint a committee of five members of the Convention to draft an address for publication, setting forth the advantages and prospects of the Opelousas Road, and of its extension through Texas, and also to prepare a memorial to Congress and one to the Legislature of Louisiana, for grants of land and other assistance.

Mr. Cohen offered a resolution increasing the Permanent Committee to twelve from each parish, instead of two, as at present constituted. The resolution led to considerable debate, and the Convention adjourned without final action on the subject.

Before adjournment, the President stated that Randell Hunt, Esq., would address the Convention this (Saturday) morning.

CONDITION OF LAFAYETTE.—Thomas Tucker, Esq., Comptroller, of Lafayette, has furnished the following statement, showing the condition of the finances of that city.

Actual Debt.
Bonds	$423,000
Interest	21,000
Warrants	20,000
Open Accounts	5,000
Bills	5,000
Pay Roll	11,000	$482,000
Prospective.
Market	25,000
Plank Roads	13,000	33,000
		515,000
Revenue.
Actual Revenue	123,500
School Fund	10,000
Incidental	4,500	138,000
Expenses		127,000
Past Due.
Bonds	63,000
Interest	21,000
Warrants	20,000
Accounts	5,000
Bills, etc	5,000
Pay Roll, etc	11,000	125,000

VIOLENT STORMS.—The Natchez Courier of the 30th ult. says:

We learn, through a friend, that early in the afternoon of Saturday last a heavy rain and storm, came sweeping from the west, over the plantations on both sides of the Mississippi river, in a range of some miles and a distance of from ten to fifteen miles above Fort Adams. The rain continued to thicken as it fell, and the wind to blow more fiercely until about 5 P. M., when the elements wound up their wrath, pro tem. in all the fury of an adult tornado.

On the Mississippi side of the river, the two plantations of D. D. Withers, Esq., a few miles above Fort Adams suffered severely, while five miles above the storm was still more furious. The plantation of Major Feltus, on Old River, and other places in its neighborhood, bear sad record of its violent visitation.

Tall and strong timber was dashed to the ground in great profusion; fences uprooted and scattered, and in fact with the winds, strong sheds were demolished by a breath of the tornado, and blacksmith's shops and outhouses went down wherever they came within its course.

On the upper plantation of Mr. Withers, and on some plantations on Old River, a large amount of cotton was blown out. On the Louisiana side, nearly all the outbuildings of F. Q. Richards, Esq., were blown down.

This information is received from planters and overseers of some of the places injured. They agree that a storm so furious and destructive has not visited that latitude for many years.

FROM TEXAS—Indian Depredations.—The Delta of last evening contains a letter, from its correspondent at Eagle Pass, Texas, which states that the Indians in that vicinity are committing the most flagrant outrages, with impunity. Since the 1st of December, hostile bands have been constantly prowling about within a few miles of Fort Duncan, in the sheep and cattle ranges, making sad havoc among the herds, scarcely taking pains to veil their plans and movements even in broad day. The garrison at Fort Duncan consists of infantry, and they are utterly powerless against the well mounted savages. They are well mounted, from the fact that they steal all the fine horses in the vicinity. The letter, which is dated December 10, says that a few days previous, the Indians killed ten or twelve the cattle belonging to Don Juan Fernandez, of Eagle Pass, and boldly encamped in the midst of their slaughter. The commandant of the post is unable to do any thing effectual, for the reason that they have no facilities. The inhabitants say that their interests are daily being sacrificed and their lives placed in jeopardy by the inaction of the Government.

FLOGGING IN THE NAVY.—A meeting was held in Philadelphia on Saturday evening, the 29th ult., and resolutions adopted denouncing the petition from that city, presented in the United States Senate a few days ago by Mr Strodhead, asking for a revival of the practice of flogging in the navy. The resolutions also speak in high terms of the remarks of Com. Stockton in opposition to the prayer of the petitioners. A committee was appointed to transmit copies of the resolutions to Senators Stockton, Strodhead, Cooper, Shields, Douglass, Cass and Houston.

Later from the Rio Grande.

We received yesterday, through the mail, a copy of the Rio Bravo, of the 16th ult., which contains some further accounts of the insurrectionary movement in Mexico. Present appearances indicate that Carvajal's chances of success are very slight, if, indeed, the affair is not already ended. The result of the recent fight at Cerralvo appears to have been disastrous to the revolutionists. The Rio Bravo publishes a letter from a correspondent, who is apparently attached to Carvajal's force, from which we make some extracts, giving the particulars of the Cerralvo fight:

On the 12th inst. an express arrived at New Camargo, informing Gen. Carvajal that Gen. Jaregui, with 300 men and two pieces of artillery, had occupied the town of Mier. An immediate move was made against that place, but Jaregui, thinking discretion the better part of valor, beat a precipitate retreat towards Monterey, marching from Mier to Cerralvo, a distance of fifty miles, in a single day. Carvajal continued in hard pursuit, and on the night of the 24th, by a forced march, he placed himself between the enemy and his strong hold at Monterey. Having taken a position, he waited a day, expecting an attack; but, awaiting in vain, he resolved to advance upon the enemy, who had taken up a strong position in Cerralvo, occupying the plaza with a part of his force and a twelve-pound howitzer, and a large heavy stone building, known as the Curena, just outside of town, with the remainder of his forces protected by a nine-pounder.

After two days of hard fighting the enemy was driven from the plaza to the Curena, with the loss of his baggage wagons, all the bombs of his howitzer, 87 horses and equipages, and 110 men killed and wounded, among the latter a colonel and captain of artillery, who were shot at their piece and taken prisoners, and from whom the heavy loss of the enemy was ascertained.

A general assault was planned against the strong-hold of the enemy, but, in the mean time, a courier arrived, with the information that Urega was advancing with a thousand men, when a retrograde movement towards Guerrero was deemed advisable. It was effected in good order and the spoils taken from Jaregui carried safely off. The Indian and negro auxiliaries of Jaregui suffered severely, more than half their number, including the chief of the Seminoles (not Wild Cat—he reasoned), being killed. The same letter from which we have quoted above says:

The liberators suffered severely among their officers: Capt. Chilon, Lieut. Graham and Lieut. M'Curdy, were killed while gallantly leading their men in the assault. A private of Walker's company, and six Mexicans of McLean's and Garcia's companies, were also killed. Col. Wheat and Capt. Howell both slightly wounded, besides seven privates. Mexican and auxiliary, behaved with the most distinguished gallantry, and it would be invidious to mention names, where all did their duty with such chivalry and courage.

Upon the arrival of Gen. Urega at Camargo, he seized two Americans who happened to be there, and although one of them produced incontestible evidence of his business, they were inhumanly ordered to be shot, without the like formality or trial, and but for the timely interference in their behalf of Gen. Harney, who fortunately arrived at Ringgold Barracks a few days since, the order would have been carried into effect. A file of muskets were drawn up, and the priest had been sent to confess the poor fellows, when the appearance of Gen. Harney's aid saved them from death. What would have been their fate had Capt. Phelps been in command? A saying Germanism, named Mendel, was found in Mier on some commercial business, and again, but for the presence of the gallant Harney, he would have been shot. The young man is known to be opposed to the revolution, yet he had the crime of wearing a white face, and but for an American officer (for Harney is American all over—heart and soul), he would have suffered death, under an old revived decree of the butcher of Goliad, the Sacrificio Santa Anna.

Urrega has published a bando declaring that he will indiscriminately shoot every foreigner who may be caught on the Mexican frontier without a passport from our military authorities, or a letter of security of his own Government. It is well known that since the war the laws in relation to passports have fallen into disuse, and none, or but very few, of the many foreign merchants and traders in Mexico have provided themselves with passports or letters of security. Is it possible that the civilized nations of the world will stand calmly by and permit their resident citizens to be shot like dogs by this Mexican Dayman? What would Mr. Consul Chilcoy say were an English man executed? For no distinction is made—all men with white faces being subject to his butchering laudo. Verily the crack of a foreign rifle must have a terrific sound to a macho general's ear.

Carvajal, when he took Camargo, released all the officers and men on parole, and gave them money to bear their expenses to Monterey. The parole was most shamelessly violated, the commander of that post, Major Camacho, with all his men and officers paroled, being in the battle of Cerralvo. The two officers taken at Cerralvo were badly wounded, and Carvajal was unwilling to put them to the pain which they would have entailed by a removal, and therefore freely released them, refusing their parole of honor not to serve against them. Urga and his compadre Avalos have ruthlessly butchered every man of the liberators who has fallen into their power, and boasts them all as pirates, beyond the pale of law. Who acts the pirate, Carvajal or Avalos and Urga?

Carvajal is near Guerrero, organizing his forces, preparatory to offensive operations against Urga.

The general orders of Carvajal, for the 21st, 22d, 23d, 24th, 25th and 26th of November, and for the 1st and 2d of December, are published in the Rio Bravo.

The excellent correspondent of the Picayune states that Gen. Harney had established himself at Roma, where he would remain until the troubles on the other side were brought to a close. In a letter, dated at Rio Grande City, the 11th ult., he says that nothing certain had been heard from Carvajal, but he was supposed that he was still on this side of the river. His men were to be found at nearly all the little towns and ranchos along the river, between Guerrero and Rio Grande City, apparently without organization, but each squad accompanied by an officer. He says it is evident that but little time would be required to concentrate his scattered forces at any given point. All appear to be anxiously awaiting the arrival of reinforcements from the interior of Texas. Col. Ford is said to be rapidly recruiting men.

Gen Urga is stationed at Meir with 600 men and four pieces of artillery. There are also 300 men at Camargo, and guards at Guerrero and Reynosa. Canales is at the former place, where report says he is in correspondence with Carvajal, proposing to join him with the National Guard of the State of Tamaulipas, on certain conditions, which conditions are variously stated. One of the letters to which we refer, states that United States troops are posted at all the crossings and ferries between Guerrero and Brownsville, but that this would be no impediment to armed parties wishing to cross, as there are plenty of places where the river can be forded. Rumor says that Matamoras has been declared no longer in a state of siege. The proclamation of Urga, prohibiting the crossing of foreigners, with or without passports, except at certain designated places, remains, however, in force.

Since the above was in type, we have received by the schooner Alderman, Capt. Smith, the Rio Bravo of the 24th ult., but it does not contain any news of importance, relative to Carvajal's operations, in addition to what we have given. The Rio Bravo publishes the report of Gen. Carvajal to the Ayuntamientos of the several towns of the North engaged in the revolutionary movement. It contains a full account of the operations in and about Cerralvo and expresses much confidence that Rio (Carvajal) will soon be able to resume the offensive. It denounces Canales as a traitor. The document, altogether, is able and eloquent. Carvajal states that he had but 225 men, rank and file, at Cerralvo.

W. W. Dunlap has been elected Mayor of Brownsville.

The Rio Bravo states that great necessity exits for an immediate session of the Federal District Court of that place. It says:

The revenue officers have made many seizures, some of which have brought them and the State officers into immediate collision, and nothing but a high degree of forbearance and prudence has prevented bloodshed. These questions, in a great degree, belong to the Federal Court, and some of them, from the authorities assumed here to belong to the Revenue officers, are of such high importance as to seriously endanger the peace of society. Should the judge delay much longer organizing his court, the people will be constrained to apply to Congress for relief.

BANK ISSUES ON BONDS AND MORTGAGES.—The winding up of the James Bank, in the State of New York, recently, has demonstrated the fact that, the security afforded by mortgages on real estate is not by any means as good as it has ever been supposed to be, and that as a basis for bank issues, they are entirely inadequate. The real estate mortgaged by the James Bank to the Comptroller of the State for $50,536, when brought to the hammer, sold for $20,475, leaving a balance of $21,061 of the issue of the bank unprovided for, and throwing this amount of loss on the bill holders. In the affairs of the Bank of New Rochelle the same result has been experienced. The real estate under mortgage to the Comptroller was $60,043, which, when sold, only realized $37,400, leaving a loss of $22,643 to be borne by the bill holders of this institution.

WRECKS.—The ship British Queen, from Dublin, for New York, went ashore off Nantucket on the night of the 20th, and, at last accounts, was likely to become a total wreck. Steam tugs, which were sent down to her, took off her crew and passengers—170 in number.

MARSHAL SOULT.—This gallant and distinguished officer, the last survivor of Napoleon's Marshals, died at Paris on the 26th of November, in the 82d year of his age.

STATE DEPARTMENT.—A Washington letter to the Baltimore Patriot says: "The growing intercourse of this country with nations all over the earth is making the State Department of the highest importance; and there is scarcely a week in which the American Secretary of State is not called upon to act upon matters of the very greatest moment, not only to his own country, but to the whole human race, in all parts of the world. Mr. Webster now has negotiations or movements going on, the magnitude of which can be scarcely appreciated by casual lookers-on."

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—The tobacco factory of Messrs. Mc. Clure & Browder, at Clarksville, Tennessee, with 90000 lbds of tobacco, was recently destroyed by fire, also the pork house, outbuildings etc., of Mr. Chamberlin, containing a large number of hogs, lard, etc. The total loss is about $50,000, partly insured.

The Baltimore Sun denies that Mr Clay has resigned his seat in the Senate.

The Marchioness of Santa Cruz, a distinguished lady of the Court of Isabella Segunda, died recently at Madrid.

Telegraphic Items.

One Week Later from Europe—Arrival of the Africa—Cotton Declined—Markets Heavy—Cuban Prisoners Released—France Quiet.

NEW YORK, Friday, January 2, 1852.

The Cunard steamer Africa has arrived, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 20th December. The following is a summary of her commercial intelligence:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 20, 1851.

The Cotton market has presented a heavy appearance since the departure of the Canada, and the demand has been very moderate. The sales of the week are limited to 28,000 bales, of which 2000 were taken for export and 6000 on speculation. Prices have declined 1-8d @ 1-4d, and the quotations as fixed last evening by the Official Board, are as follows: Fair Orleans 6d., Middling 4¾, Middling Uplands 4 3-4d @ 4 7-8d per lb.

Flour is now quoted at 19 shillings for Western Canal, and 20 and 6d. for Ohio brands. White Corn, 28 and 6d. per quarter. Lard has met with only a moderate demand, and prices are in favor of buyers, though there is no quotable decline. Sugar has declined 3d. per cwt., with a moderate demand.

Money and Trade.

The Money market has been rather heavy, and Consols are quoted at 96¾.

Trade in the manufacturing districts has remained without change since the departure of the Canada.

France—Havre Cotton Market.

The Cotton market at Havre is less active, but there has been no material change in prices.

Political affairs are without much change, and the country is peaceful.

Spain—Webster's Letter—American Prisoners Released.

The Spanish Government expresses great satisfaction with Mr. Webster's letter, and has pardoned all the citizens of the United States taken prisoners in the Cuba expedition. Senor Laborde is about leaving Madrid for Washington, to resume his functions as Spanish Consul.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.

The Cotton market is dull and depressed, and the sales to-day reach barely 800 bales. Prices have declined ½c since the arrival of the Canada. Middling Orleans is now quoted at 8¾c, and middling upland 8⅝ @ 8¾c per lb. Flour has been in fair request with sales of 10000 bbls at $4 43 @ $4 50 per bbl. Mess Pork is selling at $15 12½ per bbl. Lard be perlb. Freights are without material change at 5-8 @ 5-32d for Cotton to Liverpool.

News from California and Sandwich Islands.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.

The United States sloop of war Vandalia arrived at —— bringing dates from Honolulu to the 25th. Accounts from the southern mines represent an immense yield from newly discovered placers in Bear Valley. The greatest excitement prevails on the subject. It is reported that the Indians are again committing depredations, and were about to make an attack on Los Angeles. The citizens were making preparations to give them a warm reception.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.

SENATE.—A communication was to-day received from the Navy Department, enclosing the naval estimates for the next year, and also an answer to the call for the proceedings of the Court Martial. Mr. Shields, from the Kossuth Reception Committee, made a report, recommending that the same proceedings be observed in receiving Kossuth as were observed in the case of Lafayette's visit to Congress.

The Senate then adjourned over to Wednesday.

Further from California—Loss of the Brig Lawrence—Earthquake.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.

The U. S. revenue cutter Lawrence was driven ashore in a gale near San Francisco, and was totally lost.

The mate of the clipper ship Challenge has been examined and committed to prison on a charge of murder. A shock of an earthquake was felt at San Francisco.

Five bodies have been recovered from the late fire.

Great Fire in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 31.

Barnum's Museum, of this city, was burned last night, and other property, valued altogether at $200,000. The building belonged to Mr. Spooner, who recently purchased it for $50,000, and the rest is his. Henderson & Co. booksellers, lost $50,000. Much property was removed from the museum stores and saved. The buildings adjoining the museum, which were destroyed, were all insured.

Kossuth in Washington—Interview with the President—Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.

Kossuth arrived in Baltimore yesterday and reached Washington this morning. Soon after his arrival he visited President Fillmore, to whom he was introduced by Mr Webster. The interview was private and was of considerable length.

The House to-day has been engaged in the discussion relative to the appointment of a Committee to wait on Kossuth. The Senate did not sit to-day.

Further from California.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.

Captain Waterman of the ship Challenge, has given himself up to the United States authorities, at San Francisco, for trial. At the last accounts the Boundary Commissioners were proceeding to Utila.

Jenny Lind going to Europe.

Jenny Lind returns to Europe in the next steamer, on account of the death of her mother.

Steamers Movements.

The Asia arrived at Liverpool, on the morning of the 13th December. The Cunard steamer Europa, sailed for Liverpool, at noon to-day. She carries out $850,000 in specie.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.

The cotton market is active to-day, and the sales reach 7000 bales at 8¾@8¾c. for middling Orleans. Flour has been selling at $4 37½@4 50 ₱ bbl. Corn, 65@65c. for mixed western. Coffee firmer. Rice 3¾c. ₱ lb.

Further by the Africa—French News.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.

The Atlantic arrived at Liverpool on the 17th, and the City of Manchester at Glasgow on the 18th ult.

FRANCE.—The advices from Paris continue of a peaceful character. The President has distributed a large number of crosses, and large sums of money have been decreed to soldiers disabled. General Cavaignac has been released unconditionally, and leaves the country. Others have been liberated on condition that they will voluntarily exile themselves. (?) The indications now are that Louis Napoleon will have as many votes in his favor as he had in 1848.

A majority of Guizot and the students of Paris have voted against him. The President takes an active part in drafting the new Constitution. The Duke of Deguelch (?) has been appointed Minister to Hesse Cassel.

The latest accounts state that Cavaignac has refused to accept his liberty, unless all his fellow-prisoners be released.

Ohio River.

LOUISVILLE, Dec. 30, 1851.

The river here has risen four feet, and is still rising rapidly, with heavy rains during the last twenty-four hours. Boats will leave for the South to-morrow.

CHARLESTON, January 2, 1852.

The steamer Isabel has arrived from Havana with dates from that city and Key West to the 30th ult. She left in port the U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur. The steamers Philadelphia, from New York, and Ohio from Chagres, and the Empire City from NewOrleans, all arrived within an hour of each other. No Spanish papers received, and no news of importance.

From Mexico.

The extraordinary session of Congress adjourned on the 14th ult. Just previous to adjournment, President Arista read an address to the Congress, in which he dwelt at some length on the condition of the country, but confined himself mainly to general terms, in some instances, indeed, descending to the mysterious.

After congratulating the representatives upon the realization of the "great and happy reforms which had been carried out during the session," the President proceeds to say:

"All administrative and social questions being subordinate to financial questions, the Chambers have met these questions with wisdom and decision, and if the difficulty had not been definitely resolved, the materials were so disposed as to allow their successors to terminate it."

He then refers to the composition of the Republic, and the working of reciprocal interests of the Central and State Governments, and praises the army for the services it was found capable of rendering on the "invaded frontier."

He then proceeds:

"Our foreign relations, thanks to the noble sentiments of the representatives of friendly nations, continue in the best condition, and if the nature of certain circumstances would permit it the Government would have the pleasure to tranquillize the patriotism of those who, on more than one occasion, have seen the national independence endangered.

"Notwithstanding the fact that the preceding results are supported by facts, our actual condition is far from presenting a flattering aspect. The financial crisis yet exists, and is still more urgent and menacing than ever. We must surmount it, not by sterile recriminations, nor by dangerous questions of ethnetic law by acts of absolutism, but of noble and sincere patriotism.

"The Executive, for his part, submits his conduct to the impartial judgment of the nation. He has respected her institutions, he has saved the national honor, compromised without by delicate combinations relative to the privileged debt, and within by an irruption of adventurers who have armed themselves on the other side of the Rio Bravo, and who have procured for his inviolable Magistracy a triumph as splendid as glorious.

"Happily, the great need of the country is administrative. The instinct of self-preservation will unite and render us strong and the people who could triumph for their independence in 1810 and 1821 will know how in the future to vindicate their name, in opposing the difficulties thrown in their way by capricious fortune.

"Worthy Representatives of the nation the people, who have witnessed your labors will render to you the justice which is your due.

"You have opened open to the light questions the most vital to the country, and it is a great progress in political science, to know the cause of evils, and the true state of things."

Upon this speech, Le Trait d'Union remarks as follows:

The Texan Indepe question must be one of the affairs, the character of which is yet involved in secrecy, but of which the actual situation is of a nature to tranquillize the patriotism of those who have seen the national independence in peril."

Details by the Europa.

The Baltimore papers of the 24th ult. contain additional items of news brought by the steamers Europa and Baltic.

The new cabinet formed by Louis Napoleon, and announced in his proclamation of the new order of things, is composed of the following persons:

Mons. M. De Morny, Minister of the Interior
Mons. Fuhs, Minister of Finance.
Mons. Bonher, Minister of Justice
Mons. Magne, Minister of Public Works
Mons. Theodore Dhcos, Minister of Marine
Mons. Durnfe, Minister of Commerce.
Mons St. Arnaud, Minister of War
Mons. Fortoul, Minister of Public Instruction
Mons. Fargel, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The High Court of Justice has been dissolved by order of the President.

M. Barochs, M. Drouyn de L'Huys, Admiral Cecile, M. Montelambert, Lucien Murat, and seventy-five other distinguished members of the National Assembly, form "the New Council of State."

Gen. Oudinot, late commander of the army in Paris, (a among the members of the Assembly arrested.

Certain Mole had not been arrested, but had written a letter expressing his regret that he had not been.

NAPOLEON'S APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE.—The following is the concluding appeal of Louis Napoleon to the people of France:

Persuaded that the instability of power—that the preponderance of a single assembly, is one of the permanent causes of trouble and disregard—I submit to your suffrages the fundamental basis of a Constitution, which the assemblies will develop hereafter. 1. A responsible chief named for ten years. 2. The minister dependent on the executive alone. 3. A council of state, formed of the most distinguished men, preparing the laws and maintaining the discussion in face the Legislative corps. 4. A true representation, discussing and voting the laws named by universal suffrage, without the scrutin de liste, which falsifies the election. 5. A second assembly, formed of all the illustrious persons of the nation. A preponderating power, guardian of the fundamental pact and of public liberty.

This system, created by the first Consul in the beginning of the present century, has already given to France repose and prosperity. It guarantees them now. Such is my profound conviction. If you partake of it, declare so by your suffrages. If, on the contrary, you prefer a government without force, monarchical or republican, borrowed from some chimerical future, reply in the negative. Thus, then, for the first time since 1830, you will vote with complete knowledge of the fact, and knowing for whom and for what you vote. If I do not obtain the majority of the votes, I will consider the assembly dissolved, and lay down before it the mission I have received from you.

But if you believe that the cause, of which my name is the symbol—that is, France, regenerated by the revolution of '89, and organized by the Emperor, is still yours, proclaim it to be so, by ratifying the powers I demand of you. Then France and Europe will be preserved from anarchy, obstacles will be removed, rivalries will have disappeared—for all will respect in the will of the people the decree of Providence.

Palace of the Elysee, this second day of December.

[Signed] LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

In an address to the army, Bonaparte entreats them to the proof of their mission; as to them he looks to save the country. He says vote freely as citizens, but as soldiers do not forget that passive obedience to the orders of the chief of the tie vertueux is the rigorous duty of the army, from the General down to the soldier. Be ready to suppress all attempts against the free exercise of the sovereignty of the people.

Among those arrested are Generals Changarnier, Lavalgnac, Bedeau, Lamoriciere, Colonel Lello, Charras, L. Blanc, Thiers, Brun and others. It is said that Lamoriciere effected escaped.

Eight journals had been suspended, among them the Evenement.

M. Thiers has been liberated by the President, in consequence of his ill health, on his agreeing to leave the country.

Tranquility in Paris was well restored on Friday evening of Friday, the 5th inst. All the following day upturn pavements and the shattered walls of houses were all that remained of the insurrection, in and about Paris.

The Departments of Saone, and Loire, and Alliers, had been placed in a state of siege, but the disturbances which caused the act were long quelled, and the troops had been successful.

A telegraphic dispatch from London to Liverpool, received just before the Baltic sailed, states that the Prince de Joinville and the Due d'Aumale had gone to Belgium to raise the standard of revolt against the military usurpation of President Napoleon.

Fresh arrests continue to be daily made among the republican leaders.

Changarnier and the generals were confined at Ham, to be tried by a Court Martial, on the charge of attempting to seduce the soldiers of the army from their duty.

M Thiers will leave immediately for Italy.

Napoleon will undoubtedly have an immense majority at the election for President, which was to take place on the 20th ultimo.

ENGLAND.—The affairs of France continue to excite great attention in England.

The question of Customs Reform was being warmly agitated, the disgraceful conduct of the Board of Customs in the late disputes with the Dock Company being the immediate incentive.

Sir Robert Peel had been squabbling with the farmers of Tamworth. They have forbidden him to pass over their lands, and he has advertised his whole stud for sale.

The English press are beginning a crusade against the Times, for its dishonesty and its abuse of its cotemporaries.

In some of the large provincial towns associations are forming not to read, purchase, or advertise in the Times.

Sir John Gladstone, one of the patriarchs of Liverpool Commerce, died on the 7th instant, at his residence, in Scotland, aged 87 years. Sir John was the father of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Colonial Secretary under Sir Robert Peel's administration, and a Mr. Robertson Gladstone, of Liverpool, President of the Finance Reform Association.

Continued rumors of a serious misunderstanding between Lords Aberdeen and Palmerston were afloat.

The Lord Primate of Ireland has been elected Primate of the Dublin University.

The opposition to the Queen's Pelisse was becoming more violent and effective.

The U. S. steamer Saranac had arrived at Liverpool on the 5th from Philadelphia.

SPAIN.—We learn that the Queen's accouchement was expected between the 8th and 11th December.

The Duke of Narvaez has been recalled by the Queen.

The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier had dined with the British Minister.

AUSTRIA.—The Vienna Ministerial organs declare for Napoleon, and praise his policy.

The news from Paris has caused great consternation at Berlin, but after considering all the eventualities, the Ministry decided not to place a single corps of the Russian army on the war footing.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The news from the Cape of Good Hope continues to excite great anxiety in England. The position of the British forces, and even of the local Government itself, seemed to become daily more critical. Treachery on all hands, and depredations even under the very bayonets of the troops were constantly occurring, and the frontiers were entirely beyond the power of the troops to protect.

PRUSSIA.—Advices from Berlin to the 24 ult. state that the news had been received from Paris, by telegraph, and had occasioned intense excitement. The business of the Assembly was suspended, and the ministers withdrew to hold a cabinet meeting.

SICILY.—The latest accounts from Palermo furnish a statement of an attempted insurrection in Sicily, headed by Baron Ouzo, and other noblemen, with a view to proclaim the independence of Sicily, and compel the King to abdicate in favor of his son Francis. A portion of the inhabitants of Palermo had declared in favor of the project. The thirteenth regiment had fraternized with the people, but, by the prompt action of the authorities, the movement was checked. Several, including officers of the thirteenth regiment, had been arrested.

MOROCCO.—By way of Gibraltar, the steamer of the 10th ult. brings later advices from Smyrna and Malta. The French fleet had bombarded Rabbat and Sallee, for eight hours, causing great destruction of life. The French suffered but slight injury from the return fire of the Castle at Rabbat.

At Rabbat, it was also reported that the fleet had proceeded to Tangier for the purpose of bombarding that place. The British ship James had been dispatched to Tangier to protect the interests of British subjects.

INDIA.—The overland mail reached London on Wednesday.

The relations between the British and Northwest tribes continued very unsatisfactory.

A serious Mussulman riot had occurred at Bombay, which was caused by some obnoxious publications. The rioters were finally dispersed by the police, but not without serious injury to a number of persons. Many shops were plundered, women violated, and other outrages committed.

Other accounts state that the property destroyed was valued at £15,000.

COMMODORE JONES.—Commodore Ap Catesby Jones, who was accidentally very severely wounded at a barricade during the recent conflicts in Paris, commanded the American flotilla on Lake Borgne, in December, 1814, and caused the British fleet to suffer severely in the sea fight which occurred. He was then a lieutenant. He was wounded and taken prisoner, and he has never since drawn a pension from the Government.

GAS IN MEMPHIS.—A company is being organized in Memphis for the purpose of lighting the streets with gas. No city more urgently needs such an improvement.

CHEROKEE NATION.—The Cherokee Advocate contains the following touching paragraph:

"We hear of another murder committed in Illing Snake District. Such instances have been so frequent for the past year or two, in our country, that we have become perfectly tired noticing them, and our friends abroad might think that we were all a set of cut-throats; but this is not the case, and we are happy to say that we have the sober, sedate citizen among us, who would disdain to do an act involving the civilized and Christian name. And could we but induce the white men, citizens of the States, to desist from selling liquor to our people, we are satisfied that not half the murder and rioting would be committed by them that there now is; for almost every instance that now occurs may be traced to intemperance."

Thirty-Second Congress—First Session.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18, 1851.

SENATE.—Mr. Underwood presented a petition setting forth that the amount of the State bonds of Texas was twelve millions, and that the Treasury Department refused to pay the holders more than their proportionate shares of the five millions, released for that purpose, and asking that Congress would make some suitable provision for the payment of the bonds in full.

Mr. Borden presented the memorial of Robert Mills, asking an investigation by some committee of the Senate, of the cause of his removal from the office of Architect of the Patent Office.

Mr. Hamlin reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register to the lady Ann, formerly the British brig Josephine and the bill was considered and ordered to be engrossed.

Mr Foote introduced a bill granting land to the State of Mississippi, to aid in the construction of a railroad in that State, and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The joint resolution authorizing a contract with Messrs Donaldson and Armstrong for printing the returns of the census, was taken up and made the special order of the day for Monday next.

Mr Foote's resolution declaring the compromise measures a definitive settlement of the slavery question, was taken up.

Mr Badger moved to amend the resolution by inserting in lieu of the last part of it the following: A settlement in principle and substance—a final settlement of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embraced, and ought to be adhered to by Congress until time and experience shall demonstrate the necessity of further legislation to guard against evasion or abuse. And the amendment was adopted.

Mr Foote addressed the Senate in defence of himself and his resolution from the speeches of Messrs Butler and Hunter. Without concluding he gave way, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, reporting that $5913 remains unexpended of the $10,000 appropriated for the reception of the Agent of the Sublime Porte, which was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. McCorkle, of California, introduced a bill for establishing a Branch Mint at the Gold Mines in California, which was read a first and second time.

A communication from the War Department was received and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Speaker then called upon members for petitions from States and Territories, which were chiefly of a local nature.

A resolution was introduced, which lays over under the rule, for establishing a steam communication with Liberia.

Mr Florence, of Pennsylvania, presented a memorial from harbor-masters, pilots, and other persons, praying that piers and harbors may be established in Delaware Bay.

Mr. Chandler, of Pennsylvania, called the attention of the House to the exposed situation of members, occupying seats on the rear benches, and concerning, as he said, the comfort and convenience of members to be the chief object of the laws of the land, he submitted two resolutions—one authorizing the Speaker to provide for that of the members, and the other that it were found necessary, the Committee on Accounts be authorized. The first of these were carried and the other withdrawn.

The petitions having been gone through with, the Speaker called for reports of Committees.

Mr Olds, of Ohio, Chairman of the Post-office Committee, submitted a report embracing a joint resolution, legalizing same mail contracts that were entered into in California before the passage of the law, but had not passed, authorizing the measure, and directing the Postmaster General to fulfil the same, which was agreed to.

The Chairman of the Committee on Printing reported a joint resolution providing for one hundred additional copies of the journals and public documents, to be distributed by the Secretary of State according to law.

It was then resolved that when the House adjourn, it shall stand adjourned till Monday.

A motion was then made to adjourn and negatived—yeas 73, nays 81.

It was then moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of ta

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HEARING TO THEE.... By William B. Glasier.

I care, years have fled, since, hushed in thy last slumber,
They laid thee down beneath the old elm tree;
Still with a patient heart each day I number,
Because it brings me nearer still to thee.

The twilight comes, and robes in softened splendor
All that is beautiful on land or sea,
And o'er my spirit flings an influence tender,
For in that hour I nearer seem to thee.

The night is gone; and as the mists of morning
Before the day-god's burning presence flee,
Then in my heart a welcome light is dawning,
That cheers me as I nearer press to thee.

I sometimes think thy spirit kindly watches
Over the heart that loved so tenderly;
For there are rapturous moments when it catches,
As if in dreams, a blessed glimpse of thee.

In those sweet seasons thou dost come before me,
With loveliness that Earth may never see;
I feel thy presence like a blessing o'er me,
And then I know I nearer am to thee.

When fresh these dreams I tearfully awaken,
Colder than ever seems the earth to me;
But yet all hopes have not my heart forsaken,
Am I not drawing nearer, nearer thee?

Then wert Life's Angel, how I loved, adored thee,
Ere Death had set thy gentle spirit free;
And now thou knowest how oft I have implored thee
To bring me nearer, nearer still to thee.

Nearer to thee! to night the stars are burning
In skies that must thy blessed dwelling be;
Those cannot but leave them, until earth returning,
But I am passing nearer still to thee.

Nearer to thee! how long, how long encumbered
With mortal fetters must my spirit be?
With but one wish, one hope, through life I've slumbered,
That wish, the hope, to be yet nearer thee.

Nearer to thee! I know my prayer is granted,
I know thy spirit now is close to me;
Not, not in vain this lonely heart hath haunted—
Each pulse-beat brings me nearer, nearer thee!

[Knickerbocker.

A Beautiful and Touching Incident.—Yesterday, (Sabbath morning) at the ringing of the first bells in this city, the congregation of the Rev. Mr. Davis, or Frecwill Baptist, met around the water where the different denominations usually baptise. The weather was quite cold, it was snowing quite fast—the ice had been cut out and lay in thick cakes; every thing looked cold and forbidding. After singing and a short but fervent prayer by the pastor, "for the spirit of God to rest on all present," he rose from his knees and led a young man into the water and immersed him. Next followed a young lady. As they came towards the centre of the pond, amid the snow falling thick and fast, there came a beautiful dove hovering over the congregation, and actually lit down on the ice, and walked around but a little distance from the administrator and the candidate. At the same moment the minister remarked, "And the spirit rested on him in the shape of a dove." It was one of the most beautiful and touching incidents we ever witnessed in the administration of a religious rite; indeed, it seemed to call up to the minds of Christians the time when the adorable Redeemer came up out of Jordan, and God sent a seal to this sacred rite. [Manchester (N.H.) Mirror.

The Discovery of Glaciers in New Zealand.—The following account of the discovery of glaciers at an elevation of 2000 feet, at Milford Haven, west coast of the Middle Island, New Zealand, is from a letter from Dr. Lyall, surgeon of H. M. steam vessel Acheron, Capt. Stokes, employed surveying the coaste in that locality. The writer is known to many of our readers as a zealous naturalist, who accompanied Sir James Clarke Ross during his three adventurous south polar expeditions.

"Milford Haven, New Zealand, March 13, 1851.

"Since my last date we have been in two or three sounds, where the water was so deep that we had to let go the anchor close to the shore, and then make fast to the trees by hawsers. In one place we had three anchors down, and a cable fast to the trees from each quarter. We spent about a fortnight in the celebrated Dusky Bay, of Cook. The harbor we are now in is one of the most remarkable I have ever seen. It is about nine or ten miles deep, and not above a mile or two across in the widest part. The entrance is narrow, and immediately on entering you have immense precipices of 3000 feet towering right over head, on both sides. As we went in, the engineers could see the mountains on both sides at once, from the stoke-hole of the steamer. I wish you were here to take some sketches of the scenery: The hills surrounding the harbor vary in height from upwards of 4000 to near 7000 feet, and on many of them unbroken streams of water are seen originating at a height of 4000 to 5000 feet. There is one large waterfall on the side of the sound, 1200 feet, and a fine one close to where the ship le, between 400 and 500 feet. There are glaciers in the cleft, near the tops of some of the mountains. I succeeded yesterday in getting to the lowest of them, which I calculated to be about 2000 feet above the level of the sea. I had a tremendous scramble at one place, having to surmount an almost perpendicular precipice of about 1200 feet. I was amply rewarded for my trouble, however, by the number of new plants I found beside the glacier."

It may be remembered that Mr. Darwin noticed the curious phenomenon of glaciers descending to the level of the sea in the Gulf of Penas, on the similarly mountainous and stormy west coast of Patagonia (lat. 48 deg. S.), and no one can compare the opposite east and west coasts of Scotland, Ireland, Norway and Sweden, South America and Tasmania, respectively, with those of the New Zealand Islands, without being struck with the similarity of their prominent features. The eastern side, in all these cases, is generally continuous in outline—flatter, drier and more sunny; while the western, which is the windward, is, on the contrary, indented by lingering fiords, running deep into the heart of the country, which is mountainous, perennially humid, foggy, rugged and boisterous, more uniform in temperature, and rarely visited by the sun's rays.

Stone Cutting Machine.—The novel and ingenious machine with which the tunnel of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad is to be perforated through the Hoosac Mountain, is thus described:

"The machine when finished will weigh about 65 tons. It will be worked by a steam engine of 75 horse-power, and will cost about $15,000. It will cut the entire size of the tunnel for a double track—in other words, a circular hole of the diameter of 24 feet. It will probably enter from 6 to 15 linear feet per day. These data are taken from its actual cutting in granite. The rock in the Hoosac tunnel is pure mica slate, highly stratified, and the line of the tunnel enters the rock at right angles with its stratification. The machine is called 'Wilson's patent stone-dressing machine,' and has the capacity of cutting pure quartz rock (silex or flint) with great rapidity. The machine is described as a truly wonderful invention. The cutters are circular plates of cast steel, of 14 inches diameter, half of an inch thick and ground, with a bevel on each side, to an edge. They are placed on the rock, at an angle of about 45 degrees, and roll over the surface with great rapidity. The edge is pressed into the rock with great force and acts as a wedge, prying up and throwing off the rock in a surprising manner. A block of granite, ten feet long and four feet wide, was placed on a carriage and submitted to a single cutter, gauged to cut two inches from its surface. It passed over the entire stone in 22 minutes, and cut off 1,000 lbs. of rock, leaving the same as smooth as any hammer dressed stone. Its owner offers to prove that he can make six revolutions per minute."

Ancient Syracuse.—A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, speaking of ancient Syracuse, says:

"In the zenith of her glory, she maintained in constant pay an army of 100,000 foot and 10,000 horse, besides a fleet of 400 sail. She did not shrink from contending against all the power of Carthage and Rome, and is said to have repulsed fleets of 2000 sail, and armies of 200,000 men. Of all this power and magnitude and pomp, any trace remains. The monuments and temples of the city are in ruins, and nothing but desolation salutes the eye. The spot is still shown where the house of Archimedes stood, and a corner from which he is said to have set fire to the Roman gallies with his burning glasses; now it is the famous fountain of Arethusa; also a remarkable cavern cut in the rock, called the "Ear of Dionysius," fashioned in the form of a human ear, 27 feet in width, 72 in height and 219 in depth. In this cavern the tyrant Dionysius confined his prisoners, and stationed at its mouth a sentinel, who could hear even the whispers of the prisoners, and whose duty it was to report them to his master. The echoes of this cavern are very loud; even the tearing of a piece of paper occasions a great noise. According to a Sicilian author, an eminent musician composed a canto for two voices which, when sung within the cavern, appeared to be performed by four.

"The sun is said never to have been obscured one whole day at Syracuse.

A Dangerous Adventure.—The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, in his letter of the 6th November, tells the following story:

One of the most singular and dangerous adventures took place at Brussels a few days ago. Alphonse Thevelin, a gymnast, well known for his astonishing feats on the spring board, attached to Godard's balloon, had advertised to give at Brussels one of his aeronautical exhibitions. The people had gethered in immense crowds on the town square, the spring board had been attached and all preparations made, and the balloon started majestically into the air, rising high above the houses.

Thevelin was about turning somerset when he received a severe blow on the back. This was surprising, in the particular locality, but our gymnast did not hesitate to turn quickly and grapple with his aerial antegonist. Balloon, spring board and all, went off and left him in mid-heaven, locked in a close embrace with St. Michael, not in propria persona, but in the form of an immense gilt statue, with which the Belgians have ornemented the tip-top of the steeple of their Hotel de Ville, or Townhouse. Thevelin looked after the balloon; it was a quarter of a mile off; he looked down to the ground, three hundred and fifty feet below; he concluded to try and reach the latter.

The perilous descent was accomplished in the presence of an affrighted crowd. A single false step, the trembling of a muscle, the giving way of a projection, must have sent him a lifeless and crushed mass to the pavement below. The rigor of the weather and his light costume forbade him to remain where he was. He come down safely on the outside of the spire.

He deserves richly to have his salary doubled by the Emperor of Russia, who has engaged him to go to St. Petersburg to take charge of a gymnasium. Louis Napoleon hes just such a descent to make from the airy pinnacle where he is now, and the people are looking on to see how he will make it. I hope he will succeed as well as Thévelin."

Pitcairn's Island.—The following is extracted from the notes of a visit by the Commander of the Cockatrice, British man-of-war, to this Island, now inhabited by the descendants of the mutineers of the British ship Bounty:

Some of the women accompanied us, and entertained me very much by their lively and cheerful conversation. I learned from it that they do the most laborious work, such as preparing the ground for planting, digging potatoes and yams, which they have to carry some distance to their houses by rough and precipitous paths. They also thatch the roofs, cook, wash, and attend to other domestic duties, while the men are employed building houses, and in other mechanical work, as well as fishing, and hunting goats. The children have not much attention paid to them, after they are able to run about; when they are seven years old they are sent to school, and attend regularly until fourteen. Consequently there is not a soul on the island that cannot read and write; most of them are exceedingly intelligent and well-informed, indeed much more so than it is possible to conceive from their isolation and little intercourse with the world.

But what must strike strangers more than any thing else, is the happy manner in which they live together; there does not appear to be a jealousy or bad thought existing mueng them; the women in particular are very fond of each other; such a thing as a querrel between them never occurs; and nothing can happen to any one on the island without its being a source of grief to all, they are so knit together by friendship and love.

A magistrate is eppointed yearly by e majority of votes; all, both male and female, above eighteen years of age, are voters. He has the management of the affairs of the island, and settles disputes, with the assistance of a jury if necessary. Should any decision be deemed unsatisfactory, they do not quarrel over it, but let the subject drop, and refer it by mutuel consent to the captain of the first man-of-war that visits them, with the express understanding that his decision is final. The magistrate takes cherge of any spirituous liqners that may be given them by ships visiting the island, and issues a small portion to any one who wishes it on holidays, of which they have but two in the year—one to celebrate the errival of the Bounty, in January, the other the Queen's birth-day—by this means drunkenness is entirely nvoided. However, they are not niddicted to it. I was told by Arthur Quintal, that such a crime had not taken place for thirteen years.

Woman's Rights.—The woman mentioned in the following peragraph from the Bangor Whig, puts to the blush the advocates of women's righte. She has not only asserted, but at the same time maintained her right to engage in the rougher oeilings of man, and to leave her husband et home to take care of the responsibilities.

We mentioned, a few days since, some interesting particulars concerning the town of Eddington, and have since heard of a bit of enterprise of a family in that town worth relating. The family have six children, the mother of them robust, healthy and active, but the futher of quite a different cherecter. So it has been arranged the wife should go to California and make her "pile," while the husband should remelu nt home and take cero of the children. This errangement was mutuelly setisfactory, and the woman obtained her outfit for the voyage to the land of gold. On arriving at New York, she found an opportunity to cook during the passage out, and she immediately sent back to her family fifty dollers of her funds, and has gone on her way rejoicing, and with the determinetion to get her share of the gold in California. The women in that town are all first rete, but this case furms an exception, and not the ruie, of their takling the lead of their husbands in business enterprises.

Private Fortunes of Great Personages.—Croesus possessed, in landed property, a fortune equal to £1,700,000, besides a large sum of money, slaves, and furniture, which amounted to an equal sum. He used to say, that a citizen who had not a fortune sufficient to support an army, or a legion, did not deserve the title of a rich man. The philosopher Seneca, had a fortune of £3,500,000. Tiberius, at his death left £23,624,000, which Caligula spent in less then twelve months. Vaapesian, ou ascending the throne, estimated all the expenses of the State at £35,000,000. The debts of Mlio emounted to £600,000. Cesar, before he entered upon any office, owed £2,935,000. He had purchased the friendship of Curie, for £500,000, and that of Lucius Peulus fur £800,000. At the time of the assassination of Julius Cesar, Antony was in debt to the amount of £800,000; he owed this sum on the ides of March, and it was paid before the kalande of April; he squendered £147,000,000 of the public treasures. Appius squandered in debauchery £500,000, and finding, on examination of the state of his affairs, he had no more than £80,000, he poisoned himself, because he considered that sum insufficient for his maintenance. Julius Cæsar gave Servie, the mother of Brutus, e pearl of the value of £40,000. Cleopatra at an entertalnment, gave to Antony, dissolved in vinegar, a pearl worth £80,000, and he swallowed it. Claudius, the son of Esopus, the comedian, swullowed one worth £8,000. One single dish cost Esopus £80,000. Caligula spent for one supper £80,000, and Heligabalus £200,000. The usual cost of a repast for Lucullus was £20,000; the fish from his fish-ponds was sold for £85,000.

A Faithful and Courageous Slave.—The La Grange Monument relates the following reminiscence of the Texas revolutionary struggle, on the authority of Col. Chauncy Johnson, of Bastrop:

"[illegible] the brave Maveric was taken prisoner at that [illegible] city, the lady, then in La Grange, hearing of the capture of her husband, put a purse of gold into the hands of a faithful negro, with directions for him, at all hazards, to deliver it safely to his master, then in captivity. While on the road endeavoring to fulfil this important trust, he fell in with and joined the company of the lamented Dawson, when within ten or twelve miles of San Antonio. As is well known, this party was met by a portion of the Mexican army, and all killed but sixteen; forty being already slain, the balance surrendered, (except the negro,) deeming it unavailing to contend longer with such unequal odds. This noble fellow continued to fight with such desperation and effect, that it attracted the attention and admiration of Col. Carasco, of the Mexican cavalry, who rushed forward, determined to save his life. He ordered his men to disarm, but not kill him. They succeeded in getting his rifle, but the negro seized a piece of mosquite timber, and with it knocked three of the Mexican lancers from their horses. Carasco had to order him to be shot in self-defence."

The number of houses upon the island of Sicily is estimated at 256,120, and the population at 1,787,771. The mass of the people are poor, and without education. It is subject to the King of Naples, who governs it by a Viceroy. The Government is very exacting and oppressive, and affords scarcely any encouragement to agriculture, manufacture or commerce.

Later from Mexico.

The brig Union, Captain Roderick, arrived from Vera Cruz on Saturday, bringing dates from that place to the 17th, and from the city of Mexico to the 11th inst.

It appears that the reports of the defeat of Carvajal, published in the Diario de la Tarde, and received here a few days ago, were perfectly correct. The official report of Gen. Jauregui is published, and shows that Carvajal's forces were completely routed. He writes from Cerralvo, under date of December 1. He relates that, after the raising of the siege of Matamoros, he received information that Carvajal was at Torrecillas, and was ordered to fall back to Cadereyta, to prevent being surprised.

Then expecting to effect a junction with Avalos, Jauregui again advanced as far as Mier, which place he entered on the 21st of October without opposition. Not meeting Avalos, he retired a second time to Cerralvo. He was followed up closely by Carvajal, both parties marching through the chaparral. On the 27th the attack on Cerralvo was commenced. Jauregui complains much of the temper of the people; the National Guard was dissolved, and he received no assistance from the inhabitants. The attack was very brisk, but Jauregui says, did not force him from his position, till at last he found it necessary to concentrate all his forces on one point, in order to prolong the combat. On the morning of the 1st inst. the besiegers ceased the attack and took to flight.

A detachment of eighty cavalry was sent out to pursue them. They took the road from Agualegua to Linerre. Carvajal's loss was a colonel, four officers, and more than forty privates killed, the greater number Americans, and more than seventy wounded. Jauregui confesses to one officer slightly wounded, two non-commissioned officers and fourteen privates wounded, and six privates killed.

Several British residents have sent a communication to the Government, complaining of the inequality in the payment of duties caused by the tariff enforced at Matamoros by Gen. Avalos.

Joaquin de Munoz y Munos has been elected First Alcaldo of Vera Cruz.

The Legislature of Tamaulipas has passed a vote of thanks to the "Heroic defenders of Matamoros." The banners of the National Guard, which participated in the defence, are to be inscribed with the words: "Valientes defensores de la integridad del territorio Mexicano;" valiant defenders of the integrity of the Mexican territory.

A mob in Acajutla, on the 27th ult., assaulted and stoned the American Hotel, causing some damage.

The American adventurers who had stationed themselves at Bassal, in Sohora, believing they heard that a military force was marching against them.

The forces of Sonora have lately been gaining some advantages over the Indians.

On the 15th ult. a hundred men, with two pieces of artillery, left Tampico for Matamoros.

The Senate has passed a resolution to adjourn on the 10th of this month.

The Universal, of the 7th inst., says that on the day before the Chamber of Deputies had received from the Senate its dissent to the law authorizing the raising of the prohibitions.

An arrangement has been made with the English creditors, by which for five years they are to receive 3 per cent. annual interest and 5 of amortization, and afterwards 4 per cent. interest and 6 amortization. The Spanish debt has been arranged in the same way.

The amount of $151,000 has been subscribed in Mazatlan for the benefit of the defenders of Cuba.

The cholera has completely subsided in Mazatlan.

A duel has been fought in Chihuahua between the well known D. Angel Trias and an American, who had spoken slightingly of the Mexicans. Trias was wounded and the American killed.

Liberation of Mr. Wilson.

The annexed correspondence, in relation to the liberation of James M. Wilson, a member of the ill-fated Lopez expedition, was handed to the True Delta for publication, by the lady to whom it was addressed:

Department of State,
Washington, December 17, 1851.

Mrs. Ophelia P. Talbot, New Orleans, La.:

Madam—It gives me sincere pleasure to be enabled to inform you that Her Majesty, the Queen of Spain, to whose Minister in this city a copy of your letter to the President, of the 25th September last, had been communicated, with the request to intercede with Her Government in behalf of your unfortunate son, James M. Wilson, not only has graciously pardoned him, but has furnished him also, from her own private purse, the means to return speedily to his home.

I transmit, enclosed, a copy of the note of the Minister for foreign relations of Spain, to Mr. Calderon, on this subject, and of his note to me.

I am, madam, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant. Daniel Webster.

(Translation.) Washington, 16th December, 1851.

A letter which Mrs. Ophelia Talbot has written to the most Excellent President, and which by the order of His Excellency had been remitted through the Department of State to me, having come to the hands of the Secretary of State of Her Catholic Majesty, I have received from the Marquis of Miraflores an answer, of which I have the honor to enclose to the Hon. Daniel Webster an exact translation, as a proof of the magnanimous sentiments of Her Majesty, the Queen. I avail myself of this occasion to renew to the Hon. Daniel Webster the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

A. Calderon de la Barca.

Hon. Dan. Webster, Secretary of State of the U. S.

Spanish Minister for Foreign Affaires to Hon. A. Calderon de la Barca.
(Translation.)

Sir—To the Secretary of the Interior I write under this date as follows:

"Amongst the various recommendations which Her Majesty has received from the Government of the United States, in behalf of several of the prisoners belonging to the last unfortunate expedition of Bahia Honda, the attention of our sovereign, the Queen, has been more particularly attracted by a letter written to the President of the United States by Mrs. Ophelia P. Talbot, entreating his meditation in behalf of her young son, induced by inexperience to take part in this criminal enterprise. The simple and touching terms in which the letter describes the despair of this mother deprived of her only son, have not failed to affect the benevolent heart of Her Majesty, ever ready to stretch forth the hand of mercy to the unfortunate—whilst the religious resignation of the writer still more strengthens Her Majesty's desire to confirm her in her pious confidence. Therefore, setting aside, in this case, every other consideration but that of restoring happiness to an unfortunate mother by restoring to her the son, it has pleased the Queen to make use of the prerogative conceded to Her by the laws, and to pardon the prisoner, James M. Wilson, aged nineteen, a native of Indiana, and son of David Wilson and Ophelia P. Talbot. And Her Majesty wishing that no delay may occur in the execution of her kind design, has given orders that the expenses of the voyage of the prisoner Wilson to New Orleans shall be paid out of Her own private purse, so that the inexperienced and erring young man may return as soon as possible to the arms of his disconsolate mother. To this end the competent Spanish authority will agree with the American Consul as to the amount of the expenses, and the immediate embarkation of the young man. Wilden by order of Her Majesty I make known to your Excellency, that through your department suitable orders may be issued without delay for the punctual fulfilment of Her Majesty's desire, and the bill of the expenses of the young man's voyage be forwarded to me."

Which I copy to your Excellency for your information.

Madrid, Nov. 13, 1851.

(Signed) Marquis de Miraflores.

Further Details by the Baltic.

The Charleston Courier, of the 25th, contains the following additional intelligence brought by the Baltic, and telegraphed to that paper from New York:

France.—The loss in the army during the collision was, 1 officer killed and 3 wounded, 15 soldiers killed and 116 wounded. Fresh arrests of the republican leaders were daily made. Louis Napoleon, it is said, will be elected by an immense majority. Changarnier and other generals were confined at Havre, waiting their traiton the charge of exciting the soldiers to revolt. Com. Thos. ap Catesby Jones, U. S. N., who was near the barricades as a spectator, had his leg broken and one of his fingers cut off. The Prince de Joinville and the Duke d'Aumale have gone to the frontiers of Belgium and raised the standard of revolt against Louis Napoleon. Paris was perfectly tranquil by the 6th inst., and no signs were left of the commotion except the barricades. Louis Napoleon had issued an address calling on the people to go to the polls and vote freely, pledging himself to submit to their decision. The news from other parts of Europe is uninteresting.

Latest accounts from Paris state that a bloody conflict had taken place between the people and the troops, in which the latter were victorious.

New outbreaks were, however, continually occurring in all parts of the city, and the troops were fired upon from the housetops of the citizens.

Accounts were generally favorable to the President; but several generals have declared against him; and Gen. Nieuwerker was marching on Paris with four regiments to oppose the President and the army. The most intense excitement prevailed, and there was no telling to what extremity of bloodshed the conflicts between the people and the usurper's forces might be carried.

Prepeard Enhustrisl Convention at New Orleans.

According to previous notice, a highly intelligent and respectable meeting of ladies and gentlemen was held on the evening of the 23d inst., in the State-house at Montgomery, Ala., for the purpose of co-operating with Louisiana and the other Southern States in an effort to establish a great Agricultural and Mechanical Exhibition in May, 1853, in the city of New Orleans.

Hon. Price Williams, of Mobile, was called to the Chair, and James H. Gladney of Pickens, appointed Secretary.

The objects of the meeting having been explained by the Chairman the Hon. H. W. Hilliard made an address, and offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we respond with sincere satisfaction to the appeal made to the State of Alabama by the Governor of Louisiana, and other eminent gentlemen of that State, to co-operate in an effort to establish "a great Southwestern Agricultural and Mechanical Exhibition and Fair of all Human Industry, upon a large and magnificent scale," to take place in the beginning of May, 1853, in the city of New Orleans, to be followed by annual fairs in the cities of Mobile, Natchez, and such other points as may favor such an enterprise.

Resolved, That the Governor of this State, be requested to appoint a delegation, consisting of sixty gentlemen, chosen from different parts of Alabama, to represent the State in the "Industrial Convention" to be held in New Orleans in April next.

Resolved, That the Chairman of this meeting be requested to appoint fifteen gentlemen to act as a Central Committee, who shall hold their meetings in this city, and whose duty it shall be to correspond with persons throughout the State interested in the success of industrial pursuits, with the view of preparing for a full participation by the citizens of Alabama in the proposed fairs at New Orleans and elsewhere.

The Rev. Dr. Lipscombe was then called for, and addressed the meeting. Hon. James E. Deloy, by invitation followed with a short address. Dr. Plough, Agent from the State of Louisiana to advance the interests of the Exhibition, then addressed the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Davis, of Limestone, offered the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That this meeting has listened with great pleasure to the remarks of the Rev. Dr. Lipscombe, and that he be requested to furnish a written copy of them for publication. Adopted.

The meeting then adjourned.

Price Williams, Chairman.
J. B. Gladney, Secretary.

A bill has passed the Kentucky Legislature granting charter for a railroad from Maysville to Newport.

Later from Rio Janeiro and the Plata.—An arrival on Saturday brought the Rio Janeiro Journal de Commercio, the following translation from which we find in yesterday's Picayune:

"This paper contains some particulars of the recent events on the Plata which terminated with the capitulation of Oribe. The Journal denies that there was any convention between Oribe and Urquiza. It says that certain terms were conceded to the former, not extorted from fear of the victor, but conceded by his lenity. Urquiza issued a proclamation, from which we learn that, after having waited some time for the Conde de Caxias, he was compelled by the general insurrection of the inhabitants in his favor—to use his own account—to continue his march to the Rio Negro. At last he arrived before Oribe's position with 8000 men; but rather than risk a multitude of lives on the issue of a battle, he conceded the terms above alluded to. By these terms it was acknowledged that the resistance to the Anglo-French intervention was made in the belief that thereby the independence of the Republic was being defended; no distinction is to be made between citizens of the Banda holding different opinions."

Terrible Gale—Snow Storm—Disasters on Lake Erie—Buffalo, Dec. 17.—A tremendous gale of wind has been prevailing here since early yesterday morning. The snow which had previously fallen to the depth of two feet has been driven into immense drifts by the violence of the wind, completely blocking up the roads and rendering them impassable. The mails from various directions have been delayed on account of the storm. The steamer May Flower, which left on Monday evening to go up the lake, was driven ashore near Girard, Pennsylvania, and lies a perfect wreck. Her crew and passengers, fortunately, were saved. The propeller Oneida has also been driven ashore at Fairport.

Proposed New Line of Steamships.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce gives a memorial from James B. Moore, Josiah Lawrence, and Henry H. Goodman, of Ohio, and John H. Dreihl, of Pennsylvania, and their associates, in relation to a line of steamers from California or Oregon to China, with a branch to the Sandwich Islands:

The consideration which the projectors are to receive is: first, a sum equal to the postage received by the Government for mail matter. Second, a sum equal to half the revenue collectable on goods; the amounts so paid not to exceed $50,000 per ship per annum; and they are to have the privilege of purchasing thirty-six thousand neres of Government land from any unlocated lands in the Territory of Oregon at the rate of ten cents per acre.

The steamers constituting the line between California or Oregon and Shanghai, in China, shall not be less than four thousand tons burthen each, and on the line between Oregon and California, and the Sandwich Islands not less than fifteen hundred tons burthen each. The propositions are more liberal to the Government than any that have been made, and they will doubtless receive the favorable consideration of the Committee to which they have been referred.

The Weather.—The New York Commercial of the 18th says the weather continues cold, although it has moderated a little.

At Brooklyn, on Tuesday night, a colored man named Bunce, was frozen to death in an outhouse near the Wallabout; and in this city. (N. Y.,) Samuel Tilmer, also colored, was found yesterday morning between two piles of lumber in West street, having perished from the cold during the night.

At Jamaica, Long Island, yesterday morning, at six o'clock, the thermometer indicated a temperature of 3, and this morning at seven, of 4 degrees above zero. The lowest depression last Winter was 6, and the Winter before, 7 degrees above zero.

The clipper ship Hurricane, while getting under way yesterday, had four of her crew badly frost bitten. They were brought up to the city in the steamer Herculean.

At New Haven yesterday, at 6 A. M., the mercury was at zero. At Boston, at 7 A. M., it was 4 degrees above zero.

Incendiarism and Supposed Murder in Baltimore County.—We learned last evening, says the Baltimore Clipper of the 19th inst., the particulars of a horrid affair that occurred in Baltimore county on Friday night last. The scene of the dreadful occurrence was about eight miles from the city, on the Belair road. The victims were a Mrs. Sickes and daughter. It seems that the husband of Mrs. Sickes had got into some difficulty, and had left home on the morning of the occurrence to avoid the officers of the law, who were in pursuit of him, leaving his wife and daughter in the house. Late that evening, two men were observed by some of the neighbors to leave the house hastily and disappear. Shortly after, the house was discovered to be in flames. The neighbors gathered at the scene of the burning building, but were unable to stop the progress of the flames, and the house was burnt to the ground. As soon as they were permitted to by the fire, they commenced an examination of the smouldering ruins, when, horrible to relate, the charred remains of the unfortunate mother and daughter were found in the smoky mass. From the circumstance of the two men having been seen to leave the premises so shortly before the breaking out of the fire, the suspicion is strong that the unfortunate victims had been first murdered, and the house then fired. For the sake of justice, it is most sincerely to be hoped that the atrocious miscreants may be arrested, and the perpetrators of this foul deed suffer the utmost penalty of the law.

Naval.—The following is an extract of a letter received from an officer on board the U. S. sloop Marion, dated 24th September, 1851, at Typa, off Macao:

"The Marion is waiting the arrival of the United States steamer Susquehanna, when it is expected that we shall leave this station for the United States, to arrive in April or May at the port of Boston. The officers and crew are in a good state of health."

Arkansas River.—The Fort Smith Herald of the 12th instant says: "There was a heavy rain on Tuesday night. The river continues low, without much prospect of a rise. Weather cool and cloudy."

Fire Annihilator.—Phillips's Fire Annihilator was to be publicly tested in New York on the 18th. It is stated that a private experiment a few days previous had proved highly satisfactory.

Illinois River.—The loss arising from the present atmost unnavigable condition of the Illinois river are estimated at $716,500, during the past year. A courention recently held at Peoria, adopted resolutions strongly urging Congress to make an appropriation for the improvement of this river.

Dead.—The Vicksburg Whig, of the 23d says: "We learn with regret that the Hon. Cornelius Carmack, of Tishemingo, the President of the late State Convention, died to Jackson, on Friday, the 19th. He was an estimable citizen, and his death will be deeply deplored throughout the State."

Exterminating the Liquor Traffic.—The citizens of Massachusetts talk of having the chief feature of the Maine liquor law adopted in that State, and petitions to that effect are unmerously circulated. It goes immediately to the total destruction of the liquor. The very existence of the article is regarded as conclusive evidence against itself; and it may be lynched at once without recourse to trial or hazard of the law's delay. The law does not authorize the seizure of liquor in private houses, or wherever it may be found; but only where it has been, or obviously is intended to be, sold.

Red River.—The Alexandria Republican, of December 27, says: "The river has risen nearly three feet in the last few days, and the navigation is now good, both above and below the falls. These make a much smaller showing than they did a few days ago, and will entirely disappear should we have much more of a rise.

Later from Mexico.—The Picayune of last evening learned that private letters were received here by the brig Olebe, from Vera Cruz, stating that a violent popular outbreak had taken place in the city of Mexico on the 10th, occasioned by the passage of the law reducing the tariff. The anger of the people, it is said, was directed entirely against foreigners, the stores of many of whom were attacked and destroyed. It is reported that several lives were lost during the affray.

The Globe reports the loss of the brig Susan Spofford, of Rockland, Maine, on the morning of the 18th inst., in the harbor of Vera Cruz, having gone ashore in a norther, and would be condemned. The brig had just arrived from Mobile, and landed in safety a cargo of cotton before the gale.

The Globe came to P. Camerdon, and brought $845 in specie.

Mercantile Agencies.—The evil tendency of these associations is made apparent by the recent judgment rendered against the head agency in New York:

Large Verdict.—In the case of Beardsley et al. vs. Lewis Tappan, which had been pending for two weeks in the United States Circuit Court, New York, the jury, on the morning of the 18th inst., rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs, assessing the damages at ten thousand dollars. The action was brought for a libel, alleged to have been published by the defendant, affecting the credit of the plaintiffs, who are merchants in the State of Ohio.

Vessels Built in the United States.—From the tables accompanying the Secretary of the Treasury's Report, we learn that in 1851 there were built in the United States 211 ships, 65 brigs, 532 schooners, 321 sloops and canal boats, with a total of 208,202 tonnage. Pennsylvania owns tonnage amounting to 254,373, being an increase of 25,000 over the previous year. New York has 1,941,013, being an increase of 95,000. Maryland has 304,444, which is an increase of 11,357. Delaware has 11,880, being a decrease of 4,839. North Carolina has 43,722, being a decrease of 31,466. Virginia has 60,769, being a decrease of 4,407; and the District of Columbia has 22,903, which is an increase of 5,893. The steam tonnage in the United States has increased during the year, 57,760 tons, and now amounts to 583,607 tons.

Naval Engineers.—The examining board of Chief Naval Engineers, which was convened at Philadelphia on the 1st instant, by the order of the Secretary of the Navy, have closed their proceedings, and the following are the names of those who passed the board, and are pronounced qualified for promotion: To be commissioned as Chief Engineers in the United States Navy—No. 1. Wm. H. Everett; No. 2. James W. King. To be First Assistant Engineers—No. 1. Henry Mason; No. 2. James G Young; No. 3. Robert Danby. To be Second Assistant Engineers—No. 1. George T W Logan; No. 2. Montgomery Fletcher; No. 3. Wm. H. King; No. 4. H. C. Pitts; No. 5. James M. Adams; No. 6. S. B. Knox; No. 7. D. T. Mapes; No. 8. A. Warner.

The Savannah News announces the death of Col. Abram B. Fannin, at that city, on the 18th inst. During his life time he held several appointments under the General Government. He served in the Quartermaster's Department in the war of 1812, and for a number of years held the office of Collector of the port of Savannah.

Singular Discovery.—The Editor of the Sunday Varieties publishes a lottor which he has received from Captain D'Auberville, of the bark Chieftain, of Boston, dated Gibraltar, September 7, giving an account of a most singular discovery of a wonderfully preserved and valuable relic of the discovery of this Western World. The editor says he has known Captain D'Auberville for sixteen years, and places full reliance on the truth of this strange marveilous story:

It appears by the letter, that the Captain put into Gibraltar on the 27th of August last to repair some damage his vessel has sustained, and while waiting, himself and two of his passengers crossed the straits of Mt. Abylus, on the African coast, to shoot and pick up geological specimens. Before returning, the breeze had freshened so much as to render it necessary to put more ballast in the boat, and one of the crew lifted what he supposed to be a rock, but from its extreme lightness and singular shape, was induced to call the attention of the Captain to it, who at first took it for a piece of pumice stone, but it was so completely covered with barnacles and other marine animalculæ, as to deny that supposition. On further examination, he found it to be a cedar keg. On opening it, he found a cocoa nut enveloped in a kind of gum or resinous substance; this he also opened and found a parchment covered with Gothic characters nearly illegible, and which no nor any one on board was able to decipher. He, however, found on shore an Armenian book merchant, who was said to be the most learned man in Spain, to whom he took it, who, after learning the circumstances of its discovery, offered $300 for it, which offer Capt. D'Auberville declined. "He then," says the letter, "read word for word, and translated it into French as he read each sentence, a short, but concise account of the discovery of 'Cartha,' or 'farther India,' addressed to Ferdinand and Isabella, of Castile and Arragon, saying the ship could not possibly survive the tempest another day; but they then were between the Western Isles and Spain; that two narratives were written and thrown into the sea, in case the 'Caravel' would go to the bottom, that some mariner would pick up one or the other of them. The strange document was signed Christopher Columbus, in a bold, dashing hand." It also bore the date 1493, and consequently has been floating over the Atlantic for three hundred and eighty-five years.

The letter closes with an assurance from the writer that he would guard his treasure safe until his return to the United States, which would be in April or May next.

Gone to the Alms-house.—The last remaining relative of Benedict Arnold (who honored Norwich by being born here) was carried to the Poor-house three or four days ago by one of our Selectmen. She was cousin to the Traitor, and remembers him well—and spoke with seeming resentment and indignation of his having been "driven out of the country." She is ninety-two years old, and when taken from the miserable hovel, where she and a sister of hers, who died three or four years ago, had lived, shunned, solitary, and in abject poverty for many years, the poor old creature was sitting without a spark of fire to warm herself by, although the day was one of the coldest of the season.

We have never been able to learn the there was any reason, except in the leprosy which clung to the Traitor whom it was their misfortune to be allied to, why this women and her sister, neither of whom was ever married, should heve gone through life exolnded from sociel life and Intercourse by the inexorable ben of society. Yet such is the fect; and it furnishes a striking commentary upon the depth and strength of the feeling of loething and exocration with which the name of Benedict Arnold is linked, now and forever, in the popular mind. [Norwich (Ct.) Courier.

Mr. Ralph Steele, of Newcastle, England, has invented a saw capable of sawing timber into any shape for ship's use, either ship knees or ship timber of any description. The saw, at the same time that it is capable of cutting timber to any given shape, can also be applied to cutting straight.

The only daughter of Louis the Sixteenth, so well known for her trials and misfortunes and courage, Maria Theresa Charlotte de Bourbon, departed this life at Frohsdorf, in Austria, on the 19th of October, in the 73d year of her age. There are none left now of the elder branch of the Bourbons except the Count de Chambord, Henry V., as the legitimists regard him to be de jure, and his sister, the Duchess of Parma, and her children.

Dr. Johnson compared plaintiff and defendant in an action of law to two men duckling their heads in a bucket, and daring each other to remain the longest under water.

The most beautiful may be the most admired and caressed, but they are not always the most esteemed and loved.

There are rumors at Washington of another secret Cuban Expedition being arranged, and it is said that a million of dollars have already been contributed. The chief agents and actors are said to be now in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, working silently and subterranoonly.

Of the famous band of patriots who

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KEENER, W. E. LOFFY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME I. NUMBER 49. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1852. OFFICE, 56 GRAVIER ST.

The Mother presenting her Son with a Bible.

Remember, lad, who gave thee this.
When other days shall come,
When she who had thy earliest kiss
Sleeps in the silent tomb.
Remember, 'twas a mother's love
The gift to one she'd die to save.

The mother sought a pledge of love,
The holiest for her son.
And from the gifts of God above
She took this holy one?
She chose for our beloved boy
This source of light, and life, and joy;

And bade him keep the gift—that when
The parting hour should come,
They might have hope to meet again
In an eternal home.
She said his faith in that would be
A sweet increase to her memory.

And should the scoffer, in his pride,
Laugh the fond faith to scorn
And bid him cast the pledge aside,
That he from youth had borne;
She bade him pause, and ask his breast
If he or she had loved him best?

A parent's blessing on her son
Does with Omnipotence
The heart that would retain the one
Must to the other cling.
Remember! 'Tis no idle toy:
A mother's gift. Remember, boy.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

The present seems to be a favorable moment for reopening my suspended correspondence. Both Methodism and the European world are just now in a position of peculiar interest.

It was with good reason that on the 18th ult. you felicitated yourself and your readers upon the good qualities of your home correspondents. Although in ignorance of the local circumstances, and destitute of the local attachments and interests, which must give to such communications a great part of their value and power of impression, yet even I find these communications to be well worth perusal. Many of these are very racy and telling, and some display quite superior ability. One of the most able and excellent which I have seen is that on the "Signs of the Times." (No. III.,) in the number to which I have referred. In nearly every word of that article I heartily concur. I have no sympathy with "stand-stillers," with the advocates of sand and blind immobility, whether in America or England. It has a little surprised me that in America such beings were to be found. The general impression in this country is that your only danger, in matters of general policy and organization, secular or religious, is from too great "go-aheadativeness," to use a very novel and expressive word which I learnt a short time ago from an American. And I can assure you my countrymen, generally would be vastly surprised if they knew that in the matter of pews, missions, salary to ministers, and a few other matters you Statesmen had gone ahead so slowly. Still we feel that we have no right to dictate to you on these matters. And only with great diffidence would we even venture to advise.

We feel that in reference to such matters of detail as these you are far better judges of your own circumstances and needs than we can possibly be; and that as to the whether, the how, and the whereof, all matters of internal arrangement and progress, you ought to be left to the free guidance of your own wisdom and conscience.

But your able correspondent has fallen into a very serious misrepresentation of British Methodism in one sentence of his article, "Look" he says, "at the Wesleyan Church in England." Old usage is so idolized by the great majority that they will not treat with common decency any suggestion implying a departure therefrom. And if we may judge from present indications, trouble is brewing there which will shake its foundations."

Now, that old usage is too much idolized by many amongst us, perhaps even by the majority, I sadly fear. Still let the actual changes in our polity during the last fifty or sixty years be looked at, and it will be found, I think, that, considering we belong to the Old Country, and come of a Tory stock, we have actually advanced a good way more than might have been expected. You will judge whether or not we have advanced as rapidly as yourselves. It will be easy to show, also, that our present attitude is by no means one of obstinate resistance to all improvement or progress. Say nothing of pewed chapels (free sittings were also liberally provided in most,) ministers' salaries, missions, and provision for worn out ministers and ministers' widows; look at the concessions which since the settlement and concessions of 1797 have been made to the people.

Since that period "every change in Methodism, affecting the position and functions of the laity has been a concession to popular influence. The committee system especially has introduced a new element into Methodism, by means of which the advantages, without the jars or evils of a 'lower house' are secured. These afford a fair, virtual representation of the lay intelligence and influence of Methodism, which is thus brought into advantageous and happy combination with the ministerial executive. And the Conference is, by this plan, relieved as to mixed and financial matters of all functions, except those of a court of review.

"The introduction of lay-men, also, into the District meetings, to take the principal share in the discussion and determination of all matters not purely spiritual and ministerial, is another most important concession of modern Methodism.

"In addition to which must be specially mentioned the legislation of 1835, by which further checks were placed around the authority of the ministerial executive, and a constitutional way of access to the Conference, in reference to any change deemed desirable in the laws of the connexion, opened and secured, as it had not previously been, to the circuits of Methodism.

* * * * * * *

"That all in Methodism is perfect, we are far from supposing. On the contrary, we are convinced that some matters of importance require to be readjusted, and some doubtful points to be defined. Some things now only intimated, need to be made explicit. And the system of lay co-operation must, as time advances, become more completely articulated, and be more fully carried out."

Does Hunt now, look like "out-and-out stand-stillism," or "straight-outism"! Yet the above is quoted from a little work which has received the unqualified recommendation of the Wesleyan Magazine, which has been spoken of in the highest terms by all the leading men in Methodism, and the substance of which was originally published in the London Watchman, the semi-official organ of the Wesleyan Executive. And the writer of that work himself suggested, modestly, it is true, yet with sufficient distinctness, at the last Conference, the desirableness of some most important alterations in the present economy of Methodism, the tendency of which would be to bring the influence of the people to bear directly and fully upon the Conference; and, what is even more to the purpose, his suggestions were listened to with the kindest attention, and his name immediately added to the committee appointed for the consideration, during the year, of the circuit and private memorials.

Yes, MEMORIALS—for hundreds of these have been received, carefully analyzed, classified, and patiently considered, at the two last Conferences—and most "respectful" replies to them will be found in the published Minutes for 1850 and 1851. And yet some of the "suggestions" contained in these memorials were of the most novel and startling character.

The writer of this letter was himself a witness, at the last Conference of the skill and care with which these numerous memorials were investigated and epitomized by an esteemed and able brother in preparation for the committee, to whom they were in the first instance submitted by the Conference, in order to be reported upon, prior to their general discussion in full Conference. He was also present at that discussion and can testify to the conciliatory and respectful spirit in which it was conducted.

The character of the committee, indeed, appointed at the last Conference (50 in number) to meet upon this subject in the course of the year, is a proof how erroneous is your correspondent's estimate of the temper of the British Conference. Dr. Beaumont is, indeed, excluded. But this no intelligent and sound hearted Wesleyan, however liberal, will wonder at or regret. Be assured it is not Dr. B.'s professions of liberalism, which withdrew from him the esteem and confidence of his brethren. Dr. Dixon, a man much beloved and honored in this country, even by most of those who think his judgment very fallible, is on that committee. So is Geo. Steward, who, with all his vagueness of thought and magniloquence of phrase, is really a man of a magnificent and gorgeous intellect, as well as of a lovely spirit. Both these are reported liberals, and are really large hearted men, though possibly not a whit more really liberal than others, of more practical minds, and more accustomed to real every-day Methodist work, than themselves. Then there is kind-hearted George B. Macdonald, another reputed liberal, besides W. Lord, J. P. Haswell, Thomas Harris and many more of a similar character—all men of eminently conciliatory temper, and avowedly in favor of some changes in certain parts of our system. John Scott, too, a host in himself has declared himself on the same side. Dr. Beecham, though very cautious in the expression of his own views, is known to be a moderate "Reformer," using the word in its true sense. Dr. Bunting, though in his case ago has added timidity to caution is yet very anxious for a full consideration of the subject and that all should be conceded and done that can be honestly and safely. And among these men there are not to be found more resolute reformers than the eloquent William Arthur, and the able and energetic James H. Rigg, the author of the work from which I have quoted. Nor do I believe that there are more than two men of the fifty really opposed to any change.

This committee is summoned to meet on February 3, and I hope to be able to give you some general account of its proceedings, being myself of the number.

As to "our foundations" there is, notwithstanding our sad loss, no fear of these. On the contrary, there can be no doubt, that these are all the firmer for the late agitations. The luminous expositions, and unanswerable vindications of the general principles and plans of Wesleyan Methodism—several of them from the pens of intelligent and liberal laymen—admirably supply what was previously a felt want in Methodism, and scarcely leave anything further in this respect to be desired. As a further proof, that our foundations are still firm, look at our missionary work, at our educational efforts—greater just now and more promising of success than ever—at the united testimonial to Drs. Bunting and Newton. As to our missions, this present year bids fair to outdo in liberality, all that have gone before. At the Leeds District Anniversary Meeting, a month ago, within about four days, by collections in the various chapels in that town, and the proceeds of an Annual Bazaar, (£100) there were raised for the cause of missions, (£1610), an unparralleled sum. So at a noble Missionary Meeting at Wolverhampton, the other day, a person, by no means wealthy, though through a recent invention, money is beginning to flow in to him, in handing up 100 guineas, as his subscription for the present year, announced himself as a subscriber for the coming years, of a guinea a day, that is 365 guineas for the year. I observed, too, advertised in last week's Watchman, a second donation for 1851, from T. E. E.—some anonymous priacely giver—of £882. What was the amount of his first donation, I do not remember. The news, as to our Missionary Fund, is from most parts of the country, exceedingly encouraging. Everywhere, we hear of increased collections; so that, though some withdraw supplies, others increase them, and God's blessing still attends us. In other respects, too, the intelligence alike from London and from the provinces is, on the whole, decidedly encouraging. The spirit of agitation seems to be generally subsiding, and the people to be giving heed to the things which make for their peace.

Political news here, we have none. The spirit of party seems to be extinct. Protestants, however, are gathering themselves up for a mighty united assault, the coming session on Maynooth endowment. Meanwhile, the Irish resistance and the operations of the Catholic Defence Association, seem likely to end, as they began in vapouring threats and hot words. It is found impossible to get up an effective agitation on the subject, even in Ireland. Indeed, Ireland is in the way speedily to become more Protestant than Popish. Emigration, on the one hand, and, on the other, the rapid and almost simultaneous conversion of tens of thousands from Popery to Protestantism, have already about equalized the numbers adhering to the opposing faiths.

Kossuth left us a week ago, to visit the great Republic. As (now) an avowed Republican, at least in his desires for Hungary—he will probably excite more universal sympathy in America, than he has done in Britain. The masses here, indeed, have worshipped in Kossuth, the impersonation of liberty and heroism, as opposed to the abhorred despotism of Austria—knowing, meanwhile, for the most part, next to nothing of the real character and actual deeds of Kossuth, or of the history and case of Hungary—the republican portion of these masses, not very numerous, but influential on the inertia of others by their restless energy, and stern determination,—have welcomed him enthusiastically, as the representative of their own political views—but almost the whole of the upper classes and the great majority of the middle, have stood altogether aloof from the exile, in disgust of his principles, doubt of his personal character, and apprehension of his influence upon the public mind. Kossuth has displayed the most extraordinary genius—has proved himself, even in unaccustomed English, to be an orator of the most exalted style, and of prodigious power to seize and wield the popular feelings—and has shown a marvellous skill all through, in adapting himself and his demonstrations to the persons and circumstances amongst which he found himself.

Besides which, he has a person and a part, such as at once win admiration by their beauty, and by their nobility, command profound regard. But it is impossible to deny that he has displayed more ingenuity than ingenuousness, and more power of accomodation than consistency of profession or conduct. At Marseilles a Red Republican, he became at Southampton a constitutional monarchist. Emboldened by almost universal popular applause, and perceiving that the community, and not the middle and upper classes, were his admirers, he made bold at Birmingham, and at Manchester, to declare himself Republican. At London again, he gave in private to a deputation communist, headed by the notorious Louis Blanc, kind words embodying statements of the same tenor, as the Red Republican address issued from before Marseilles,—whilst at Manchester, he found it necessary distinctly to disavow and denounce in public, those very socialist or communist principles, of which that same Louis Blanc is one of the best known representatives.

He leaves England—his person, talents, and heroism admired by all—his opinions and principles applauded and adopted by loco radicals and republicans—but disliked or distrusted by the representatives of the capital, and of the solid intelligence of the country. This is the simple fact. You as republican, and I as a constitutional monarchist, will look with different eyes upon this fact. The feeling of abhorrence against Austrian principles and tactics is, however, universal in this country.

Nov. 27, 1851. X. Y. Z.

Report of the Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference.

In 1733, the Moravians commenced their first mission in Surinam. Now they have sixty-eight missionary stations, employing 281 missionaries, embracing 66,557 converts.

The great missionary movement of the Protestant Episcopal and Calvinistic Churches of England, and America, began in 1792 at the Baptist Association at Kettering England. The first collection amounted to £12 13s. 6d. A sermon was preached before them by the immortal Carey, then a poor schoolmaster and preacher. The celebrated Sidney Smith found a fine subject for his wit, in the trouble which this Baptist schoolmaster gave himself, and every body else, about 600 millions of Pagans. Carey sailed to India in 1792, and lived until from the press in Serampore, which he had established, there had issued 212,000 copies of the Sacred Scriptures in 40 different languages, the vernacular tongues of 330 millions of human beings, and expended upon that object $457,500.

The missionary movement of the Methodists sprung immediately from neither of these two. It was in 1769, that John Wesley held his first missionary meeting among his preachers in the town of Leeds, up in the front gallery of the meeting house. He stated the great work that had opened to him, and called for volunteers to go to America. The company was small, but of that number, two offered themselves: Joseph Pilmoor and Richard Boardman. Mr. Wesley allowed them $50 each, for their expenses, and bade them God speed. That $50 has swelled to the annual sum of $558,443,60 in the English Wesleyan body alone, and in place of the two Gospel adventurers, the same lusty sends forth 374 laborers into foreign fields.

The aggregate results of the last half century's labors of all the Evangelical Churches, in the cause of missions, have been summed up as follows:

Foreign missionaries in all parts of the world	2,945
Assistant lay preachers, teachers	11,807
Members in the mission Churches	333,604
Hearers	1,415,774
Institutions for instruction of native ministry	31
Printing establishments	40
Scholars in day schools and boarding schools	224,989
Income of all evangelical societies in dollars	3,201,419

All this must be looked at as a foundation work. Missionaries have been employed, in reducing to form unwritten language, translating the Scriptures, preparing and printing books, educating the people, and in training native preachers. This being preparatory, the work must presently go on with accelerated movement, and will demand a corresponding increase of zeal in the Churches.

Increasing facilities of intercourse between Asia and America, promise to bring into rapid development all the elements for good, which the giver of all good has provided, both in China and India. The dictionary of Morrison, the Normal Seconds of Gutzlaff, the translations and preaching places, the access to large cities, the eager reception of knowledge by the people, the interest awakened in the history, the customs, the science, the arts, and the religion of Christendom, all are germs of a harvest.

But a new means of access to China has presented itself. Dr. Boring, says, in a recent letter, "A vessel has arrived from Shanghai, China, from which I am in receipt of a letter from the Rev. B. Jenkins, of the 10th April, dated in that place, by which I am informed that he has sent to my care, fifty copies each, of the four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, for distribution among the Chinese of California." Light for the first time has flashed upon us from the west. Bibles which were translated, printed, and bound in China, are sent for the spread of the Gospel amongst the citizens of America. In another letter the doctor states, that the Chinese in San Francisco, are waiting upon his ministry, and one or two are inquiring the way of life. How wonderful that Providence, which has brought the Heathen to our doors, to be fed by our own hands, to learn our language, to be eye-witnesses of the highest exhibition on earth of a pure faith and happiness, our well-being social and political, that they may go back to their own land preachers of the Gospel! Surely God is about to do a great work in China.

California is a hand holding a lamp thrust far out into the night of Paganism.

The demand of Dr. Boring for twenty missionaries including those already sent, has been responded to promptly by many of the Conferences—men have been selected, money raised, and missionaries sent.

The Louisiana Conference has a treble share in this field: three of the preachers of this Conference are there, W. R. Gober and Cyprian Gridley and D. D. Shattuck. The proposition is to send the men, and $1000 a piece with them: to constitute an Annual Conference on the Pacific coast.

We have within our own bounds a mission field scarcely second to any. Thousand of immigrants from Germany have been for years past, arriving upon our shores, and filling up mainly, our seaport towns and large cities. The city of New Orleans alone, is estimated to have a population of 40,000 Germans. We have had operating there for seven or eight years past, missionaries to the German people—men who were native Germans, converted in this country through the instrumentality of our own church. These missions have been struggling, until now they have in the city, three Societies, and three small churches. But what are they among so many? With efforts commensurate to so great an enterprise, this German mission within our own bounds, shall become as powerful an arm of the Church, South, as those in Cincinnati are of the Church, North.

Of all the districts open to us in the United States, for carrying the Gospel to the slave, none are more accessible, none riper, or larger, or more pressing in their call, no, not excepting the fields of Carolina, than are those upon our own river-coast and fertile Bayous. It is not extravagant to say, that these missions could be doubled in number in one year, if the men were forthcoming to supply them.

How far is the church keeping pace with these facilities? The great missionary light of this continent is the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Its receipts have gone as high as $300,000 per annum; for the last year it was only $239,907. The mission income of the M. E. Church, North, after years of but little increase, has lately run up from $90,000 to $138,789, the sum of last year.

Our own church is feeling a new impulse, the result of its own action; and the Annual Conferences have been swelling the amount of the missionary collections. The last mail brings accounts of the South Carolina Conference. It reports $17,713 76 as the annual missionary collection within its bounds. In 1830 it reported only $261 33.

A new element has been introduced in the missionary operations of a neighboring Conference—missionary two days meetings. Due notice is given—suitable sermons are preached on the cause of missions—prayers are made for missionaries and the heathen, and the people present their offerings—and not unfrequently a Missionary baptism of the Holy Ghost descends and flames forth in a revival. A single circuit where these meetings have been held and where formerly not more than $50 had been contributed, sends up this year $1000 for missions, and another circuit promises, as the result of the same policy, $3000. The Board recommend to the members of this Conference and the people to try this plan so very apostolic, for advancing the kingdom of Christ.

The missions in the State of Louisiana are:

LAFOURCHE COLORED MISSION.—This has been served this year by the Rev. Lewis A. Reed, and includes eleven plantations with a membership of 429, and 263 children under catechetical instruction, and a population of 1500. The missionary reports the work to be in good condition.

PRESTON'S COLORED MISSION.—This has been served during the past year by the Rev. Z. Thompson, and includes three plantations, with a membership of 300, and 50 children under catechetical instruction and a population of 1400. The work of the missionary has been blessed during the year; a number have been added to the church. The missionary reports the work to be healthy and prosperous.

ALEXANDRIA COLORED MISSION.—Including fifteen plantations, 253 members, with a population of 2400 slaves, was left without a missionary for want of men. The mission is there, all pressing in its call for help, but there is no response.

ST. LANDRY COLORED MISSION.—Three plantations, population 1000; not supplied.

CADDO COLORED MISSION.—Embraces twenty-three plantations and 258 members, and was served by Rev. D. S. Watkins, who reports that it is very prosperous.

MONROE COLORED MISSION.—Includes twenty-three plantations, 193 members, population 600, supplied by the P. in Charge of Monroe circuit.

BOUEF COLORED MISSION.—Embraces twenty plantations and 123 members; Supplied by the P. in Charge of Bouef P. Circuit.

RICHMOND AND MADISON COLORED MISSION.—Including six plantations, 103 members; 7 plantations were left out, including 214 members, 120 children catechumens. T. J. Lacey the missionary, has suffered from severe illness.

CONCORDIA COLORED MISSION.—Including five plantations, 400 members. Supplied by Rev. W. Van Campen. The mission is represented to be in good condition.

TEXAS COLORED MISSION.—Including twenty plantations; a promising field, but not supplied for want of a preacher.

BATON ROUGE COLORED MISSION.—Embracing several plantations in the neighborhood of Baton Rouge; not supplied last year.

It is to be devoutly implored of God that he would vouchsafe to these poor Africans a living ministry and the preached word.

Many other missions could be enumerated which have had an existence, but have been abandoned because of the scarcity of preachers in the Louisiana Conference. There are, at least twelve missionary stations this very hour, within this Conference, that could be occupied, which offer large congregations and abundant reward and ample support to the laborer, if men could be had to fill them.

German Missions in NewOrleans.

THE FIRST GERMAN MISSION is in the upper part of the city, and has been served the past year by the Rev. J. M. Hofer, who is also preacher in charge of the whole German work. Its membership numbers 55.

THE SECOND GERMAN MISSION is in the lower part of the city, and embraces 40 members; it has been blessed greatly during the year, and it has been served during the year by the Rev. J. Paulo.

THE THIRD GERMAN MISSION is in Lafayette and Carrolton and increasing in membership and interest. This has been served half of the year by Rev. P. Moelling, now in Galveston, and subsequently by Rev. Mathias Maas.

K.

The Sabbath and Young Men.

The value of the Sabbath to young men cannot be estimated. As a means of intellectual culture, it is invaluable. The stirring themes of pulpit discussion wake up thought, and excite the mind to investigation. The appetite thus created is fed in the Bible class and the Sabbath school, and in private reading. The Sabbaths of a year are equivalent to two months' schooling; and no scene can furnish better mental aliment than religious truth. The intellectual advancement made under its influence is healthful and symmetrical. But all this is lost to the young man, who disregards the claims of the Holy Sabbath, and spends its sacred hours in seeking his own pleasure. While the Sabbath keeping young man takes fifty-two steps forward in intellectual improvement, the Sabbath breaker takes fifty-two strides backward towards mental debasement. The associations of Sabbath breaking are debasing. Nothing elevating and ennobling will be found in the social intercourse of Sabbath breakers. It all tends downward.

But the intellectual are nothing in comparison with the social and moral advantages of the Sabbath to a young man. Let us suppose the case of a young man, who comes from the country to the city, to acquire a knowledge of business. Let him conscientiously regard the Holy Sabbath. His regard for the Sabbath will lead him to the house of God. Here, all the associations which clustered around the home of his childhood, will be called up by the similarity of the scene. The same truths fall upon his ear. The same atmosphere surrounds him. He is drawn into the Sabbath school or Bible class. There he meets with associates, who surround him with a genial influence. At length he is introduced into religious families, as a visiter; thus a network of sacred and salutary influences surround him, to secure him against the snares and temptations of city life.

But, on the other hand, let him disregard the Sabbath. The moment he sets his foot on God's Holy Day, his moral principle is gone; his self-respect is diminished; and one great barrier in the way of his downward course to ruin is removed. He must find some occupation on this, his only leisure day. He sallies forth in search of amusement. He meets with others, in pursuit of the same object, who, to secure it, have made similar havoc of conscience and principle; and among them are not wanting adepts in wickedness. Having broken over one restraint, others readily give way before him, and he falls an easy prey to the destroyer. It would be the next thing to a miracle if he should be restored from ruin.

But this process is not confined to the city. Show us the young man anywhere, who disregards the Holy Sabbath, and we will show you the young man that is on the high road to ruin. All the good influences, in any community, cluster around the Sabbath; and all the evil influences concentrate among Sabbath breakers.

Pause, then, young man, before you presume to trample on God's Holy Day: for, in so doing, you tread under foot Heaven's richest blessings, and invite all the enemies of the human soul to combine for your destruction. Turn away the foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on God's Holy Day. [New York Observer.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

BY MISS ALICE CARY.

'Tis Christmas eve: and by the hearthlight dim
His blue eyes hidden by his falling hair
My little brother—mirth is mad for him—
Whispers how poor we are:

Come, dear one, rest upon my knee your head.
And push away the curls of golden glow.
And I will tell a Christmas tale I read,
A long, long time ago.

'Tis of a little orphan boy like you,
Who had on earth no friend his feet to guide
Into the path of virtue, straight and true,
And so he turned aside.

The parlor hearths, with genial warmth aglow,
Threw over him their waves of mocking light.
Once as he lily wandered to and fro,
In the unfriendly night.

This while, a thousand little girls and boys,
With look of pride or half-averted eye,
Their hands and eyes scoffful of Christmas toys,
Passed and repassed him by.

Chilled into dumb forgetfulness of wrong,
And goaded by the ever-joyous time,
And jostled roughly by the hurrying throng,
Trembling, he talked with crime.

And when the tempter once had found the way,
And thought's still threshold half-forbidden, crossed
His steps went darkly downward day by day,
Till he at last was lost.

Once as he woke from a delirious dream,
When consciousness began its sad to stir,
Around him fell the morning's checkered beam—
He was a prisoner.

Then wailed he in the frenzy of wild pain,
Then wept he till his eyes with tears were dim;
But who would kindly answer back again
A prisoner boy like him?

And so his cheek grew thin, and paled away,
But not a loving hand was stretched to save;
And the snow covered, the next Christmas day,
His lonesome little grave.

Nay, little brother, do not weep I pray;
You have no one like his to be forgiven.
And, kneeling down together, we can say,
"Father, who art in heaven."

So shall the blessed presence of content
Brighten our home of toil and poverty,
And the dear consciousness of time well spent
Our Christmas portion be.

The Literary Attractions of the Bible.

BY REV. JAMES HAMILTON,

Minister of the Scotch Church, Regent Square, London. Delivered before the Young Men's Christian Association in Exeter Hall, Nov. 27, 1849.

[Concluded.]

At all events, theology has not yet turned to sufficient account the Bible's marvellous diversity. You know how opposite are the turns, and how various the temperaments of different people, and how unequal their capacities. One has a logician's intellect, and delights in dialectic subtility. Another has a prompt intuition, and deprecates as so much bamboozlement every ingenious or protracted argument. Some have the ideal faculty so strong, that they never understand a proposition rightly till it sparkles as a sentiment; poet-wise, their eyes are in their apex: they cannot descry matters of fact and homely truths, which creep along the ground or travel on all-fours: but in order to arrest a vision so sublime as theirs, thoughts must spread the wings of metaphor, and soar into the zenith: while others are so prosaic, that they are offended at all imagery, and grudge the time it takes to translate a trope or figure. Some minds are concrete, and cannot understand a general statement till they see a particular example. Others are so abstract, that an illustration is an interruption, and an example a waste of time. Most men love history, and nearly all men live much in the future. Some minds are pensive, some are cheerful; some are ardent, and some are singularly phlegmatic. And had an angel penned the Bible, even though he could have condescended to the capacity of the lowliest reader, he could not have foreseen the turn and fitted the taste of every child of Adam. And had a mortal penman been employed, however versatile his talent, however many-faced his mind, he could not have made himself all things to his brethren, nor produced styles enough to mirror the mental features of all mankind. In his wisdom and goodness, the Most High has judged far better for our world: and using the agency of forty authors—transfusing through the peculiar tastes and temperaments of so many individuals, and these "men of like passions with ourselves," the self-same truths, the Spirit of God has secured for the Bible universal adaptation. For the pensive, there is the dirge of Jeremiah, and the cloud-shadowed drama of Job. For the sanguine and hopeful, there sounds the blithe voice and there beats the warm pulse of old Galilean Peter. And for the calm, the contemplative, the peacefully-loving, there spreads like a molten melody, or an abysmal joy, the page—sunny, ecstatic, boundless—of John the divine. The most homely may find the matter of fact, the unvarnished wisdom and plain sense, which is the chosen aliment of their sturdy understandings, in James' blunt reasonings: and the most heroic can ask no higher standard, no loftier feats, no consecration more intense, no spirituality more ethereal, than they will find in the Pauline epistles. Those who love the sparkling aphorism and the sagacious paradox are provided with food convenient in the Proverbs; and for those whose poetic fancy craves a banquet more sublime, there is the dew of Hermon and Bozrah's red wine—the tender freshness of pastoral hymns, and the purple tumult of triumphal psalms. And while the historian is borne back to ages so remote that grey tradition cannot recollect them, and athwart oblivious centuries, in nooks of brightness and in oases of light sees the patriarch groups, clear, vivid, and familiar as the household scenes of yesterday; there is also a picture sketched for the explorers of the future. For while the apocalyptic curtain slowly rises, while the seven thunders shake its darkness palpable, and streaks of glory issue through its fringe of fire, the new Jerusalem comes down from heaven; and gazing on the pearly gates and peaceful streets and bowers of sanctity, our planet can scarce believe that she is gazing on herself, that this is old mother earth grown young again, that this vision of holiness and bliss is nothing more than paradise restored—that "new" but ancient "earth in which dwelleth righteousness."

But in order rightly to appreciate this literary diversity of the Bible's several books, it is essential to remember the plenary inspiration of the Bible collective. Imagine the case of an accomplished evangelist. Suppose there were a missionary endowed with the gift of tongues, and called to ply his labors in different places at successive periods. He goes to France, and addressing its vivacious inhabitants, he abandons the direct and sober style of his fatherland; every utterance is antithesis; every gem of thought is cut brilliant-wise: and the whole oration jigs on gay, elastic springs. He passes thence to Holland, and in order to conciliate its grave burghers, his steady thoughts move on in stiff procession, trim, concinnate, old-fashioned, orderly. Anon he finds himself amid a tribe of red Indians; and instantly his imagination spreads pinions of flame, and, familiar with thunder, torrents, and burning mountains, his talk is the tune of the tempest. And ending his days in Arabia or Persia, through the fantastic sermon skip shadowy antelopes or dromedary gazelles; while each interstice of thought is filled by a voluptuous mystery, like the voice of the darkling nightingale as it floats through air laden with jasmine or roses. And thus, "all things to all men," this gifted evangelist wins them all; whereas, had he spoken like an Oriental to the Indian, or like a Persian to the Hollander, he would have offended each, and would have been a barbarian to all. The teacher is one, the same evangelist everywhere. The truth, the theme is one, over and over again the same glorious gospel. Nay, the substance of each sermon is essentially one; for it is a new forth-pouring from the same fountain, another yearning from the same full heart. But to suit successive hearers the rhythm alters, the tune is changed.

Such is the principle on which the Great Evangelist has acted. In inditing sermons for the world, such is the principle on which the divine Spirit has proceeded. Speaking to men, he has used the words of men. When on the two tables God wrote the ten commandments, he did not write them in the speech unutterable of the third heavens, he wrote them in Hebrew letters, Hebrew words, and Hebrew idiom; and had it so pleased him, he might have given all the Scriptures in the self-same way. Employing no mortal pen whatever, from the top of Sinai he might have handed down the one Testament, and from the top of Olivet the other—the whole, from Genesis to Revelation, completed without human intervention, and on amaranthine leaves engraven in Heaven's own holograph. And in such a case there would have been no dispute as to the extent of inspiration; there would have been no need that, like the electricians of the meteorologist, theologians should invent tests of its intensity, nicely graduated from the zero of superintendence up to the fulness of suggestion. But Infinite Wisdom preferred another way. Inspiration he made the counterpart of the incarnation; and as in the incarnate mystery we have, without mutual encroachment and without confusion, very God and very man, so in the opinoustic Scripture we have a book, every sentence of which is truly human, and yet every sentence of which is truly divine. Holy men spoke it, but holy men spoke and wrote it as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. And just as when God sent his Son into the world, he sent him not in the fashion of an angel, nor even in the fashion of a glorified and celestial man, but in all points like his brethren; so when he sent into the world his written word, it came not ready-written with an angel's plume, but with reeds from the Jordan it was consigned to paper from the Nile, every word of it Hellenistic, or Hebrew, and yet every word none the less heavenly. And though the unlettered disciple, who in the indentity of the ultimate Author forgets the diversity of the intermediate scribes, loses less than the dry critic who only recognises the mortal penman, that student alone will get the full good of his Bible who recognises these parallel facts—its perfect and all-pervasive divinity, its perfect and all investing humanity. Or, to sum it up in the vivid words of Gaussen, "As a skilful musician, called to execute upon some masterpiece, puts his lips by turns to the mournful flute, the shepherd's reed, the mirthful pipe, and the war-trumpet; so the Almighty God, to sound in our ears his eternal word, has selected from of old the instruments best suited to receive successively the breath of his Spirit." Thus we have in God's great anthem of revelation the sublime simplicity of John; the argumentative, elliptical, soul-stirring energy of Paul; the fervor and solemnity of Peter; the poetic grandeur of Isaiah; the lyric moods of David; the ingenuous and majestic narrative of Moses; the sententious and royal wisdom of Solomon. Yes, it was all this—it was Peter, Isaiah, Matthew, John, or Moses; but it was God."

"And such ought to be the word of Jehovah, like Emmanuel full of grace and truth, at once in the bosom of God and in the heart of man, powerful and sympathizing, celestial and human, exalted yet humble, imposing and familiar, God and man."

But here, gentlemen, a thought comes over me compunctiously. It seems as if we had this evening come, a large party [illegible] view a famous palace, and we have [illegible] the lawn in front, or looked up [illegible] quadrangle, and told its towers and marked its bulwarks, and sketched some of its ornaments; but however commanding the elevation, however graceful the details and various styles, after all, the glory is within. O my brethren, there is a loveliness even in its letter; but there is life for our souls in its divine significance. Be you not only Bible-visitors but Bible occupants. That book which God has made the monument of the great redemption; and where he has put his own perpetual Shekinah, do you choose it as the gymnasium where you may nourish a youth truly sublime; the castle where, in a world of impiety and an age of peril, you may find entrenchment for your faith and protection for your principles; the sanctuary at whose oracle you may find answers to your doubts and light upon your path; the Spirit's home, whither your affections shall every day return, and where your character shall progressively ennoble it into a conformity with such a royal residence.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Yes, my dear friends, as a supplement to this lecture, let me entreat you to peruse the Bible itself. With prayer, with expectation, with eyes alert and open, read it; in your most tranquil retirement read it: and when a few of you, who are friends like-minded, come together, read it: search it, sift it, talk about it, talk with it. And as he thus grows mighty in it, I promise each earnest Bible student two rewards—it will make him both a wiser and a holier man.

Wiser; for the sayings of God's word are solid. There is a substance, which you must have noticed, cast on the sea-shore, the medusa, or sea-nettle, as some sorts of it are called; an object rather beautiful as its dome of amber quivers in the sun. And a goodly size it often has, so large at times that you could scarcely lift it; but it is all a watery pulp, and if you were carrying it home or trying to preserve it, the whole mass would quickly trickle out of sight and leave you nothing but a few threads of substance. Now, most books are like the marine medusa: fresh stranded, newly published, as the expression is, they make a goodly show; but, when a few suns have shown on them, the crystal jelly melts, the glittering cupola has vanished, and a few meagre fibres in your memory are all the residue of the once popular authorship. If you ever tried it, you must have been struck with a few solid thoughts, the few suggestive ideas, which survive from the perusal of the most brilliant of human books. Few of them can stand three readings; and of the memorabilia which you had marked in your first perusal, on reverting to them you find that many of them are not so striking, or weighty, or original as you thought. But the word of God is solid; it will stand a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and the most carefully, is the surest of finding new wonders there. And just as the pearls of Scripture retain their intrinsic worth; as, notwithstanding the frowsy headgear they have garnished, the dull disclosures they have adorned, they beam brighter than ever when the hand of a Vinet or Chalmers or Hall has arranged them anew into a coronet of sanctified taste and genius; so he among sages is the wealthiest man who has detected and appropriated and thoroughly possessed himself of the largest number of Bible sayings—the merchantman who, seeking goodly pearls, has sought them on this exhaustless strand.

And holier; for though we have this evening spoken by the Bible very much as if it were a human book, you cannot be long conversant with it till you find that it is something more. Like Tabor, it is a "mountain apart." Among the books of this world it is isolated, unique, peculiar; and the farther up you get, the more acquainted you become with human books, and the more alongside of them you study the book of God, the more amazed will you be at its outstanding elevation, its world-topping pre-eminence. And just as in scaling a high mountain, it need no chemistry to analyse the air and tell the pilgrim that it is free from miasma and impurities—as every breath which paints a purer crimson on his cheek and sends a tonic tide through all his frame would tell him its salubrity; so it needs no argument, no analysis, to persuade a spiritual mind that the air of heaven, the breath of God, is here. In his holier feelings as he reads, in the godly zeal and joyful strenuousness which requite each mounting footstep, with instinct sure his regenerate nature hails the congenial inspiration. And just as on Tabor's summit, when from heaven saints in snowy garments came down, and from Christ his own glory came through, it needed no refracting prism or condensing lens to assure them that it was a body of more than earthly brightness which they were gazing upon; so, my dear friends, when a text is transfigured, when the Holy Spirit in the world lets out his grace and glory, it will need no Paley nor Butler to prove that the wisdom and the power of God are there, but, radiant with emitted splendor, and dazzling your admiring eyes, in God's own light you will see it to be God's own word. Nor can I wish for you a better wish, than that thus you may be often surprised and overwhelmed. Yes, dear brethren, in the very midst of this noisy capital, and in the meridian of this man-wasting, money-making age, may you often find your Sabbath, and your place of prayer, and your Bible, "a mountain apart." In blissful bewilderment may you forget the fascinations of earth and the pleasures of sin, and only wake up to find yourself alone with the Master. And none shall less grieve than he who has this evening addressed you, if the literary attractions of the book be thus merged and superseded in charms more spiritual, in attractions which, if they draw you to the Bible, will also draw you at last to heaven.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.—From the California Christian Advocate, December 3, we glean the following:

DEDICATION.—The Methodist E. Church, South, in Sonora, was dedicated on Sunday, November, 23. It is the first Protestant Church in the place. Rev. Mr. Malone, Pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Wheeler, late pastor of the First Baptist Church in this city, has resigned his charge of that church. His resignation has been accepted, and Mr. W. is organizing a new congregation. At present, he preaches in the court room in the California Exchange.

The Rev. Mr. Williams' new church, (Presbyterian,) on Stockton street, is now fully completed, and presents a very neat appearance in the inside.

We regret to learn that the Rev. C. Gridly, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, lies dangerously ill in Stockton.

The Pacific newspaper gives the names of four ministers and two laymen, as in attendance at the recent meeting of the San Francisco Presbytery in Sacramento, besides visiting brethren. That paper seems to have been adopted as the organ of the Presbytery.

The comparison of the journey of life to a smooth across a desert is very felicitously expressed in the following lines by Charles Wesley:

How is the lady past,
Absent from Heaven I roam;
Yet slightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home!

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 10.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BAYOU LAFOURCHE, Jan. 6, 1852.

MY DEAR P. T: Since closing my last, I have had opportunity of seeing somewhat of this interesting country, lying on the bayou. Thibodaux is about ten miles south of New Orleans, and is reached by making quite an elbow of a journey. The contemplated railroad from your city, into the Opelousas regions, will pass through it and make the direct rail travel, of but a few hours, instead of a day and night. The village has an oldish look to me. The streets are laid out without precision, and the general appearance of the buildings is not elegant. There are some very neat private dwellings, however. The Romish Chapel is a new and handsome edifice. On what I suppose is considered the main street, stand the Chapels of the Protestant Episcopal and the Methodist Episcopal Churches. The former is of brick, with pillars in front, and has a schoolhouse with large grounds for a graveyard attached to it. The latter is just being completed, with a steeple that may be seen afar off in these level lands. Its exterior appearance is good, and it is fitted up with delightful, good taste and neatness. Our friends deserve much credit for this building. Heretofore, the Methodist preacher has occupied it, in connection with other appointments, fortnightly: our Presbyterian brethren—Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, pastor—occupying it, the vacant Sabbath. The Presbyterians have a church of their own nearly ready for use. So the Protestants have taken footing in a place, which a few year ago, was entirely in possession of the Papists.

The population of Thibodaux is between 1200 and 1500. It supports a weekly paper, one half English, the other French—out of your city I have not seen a more creditable sheet in the state.

Along this bayou for about sixty miles of its length, and two or three miles on each side, are lands remarkably fertile. When the river is high, the water of the bayou flows several feet above their level: but it is kept within artificial embankments, called levees. A crevasse, or breaking through the levee, calls out the strength of a neighborhood, and if not quickly arrested, works immense damage. From the aspect of this country, low and level, one would put it down as unhealthy. But, as usual, the residenters deny this. One planter told me, that with a negro quarter including 115 souls, his doctor's bills were not more than twenty-five or thirty dollars per annum. Not long since, two of the "oldest inhabitants" died—one seventy-eight and the other ninety-three years old.

This strong soil is suited to the culture of sugar-cane. All the planters are not yet done rolling or grinding. The sight of a sugar-field is beautiful, but I had long been desirous of witnessing the operations of a sugar-mill. On Friday evening, Mr. F. L. Meade of Thibodaux, kindly took me in his buggy to the plantation of Rev. L. Polk, Bishop of the diocese of Louisiana. It is but three miles up the bayou, and the mill was in full blast. The Bishop is a cousin of the deceased Ex-President. His dwelling house is large and comfortable looking, though by no means palace-like, and stands upon the right bank of the bayou—the sugar-house and fields, as in all cases, lying back towards the yet uncleared swamp. Several teams were hauling in the cane from points in the wide field where it had been deposited, when cut down, to save it from the frost. The wagons, which here and elsewhere I observed to be of one style, were a heavy cart, a strong mule being between the shafts and one each side. A company of half dozen slaves were piling the cane in order upon a revolving carrier which feeds the rollers, which were carried by a steam engine. Heavy, full, juicy stalks, quickly passed through these rollers, and came out flat and exhausted. The saccharine stream that runs from below into metallic troughs is not tempting. Besides being about 90 per cent water, it is discolored by the bruised rind of the cane, and alluvial mud which more or less cleaves to it. In these troughs it is boiled by a bed of pipes heated by the steam of the engine. An almost incredible quantity of scum is removed from the surface at this stage of the business. Thence, the hissing fluid clarified, is drawn off by common gutters into cisterns containing bone-black and decolored by filtration. Thence, it is drawn into two vacuum pans, holding 1500 gallons each, by air pumps, where it is boiled at about 130 degrees, and the water evaporated. From these pans it is conducted finally into coolers or vats where it crystalizes. These vats I would guess to be about two feet deep, eight long and five feet wide. A dozen or more of them are ranged in order, through a large and clean room. The bottoms are covered with perforated zinc, through which leaks into reservoirs below the finest article of sugar-house molasses.

The process which I have thus imperfectly described, but which I followed with pleasing interest ends in white or loaf sugar. Hardly, are the moulds and wrapping paper for making the delicious pyramidal lumps, tea-drinkers are so fond of. The Bishop does not make the brown sugar; or rather he does not stop at making it, but refines upon it. While this product sells higher, there is much additional expense and complication of machinery involved in the production. I believe the Bishop has not the credit, among his neighbors, of being a successful planter. They look upon him as given more to projects than the plain practice. And projects in this business are made at great expense. It takes very large capital to carry it on. I am told that 20,000 dollars for machinery alone, is a very common cost to large planters. To roll out a single crop of such, two or three thousand cords of wood are consumed. Day and night the work goes on during the rolling season: there is no time for projects. It takes not many arpents of this rich land, with improvements, to make up 100,000. Your 100,000 planters is only ordinary. At so great an outlay, and under such heavy expenses, and making no supplies, but buying every-thing out of the sugar-crop, the planter must make money fast and abundantly, or he sinks under it. I have heard it facetiously remarked, that a great deal of sweetening is necessary, before a sugar-crop is ready for market. Yet, when well managed, notwithstanding lands, teams, hands, machinery and incidentals cost so much, the sugar plantation in a few years enriches its owner. At ten hogsheads of sugar to each hand, and double the number of barrels of molasses, the calculation of profits now runs high.

Bishop Polk, as a very intelligent gentleman superintending the sugar house informed me, owns two hundred and eighty negroes—all told. This year he makes only six hundred hogsheads. In 1849 the cholera ravaged this locality. More than sixty of Bishop Polk's negroes died of it. A few years ago, he employed an Episcopal preacher to serve his slaves weekly. Now they are preached to occasionally by the rector of the Chapel in Thibodaux. As I said, the work in rolling season goes on night and day. The Bishop's costly and wide extended premises include an apparatus for making gas to light them up. At twelve o'clock, Saturday night, operations cease till twelve o'clock, Sunday night.

Adjoining, is the plantation of Mr. Darden—the mills in full blast, as might be seen by the clouds of smoke and steam. Mr. Darden is a North Carolinian, and says he prefers making sugar to cotton for the mere pleasure of it, to say nothing of profits. He operates on the old, plain money-making plan; no notions about him. There were the rolling engine, and the huge kettles for boiling, and the cooling vats and hogsheads of fine grained brown sugar, this is the arrangement; the next step in order, is a round sum of dollars and cents. After the hogshead is filled with sugar it is set on end, and the molasses distils into reservoirs below. About two barrels of molasses are thus obtained from it, leaving it still full. When a boy, in regions that would not grow a sugar-stick, I had often been told of "sights" in molasses—such as the skulls, scalps, thumbs and entire heads of the operatives who might be caught in the machinery and used up—and I have lost many a savory sop for this sickening imagination. I asked Mr. D. about it. He intimated, that negro-heads among the molasses was a common affair where they had been sent, but the owners of said heads never failed to bring them out again when their work was done. Upon the whole, my relish was increased by witnessing the manner of sugar making and the many securities for cleanliness.

I am sorry to say, that Mr. D's. Sunday practice is like that of the most of his neighbors—can't stop. Our missionaries who preach in these regions may as well, for the most part, close their work when the rolling season begins. Some of the planters are setting the example of Sunday rest, and those who do not likewise will, by-and-by, be convinced by interest if not convicted of conscience, that no man can work long to success who sets himself against God's great and holy working-law. Sugar planters cannot do without the Sabbath better than other planters. The plea of necessity will not do, in this world or in the next. My hope is, under the blessing of God, that as this capital and enterprise passes into the hands of Americans, which is fast becoming the case, the evil established by the French Papists will become obsolete: and Sabbath work is the worst of these evils.

The servile population of other States have a dread of coming to Louisiana. The old French planters were cruel masters and bad managers. Their policy gave character to the sugar cane fields. But their day is going-gone. I never saw negro operatives in better condition physically, than those I have seen here. They eat as much sugar-cane as they please, and look fat and happy. They are comfortably clad. In the last sugar house I visited, I saw several small barrels in a row, just filled with the crystalising syrup. What are these for? "Oh," said the planter, "those belong to the boys. I always allow them, besides their rations, to put up something for themselves and families."

On my way from Thibodaux to Donaldsonville, this fertile, beautiful country, all came before me. In going to Conference I was under the bank and saw little of it: but in returning the carriage track ran first along the bank. I call it beautiful, not that it is undulating, but beyond any thing I ever saw fruitful in what is good for man. The orange tree and the pecan and live-oak are as common as black jack on a sand ridge. The settlements are seldom above a quarter of a mile apart. The neat, white washed negro cabins look like a succession of villages. The only exception to the general prosperity is an occasional Creole settlement: reminding you of Solomon's description of the slothful man's vine-yard. These inhabitants have not yet been rooted out, before a superior civilization. They belong to the old stock—an effete race. Here they live poor and having poor ways, the ground lying fallow, and the fences down. Here they talk border French, play cards, work their oxen by the horns, ride their grass-fed mustangs and go to mass.

But these are the exceptions, and it is a manifest destiny that they and their priests must soon give way. I had the pleasure, in company with Bishop Paine and others, of passing the night after Conference adjourned, with Rev. Wm. Littlejohn and his interesting family. Bro. L. is a local preacher here, and does much good as well as makes sugar. He does not grind on Sunday either. As we drive along, we pass the mansions of the Messrs. Tucker, and Messrs. Pugh and Dr. Kitridge—all of whom open preaching places to the Methodist Missionary and contribute liberally to his support. The magnificent residence of one of the Messrs. P., over looking the bayou, would do credit to the "West End" of a city.

A vast missionary field here spreads out. The M. E. Church, South, so peculiarly pledged to this work, is endeavoring to occupy it. Within the sound of a horn, thousands of these poor may be gathered and have the gospel preached unto them. But why do I say horn: they use bells here. On each large plantation the passer-by sees a bell, large-toned enough for a village steeple. By this the movements of the plantation are timed and regulated. Only imagine every one of these, on a Sabbath morning, turned into church-going bells on each side of this bayou, for 60 miles up and down it! What a glorious glad chime it would make! The mingling notes swelling and rolling along, would die away to be succeeded by the voice of praise as congregations joined in worshipping God in spirit and in truth. May our dear brethren who labour in this field, see these things and hear these joyful sounds. I know of no ministerial work in the Louisiana Conference or any Conference that exceeds this, either in the opening prospects of large success, in intrinsic importance, or in moral sublimity. God bless the missionaries to the colored people. Amen.

H. N. McTYEIRE.

OUR DUTIES.—Our readers will see by the list of appointments in another column, that we continue to hold a pastoral relation in addition to the duties of the editorship. It may relieve them to know that arrangements have been made for a clerk about the office, that will take that labor and drudgery off of our hands, which has heretofore taxed us more than editorial functions, proper. Such is the scarcity of "laborers in the vineyard" in our young and growing Conference, that every one capable of a "pastor's care" is pressed into service. See how many places are left to be supplied! Our readers will not blame us for trying to supply one of them, under the circumstances. They know our principles in this matter. We are free to confess it, that were the need of pastors less urgent, we could not consent to be wholly spared from this appropriate work of ministers. As editor, we shall do the very best we can; no reasonable man would have us promise more. We only ask our friends to promise as much and as sincerely. Our facilities being improved and more time being at command for editorial duties, we shall try to improve upon the past. And now to all, GREETING.

Georgia Conference.

This body adjourned its session, in Griffin, Ga., on last Wednesday week—Bishop Andrew presiding. There were sixteen additions, by admissions and re-admissions, to the traveling connection. The California Mission spirit ran high. Five members of the Conference offered themselves for it. Out of this number two were selected by the Conference, recommended to the Bishop, and accepted, viz: John C. Simmons and Wm. A. Simmons—two brothers. Their father is a traveling minister, and assisted on the same morning in the ordination of the younger son. Robert W. Bingham was appointed Missionary to Panama.

For Missions, $15,330 were raised during the year within the bounds of the Conference. More than $1200 of this sum was raised at the anniversary meeting. Dr. Styles appeared before the Conference and made a stirring address in behalf of the A. Bible Society. G. J. Pearce, a member of Conference, was appointed Bible Agent for the State of Georgia. Rev. Thomas L. Hamner also addressed the Conference in behalf of the American Sunday School Union.

MISSIONARIES TO CALIFORNIA.—Rev. Morris Evans, of Louisville Confr., Rev. A. M. Bailey and family, of Kentucky Confr., and Rev. I. M. Fulton, of North Carolina Conference, went on board the steamship Philadelphia yesterday evening, and while we go to press they more off from the wharf opposite Place d'Armes, towards the Balize. The God of missions speed them! We should judge them, from our brief and pleasant acquaintance, to be just the men, physically, intellectually and morally, for helpers of our beloved brethren already in California.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Several communications, receipts, etc., are unavoidably laid over. They will be attended to.

PREACHERS' SALARIES.—The recent minutes of the North Ohio Conference, published by request of Conference in pamphlet form, show that not one of all the preachers constituting this body received a sum equal to five hundred dollars per annum. The average amount paid was less than three hundred dollars. The very highest sum paid was to the presiding elder of the Mt. Vernon district, who received his full allowance of $475. Who will continue to reiterate that Methodist preachers are well or overpaid! It is time this cry were hushed. [W. C. Ad.

It was a saying of the Jewish Rabbi, "that if the sea were ink, the tree pens, and the earth parchment, they would not be sufficient to write down all the the praises due to God for liberty."

If you love others they will love you. If you speak kindly to them they will speak kindly. Love is repaid with love and hatred with hatred. Would you hear a sweet and pleasing echo? speak sweetly and pleasantly yourself.

A missionary, writing home from China, says that the Chinese use little fire, and measure cold by the thickness of jackets. Three jackets cold is moderately cool: six jackets cold is keen; and from ten to fifteen jackets cold is extremely severe.

LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The two first days of Conference were principally taken up in examination of character. Bishop Paine caused this to be done very thoroughly. Each P. Elder gave an account of the condition of the Church on his district, and the preachers in charge of circuits and stations were asked—Do you hold class meetings? Do you visit pastorally? Do the heads of families in your charge hold family prayer? and such like searching interrogations.

ADDITIONS TO ITINERANCY.

The P. Elder of New Orleans District presented the recommendation of Matthias Mauss, from the Quarterly Conference of German Missions, for admittance into traveling connection. He was represented as a man of gifts and grace, and proficient in his own language. He was admitted on trial, and adds another to the number of those among us preaching the Gospel to the Germans, in their own tongue. The P. Elder of Shreveport District presented the recommendation of Richard L. Childers, a young man promising much usefulness to the Church. He was admitted on trial. The certificate of location of Elias R. Porter was presented, and he was re-admitted into the traveling connection. Long may he continue there.

"Say to thy gifted servants, 'Speed!'
"Behold the world your field."

DISCONTINUANCES.

Samuel Bard's character was passed, and because he had quit his work during the year, he was on motion discontinued. The character of Jas. E. Scott passed, and he was discontinued at his own request.

LOCATIONS.

The characters of W. W. Jenkins, M. Pubosc, Moses Davis and J. L. Wright passed, and they were granted locations at their own request.

SUPERANNUATES.

The characters of Thomas Samford and Wm. Stevenson passed, and they were continued on the superannuated list. The Conference with entire unanimity of feeling delights in honoring and supporting these venerable and holy men, whose lives have been worn out in the cause of the Master.

ANNUAL SERMON.

The sermon of Dr. Rivers was requested for publication in the S. M. Pulpit. E. R. Porter was elected to preach the next annual sermon.

ELECTION TO ORDERS.

The P. Elder of Shreveport Dist. presented a recommendation of Mark McCutcheon, a local preacher of Caddo Circuit, and he was elected to deacon's orders.

EDUCATION.

The Committee on Education reported very favorably upon Centenary College. It has now five professorships—and each one filled—and a larger number of students than ever before. The preparatory department is also in good condition, and the Conference specially recommend it to patronage in view of its full and steady supplies of well prepared students to the College proper. The income of the College is meeting all its current expenses. The burnt building was reported as having been promptly replaced by one equally commodious and more substantial—leaving for this unlooked for outlay a debt of only $1,000 upon the College treasury. The movement endowing a professorship of Natural Science was entertained. This is no more than the Louisiana Conference ought to do, seeing that the Mississippi Conference, which is jointly interested in the College, is stirring to endow a Winans' professorship. Wm. E. Doty was requested to act as financial agent for College during the year, to secure this endowment.

A prospect was opened up, in a generous proposition to the Conference, from Mr. W. Drake, of Minden, La., for having a French College under its control in that interesting portion of the country. Mr. Drake offers, in view of the active patronage of the Conference, to give six acres of land, near Minden, for the site of a Conference Institution; to build premises at his own cost to the amount of $2000, by June next, sufficient for an Academy beginning; and his donations subsequently to be increased to several thousands more. The Conference is to appoint a President, and also trustees. The President is to nominate the teachers; his nominations to be confirmed by the trustees. The report of committee, stated that the Minden Female College had already been incorporated, under the above provisions. Mr. Drake is a wealthy and benevolent gentleman, a member of the Methodist Church, and without family. The service he proposes to do the Church and the country in the cause of education, entitles him to a large award of gratitude and honor. His proposition as reported by the committee, was most favorably entertained by the Conference.

The members and friends of the Church in Opelousas were encouraged by the Conference to proceed in a noble purpose, indicated from that quarter, in the establishment of a Female School of high grade.

The Baton Rouge Female Seminary, Mrs. M. W. Read principal, was highly commended by the Conference.

PERIODICALS.

Dr. Henkle, editor of the Ladies, Companion made some remarks upon its condition. The Doctor's remarks were earnest and interesting, and we hope will have the effect of stirring up the preachers in collecting and forwarding the money due upon it, that the Companion may be sustained. A large subscription account was announced by him as still due, within our bounds, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which it is just, right and honest should be paid; and it is to be hoped debtors will do themselves the credit of paying without more delay—if any credit be due them for doing what they ought to do.

The Sunday School Visiter was dealt with in unqualified terms of approbation. The present year will doubtless witness a large increase of its circulation in Louisiana. The Quarterly Review of the Church, South, met with a high and just tribute of merit. In reference to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Conference took action, heartily cheering. Expressions commendatory of its course were moved and passed, and it was

Resolved, That each preacher, in addition to procuring the renewal of all subscriptions, would exert himself to procure twenty new subscribers the present year—on the cash principle.

THE BIBLE CAUSE.

The Conference determined by deliberate and well considered action to maintain close and operative connection as Methodists with the American Bible Society. Special consideration was given to the South-western Bible Society in New Orleans, and the Bible house about to be built for it in the city. Agents were invited into all parts of the Conference, and promised aid and active co-operation.

PUBLICATION OF MINUTES.

It was Resolved, That the proceedings of the Louisiana Conference be published in pamphlet form, and furnished the preachers for distribution; said pamphlet to include statistics, reports and all matters and acts of this body, full and minute. P. M. Goodwyn, J. C. Keener and H. N. McTyeire were appointed the committee of publication. By this arrangement all important interests will be spread before the Church at large in a way more suitable for reference, and more detailed than can be done in a weekly journal of general circulation. Attention will be kept alive, and interest aroused, and action directed by a particular and distinct acquaintance with facts and figures, not otherwise to be known. The pamphlet will be issued in a few weeks.

GERMAN MISSIONS IN NEW ORLEANS.

Something worthy of the M. E. Church, South, is likely to be accomplished in this line of things—so this definite step taken by the Conference, would promise. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously passed:

"In view of the large number of German immigrants to New Orleans, and of the responsibility resting upon the M. E. Church, South, to preach the gospel to them in their own language—

"Resolved, That we urgently request the friends of the Church to aid at once in the erection of a church edifice there equal to their necessities.

"Resolved, That we will give our assistance to any agent appointed by the P. Elder of New Orleans Dist., to collect funds in our several charges to carry out the above object."

These were moved by Bro. Crenshaw, and Dr. Henkle, by request, made some impressive remarks upon them. If Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana will unite in this work, it can be done easily, readily, and be well done. To the importance of this cause, this journal has borne a steady and, we trust, not ineffectual testimony. Our readers have seen the history of German missions in the M. E. Church, North and South: how much the former have done and how little the latter. The Missionary Secretary, Dr. Durbin, is making special and strenuous effort for building German churches in Cincinnati, and yet in this city there are 40,000 Germans and not a Methodist Chapel that can be seen two squares off, or capable of containing three hundred hearers! Every ship from the father land adds to this number here, in Galveston and in Mobile. Is it not time that something should be done?

MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

This meeting was held on Saturday night; the President of the Society, W. H. Crenshaw, opening it with religious services. Bishop Paine spread before the crowded assembly full and profoundly interesting information as to the facts of our Missionary operations, at home and abroad. He was followed by J. M. Hofer, German Missionary. The last speaker made excellent headway against the disadvantage of thinking in one language and expressing himself in another. He won golden opinions, and created a strong impression in favor of Missions in general and German Missions in particular. The meeting was conducted with the utmost propriety, and adjourned, not for want of interest, at an early hour. The collection amounted to something over $300.

SABBATH DAY.

The Romish and Protestant Episcopal chapels were not tendered to the Preachers assembled: consequently their appointments were confined to one place. Bishop Paine preached at 11 A. M., and administered the Holy Communion. At half past 3, after sermon by J. C. Keener, the Bishop ordained the following Deacons: L. Parker, H. A. Morse and John Poale.

Statistics.

THIS YEAR.

Number of Members, (white.)	5,053
" " " (colored.)	4,213
" Local Preachers,	83
" Sunday Schools,	31
" S. S. Teachers,	244
" S. S. Pupils,	1,485

LAST YEAR.

Number of Members, (white,)	4,787
" " (colored.)	4,619
" Local Preachers,	78
" Sunday Schools,	29
" S. S. Teachers,	180
" S. S. Pupils,	1,251

THIS YEAR.

Amount collected for Missions,	$3,295 00
" " Sunday Schools,	784 00
" Bible Cause,	418 15

LAST YEAR.

Amount collected for Missions,	$2,631 36
" " Sunday Schools,	785 79
" Bible Cause,	46 50
Amount necessary to meet claims of Bishops, Superannuates, &c.,	$816 00
Amount collected for same,	475 95

VOTES OF THANKS

Were passed, to the citizens of Thibodaux, for their hospitable entertainment. The Conference would have been abundantly entertained even had their numbers been larger. The Directors of the Public Schools were tendered a grateful acknowledgment for the use of Union Academy for Conference sessions.

ADJOURNMENT.

Many citizens were assembled on Monday evening to witness the close of the Conference. The Conference joined in singing and prayer: the Bishop prefaced the reading of appointments with a few remarks, calculated to inspire the workmen and reconcile them to their work. They were read, and the Conference adjourned with benediction, about 10 P. M.

Appointments.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT..J. C. Keener, P. E.
McGhee Station..J. B. Walker.
Felicity Station..H. N. McTyeire.
Moreau Station..H. C. Thweatt.
New Orleans Circuit..To be supplied.
Wesley Chapel Colored Mission..To be supplied.
Soule " " " " "
Donaldsonville and Preston Col'd Mission..Thos. J. Lacy.
Plaquemine..A. E. Goodwyn.
Thibodaux..R. J. Harp.
Napoleon and Lafourche Colored Mission..Lewis A. Reed.
1st German Mission..J. M. Hofer.
2d " " J. Paule.
3d " " M. Mauss.
Houma and Bayou Black Miss..W. J. Ferguson.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT..W. E. Doty, P. E.
Baton Rouge..E. R. Porter.
Baton Rouge Colored Mission..W. H. Crenshaw
Point Coupee..S. Hawes.
St. Joseph's and Tensas Colored Mission..To be supplied.
Richmond and Madison..John Pipes.
Lake Providence..Z. Thompson.
Lake Concordia Mission..To be supplied.
Waterproof Colored Mission..S. W. Speer.
Concordia Circuit..To be supplied.
Monticello..H. R. Truly.

MONROE DIST..P. M. Goodwyn, P. E.
Monroe Circuit..R. M. Crowson.
" Col'd Mission..W. H. Rogers.
Bastrop..R. Trippett.
Bastrop Col'd Mission..To be supplied.
Farmersville..To be supplied.
Homer Circuit..R. Randle.
Jackson..To be supplied.
Columbia..E. W. Yancey.
Bceuf Prairie..E. W. Griswold.
Bceuf Prairie Col'd Mission..To be supplied.
Trinity Circuit..To be supplied.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT..Joel Saunders, P. E.
Shreveport..L. Parker.
Caddo Circuit and Colored Mission..D. S. Watkins and R. L. Childers.
Mansfield..H. Avery.
Natchitoches..W. A. Smyth.
Minden and South Bossier..S. J. Davies.
North Bossier..To be supplied.
Red River..S. J. Graves.

OPELOUSAS DIST..D. Kinnear, P. E.
Opelousas..To be supplied.
New Iberia..H. A. Morse.
Chicot..C. J. Hallberg.
Franklin and Pattersonville..R. H. Read.
Alexandria and Cotile..P. H. Dieffenworth.
Haw Creek..W. H. Turnley.
St. Landry Col'd Mission..C. A. Frazee.
Alexandria Col'd Mission..To be supplied.

R. H. Rivers appointed to Centenary College.
A. G. Miller transferred to Mississippi Conference, and appointed to Bayou Sara. J. N. Ha-mill transferred to East Texas Conference. P. S. Petway transferred to Tennessee Conference, and appointed P. Elder of McMinnville District. W. H. Gober Missionary to California. Next Conference to be held at Baton Rouge.

TEXAS CONFERENCE.

BASTROP, Dec. 17, 1851.

The members of the Texas Annual Conference assembled in the Hall of the Sons of Temperance for their twelfth session. There being no Bishop present, C. Richardson, Secretary of the last Conference, called the brethren to order and opened the session by reading a portion of Scripture, singing and calling upon Bros. J. Haynie and R. Alexander to engage in prayer.

R. Alexander was elected President of the Conference. C. Richardson was re-elected Secretary.

A special committee was appointed, consisting of one from each P. Elder's District, to take into consideration the interests of the Texas Wesleyan Banner; Rev. J. W. Fields and Rev. J. Shook, of the East Texas Conference, were requested to confer with the Committee.

A communication was read from Bishop Capers, announcing that severe bodily afflictions rendered it impracticable for him to be with us. A resolution was passed expressing the deep regret of the Conference at the Bishop's Providential detention—their profound sympathy with him in his afflictions—and earnest prayers for his speedy recovery.

George S. Gatewood, who had located at the late session of the Kentucky Conference, presented his certificate of location, and was re-admitted as a traveling Elder in the Texas Conference.

DECEMBER 18.

A motion was made to have the minutes of our Conference, and all documents of general interest published in pamphlet form. After some discussion, the motion failed.

Under the first question the following brethren being duly recommended, were admitted on trial in the traveling connection: Peter Moelling, Edward A. Stocking, John Patton, Joshua H. Shepard, Marcus F. Smock, Lewis J. Wright and Thomas Lancaster.

William F. Hibert, Wm. G. Nelms and Edward Snyder, who had traveled two years, were examined before the Conference, received into full connection, and elected to deacon's orders.

The character of D. W. Wright was passed, and he discontinued at his own request.

George W. Rabb, of this class, had died during the year. At the request of the President, his late colleague, Bro. Kerr, gave an account of Bro. Rabb's peaceful and happy death.

The certificate of location of F. A. Mc-Shann, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, was presented, and he re-admitted as an elder into the traveling connection.

DECEMBER 19.

A communication from Bro. W. S. Hancock, Principal of the Bastrop Academy, was read, inviting the Conference in a body to visit the Academy. The Conference agreed to do so on Monday afternoon, and the President appointed J. W. Phillips to address the students, and C. Richardson to preach a sermon on education at the time.

R. Alexander, General Agent of the Conference, reported that he had received sufficient amount by donation to buy the types, etc., upon which the T. W. Banner is printed. A resolution was passed approving Bro. Alexander's course, and instructing the publishing committee of the Banner to take possession of the same as the property of the Conference.

The Conference stewards made their call from which it appeared that about three-fourths of our preachers had received the full disciplinary allowance.

David Coulson, formerly of the Tennessee Conference, was re-admitted as a traveling elder in the Texas Conference.

Ulysses Salis, discontinued at his own request.

Chas. F. Rottoustein had withdrawn from our Church.

Isaac G. John and Bryant F. Peel, deacons of two years' standing, were elected to elder's orders.

The recommendation of John Mack, (a colored man) was read, and a discussion arose as to the propriety of electing him to deacon's orders, as a local preacher. It was stated that he was an educated man, and had preached in our Church with great acceptability; that he literally belonged to the Church, as he was held by Trustees for the M. E. Church, South. He was recommended by a large and influential Quarterly Conference. After some discussion he was elected to deacon's orders by a large majority.

DECEMBER 20.

The Secretary announced the number of members in Societies as follows: Whites, 4448; increase, 779; colored, 1181; increase, 118. Total membership, 5629; net increase, 897.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Committee on Sunday Schools made a report which was adopted. The report stated that there was a large increase in the number of our Sunday Schools, and that the interest on the subject was increasing in our Conference.

Immediately on the adjournment of the Conference, the Missionary Society held a meeting.

The Society elected a Board of Trustees to hold any property which might be donated to us for missionary purposes. The following brethren compose the Board:

J. W. Whipple, H. S. Thrall, J. M. Follansbee, R. Alexander and C. Richardson.

SATURDAY NIGHT, DEC. 20.

The eleventh Anniversary of the Texas Conference Missionary Society was held in the new, beautiful and commodious Methodist Church in Bastrop.

The Society was addressed by Bros. John and Alexander in a truly eloquent and effective manner. A collection followed.

For annual membership	$70 85
Twelve life memberships in P. S.	240 00
Public collections	15 88
Reported from circuits and stations.	1457 01
Making a total of	$1793 62
Increase this year over last	$351 25

The increase is really much larger than it appears, as but little is this year reported received upon missions to support their missionaries.

Sunday, the 21st, was an interesting day. At 9 Love Feast—preaching at 11 by R. Alexander—at 3 by Bro. J. W. Fields, of East Texas. At night Bro. J. M. Wesson preached the Conference Sermon, after which mourners were invited to the altar, and before the services closed several were happily converted.

DECEMBER 22.

The Publishing Committee of the T. W. Banner made a report, announcing the resignation of C. Richardson as editor, and recommending Gen. Rottenstein as his successor, who was duly elected.

Bro. Wesson was requested to furnish his Conference sermon to the S. M. Pulpit for publication.

The Conference Stewards made their report. The entire deficiency in the preachers claims amounts to only $273.70.

Samuel M. Kingston was re-admitted as an elder in the traveling connection.

R. Alexander was appointed to preach the next Conference sermon.

DECEMBER 23.

The vote by which Edward A. Stocking was admitted on trial was reconsidered at his request.

W. S. Hamilton read the pastoral address, which was adopted, and ordered to be published in the T. W. Banner.

C. W. Thomas was appointed to write the pastoral address for next year.

The President appointed the following examining Committees:

First Year—W. C. Lewis, C. W. Thomas.

Second Year—J. M. Wesson, C. Richardson.

Third Year—H. S. Thrall, Isaac G. Jolin.

Fourth Year—J. W. Whipple, G. Rottenstein.

Bastrop was selected as the place of our next session.

J. W. Phillips was requested to act as agent to collect funds for building a church in San Antonio.

At half past 11 o'clock Conference adjourned to the church.

H. S. Thrall was appointed a committee to correspond with the Parent Missionary Board on the subject of obtaining a supply of books for our German missions.

Resolutions were passed complimentary to the citizens of Bastrop, the President and the Secretary of the Conference.

The Holy Communion was then administered by the President, after which the appointments of the preachers were read, and the Conference adjourned, having held a peaceful and harmonious session.

JULIUS.

Appointments of the Preachers.

GALVESTON DISTRICT—C. Richardson, P. E.

Galveston Station—N. A. Cravens.

Galveston German Mission—Peter Moelling.

Houston Station—James M. Follansbee.

Hainsorda Station—A. B. F. Kerr.

Brazoria Circuit—Geo. S. Gutowood; one to be supplied.

Richmond Circuit—Jno. Patton, Wm. F. Hubert.

San Jacinto—To be supplied.

Geo. Rottensteia, Editor of the T. W. Banner.

Houston African Mission—To be supplied.

BUTERSVILLE DISTRICT—Jas. M. Wesson, P. E.

Butersville and LaGrange—David Coulson.

Fayetteville Circuit—John C. Kolb.

Chapel Hill and Brenham—R. Alexander.

Washington Circuit—Joseph M. Dorrhammer.

Anderson Circuit—James E. Ferguson and M. L. Smock.

Montgomery—James G. Johnson.

Mill Creek Mission—Joshua Shepard.

Huntsville Circuit—F. A. McShaun.

SPRINGFIELD DISTRICT—Wm. C. Lewis, P. E.

Springfield Circuit—M. Yoll.

Nashville Circuit—Daniel Morse.

Waco Circuit—P. M. Yell.

Waxahatchie Circuit—James H. Addison.

Waeloek—Jmues W. Lloyd.

Lem Circuit—Lewis G. Wright.

Georgetown Circuit—George Tittle; one to be supplied.

Red Oak Mission—Wm. G. Nelms.

AUSTIN DISTRICT—J. W. Whipple, P. E.

Austin Station—S. B. Cameron.

Bastrop Station—J. G. John.

Austin and Bastrop Circuit—F. Wilson.

Seguin and San Marcos—J. Lancaster, S. M. Kingston.

San Antonio Station—Lewis B. Whipple.

San Antonio and Seguin German Mission—H. P. Young.

Fredericksburg German Mission—C. Grote.

Brownsville and Point Isabel—To be supplied.

Rio Grande Circuit—To be supplied.

VICTORIA DISTRICT—Daniel Carl, P. E.

Victoria and Port Lavaca—H. S. Thrall; one to be supplied.

Goliad Circuit—Thomas F. Cook.

Gonzales Circuit—Wm. A. Smith.

Texana Circuit—O. M. Aldison.

Columbus Circuit—E. W. Thomas.

Egypt—To be supplied.

Egypt African Mission—To be supplied.

Victoria German Mission—E. Sneider.

Corpus Christi—To be supplied.

John Haynie and Jesse Boyd, supernannuated.

J. W. Phillips and H. L. Peel left without an appointment, on account of ill health.

J. W. Devilbiss left without an appointment, on account of pecuniary embarrassment.

W. S. Hamilton, R. B. Wells and Reuben Long, located at their own request.

A. J. Crawford transferred to the Alabama Conference.

Next Conference to be held at Bastrop

Hymeneal.

MARRIED—On Thursday, the 8th inst., by the Rev. Reynolds Trippett, Mr. STEPHEN ROPPOLO to Miss MARIA FREENY, all of this city.

General Intelligence.

South-Western Railroad Convention.

FIRST DAY.

We designed giving the proceedings of the Railroad Convention recently held in this city in full, but find they will occupy too much space. We make room for the report of proceedings on the opening and concluding days.

A very large number of delegates met yesterday January 5, at 12 o'clock, at the Lyceum Hall.

The Convention was called to order by the President of the Opelousas Convention, Manuel White, Esq.

Mr. W. tendered a hearty welcome to the delegates and said that the design of the Convention viewed in a public light, would command an acknowledgement of its importance throughout the whole United States, and upon smaller considerations of individual interests must find favor.

On motion of Mr. John E. Caldwell, of New Orleans, Colonel C. S. Tarpley, of Jackson, Miss. and Mr. J. M. Burke, of Lafayette, were elected, the former as President, and the latter as Secretary pro. tem. of the Convention.

On motion of Mr. Joshua Baldwin, a Committee of two from each State, selected by their respective delegations, were made a general committee for the nomination of permanent officers.

Mr. Cohen moved that the Permanent Committee make the necessary arrangements for the reception of ladies.

Mr. Baldwin of that committee informed the gentleman that his "female feelings" had already been consulted.

Mr. Cohen moved that the invitation to the ladies be published.

The motion, led on by a venerable bachelor member of the Legislature, alone voted nay, and of course was left in a very lucon-liverable minority.

A recess of half an hour was taken to allow delegates time to report themselves to the Secretary pro tem.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met in the evening at six o'clock—Col. Tarpley in the Chair.

Mr. Robb, of the Committee of Organization, presented the following list of officers:

President—Gov. Alexander Mouton, of Louisiana.

Vice Presidents—C. S. Tarpley, of Mississippi; H. Cheatham of Missouri; J. Forsyth, of Florida; Gen. L. D. Polk, of Tennessee; J. N. Beadle, of Kentucky; W. N. Brunell, of Virginia; Hon. Jas Campbell, of Louisiana; Amos Morrell, of Texas; Col. Absolum, of Arkansas.

Secretaries—John Calhoun, of Louisiana; V. Wiltz, of Louisiana; R. C. Farmder, of Arkansas; and John Duncan, of Mississippi.

All of whom were accepted by acclamation.

Upon taking the chair, the President made a brief address, thanking the Convention for the honor conferred upon him, and expressing his trust that its labors would be brought to a successful termination.

The President read a telegraphic dispatch from St. Louis to Mayor Crossman, stating that many delegates from that quarter were lee-bound in the Mississippi.

Mr. Robb offered a resolution to appoint three committees, to consist of three members from each State—one on Routes, one on Ways and Means, and one on Resolutions; and moved that the names be published to-morrow morning.

Mr. Robb took the occasion to offer some very able remarks on the subjects to be deliberated upon in the Convention, and was followed by several speakers whose addresses were received with great applause.

At a little before nine o'clock the Convention adjourned until this morning at ten o'clock.

SECOND DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The President called the Convention to order at half-past eleven.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and unpebbled by inserting the name of J. H. Campbell, instead of W. S. Campbell, as Vice President.

The names of the following gentlemen were then read, as members of the Committees appointed by the President, under the motion of Mr. Robb, last evening:

Committee on Routes—Virginia, G. N. Burwell, Dr. James Mellowell, Wiudham Robertson; Mississippi, R. S. Chandney, E. L. Ace, J. W. Vick; Texas, J. T. Mills, T. G. Alexander, H. G. Runnels; Arkansas, Albert Pike, John Martin, A. Fowler; Missouri, H. Conteau, P. H. McCreary, Edward J. Hay; Kentucky, William Seory, J. N. Beadles; Alabama, P. J. Weaver, B. B. Goldsby, H. P. Blevins; Tennessee, J. H. Otey, L. D. Polk, J. A. Porter; Louisiana, (W. S.) Campbell, L. C. De Russey, R. H. Payne; Florida, W. J. Keyser, J. M. Lauderu, J. Forsyth.

Committee on Ways and Means—Virginia, same as routes; Texas, A. Morrill, J. P. Allen, T. G. Wright; Mississippi, Sheph'd Brown, Samuel White, R. H. G. Street; Arkansas, Luther Chase, C. B. Ferguson, R. H. Sutton; Missouri, W. C. Cannell, H. A. Barnes, R. J. Lockwood; Kentucky, William Seory, J. N. Beadles; Alabama, P. J. Weaver, J. W. Lapsley, J. P. Purham; Tennessee, L. S. Polk, J. A. Porter, A. Hehman; Louisiana, James Robb, H. Phillips, J. P. Benjamin; Florida, Joseph Forsyth, W. J. Keyser, J. M. Laudren.

Committee on Resolutions—Mississippi, J. S. Yager, H. H. Street, R. A. Johnson; Virginia, same as routes; Texas, J. T. Mills, T. G. Wright, H. H. Pallett; Arkansas, Albert Pike, John Martin, S. C. Faulkner; Missouri, William Wade, Franklin Chibes, D. J. Jannary; Kentucky, William Seory, J. N. Beadles; Alabama, J. W. Lapsley, W. T. Barre, J. R. Parham; Tennessee, George W. Polk, J. H. Otey, A. Hehman; Louisiana, M. M. Cohen, A. Deschamp, J. H. Overton; Florida, J. M. Laudren, W. J. Keyser, J. Forsyth.

Mr. Landrum, of Florida, made some rather ill-tempered remarks about the omission of delegates from Florida, in the composition of the committees, stating that if Florida State was thus intentionally slighted, her delegates would retire from the hall.

The President explained that the omission occurred entirely by oversight. He had sought an interview with Mr. Forsyth, but was not able to find him. He appointed the committee, and their names appear above.

Mr. Robb offered a resolution supplementary to his resolutions of last evening, authorizing the committees appointed under the second resolution to appoint substitutes.

Mr. Walter, of Mississippi, offered resolutions calling upon the Legislature of Mississippi for action with regard to certain railroads, and aid in their construction, and embracing the following:

Resolved, That the city of New Orleans, by her delegates in this Convention, hereby pledges herself for a very liberal aid in the construction of said several railroads.

Colonel Tarpley offered a substitute, calling for the appointment of a committee of two members from each delegation, to report to the Convention projects, plans of improvement, etc. for their respective States.

Mr. Payne moved to amend the substitute, by requesting the delegates to report plans, routes, etc., to the Committee on Routes.

After considerable debate, the resolutions were laid over to take up a resolution offered by Mr. Morse, of Louisiana, fixing the manner of voting in the Convention. Each State to have one vote on all questions coming up for deliberation. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and the Convention took a recess of ten minutes to enable the delegations to select a member respectively from each, to count the votes.

Upon re-assembling, the following names were handed in as voters for their respective delegations:

Windham Robertson, for Virginia; J. T. Miller, for Texas; R. C. Brinkley, for Tennessee; R. T. Bradley, for Mississippi; W. J. Keyser, for Florida; James Robb, for Louisiana.

Committees were granted leave to sit during the session of the Convention.

In pursuance of a previous motion, the President appointed Caspar Funck as Sergeant-at-Arms or Messenger for the Convention.

Mr. Walter offered, as a substitute for his original motion, that the committees of States report to the Convention all projects, plans of improvements, etc., and that upon discussion, etc., they be referred to appropriate general committees. Adopted.

Mr. Payne presented a dispatch, received from the President of the Mobile Railroad, appointing B. H. Payne, Peter Courny, Jr., and others, representatives in the Convention.

General H. S. Foote entered the room and was introduced to the Convention, and, on motion, was invited to take a seat on the stand beside the President.

The delegations were then called upon to present reports of projects, plans of improvements, etc.

Most of the States were unprepared to report, and the call proceeded.

Mr. Pike, of Arkansas, presented a report for the delegation of that State, embracing a series of resolutions respecting the duty and policy of the southwestern and southern States, and especially of Louisiana. Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Robertson, of Virginia, offered a resolution, desiring the Committee on Routes to inquire into the expediency of action upon a railroad between New Orleans and Washington, by the shortest route.

The Convention adjourned to 6 r. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The meeting was called to order by the President at half-past 6 r. m.

Mr. Young, of Shreveport, presented a project and report, which he insisted upon having read at once, notwithstanding the anxiety that was manifested to hear Mr. Benjamin, who had been invited to address the Convention. The report was accordingly read. It proceeded at some length to show the benefits that would accrue from the construction of a Railroad from Shreveport, on the Red river, to Vicksburg, on the Mississippi, and giving various statistics of those parts of Louisiana and Texas that are more directly interested in the project. The report was accompanied by a letter from Professor Forshay, which was read in parts and the papers were referred to the Committee on Routes.

Mr. J. P. Benjamin was then loudly called for, and answered the compliment by one of the most eloquent addresses that we ever heard. He said that notwithstanding the sneers which it had become fashionable to throw out against New Orleans, she has been working lustily, talking, and she continued to work to carry out her great destiny. She was deeply engaged in great enterprises, going quietly and surely along in her way to greatness. She had not addressed the citizens of our neighboring States for aid in the work of building railroads—they are invited here for far different reasons. The position and advantages of New Orleans are such that no human power—no combination of Yankees can seriously disturb them. She must be the great centre of commerce and business of the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and this, too, independently of railroads. With railroads or without them, she must be a great city. The citizens of other States were called upon to confer with our citizens as to the best measures of securing and connecting all our interests.

He proceeded to show that there was not that want of enterprise in New Orleans which had been charged to her, and instanced in proof of his statements, the success that he had met in his efforts, with regard to the Jackson Railroad, and the Tehuantepec projects. But we must not attempt impossibilities, and by grasping too much secure nothing. There were only three (or two) lines to which Northerners could now offer any support. Though his remarks might displease many present, it was his duty to say this. New Orleans could not help the local interests of other places. Her own interests required her efforts to be confined at present to the two projects, as far as our railroads are concerned, of the road to Jackson, Mississippi, and that to Opelousas.

We are far from being to the sad position that it has become common to assign as the pleasure people do say that we are going down, that we are fast losing all our advantages, that we are traveling backward, and it is the fashion to sneer at the want of enterprise and energy shown by our citizens. Nothing of this is true. As regards population we have advanced—as regards wealth we have advanced. Yet, it must be confessed, not so much as we ought to have done. The city would continue to advance, and sooner or later Empire must centre here, he repeated, whether we have railroads or not.

We have advantages that must always place us beyond the reach of competition. We have a level soil on which railroads may be constructed without any expense of cutting and raising—a country through which we can make roads in straight lines, and altogether at much less cost than is required in any other part of the world.

Our limits will not allow us to follow Mr. B. at any length, and we must refer very briefly to his remarks. He expressed a confident belief that Mexico would soon abandon the miserable policy of closing her ports to prohibit transit over the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and showed that when communication should be fairly opened by that route, a traveler from London would find himself in the shores of the Pacific within eighteen days, after leaving that city.

He said he had been called too sanguine in his calculations on the enterprise of our citizens and especially in the matter of this Tehuantepec undertaking. Yet before a survey was commenced, and when no promises were held out that a dollar of the money would ever be returned, he had obtained subscriptions for stock to an amount exceeding half a million of dollars. And subsequently, when the amount collected from those subscribers was exhausted, and when the enterprise was short of funds, ten gentlemen of this city handed him, for its furtherance, five thousand dollars each. Then, with reference to the Jackson Railroad: The citizens came forward, put down their money, the route was surveyed, and we have the report of yesterday.

He said the citizens of New Orleans are always ready to assist in works of improvement, and it was only the absentees who refused to come forward. It is the object now to reach this class of men.

Mostly for our means of improvement, first upon individual subscriptions, second upon grants of land from Congress, which should be demanded as a right, and thirdly, upon the most important source—taxation. He thought, however, that the word taxation was improperly applied to the scheme which he explained at length for raising the means for these public works. It was giving every man an equivalent in stock for the money that he was required to contribute for the enterprise.

He referred to the existing laws respecting capital in this State, under which means fly from our city, and the poor are made the sufferers, the tax really falling upon them.

Mr. B. asked liberty to digress, and referred to the attempt to spread our institutions to foreign lands by means of the bayonet. He desired not to see the people of the United States interfere with the affairs of other nations, by other means than the peaceful arts. It is not by the bayonet, but by the peaceful operation of railroads, that we are to obtain an important influence on the European world. The intervention of peace, the intervention of Washington, was the foreign intervention in which we of the United State should be engaged.

THIRD DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The President called the Convention to order at half-past eleven.

The minutes were read, and after slight amendment approved.

Mr. Burnell announced that Gen. D. C. Clay and Joseph R. Anderson, delegates from Virginia, had arrived, and offered a resolution that they be placed on the committees instead of Dr. McDowell, who has left the city—adopted.

Mr. Ace, of Mississippi, offers the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is alike the duty and interest of the South-western States to foster and build up the cities near or along the Atlantic sea-board; and that, in the opinion of this Convention, no policy is better calculated to effect this great object than a liberal and enlightened system of internal improvements, connecting every important section of the aforesaid States by leading railroad communications.

Resolved, That for the more certain promotion of this desirable object, it is respectfully recommended to the above mentioned States, to adopt a uniform system in the construction of their railroads, by which means all delays in the conveyance of produce, merchandise and passengers from one State to another will be avoided.

Resolved, That the policy of donating the public lands to private persons, as lately Argued in Congress, is unjust, not only to the old States but to many of the new, and is calculated not only to divert population from the Southwest, but to diminish still further the political power of the slaveholding States.

Resolved, That even-handed justice requires that Congress should cede respectively to the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Missouri, at least six millions of acres of the public domain, for the construction of railroads within their limits, and that the Senators and Representatives from said States in Congress be and they are hereby requested to procure said donations as soon as practicable.

Referred to Committee on Resolutions.

Mr. Bay, of Louisiana, offered a resolution as follows, which was referred to the Committee on Routes:

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives to the Congress of the United States, representing the States represented in this Convention, be requested to use their exertions and influence to obtain from the United States a survey of the proposed railroad route from the Mississippi river via Shreveport, west, with a view to the relative advantage and practicability of this route as the eastern terminus of the contemplated Pacific Railroad.

Resolved, That said Senators and Representatives be also requested to use their exertions and influence in obtaining the repeal of the duty on railroad iron imported into the United States."

Mr. Burnell, of the Committee on Routes, made a report on Mr. Walter's resolutions, referred yesterday to that Committee, and recommended them to the favorable consideration of the Convention.

Mr. Fowler presented the charter of the "Arkansas Central Railroad Co.," with a memorial to Congress and the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Convention approve of the line designated in the charter of the Arkansas Central Railroad Co., as an important link in the general railroad system of the Southwestern States and of the Union.

Resolved, That this Convention recommend the several delegations in Congress from the States represented here, to lend their countenance and aid in furthering the objects of the accompanying memorial, and in consummating the grant of lands therein prayed for.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Convention it is not only proper, but necessary, in carrying out the primary objects of the Convention, and in advancing the prosperity of the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana, that said line of railroad, from some point east of Little Rock, be extended to St. Louis, and from its southern terminus by one line through the State of Texas and another to New Orleans.

FIFTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

LYCEUM HALL, 10 o'clock.

The convention was called to order by Col. A. Fowler, of Arkansas.

The minutes were read and approved.

The following gentlemen, delegates from Kentucky appeared and took their seats, viz.: W. Thornsbury, H. M. McCarty, T. Davis, J. W. Jones, J. C. Campbell.

Major H. J. Rainey presented a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of one member from each of the States represented in Convention, be appointed by the President, for the purpose of recommending (after consultation with the managers and engineers of the various railroads already made and in operation or in progress towards completion), the most suitable and proper gauge or breadth between the rails, with a view to its adoption for all the railroads which may be constructed in the Southern and Western States.

Adopted unanimously.

Mr. Burwell, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee on Routes, reported the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Routes regard the following system of internal improvements as not only indispensable to the developement of the agricultural, commercial and mineral wealth of the South-western States and cities, but also as essential to the equality and unity of the States of this confederacy; and they earnestly recommend the same to the patriotic consideration of the Legislature and citizens of the South-western States.

1. A National Road to the Pacific Ocean; with one terminus on the Mississippi river north and one south of the mouth of the Ohio river, so as to divide the advantages of such road as equally as possible among the different States of the Union.

2. The South-western National Railroad from Washington City, to New Orleans, passing through the States of Virginia, Tennessee, Alabama and Louisiana, constituting the shortest practicable line of mail and travel transit and combining of the following southwestern sections now under consideration, to wit:

The Richmond and Lynchburg Railroad, the Virginia and Tennessee road, the East Tennessee and Virginia road, the Georgia and Alabama road, the Alabama and Tennessee river road, the Selma and Jackson road, the New Orleans and Jackson road.

3. For Kentucky—The Memphis and Louisville road the Louisville and Nashville road.

4. For Tennessee—The Memphis and Louisville road; the Memphis and Charleston road; the Louisville and Nashville road; the Nashville and South-Western road; and the roads embraced in the National route, above referred to.

5. For Alabama—The Mobile and Ohio road; and the roads embraced in the National route referred to.

6. For Georgia and Florida—The Gulf road, or a continuation of the South-Western road of Georgia to Pensacola bay; the Florida and Pensacola road.

7. For Mississippi—The Mobile and Ohio road, the New Orleans, Jackson and Nashville road; the New Orleans Holly Springs and Ohio road; the Vicksburg and Jackson road, extended by Brandon eastward towards Selma.

8. For Arkansas—The Arkansas and Mississippi river road, from Fort Smith or Van Van Buren to Little Rock, and thence to White River, and there diverging to Memphis and Selma; a road from North-Eastern Texas, to Little Rock, crossing Red River at or near Fulton.

9. For Louisiana—The New Orleans, Algiers, Texas and El Paso road, the Madisonville and Jackson road, the Vicksburg and Shreveport road, the New Orleans and Nashville road.

10. For Texas—The continuation of the New Orleans, Opelousas and El Paso road through Texas.

11. For Missouri—The road from St. Louis westward; the Chalked and St. Joseph road.

Mr. Campbell of Kentucky moved that the following routes be placed on the schedule of roads, to wit:

From Paducah, at the mouth of the Tennessee river, to the Tennessee State line, and from Louisville to Paducah, to intersect the road from New Orleans to Mobile. Adopted.

Mr. Burwell, in favor of the resolutions, spoke at great length. He was in favor of a great trunk Railroad from Washington City to New Orleans, through the States of Virginia, East Tennessee, North Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. He contended that this was the shortest mail route from New Orleans to the Atlantic cities; that it was the route pointed out by the savage and the buffalo, and that the population and productions contiguous thereto justified its construction. After an elaborate summing up the many peculiar advantages attending the construction of a road by this route, the speaker passed to the consideration of the great contemplated enterprises which are to connect New Orleans with the commercial marts of the West.

Memphis, he said, is the great centre of trade for the South-West, and that it can never be superseded by any other. In view of this fact, he would urge the immediate construction of Railroads to bring the products of the West to Memphis, whence, by the Mississippi river, transportation to New Orleans was always uninterrupted and of rapid accomplishment.

It had been shown, he said, that capital in New Orleans was not wanting. We had already abundance of capital, more in proportion to population than any city on the Continent. We wanted enterprise to open rapid communication between this and the Atlantic sea-board—that the imports of New Orleans were far inferior to her exports, and that when the means of rapid communication between this and the Atlantic was established, this city would be enabled to supply the traders of the Mississippi Valley by imports, and thus be enabled to retake the millions arising from our exports and which are now poured into other cities of easier access. Rapid communication with the cities of the North was the great desideratum. By this means we would avoid the expense and dangers of coast transportation, and that the millions of expense which the government is compelled to sustain for the erection of light-houses on the Southern coast would be avoided. We would avoid the damages of the sea and save time and money by the completion of these enterprises—that what the planter loses by delay in getting to market, would build all the railroads to Christendom.

He spoke of the enterprise of the North and said that the profits of their railroads arose not from the facilities of communication with their own territory, but from the trade which they drew off from us. We can excel the North. We have resources they have not, and can build roads cheaper than they can.

That there should be such a wonder as railroads—iron rivers, without discussion their banks, without overflows and without crevasses—was a revelation for the South! The Anglo-Americans were a master race and had harnessed that great engine of improvement to their service. It was a labor saving improvement and the men of our race, although condemned to eat their bread in the sweat of their brows, by its use had determined to eat as much bread and sweat as little as possible. He spoke of the cheapness of railroads at the South, and of the facility at hand to construct them. Improvements may be made with slave labor, for it is cheaper than free labor, and by constructing roads by means of the former, the cost of their construction is paid to our own citizens and remains to increase the active capital among ourselves. The difference of cost in Virginia between free and slave labor was as two to one in favor of the employment of slaves. There was no advantage, he said, to a community in the employment of foreign laborers to construct our public works. Such a system carried money out of the country—increased crime—and when foreign laborers went from among us they left nothing but their demoralising influence, a few empty whiskey barrels and the remembrance of their vicious courses. The warmth of this climate, he said, which would kill an Irishman, would only serve to bring to the surface a negroe's fragrance. Four degrees are equal to five Irishmen, and besides, are not quite so handy with their fists.

The Speaker continued: He would not remind the people of Louisiana that it was their duty to build railroads for it was their interest to do so, and that was a stronger motive than any moral suasion.

The speaker harangued at great length, and, from want of space, we are enabled to give scarce a synopsis of his entertaining and instructive discourse. He concluded with some remarks going to prove that there is no need of extension of territory on account of a surplus slave population; that hybridism will absorb them, and a great proportion would pass from the laboring to the menial condition, thereby becoming the slave aristocracy of the country. He finished by saying that abolition excitements must soon cease to annoy us, for that the North finds it to their interest to cultivate friendly relations with the South; that the time is coming when we can demand abolitionists as hostages, and have them locked up and mulled to order; and that the North, in exchanging the patronage and friendship of the South for the friendship of the abolitionists, would make a damned bad swap! The speech was received with decided demonstrations of applause.

Mr. Trivesant then arose and entertained the Convention with a very lively address, but as the substance of it is contained in his printed address we forbear to repeat it.

Mr. J. K. Anderson of Virginia, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, As the sense of this Convention that a Railroad and Water communication across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is of national importance, and specially so to the whole Southwestern States. Adopted unanimously.

Then, Ace, of Mississippi, offered resolutions, the purport of which were, that the connection of the Southern Atlantic and Pacific oceans by railroad, was an event worthy of government favor and assistance; that high commercial considerations required the construction of this road, and that Congress cannot make a better disposal of the public domain lying in California than for this undertaking: that the best route is from San Diego, or San Francisco, through El Paso to Texas; and that a committee be appointed to memorialize Congress on the subject, asking an appropriation of fifty millions of acres of land for building this road; and that a committee of three be appointed to present this memorial to Congress, etc. These resolutions, after a warm debate, were laid over to six o'clock this (yesterday) evening.

The following were offered by Col. Campbell of New Orleans:

Whereas, The city of New Orleans is the great commercial entrepot not only of Louisiana, but also of the States of the great valley drained by the Mississippi river; and whereas, the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and the others within said valley have as direct an interest as Louisiana, in the facilities offered to both the foreign and domestic commerce which naturally seeks New Orleans as an emporium for barter, distribution or export; and whereas, the maritime outlet of the products and importations of the South-west is within the jurisdiction of the State of Louisiana, and as a consequence, all goods and commodities exported and imported through that channel are affected by her laws, which may encourage or impede the growth commercial prosperity, military strength and political power of the States of the valley of the Mississippi, thus rendering her morally responsible to them for the passage of such laws as will encourage, enlarge and strengthen the commercial and social interests of the vast section of the confederacy; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Convention, representing the States interested, respectfully but earnestly request the Legislature of Louisiana to repeal and abolish all laws, either statutory or constitutional, they have enacted which may be in conflict with the spirit of the foregoing preamble, and that they will adopt such other laws as may be necessary to promote harmony of action and unity of effort on the part of the South-western States in constructing such a great system of Railroads as will facilitate their intercourse with their natural commercial emporium, and that the Legislature in such manner as their wisdom may designate, do promote the immediate construction of a great trunk Railroad, leading North and West from New Orleans, upon which the various branch Railroads of this and other States may be engrafted. The foregoing were laid over to the evening session.

The Convention then adjourned to six o'clock P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The resolutions of Colonel Campbell were called up. The motion to lay them on the table was withdrawn. The question being taken they were adopted unanimously.

Under the resolution of Major Rainey, approved during the Morning Session, the Chair appointed the following gentlemen:

Major H. J. Rainey of La., John Martin of Ark., Philip J. Weaver of Ala., Messrs. Landrum of Fla., Campbell of Ky., Sheppard Brown of Miss., Cheuteau of Mo., Brinkley of Tenn., John F. Mitts of Texas and Burwell of Va.

Mr. Cheuteau of Mo. introduced the following

Resolved, That the obstruction of the navigation of the Upper Mississippi caused by the Des Moines and Rock River Rapids, are such as to require the immediate action of Congress.

Resolved, That the obstruction to the navigation of the Ohio River at the Falls near Louisville, Ky. and the Canal around them need immediate improvement.

Resolved, That the enlargement of said Canal to meet the wants of commerce deserves the serious and prompt action of our National Legislature.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress, be and they are hereby requested to bring this subject to the consideration of Congress.

Mr. Cheuteau offered the following in addition:

Resolved, That the bars at the mouth of the Mississippi river are a great obstruction to commerce, and that the same should be removed as soon as possible.

Mr. Hyams asked leave to offer the following, proposed by Dr. M. Eells:

Resolved, That in the sense of this Convention a liberal appropriation should be made by Congress for removing the obstructions to the navigation of Red river.

A motion was made to lay the above resolutions on the table. The vote was taken by States as follows. Ayes—Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, 5. Nays—Arkansas, Missouri, 2. Alabama, Arkansas and Louisiana not voting.

The resolutions were received as a part of the proceedings.

A communication from Hon. Byram was received and spread upon the minutes.

The resolutions of General Ace, of Mississippi, were called up, and on motion laid on the table.

Resolutions of thanks were voted to Hunly, Burke, A. D. Crossman, J. D. R. Bellow, Lieutenant M. D. Maury of Washington, D. C., Col. Abert, Lieut. Edward Bates, Mr. Martin of Arkansas, and the reporters of the press for their services in this Convention and ordered to be published among the reports of this Convention.

A resolution was carried calling upon the Hon. Wm. Burwell for a copy of his address accompanying his report as chairman of the Committee on Routes, and that it be published with the accompanying documents.

The Convention then adjourned sine die.

Telegraphic Items.

By the People's (O'Reilly) Line.

Further from Europe—Particulars by the Atlantic—Interesting from France and Germany.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.

The following items of European news, are brought by the steamer Atlantic.

FRANCE.—Louis Napoleon's propositions have been received with more by a very large majority of the French people. The election generally passed off very quietly. In the arondissements, inhabited mainly by working people, there was a large majority for Louis Napoleon, while in those where the influence of the nobility predominated, the vote was neutralized. The total majority for Louis Napoleon is stated as high as seven millions (?). It is reported that several other Generals have been arrested. Victor Hugo has escaped to Belgium.

Notes, corresponding of the dangerous support given to political refugees in England, have been presented to the Foreign Office by the representatives of Russia, Austria, and other States of Germany. It is intimated that Englishmen will not be able to travel without inconvenience, in the Austrian territories, so long as past complaints are unheeded by the English Government.

Large sums of money are forwarded from London to Hungary, much of which has fallen into the hands of the Austrian Government.

The Arch Duke Albert has entered Buda and Pesth, and assumed the reins of Government.

Late advices from Morocco state that the Emperor refuses to sign the treaty with France, and that he is actually marching upon Tangier with 40,000 troops.

In Rome, the vote of the troops was largely in favor of Napoleon.

Liverpool Markets.

On Monday, the 22d, there was an increased demand in the Cotton market, and the sales reached 7500 bales at improving rates, the decline quoted two days previous being fully recovered. Breadstuffs were declining, and Flour was 6d. per barrel lower.

Prometheus Affair—Mr. Webster's Letter—Mr. Clay.

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1852.

There is every reason to believe that the Prometheus affair will lead to a better understanding, and that no British force will hereafter be stated at San Juan da Nicaragua. Mr. Webster's dispatch on the subject is highly spoken of. It shows a high spirit and bears a lofty tone.

Mr. Clay's health is improving, and he expects to-day on Mr. Clarke's resolution on the policy of the United States relative to intervention in the affairs of foreign governments.

Introduction of Kossuth.

WASHINGTON, January 6th, 1852.

In the Senate yesterday Mr. Crawford moved that the discussion of business be suspended for the reception of Governor Kossuth. Kossuth then entered the Senate chamber and was introduced by General Shields in the following words: "Mr. President we have the honor to introduce Louis Kossuth to the Senate of the United States." The President then invited him to a seat in the Senate, when the Senate adjourned. The members were then personally introduced to Kossuth by Messrs. Seward and Shields.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, January 7th, Noon.

There is a steady Cotton market this morning, but the demand is inactive. Corn has been quiet at 65c. per bushel, for mixed Western. Lard is held at 9½c. per lb 11th Coffee, 6¾c. per lb.

January 7th, Evening.

Cotton has been rather quiet during the day, and the sales are limited to 500 bales at 8¾c. for middling Orleans and 8½c. for middling Uplands. Flour has sold at steady prices. Pork, Beef and Lard are quiet. Freights are steady—Cotton to Liverpool, 5-32.

Ohio River—Markets.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 6.

The river here is now falling, and has receded 22 inches during the last 24 hours. The demand for Flour has been limited to-day at previous rates. Whiskey is dull at 14½ @ 14¾c. per gallon. Lard 7¾ @ 7¾c. per lb. for Prime. Mess Pork $12 50 per bbl.

Particulars by the Cambria—Success of Louis Napoleon.

The following items of European intelligence were brought by the Cambria:

The resignation of Lord Palmerston is attributed to difficulties in the Cabinet with regard to the policy of the British Government in the present condition of affairs on the continent of Europe.

The Queen of Spain was delivered of a Princess on the 20th of December.

France—Louis Napoleon—New Press Law.

The election continues to engross a large portion of the public attention.

Louis Napoleon has been triumphant everywhere. Many of the impudsoned Deputies have been liberated.

The new law for the regulation of the press requires all publishers of journals to deposit a certain sum with the Government as security for good conduct.

The Count de Montelambert is spoken of as likely to become a member of the Cabinet.

England—Money—Failures.

The bullion in the Bank of England, according to the last statement, is over 17,000,000 pounds sterling.

Messrs. Barkley, Buchan & Sweet, an extensive iron house in Glasgow, have suspended payment. Their liabilities are about £70,000. Messrs. Quarles, Harum & Co. have also failed for about the same amount.

Liverpool Markets.

Flour has been in better request at steady prices. Pork scarce, but not in demand. Bacon steady. Lard is unchanged. Oils advancing. Sugar declined 6d. ₱ cwt. Trade in Manchester steady.

Steamer Sunk.

CINCINNATI, January 8.

The steamboat Dunkirk sunk this morning forty miles below St. Louis. No lives were lost. She was bound for New Orleans.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, January 8—Evening.

The cotton market has been quiet, with sales of 1500 bales. Flour has been in moderate request, and 7000 barrels have sold at $4 02½@4 68 ₱ barrel. Corn—21,000 bushels at 65c. Mess Pork is in fair demand at full prices. Of the Coffee, 3500

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

SLEEP SWEETLY, GENTLE CHILD.

The only child of the Countess Ossoli well known as Margaret Fuller, is buried in the Auburn Cemetery in Sherwin, N. H. There lie her husband, and all that is mortal of the gifted and unfortunate family. A marble slab with a rose and lily sculptured upon it bears the inscription: "In memory of Angelo Eugene Philip Ossoli who was born at Rieti the 5th of March, 1848, and perished by shipwreck off the Island with his father, mother, governess, Angelina and Margaret Fuller Ossoli, on the United early."

Sleep sweetly, gentle child, though the loved one Is not here to-day, nor with you now; And though the sea its treasures in its caverns hide, Yet angels guard the spot where sleeps the pearl of price.

The cold winds sweep the waves o'er the ocean's bed, And strange wild murmurs are there in the dark blue deep; Were the dead found that sail o'er the sea? And while the mourning sorrowful are there, Sad The hearts Had I not lost one dear as well and cold.

Sleep sweetly gentle child, though the loved one Is not here to-day nor with you now; That tender body which you had the pearl of price, That infinity from thy sweet spirit was torn That night the arms that closely folded the Were the wet weeds that floated in the sea

Sleep, sweetly, gentle child. The rain came over Hath pitted the sad sighs the wind whistles Amid from the wreck it brought to some gave To the fond watchers weeping on the shore Now the sweet tale shall guard its precious trust While mourning hearts weep with thy sweet dust

Sleep sweetly, gentle child, here's sent are shed Upon the garlands of Jan Northern flowers That fond hearts strew above thy lowly bed Through all our summer's glad and pleasant hours For thy sake and for her's who sleeps beneath the wave Kind hand-luting flowers to rise upon thy grave

Sleep sweetly, gentle child, the warm sunlight Amid the dark pines through the quiet dell And wakes the light flowers shady that lies Upon the white tinted thy sweet spirit's cell— The Valley flowers are bright—the turf is green— Sleep sweetly hush wept Eugene

Sleep sweetly gentle child, the peaceful rest Hath entry given thee from many a woe Safe from all sin and tears forever blest Thy song sweet praises of redeeming Joy The love that took thee to that world of the Ere thou hadst learned the griefs and sighs in the Laurel Hill, N. H., Sept. 1851.

Further News by the Baltic.

Closing Scenes of the French Revolution—Desperate Fighting at the Barricades—Insurgents Shot—Success of Louis Napoleon—Assassinations—Probable rupture between France and Turkey.

A rumor that twenty-five millions francs had been taken from out of the Bank of France, had been contradicted by the Governor of the Bank.

The Belgium papers had been prohibited from entering France. English papers are admitted.

The Prefect of Police had ordered searches and made arrests on a large scale.

At the very latest moment, previous to the sailing of the Baltic, all was quiet in Paris.

Louis Blanc was arrested immediately on landing in France.

Two correspondents of English papers had been ordered to leave the country.

Sixty-five towns has sent in their address to the President.

Gen. Cavaignac is lodged in the same room of the Tuileries of Ham which Louis Napoleon formerly occupied himself.

THE BARRICADES.—The following details of the military operations on Thursday are given by Galignani's Messenger. Up to ten o'clock on Thursday morning the aspect of Paris was perfectly calm.

At about twelve o'clock it was generally reported that barricades had been erected at the Porte St. Denis and Porte St. Martin rues Faubourg, Transnonain St. Merry and St. Martin. This rumor was subsequently found to be correct. The alarm now become so great that not only in the neighborhood of the disturbed district, but in other parts of the Boulevard, the rue Rivoli, the rue de la Paix, rue, and all that part of Paris, the tradesmen closed their shops.

It appears that during the night an attempt had been made to excite the people by a repetition of the proceeding which produced such serious results on February, 1848. About one hundred men, in blouse, commanded by several chiefs of sections, and preceded by two torches, paraded two corpses of which they had become possessed after the carrying of the barricades which had been erected in the Faubourg St. Antoine and the rue St. Marguerite, went through the rues Montreal Faubourg and Transnonain shouting "aux armes." A few determined sergents de ville attacked this party, and rescued it the dead bodies from Morgue. Speculating on this scene of horrors the rioters became more numerous, and proceeded to man four barricades, which they had formed in this quarter. They were attacked by some detachments of the division of Bruere Levasseur, and carried in a few moments.

Several insurgents were killed, and about fifty rebels of sections and men in blouses were arrested. Three other barricades were abandoned at midnight by the insurgents.

On Thursday morning, at an early hour, the prefect of police having been informed that 120 montegnard representatives had met during the night, and drawn a manifesto, took successful means to prevent its being posted up. The first barricades in the Rue Faubourg and Transnonain were carried at twelve o'clock. The troops after the victory showed great clemency towards the insurgents, instead of shooting them.

At one o'clock, the insurrection had evidently made much progress. The insurgents appeared to be entirely masters of the quarters St. Denis and St. Martin. The houses forming the angle of these two boulevards were taken possession of by a great number of men armed with [illegible] robbing the shops of armorers. In the Rues St. Denis and St. Martin several insurgents entered the houses, and threw out of the window articles of furniture to assist in forming barricades. There was great stir in the whole of the quarter until the arrival of the Chasseurs de Vincennes and some regiments of the line, which a few moments carried the barricades and gave no quarters to the insurgents. At half-past four the troops were masters of the whole of the ground which had been occupied by the insurgents, and the wounded were carried away to the hospitals.

The troops began to move down the Boulevards towards the Porte St. Denis, about one o'clock and the necessary measures being taken for an attack, the advance was made about two on the large barricade there erected. Most resistance was made than was expected, but at last the troops obtained possession of the first and greatest obstacle, and where in fact the insurgents had had concentrated their principal forces. The action here was an exceedingly sharp one, and it was even found necessary to battle down the barricade with cannon. The inside of the barricades when the troops entered was found covered with corpses and wounded men. The insurgents who escaped fell back on the barricades near the Porte St. Denis. Here, after the ground had been cleared away near the Porte St. Denis for the passage of troops another series of attacks took place by the troops, on the last barricade which had been erected across the Boulevards. The insurgents had been taken possession of several of the houses at each side, from which they prepared to fire on the troops. When the attack took place it was found necessary to send besieged engineers into these houses to dislodge the insurgents. The resistance here was not by any means a vigorous one and the troops successively and without much trouble took possession of the various barricades on the boulevards.

Friday.—All the barricades made during the night were carried rapidly. The armed insurgents were shot on the spot or were taken to the Ecole Militaire, to be tried by court martial. After then condemnation they were immediately taken into the Champ de Mars and shot. The number is said to be very great. Several of them were well known socialist chiefs. In many parts of Paris yesterday, where the insurgents were caught breaking into houses, they were made to kneel, their knees and were shot on the spot. At the shop of a silk dealer 1 were shot in this way. The irritation of the troops on the boulevards, when fired upon from three or four of the houses was very great. They returned the fire en masse and many persons in the crowd were killed.

There must have been at least twenty or thirty shot on the boulevards. At nine o'clock at night four dead bodies were still lying on the steps of the Theatre des Varieties. M. Alfred Dingee, a member of a committee of Resistance in Five, and directed the operations of the insurgents. At last day at La Chapelle, one of the lieutenants. There were eight barricades, and for several hours no troops, but at about nine o'clock they were all carried by five hundred troops of the line. Victor Hugo was not taken. A warrant for his arrest was out three days ago, but he has kept hiding about and could not be found. He, kingly, skulking—what a dangerous worked and foolish part he was playing was anxious for his arrest on Tuesday as the only means of saving him.

About ten thousand fresh troops arrived to-day, and altogether we have now it is said—about one hundred and twenty thousand men. All the Boulevards are occupied as are quiet, and the troops begin to exceedingly well as carriages are allowed to pass. The negotiations to-day have consisted chiefly in dispersing and arresting insurgents and carrying barricades. There was little resistance to any point, and at about four o'clock it was said that no danger was at an end.

The correspondent of the Morning Chronicle writing on Saturday evening says: "There were a very large number taken on the evening of the night and they were abandoned this morning, and no attempt was made to make any additional one."

From another account we gather the following:

The persons who in the early part of Thursday entered the Cafe de Paris and lined upon the troops received in quarter, every man found in the house was killed.

Notwithstanding the assurances of the government it is calculated that at least a dozen of the departments are in a state of siege. The carriage of the courier of the British Embassy was stopped on Thursday evening in form a barricade. The courier was allowed to proceed to [illegible].

It was rumored that shots were fired from Tortoni coffee-house upon the troops and it was immediately attacked by the soldiers. The establishment is occupied by an invading M. Salamon de Cendras's company, which was resisted with cannon, and at least thirty of the workmen killed.

The large barrier at the Port St. Denis was not taken till after two hours hard fighting and the record 20 to 100 lives. At the Port St. Martin some hundreds of dead and wounded were found behind a barricade and among the number was Lieut. [illegible].

On the right hand towards the Porte St. Denis the houses and windows are completely smashed by cannon ball. Some of the houses in the town and are of modern construction with terraces in front these were occupied by the insurgents as early as twelve o'clock and from them a murderous fire was directed upon the troops. Three artillery men were shot, stood at their guns, and rendered furious by the loss of their comrades the guns were loaded with ball and case poured destructively down thunder to play upon them successfully for more than an hour. The walls were perforated through and through, and the windows on the opposite side completely destroyed owing to the direction. The doorway of principal was thick as ball and it is a wonder that not a man escaped.

Whenever a shot was fired from a house, artillery (loaded with grape) was brought to bear upon the devoted building, and the soldiers in their hurry and excitement did not always select the right house. In many instances the garrets were leveled from third and fifth within thirty yards of the house, and this augmented the fury of the execution.

One account gives the loss of the insurgents at between 800 and 1000, and that of the troops at about 200 but it is evidently impossible to arrive at any thing like certainty at present. Falloux said to-day—some friend—London and Switzerland have been arrested and it is said that the Government are in possession of documents of the greatest importance, placing beyond a doubt the existence of a formidable plot against the President which was to have broken out in the course of the week, and it was only on the receipt of this information that he resolved upon taking the initiative and dealing a mortal blow the Assembly.

[illegible] Paris, Saturday Night.

The insurrection is completely crushed. Not an [illegible] is now to be seen. The troops are in possession of all the barricades, and the [illegible] are in full force. The [illegible] are [illegible] and the [illegible] are [illegible] and the [illegible] are [illegible] and the

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. E. DOTY, R. H. RIVES, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DOUGLAS, W. MURRAY, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference

VOLUME I. NUMBER 50. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 17, 1852. OFFICE, 56 GRAVIER ST.

DEATH IN YOUTH.

BY G. W. PARKER.

'Tis sad to leave the lovely world.
The blazoned banner of the sky,
And all of Earth's sublimity,
Are, day by day, in light unfurled.
In glory float before the eye.
The practiced ear and eye are clearer,
The heart is deeper, nature dearer,
From year to year: 'tis sad to die.

'Tis hard to leave the busy world—
To feel our courage mounting high
On thoughts that just begin to fly.
Then arrow-struck and swiftly hurled
Downward to dim obscurity.
Our life is always a beginning,
A hope of honor worth the winning;
We hope to do, and hoping, die.

'Tis hard to leave a stormy world,
When every watcher may descry
A happy Future drawing nigh,
And all the nations, onward whirled,
Behold the sunny shores that lie
Beyond that ever-heaving ocean—
The Present, with its wild commotion;
Alas, to see, to sink, to die!

And yet to leave a weary earth
For higher life, is well, we know.
Our being is a constant flow,
And death itself, is newer birth;
The seed decays that it may grow:
A world sublime awaits the dying
Who purely lived: Away with sighing;
The Past is passed; 'tis well to go.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL REPORT

Of the Missionary Society of the Alabama Conference of the M. Episcopal Church, South.

In our annual report we have been accustomed to give a synoptical view of the condition of the world, as seen through a missionary perspective. This we consider important, as we can not estimate the position which we occupy and the labor we perform without viewing them in connection with those of others, and the amount of service necessary for the conversion of the world. It ought to be told, at least once in a year, that there are 600,000,000 of Pagans yet to be enlightened—150,000,000 Mohammedans and Jews yet to be brought to the cross—200,000,000 of pseudo Christians yet to be evangelized; and of the 50,000,000 that remain of the world's population, only a trace can be considered other than the objects of missionary zeal. For the case must be brought to this issue, that all, who are not in some sense missionaries themselves, ought to be brought under the benevolent action of those who are. Here is a work! here is a field! The harvest truly is plentoous, but the laborers are few. We do not, however, dwell on this occasion to look very intently on the gloomy side of the picture; but we must not lose sight of it, while we glance a moment at the other side.

Although the operations of the Church in the missionary field, are as yet but preliminary in their character, yet as such they are on a little encouraging. The time has gone when Popery, except with unblushing effrontery, might challenge us to establish our claims to apostolicity, by pointing to our progress among the heathen. It is true, we have not yet learned how to dragoon whole nations into the profession of Christianity, giving them a choice between baptism with water or with blood. We do not compass sea and land to make proselytes, by inducing them "to change their object," while they "keep their love" substituting one class of idolatry for another, thereby perpetrating a satirical burlesque on Christianity. Our object is to turn the heathen from idols of every name to the one living and true God. And this Protestant missionaries have been successful beyond the highest expectations of the men who originated these great undertakings which are the glory of the Church in the present age. Popery indeed has been displaying unwonted vigor—putting forth a mighty struggle to maintain the ascendancy. Her principal triumphs have been among the pseudo Protestants of Germany, Great Britain and America. In the heathen world she has done but little more than antagonize the operations of Protestant missionaries, as in Tahiti and Australia. But the increasing power of the various Protestant societies will make the good cause where it cannot be successfully assailed. It is worthy of note that the British Wesleyan Missionary Society alone has a revenue nearly equal to that of the Romish Society for the Propagation of the Faith. The last report of the latter which we have seen makes its total receipts £30,184, while that of the former is £104,-

Popish missionaries have not translated the Bible into any of the heathen tongues or dialects; Protestants have translated it into 150. The British and Foreign Bible Society alone has issued during the present century some twenty millions of Bibles, or portions of the Bible; and the American Bible Society are scattering the Word of Life all over the earth. The receipts of the American Bible Society last year were $276,852. Nearly all the Missionary Societies report an improved state of their finances. The American Board received $274,902, and expended $4850; the Northern Baptist Home Missionary Society $37,085; the Southern Baptist Foreign Missionary Society $25,970—domestic $13,925; the Baptist Indian Mission Association $20,245, and Free Mission $5000. Thus the American Baptists contributed last year $228,000, about the same as contributed by the British brethren. By the way, are comparatively few in number. The missionary income of the Northern Methodist Church was $131,633, being $21,891 more than that of the previous year. That of the Southern Methodist Church was $113,801, including $20,818 received from the United States Government for services rendered by the Society in educating the Indians. The revenue for the Board called the "Inner Mission" a project set on foot principally through the instrumentality of Dr. Wichern, a self-sacrificing hyman. In 1849, about 500 representatives convened at the same place. In 1850 some 2000 met at Stuttgardt, and gave an additional impulse to the "Inner Mission" operations. In 1851, the meeting was convened at Elberfeld, and from the reports, the most blessed fruits may be expected. The Central Committee have affiliated 50 or 70 Societies in 16 different States of Germany. 200 agents and correspondents are engaged in promoting the cause: orphan asylums, benevolent institutions and the like, have been founded, and it is contemplated to train 50 laborers for the Mission. Large outlays of money and labor attest the zeal of the Reformers, and the check given to infidelity, Sabbath breaking, and other crimes, evince their success. About a Fourth of the Protestant clergy take part in the enterprise, and the high Lutherans themselves have been stimulated to go and do likewise, though on a separate basis. We shall keep an eye to this Inner Mission of Germany; and expect from it the most beneficial results. The anti-Romanist spirit which is pervading all ranks in Ireland, and the multitudes of converts to Protestantism in that Island, is a remarkable and cheering fact to which, however, we can give but a passing notice. It is indeed, wonderful, if the computation be correct, that there are now, nearly or quite as many Protestants as Papists in the Emerald Isle.

It affords us sincere pleasure to record the fact that there has been a great revival of the Missionary spirit within the bounds of the Ala. Conference during the past year. Most princely contributions have been made to the cause by some of our churches, as appears by the Treasurer's Report. Some fears have been entertained that, in these circuits which have each contributed more during the year, than the entire Missionary Revenue of the Conference a few years since, there will be unfavorable reaction in coming years. But rather let us believe that none of our churches have contributed too much, that all of them are aware of the fact, that those who were most liberal the past year will labor hard to maintain the enviable position they have reached, and that every other charge in the Conference will be so stimulated by their example as to force them to increase their supplies that they may not be obliged to yield the standard to others. If this be the case, the gallant South Carolina Conference will have to surrender the banner to her younger sister, for the $18,000 of the former will bear but a lean proportion to the developed liberality of the latter. And as our Carolinia brethren have been provoking the entire connection, North and South, by their Missionary chivalry, let them consider this retaliating provocation a challenge which we invoke them to accept: we love thus to provoke and to be provoked by others. As Charles Wesley sings

> "Strive we in affection strive,
> Let the purer flame revive,
> Such as in the martyrs glowed,
> Dying champions for their God."

Rather let us be living champions; and let us not forget that it requires more heroism to live for religion than to die for it.

We note with great satisfaction the increasing demand upon our zeal by the enlightened extension of our Missionary work. Two Missionaries are about to depart to China to strengthen the hands of our excellent and devoted brethren in that distant field; and the call of the superintendent of our California Mission has been nobly responded to, and we hope the Pacific Conference will be organized by him in April next, with at least the score of Missionaries demanded by him. Our other Mission fields, for the most part, present encouraging aspects.

At the last session of the Alabama Conference, 20 missions were reorganized within its bounds. The following condensed reports of the missionaries will show their present condition:

ARCOLA COLORED MISSION.

This mission was served during the year by Wm. M. Sheckley; 247 members, (30 received during the year,) 250 children under catechetical instruction, 3 churches in the mission. Spiritual condition good.

BIG SWAMP TOLEDED MISSION.

Has been under care of Rev. Dan'l Herling; contains 112 members, 153 children catechetically instructed. General state of mission good.

DAYTON COLORED MISSION.

Served by Rev. H. J. Hunter; contains 125 members, 116 children under catechetical instruction. Spiritual condition good—patrons desire its continuance.

WARRIOR MISSION.

Served by Rev. James Terrant; 14 appointments; about 200 members. Represented in prosperous condition, and it is hoped that it will soon support itself.

SAND MOUNTAIN MISSION.

Faithfully and successfully served by Rev. Wm. Rhodes. The Church has been blessed with a gracious revival; 14 appointments and about 120 members.

WALKER MISSION.

Served by Rev. Samuel Jones; blessed with a revival of religion; 14 appointments and 273 members.

CHATTAHOOCHIE MISSION.

Rev. Wm. B. Adams served during last year; in healthy condition; 20 appointments, 7 chapels, 378 members, 344 children, etc.; admitted this year 100 members; patrons desire its continuance.

PLYMOUTH MISSION.

Served by Rev. L. J. Schooler; 16 appointments, 168 members, 70 added last year, 205 children, etc.

WHITE WATER MISSION.

Served by Rev. J. W. Broxson; increased 85 members; 2 churches; may be arranged so as to relieve the Board.

TCHEE MISSION.

Served by W. C. Robinson; contains 12 appointments, and applications to add 8 or 10 more; received into church 163, now numbering 422; has 200 children; etc. Will require 3 preachers to serve next year.

CHESTNUT CREEK MISSION.

Served by John Foust, 109 white, 18 colored members; added last year 41; thinks mission able to sustain itself, and the Board recommends it to be numbered among the regular appointments.

APALACHICOLA MISSION.

Served by Otis Saxton; 116 whites were blessed with revival, added 79 whites and 43 colored; prosperous Sunday school, 80 scholars; thought after this year the mission will sustain itself.

HILLABEE MISSION.

Served past year by Rev. Lewis Oslin; contains 362 whites and 32 colored members; added past year 211 members; several churches being built.

TRAHLE CREEK MISSION.

Rev. R. Rew served; about 1000 persons under catechetical instruction, etc.; 317 members; prosperous; patrons desire its continuance.

CATOMA MISSION.

Lewis Gholson's charge; 351 communicants; 120 children under catechetical instruction; 51 added past year; good condition.

COLUMBIA MISSION.

Served by Rev. J. W. McCann; contains 154 whites and 115 colored.

BUTLER MISSION.

Served by Rev. Thos. Killough; 350 members, 70 added past year, 4 regular Sunday schools, 2 churches been built, and 2 more to be, soon.

CIKEVILLE MISSION.

Rev. E. Sullivan served; revival last year; 12 appointments and 235 members; good condition.

PEE RIVER MISSION.

O. R. Franklin served; 68 whites and 66 colored; good condition.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

DECEMBER 18, 1851.

Little did I think, when penning the close of my last communication, that the prediction I ventured to utter in reference to affairs of France, was to be so soon, and suddenly, and lamentably realized. Despotism has struck the first blow, and by so doing, has not once laid bare, and almost paralysed its hundred armed foe communism. But it has not alone done this. Had the prevalence of communism really driven the executive to a desperate use of force, the recent coup d'etat in its principle and purpose, (though not even then in its means and details) might have been defended. But this is not the case; Louis Napoleon has sprung forth with desperate resolve as the antagonist of liberty, of constitutionalism, no less than of communism. Nay, like all despots, there can be no doubt, that he most of all hates and fears this constitutionalism, the only effectual foe of tyrants, the only cure of tyranny. Mere communism is impotent against a strong, willed, and red-handed despotism. Communism, in feeling and instinct at least, is the invariable accompaniment and correlative of an organized and pervasive despotism, the deadly undergrowth which always springs up beneath the full shade of tyranny. But constutional liberty is equally opposed to both despotism and communism. Of this there was little enough in France before the last crisis. Few, indeed, were those who rightly understood its laws or requirements, few that loved its principles intelligently and purely, or that were disposed to listen to its teachings. Yet some such there were, such men as De'Tocqueville, and Berryer, and DeBreglie, and may we not join with these too, the name of Cavaignac?—some few such there were among all the various parties in the state, except the Red Republicans and Communists themselves. These were the strength of society, the guard of freedom, and the hope of France. They were also, being such, of necessity the foes of despotism in whatever shape, popular or imperial. On these, therefore, Louis Napoleon has laid his hand. The chiefs he dragged ignominiously to prison, the others many of them also having been imprisoned for a time, are now "dumb with silence," while their "hearts are hot within them," or are exiles in neighboring lands. Everywhere, the secret terrors of irresponsible police or the fear of a red and desperate soldiery cow the crowd into nequiescence. Meantime, as was to be expected, in some of the provinces, especially of the South, an agrarian insurrection has broken out. The times of the Jaguerie war are threatened to be renewed. Of this Louis Napoleon's act has been the occasion, yet he makes it his excuse. He pretends to have discovered proofs of two conspiracies which were to have broken out. The first on the part of the leaders of the assembly; but of this the actual evidence is nothing, while all probability is against it. This was his first plea, the conspiracy, he said, was to have taken place but a few hours later than his own blow was struck. The other pretended conspiracy is the communist conspirney, which is said to have now prematurely exploded in the Loire provinces and the South East. This, too, on the eve of a new election is just as improbable as the other, especially as the people had every reason to expect something tantamount to universal suffrage. Partial conspiracies in embryo may possibly have existed, but no such general one as is now asserted. It is easy to see through such transparent and worthless pleas as these. What the actual condition is of France and the French, it is impossible to judge, the press being either put down or in irons. The President alone speaks through the very few papers still published, and all public news are at the despot's disposal. Never, even in the days of Napoleon, was the autocrat so entirely all and in all. And never, at any period, did the soldiery with cruelty so deliberate, disciplined, and unfaltering, pour death and ruin on an innocent capitol. To the few insurgents no quarter was shown, and peaceful inhabitants were volleyed down to terrify the city into universal abjectness.

It is significant that the High Church Popish party, in the person of the Count de Montalembert, and by its Jesuit organ, the Univers, has given in its cordial adhesion to the usurper. Louis Napoleon, though a notorious profligate, is yet a good son of the Church, with a well established reputation as a devot. Of his dutifulness, he has already given evidence in maintaining the Pope at Rome. And Rome in return, the Pope at least, has the oppressed citizens of his Holiness shows due gratitude by approving the deed of Napoleon, and continuing him, so far as Popish influence can do it, in his ill-gotten power.

Meantime, what are the usurper's prospects! Foreign powers either support him, as the Austrian and despotic section, or leave him to himself, as Britain. His army have gained him the victory, but he is not his uncle, to wield that army himself, and the men in command seem to be mere soldiers; or if not, if one there should be of commanding general abilities, as well as a military hero, why should not he, ere long, unseat Napoleon from his power! True, the latter has the prestige of a name, and this has done much for him; but this cannot do all, nor serve him for ever. Napoleon has the army; but the history of the Pretorian guards at Rome of old may teach us that he who rules by these alone, is no less ruled by them, even, though he be a general, which Louis Napoleon is not. Then in civil matters, what has the President to depend upon? Literally not one man of name or character. What will a government he from which all such men as Guizot, Berryer, De'Tocqueville, Lion Faucher, DeBreglie, Odillen Barrot, are excluded? He has not even that clever and popular scamp Thiers with him. Yet if Louis Napoleon should ever be seated in power, he must have a government. Ministers, Ambassadors, Debaters.

It is true, that Napoleon's government at present is acquiesced in by Paris and the greater part of France, partly, because to resist is, this moment, hopeless, partly, because the commercial and industrious classes in France would be thankful for any government, even the purest despotism, which would guarantee them tranquillity and the conditions of industrial prosperity. But how suelt a usurpation as this can work on for any length of time with positively no materials for forming an administration, and with no class in its favor, except the army and the parti-pretre, it is very difficult to conceive. I should have referred to the fact that the judicial authorities of France, ever the brave guardians of law, have solemnly pronounced against Louis Napoleon.

As to the general temper of France, irrespective of late events, let me mention two things. I have lately been a good deal in the company of respectable French-men, and have had through various channels, means of ascertaining the actual condition of the country. The two things then are: first, that in the central and southern provinces, so great and settled is the apathy as to political matters among the middle classes, produced by repeated revolutions and continual national disasters, that multitudes of the electors never care, whatever be the condition or urgency of parties, to give a vote at an election; they look upon all such matters as a mere farce, and care not who governs the country, or how it is governed, so long as they are not disturbed, whilst they utterly despair of practical amendments of legislation and administration whoever rules: and second, that in the same provinces, all, except land-owners and capitalists, however intelligent or well disposed are more or less infected with the utopian and to a nation suicidal principles of communism. I have found even Protestants and Christian Ministers, eloquent and pious men, to be so. The poor demand everywhere, and, as they think, most reasonably, that the State should, when ordinary means of employment fail, guarantee them full work and good pay for their labor at the national cost. They would feel inexpressibly affronted, if anything like a poor law provision for them were proposed. They demand, further, that the State shall compel capitalists to pay wages, whatever be the various conditions of these capitalists themselves, according to a certain tariff: they must do this, even though they should lose by it. And, moreover, they expect employment to be found for them where they are. My French friends, when I intimated that the operatives, if unable to obtain work in one place, might perhaps, by seeking for it, be enabled to find it in another, seemed quite stunned at so English an idea being offered them. French peasants, it seems, have as much right to stay by their homes as their betters. They won't be forced to leave their native place; their pride and sentiment would be outraged in so doing; work must be found them where they are. So do they feel in the fair provinces of the South, where the Jacquerie revelt is said to have been recently prevailing.

Oh! from how many of these old-country difficulties are you people of the States delivered! Whilst you have still so much room unoccupied, and whilst all of you are so accustomed to be on the move, there is no fear of communism doing much harm among you. The United Testimonial Fund, which (it must be remembered) is a strictly private movement, advances rapidly. At present nearly £6000 have been, without any pressing or begging, or any public meeting besides the first in London, quietly subscribed week after week. Surely our lay-friends, who have led and managed this matter entirely alone, have a right to show their love at the same time, to Drs. Bunting and Newton, and to Methodism, by giving of their own, if they think fit. You remember the total amount raised is to be divided between two Wesleyan Funds, and a moderate annuity only paid out of it to the beneficiaries during their life. Your President's message is on the whole highly thought of in this country. Only he is no Free Trader.

X. Y.

THE GOSPEL ADAPTED TO MAN.—When Dr. Duff read to the intelligent Hindoo youth for the first time the precept of the Saviour, "I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you," one of them could not restrain himself from speaking out his feelings: "O how beautiful!" For days and weeks he could not cease repeating, "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you." How beautiful! Surely this must be the truth."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

An Evil that should be Remedied.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: There is an evil prevalent in our Church which, I think, should be adverted to in our papers until it is corrected, and as the Conference year is now about to close, there seems to be no more fit time to call the attention of the Church to it, both that of the ministry and membership.

It is generally conceded that our ministers are as poorly paid (when they receive the full allowance stipulated in the discipline) as those of any other denomination, and, yet, meager as is the support allowed them, many do not receive even that amount. Why is it? Are our people less able or less willing to pay their ministers than other denominations? I cannot believe this to be the cause. The error lies in this—our people do not properly comprehend their obligations.

Our Church originated in a missionary effort, when all contributions were purely voluntary; and it is still, to a great extent, a missionary enterprise designed to spread the Gospel over the earth, and especially to preach it to the poor. But in those parts of our land where it has grown up to strength and wealth and influence, it certainly never was the design of its founder, nor can it be the will of His Divine Head, that our people should be under no obligations to provide a comfortable support for the ministers who labor with them, nor indeed to provide a support for those who labor in more distant and less fruitful fields. Our poor and destitute circuits are still strictly missionary ground, and we should consider ourselves under obligations to aid them.

But I did not set out to urge our people on in their missionary efforts. I want to fix their attention on matters nearer home. "Our ministers should be men of one calling," is a maxim in our Church. To read, to study, to visit their flocks, to counsel and exhort them, to pray with and preach to them is their one great business, which should occupy all their time and talents. If we admit this, then have they a claim to a support, and a comfortable support, stronger than the legal enactments of men could give them. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." In the churches of most other denominations and in some of our churches in the North, the members and all regular attendants rent their pews. They pay an annual rent of from five to five hundred dollars. This pew rent is a legal claim recoverable in law; set apart for the support of the minister and to defray the current expenses of the Church. Do the members expect to be excused from paying their pew rents because they are in debt? or because they have large families of children to support and educate? Or do they hesitate to provide pews for themselves and families under such plans? Some may take lower priced pews, in less convenient or less comfortable locations in the church for these reasons, but do they expect to be exempt from paying their rents? Do the poor even expect to be exempt? Certainly they do not. Why, then, are our people so fertile in excuses? Does the fact that our seats are free to all, exonerate the regular attendants from contributing their proportion to the support of the minister, and defraying the ordinary expenses of the Church? The object, as I understand it, in having free seats with us, is that the poor and the stranger may come and worship with us without reluctance or embarrassment. It certainly never was intended that the regular members and attendants should feel themselves under less obligations to contribute their proportion to the support of the church and minister.

But the excuses offered generally for not contributing.—What are they? Expensive families, children to support, debts, poverty, etc. Let us examine them a moment. Does the Lord require us to serve him and worship him? Has He founded the Church, instituted the preaching of the Gospel, to aid us in doing so? Can we stand acquitted before the Judge of quick and dead, if we do not avail ourselves of this aid or means of grace? Will the plea of large families to support and educate, debts, or even poverty, be received in that great day to us for not having provided for ourselves and families this greatest of all God's blessings? But others provide this blessing and I partake. Others pay the preacher and I hear him. Can any man expect the blessing of God upon his devotions who enters His Holy temple in such circumstances? The great Head of the Church has placed the preaching of the Gospel within our reach, and it will be required of every man, who can, to secure it for himself and family.

I have been honored for several years by being appointed a steward, and for a week or two before the close of the Conference year a steward's duties are frequently exceedingly onerous. He has to call on the attendants, not only on the outsiders but on the members, and plead with them as if asking a great favor to get them to come up to this most obvious duty, the paying the preacher. He has to hear all their excuses and may try to do them away, but at last gets only their ill will and they keep all their money. He then has to call on the few liberal souls, who love their master and love his service, to increase their contributions. Blessed be the name of the Lord! there are some who can be relied on in all our circuits and stations, who come up willingly to his service,—who always honor his drafts.

But our ministers are not always faultless in this matter. Some of them seem to think with the people, that their support is a matter of favor, and that they are dependant on gratuities for living. The man who contributes to the support of the Gospel from a conscientious sense of duty, is not so well regarded as he who gives liberally to the preacher personally. The minister is flattered by these evidences of personal kindness, and special attentions are bestowed on those who show them. In some cases the minister shows by his conduct that he wishes and expects presents to be made him, and if they are withheld manifests idoll disappointment. This is a sad state of things. No minister can seek presents from the members without doing wrong. It lessens his character and influence, and greatly detracts from his sacred calling. He cannot rebuke sin as he ought to do. His particular friend may have some besetment, he may rarely or never attend class, rarely or never attend prayer meeting, may neglect family prayer etc., and the discipline of the Church is not enforced against him, consequently cannot be enforced against others. Thus the Church of God suffers.

All these evils grow from this one root, the want of a proper sense of their respective rights and obligations in ministers and people. I scarcely know which is most to be condemned, the minister who by his conduct seeks presents, or the man who will contribute nothing to the support of the Gospel.

In the diplomatic intercourse of our government with foreign nations, our ministers abroad are prohibited from receiving presents from foreign governments. Judges who receive presents from suitors are liable to impeachment. Jurors who receive presents from parties litigant are guilty of a high misdemeanor. So, also, of many other public functionaries. If sources of corruption in government, why not in the Church? Should ministers not be prohibited from receiving presents from members during the term of their labors among them? Or should they not return an account to the stewards of all presents received? May the Lord help us to act and think right in this matter!

Ala. Dec. 20, 1851. A. STEWARD

SORROW WORKING OUR GLORY.

The assertion of the Apostle Paul respecting the afflictions of the faithful, that they "work together for good to them that love God," [Rom. viii. 28,] is verified by constant experience. Besides the excellent fruit which the afflicted themselves received from them, sooner or later acknowledging, with the Psalmist, that it was good for them to have been afflicted, (Psalm cxix. 71,) they are also serviceable to the edification of others. For as roses, the fairest and sweetest of flowers, grew on a rough and thorny stock, so from the afflictions of the believer, rugged and piercing to the flesh, spring examples of their virtue and instances of their piety, the sweetest and most salutary of all productions. See what a rich store of benefits the trials of Job and of David have yielded us. To them we owe that admirable book of patience of the former, and a great part of the divine hymns of the latter. Had it not been for their afflictions, we should not now enjoy, after so many ages, those inestimable treasures of instruction and consolation.

What shall I say of the sufferings of St. Paul, which spread the gospel all abroad, and converted the world to the knowledge of the true God? His imprisonment at Rome alone, under the government of Nero, has done the Church more good than the peace and prosperity of all the rest of the faithful of that age. It gave reputation to the gospel, and made it gloriously enter into the stateliest court in the world. It inspired preachers of the truth with heroic courage. It awakened the curiosity of some and inflamed the love of others, and filled all that great city with the name and odor of Jesus Christ. Nor was it of use to the Romans only. It imparted its celestial fruit to the remotest regions and generations. For it was in this very confinement that this holy man wrote several of his divine Epistles, which we read with so much edification to this day; as those to Philemon, to Timothy, to the Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians. Paul's prison was a common reservoir, whence have issued those living springs which water and gladden the city of God, and will furnish it, even to the end of the world, with the streams it needs for its refreshment.

PROOF OF A DIVINE POWER.—We possess a genuine fragment which Cicero has preserved to us from a lost work of Aristotle. It runs thus: "If there were beings who lived in the depths of the earth, in dwellings adorned with statues and paintings, and if these beings could receive tidings of the power and might of the gods, and could then emerge from their hidden dwellings through the fissures of the earth, to the places which we inhabit; if they could suddenly behold the earth, and the sea, and the vault of heaven; could recognise the expanse of the cloudy firmament and the might of the winds of heaven, and admire the sun in its majesty, beauty, and radiant effulgence, and lastly, when night veiled the earth in darkness, they could behold the starry heavens, the changing moon and the stars rising and setting in the unvarying course ordained from eternity, they would surely exclaim, there are gods, and such great things must be the work of their hands."—[Herbolde's Cosmos.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN MADAGASCAR.—The Queen of Madagascar is bent on exterminating Christianity in her dominions, and has long mercilessly persecuted those who prefer the "new religion." In the last outburst of this protracted persecution, four persons were burnt alive; fourteen precipitated from a high rock and crushed to death; a hundred and seventeen persons condemned to work in chains as long as they live; twenty persons cruelly dogged with rods, besides 1,748 other persons mulcted in heavy penalties, reduced into slavery and compelled to buy themselves back, or deprived of their wives and families. Persons of rank have been degraded, and sent as forced laborers to carry stone for twelve months together to build houses; and in an endless variety of other ways have the maddened passions of one wicked woman been permitted now for years past to plunge a large, populous and beautiful country into misery and ruin.

A QUARRELSOME MAN.—Dr. Johnson, once speaking of a quarrelsome fellow, said, "If he had two ideas in his head, they would fall out with each other."

THE TONGUE.—"Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soul from troubles." [Proverbs 21:23.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 17.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MOBILE, Ala., Jan. 13, 1852.

MY DEAR PRO TEM.: I arrived here early on Saturday, and found the Alabama Conference in the midst of an interesting session. The mode of travel will hardly bear comparison with that of which you had on account on a previous occasion. The lake boats plying between New Orleans and Mobile are of the very best class for elegance and comfort. It is a luxury to travel on them. If you should ever take a berth on the "California," under her polite Captain Ensign, you will think as I do about it.

This Conference is one of the largest and strongest in the Connection, and I have some great good things about it to tell the readers of the Advocate, in another column. Among the oldest and most prominent of its members are Ebenezer Hearn, Greenbury Garrett, Elisha Callaway, Eugene LaVert, Wm. Murrah, Z. Dowling and Andrew Crawford. I could tell others whose names are cherished by the Church. The first of these came into South Alabama, as a missionary, in the spring of 1818. He was then pretty much alone. The next year five or six other itinerants joined him. The Indian trail was then followed from appointment to appointment where now the broad and beaten road leads along. These preachers made their returns, or reports of their labors, to the Tenaessee and South Carolina Conferences. In 1820 Father Hearn traveled as a missionary in the regions of Columbus and Cotton-Gin, in North Mississippi, and transferred to the Mississippi Conference, then spreading over the whole territory from Georgia to Texas, with about twenty preachers in it. For my own part, I have no greater pleasure than in honoring such men for their labors. It is doubtless due to their early and zealous occupancy of the country that Methodism holds in these scenes of their early toils so high a position, and exerts so wide an influence. They labored, and we of this generation are entered into their labors. And the first labors in such a field were hard and rugged, in an eminent sense. It is difficult for us to appreciate them. My first impulse in entering a Conference room, is to look around for the old men, the veterans of a day, a hard day that is gone by, and in my heart to say 'God bless them.'

And when I call to mind that these are the persons who, one by one, fall upon our superannuated list, and that the widows and orphans of others, their coevals in the work, who have "fallen on sleep," are with us and dependent upon the Church, I wonder that the Church does not more abundantly and cheerfully support them. This 30 per cent. and 40 per cent. and 60 per cent. paid upon the scanty allowance made such annuitants, is a shame unto us. But I must pass on from this subject, into which I have digressed—a subject I must confess that is gloomy enough to one who works without laying up any thing for the "rainy day," and who expects to live and wear out and die in the work. I trust that the collection usually called the CONFERENCE COLLECTION, by which these claimants upon the Church's charity are supported, will be well looked to hereafter in all our congregations. Let me direct attention to action of the Alabama Conference on this subject—similar action was taken by the Louisiana Conference a year ago.

Mobile is well supplied with churches and the churches well supplied with congregations. One can hardly realize it that such a church-going, Sabbath-keeping people are neighbors to New Orleans. The railroad has made things "look up," decidedly. Real estate has increased in value, I judge, far beyond the amount of any tax that may have been laid upon it for building the railroad: showing the equity of such a taxation for such a purpose.

Speaking of churches, reminds me of one I passed this evening, in a ride to Toulmanville, a small village just out of the city. It is a neat, lonesome, quiet chapel, which I shall call "Martha's Chapel," in honor of a zealous Christian lady living near, by whose efforts it was mainly built, and has ever since been sustained. It is a convenient blessing to the villagers, for a Sunday School is kept up, and there is preaching occasionally. There is one circumstance of strange and strong interest associated in my mind with this chapel; it is this: Here John Newland Maffit finished his extraordinary pulpit career. He whose fame filled this continent, and whom once listening multitudes flocked to hear, was gradually narrowed down in the sphere of his operations, until a village meeting house such as this, forty by twenty feet, afforded an ample theatre for acting out the final scene of a most eventful life. Here he preached his last sermon: here he had, under his preaching, what I have heard some call a little revival—the last of a series of religious meetings that have had marked influence in the history of the Church. A few souls professed conversion, and he I am told, though small the occasion in comparison with hundreds in which he had moved, bore himself through it like himself, to the last. Once the largest churches could not contain his audiences: seats and aisles were filled for an hour before the time for service, and the popular preacher entered the pulpit through windows, or over the heads of the throng. But here there was room enough: no rushing crowd blocked up the door, there was room enough. The world were gone away from him. His name summoned multitudes no longer. The charm was gone: the spell, somehow, was broken. He sunk under it, crushed. The heart that warmed and pulsated under so many noble strains of eloquence, and over which he was wont to press his hand with such oratorical effect, is now kept and exhibited here as curious thing in an apothecary's jar! Some negroes I am informed, went to look on it and one of them lifting up his hands exclaimed, "Well, I have heard before now that people could'nt die of broken heart; but this man had great troubles, and sure enough his heart broke."

It would be presumption in me to judge between Maffit and his accusers. God is judge himself. It is a case which cannot be fully summed up, till the day of eternity. But this I know, that all this man's ministerial work was not of the "wood, hay and stubble" order. Many are to be found in the Church this day, its pillars and ornaments, who were awakened and converted through his instrumentality, and many have gone before him to the grave with good hope. I have seen some of them, conversed with them and known their manner of life. Mysterious, eloquent, unfortunate man!

The Conference is proceeding thoroughly with its business, much of the time with closed doors. Bishop Andrew is accompanied by Mrs. Andrew. They will proceed together to the Florida Conference. Bishop Paine left yesterday, for his home in Aberdeen, after a period of anxious absence from his family. Both the Bishops appear to be in their usual health, and cheerful in the midst of their many and great labors. Several eminent visitors are in attendance.

The good citizens of Mobile, whom I have the happiness to know of old, are displaying their characteristic hospitality in entertaining prophets (I hope) in the name of prophets. May they have a prophet's reward, and all who do likewise.

H. N. MCTYEIRE.

THE TWO BANNERS.

Upon our mast are two banners, either of which a paper might rejoice to bear. We mean the Louisiana and Alabama Conferences. The former has heretofore been the BANNER Conference in the proportion of missionary contributions to the white membership: the latter now takes the BANNER position as to the aggregate contribution. No Conference, North or South, has ever yet come near this year's figure of Alabama. The great Ohio Conference, with its 350 traveling preachers, raised last year $15 000, the largest amount ever reached by a Northern Conference. The days of South Carolina's godly boasting are put an end to. At a stride, Alabama has overtaken and almost distanced her. Let us hear no more exultation and glorifying from her spirited organ at Charleston! Our friend the editor, we are informed, upon hearing the report of the treasurer at the Missionary Anniversary in Mobile, yielded up the banner with the best grace possible. We will receive it over this way, if he please, and bear it hereafter, until some other Conference shall nobly awake and demand it.

A new era has dawned upon the missionary treasury. The people are beginning to know their duty: the Church of Christ is beginning to feel her responsibility. They now begin to see what they can do; that they can do a part of their duty in giving of what God has given them, and still breathe and live on. Now, brethren, do as you did the abundant year that is gone by—take an early start. See to it, that these prophets of reaction turn out to be false prophets. The eyes of Methodism, of Protestantism, of Christendom, are upon you.

TEXAS CONFERENCE RESOLUTION.—The following resolution was reported to the late Texas Conference by a large and influential committee, and adopted by the Conference. We doubt not the matter can be satisfactorily arranged with our own Committees of Publication, and the brethren of East and West Texas.

Resolved, That we concur with the resolution of the E. Texas Conference, recommending that the Joint Publishing Committee [of the Banner] be instructed to ascertain whether the Banner and New Orleans Advocate can be merged into one paper, and be published at New Orleans.

MISSIONARY CERTIFICATES.—Dr. Sehon informs us that he has in hand in this city, deposited with John Bull, 56 Gravier street, five hundred certificates of life membership of the Missionary Society of the M. Episcopal Church, South. Those in need of them are advised to apply at once.

ERRATA.—Owing to our absence last week the proof sheets were not corrected with entire accuracy. The college about to be established at Minden, La., by the generosity of Mr. Drake, under the patronage of the Conference, was called by the types a French College, instead of a Female College. Dr. Henkle is said by the types to have spoken of a large outstanding debt to the New Orleans Ch. Advocate, instead of the Nashville and L. Ch. Advocate.

We ask particular attention to the Missionary Report, drawn up by Dr. Summers. It is an able and full argument on the whole subject.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Some of the members of the Conferences whose sessions have lately been held, may have changed their address without our knowledge. If they will notify us, the change shall be made in their address accordingly. Presiding Elders will please inform us of all preachers in their district not in regular receipt of the paper.

LETTER FROM DR. SEHON.

DEAR BRO MCTYEIRE: Through your paper I would report the gratifying intelligence of the increased zeal and liberality in favor of missions, in all the South and Southwest. The South Carolina Conference, as usual, has come up nobly to the work, and reports over eighteen thousand dollars. Georgia Conference has excelled herself, and reports fifteen thousand. But it has remained for Alabama to bear the palm in this glorious contest. The amount raised for missions, by this Conference, for the year past, is twenty-five thousand dollars. Truly may we say, Well done Alabama. We join in the hearty congratulations of our worthy editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, that these great accessions have been made at a time so apposite to the demands of our treasury.

The collections in the Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas Conferences will also show an increase above those of the year previous. We most sincerely hope that the aggregate in our next annual report may prove the point gained, at which we aimed in the commencement of the year.

Who does not rejoice at these indications, which go so clearly to prove that the God of missions is with us all, going to declare that with the increasing demands upon the Church increasing facilities are afforded us for carrying out the great designs of the missionary enterprise.

We confidently believe that the next year will witness still farther and increased effort in all the Conferences, and still increasing success in favor of missions. God grant such to be the fact. Our preachers, true to themselves, are every where going forth with an appeal to our people for the salvation of the world, and the response is being made in proportion to the demand and the great importance of the work.

THE GERMAN MISSIONS.

We were delighted to see the action of the Louisiana Conference in regard to this most important field of our missionary operations.

The great success which has crowned the labors of our brethren of the M. E. Church, North, should animate and encourage us to increasing efforts in behalf of this mission. As an individual, I look back with the deepest interest to the commencement of our missionary labors among the German population of our country. Small and feeble was the day, but God called to the work one every way qualified, and in the person of our beloved Nast, a faithful and successful pioneer was found to plant and foster this important mission. But a few years have passed, and lo! the scene, with hundreds and thousands in the membership of the Church, and with more than one hundred ministers in the field, the German work presents itself before us. In the Church, South, a wide field, in regard to German missions, opens before us for our occupancy and possession. Hence I rejoice at the resolutions of your Conference. I rejoice, and most sincerely hope that your own efforts, through the medium of your columns, and the untiring efforts of our beloved brother Keener, and the efficient and laborious German missionary in New Orleans, Bro. Hofer, may meet with prompt and full success.

The design to build a good and respectable church in New Orleans, for our German brethren, is a most noble one, and every way worthy the attention and confidence of our friends and brethren throughout the whole Southern Church. I am glad to see that the Alabama Conference so nobly responded to the call, in proffering a hearty welcome to Bro. Hofer to meet them in behalf of this important enterprise. This appeal should be indeed made to our whole Church, and all the friends of missions and of our country throughout the land. Here, in the great heart of this Western world, where so many from their Father-land are gathering to find a country and a home, it becomes the whole Protestant Church, every where, to unite in an effort to give them the Word of God and a suitable house for the worship of our common Heavenly Father.

The California mission is truly in the ascendant. The proposition of our worthy Br. Boring, and the appeal of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society, is every where being met and answered in the proper spirit. The missionaries from the Kentucky, Louisville and North Carolina Conferences—Bros. Bailey, Evans and Fulton—sailed on the 10th inst. May God give them a safe and prosperous voyage.

Two from Georgia, with an additional one for Panama, two from S. Carolina, two from Alabama and one from Mississippi, are now in the midst of active preparations, and expect soon to be ready to leave. We shall, under the blessing of heaven, be ready fully for the formation of the Pacific Conference by the return of the anniversary of the landing of our first missionaries in California.

I would respectfully call, through your paper, upon all the officers of our different Conference Missionary Societies, to forward immediately the reports, which are required by Discipline, to us at Louisville.

After spending a few days in this city, we expect to visit portions of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, on our return to Louisville.

E. W. SEHON,
Miss'y Secretary.

New Orleans, Jan. 16, 1852.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Mobile Orphan Asylum.

MR. EDITOR: In company with some two or three others, I called, a short time since, at the Orphan Asylum in Mobile, where we found near fifty merry and happy children. It may be appropriate to call the attention of Mobile Protestants to the fact that we found the institution without a library and the advantages of a Sabbath School. We also ascertained that the institution had not been visited by one of the Protestant ministers of the city in six months. We hope our Mobile brethren will look a little more intently to the interest of this important charge.

New Orleans, Jan. 16. C.

☞ We cordially welcome into the editorial corps our old friend, Rev. Geo. Rottenstein, now of the T. W. Banner.

The following lines, written on the envelope of an unpaid letter which passed through the Portland post office the other day, may serve as a hint to correspondents to pay their postage on the score of economy:

The Post so extra gain has made
Because your lett'r was'nt prepaid;
The same is true with this reply—
You're but two cents, and so here I

ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

This body met on the 7th inst. in the basement of the Franklin st. Church, Mobile. Bishop Andrew opened the Conference with religious exercises. Most of the preachers were present and in good health. The usual committees were appointed.

ADDITIONS TO TRAVELING CONNECTION.

James W. Towles, John H. Gibbs, George T. Ellis, John C. Ellerbee, Abijah Watson, Wm. E. Holliday, Wm. B. Tipton, Joseph J. Hutchinson, Daniel A. McCoy, John S. F. Freeman, Henry Urquhart and Geo. W. F. Price were admitted on trial. Leroy Massingale and L. W. Holston were re-admitted.

DISCONTINUANCES.

Humphrey S. Gilmore, J. K. Murray, Geo. W. Brown, J. W. Cottingham, T. W. Field, John Lockey and J. W. Baker.

ELECTED TO DEACON'S ORDERS.

The following were received into full connection and elected to deacon's orders. R. W. Spence, Wm. B. Adams, Benjamin S. Williams and T. W. Manning. Wm. M. Shockley was received, he being in deacon's orders; also, Wm. P. Miller, he being in elder's orders; also, L. P. Tholson, who being eligible was elected to elder's orders.

ELECTED TO ELDER'S ORDERS.

Otis Saxton, Charles S. Hurt, Elijah B. Lockhey, John C. Huckabee, Edward McMeans, A. M. Box, R. M. Saunders, S. O. Capers and Daniel Duncan.

LOCATIONS.

Thos. P. C. Shellman, George W. Carter and J. T. Talley.

SUPERANNUATED.

A. J. Crawford, W. R. Rounsevel, J. Boswell, Thos. Lynch, Wm. B. Barnett, T. H. P. Soules, N. P. Scales, S. F. Pilley and E. W. Story.

STATISTICS.

We shall not lay these fully before our readers this week. The secretary of Conference, Rev. T. W. Dorman, will present in a few weeks a complete statement of figures and facts, in "items" similar to those of much interest last year in the columns of the Advocate. We simply say, there has been a most gratifying increase in every department of the work, except in local preachers. The increase of members is over two thousand. The treasurer, Rev. T. J. Koger, will make a full report of the Missionary Collections. The largest amount of missionary money raised by any district in the Conference, was raised in the Montgomery district. Rev. O. R. Blue, P. Elder. $7,587. The next district is the Eufaula district, of which Rev. Samuel Armstrong is P. Elder. The highest circuits are the Tuskegee circuit, Rev. L. S. Hurt in Montgomery district and the Enon circuit, Rev. G. W. Carter, in Eufaula district, which raised each, the sum of $2020. The next highest is Dekalb circuit, Rev. A. M. Box, in Gainesville district, which raised $1475. The highest station is Auburn, Rev. C. D. Oliver in Montgomery district. $480 the next to this in amount, is Montgomery station, Rev. J. T. Heard, $471 50; and the next, Marion station, Rev. E. J. Hamill, $401. But we will not from our notes anticipate the more satisfactory reports of the secretary and treasurer. Enough to add, that over $25 000 were raised for missions the past year within the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

REPORT OF STEWARDS.

The joint Board of Finance struck a dividend to the claimants on the Conference funds at 55 per cent. It was a matter of universal regret that in this the quickened and enlarged liberality of the Church had not kept pace with the just demands upon it. The people will certainly give to this collection if it be brought before them. Perhaps some brethren overlooked it—neglected to take it up. In view of this the Conference passed the following stringent resolution, recommended by the Board:

Resolved, That hereafter it shall be the duty of the Presiding Elders to inquire of each preacher within his district, at the fourth quarterly meeting, whether he has taken up a Conference collection at each of the appointments; and if he has not done so, to inform him that his character will not pass the Conference without censure.

Resolved, That in every failure to take up said collection, it shall be the duty of the Chairman of the Joint Board of Finance to call upon such delinquents for their excuse in open Conference.

COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

"Your committee would suggest the necessity of greater diligence and system on the part of our preachers in collecting the numerous accounts due the several periodicals, and especially of making earnest efforts to collect long standing accounts, which are in danger of being entirely lost by neglect and delay, and of inducing the subscribers, in all practicable cases, to make payment in advance."

AS TO BOOKS.

"Your committee regret that so little has been done by the preachers of this Conference, during the past year, in the way of distributing our books, and believe the fact is attributable to the difficulty of obtaining books from the places where they are deposited, and therefore suggest the establishment of a Book Depository at New Orleans, or some contiguous port."

For our own part we here again, in behalf of many, express an earnest desire that this recommendation may be heeded and kindly attended to by those in authority.

"The Sunday School Visitor, "the best Sunday School paper in the world," as it has been pronounced by competent authority, has not met that encouragement which it deserves, and which is necessary to its ultimate and complete success. We exonerate its indefatigable, pious and very talented editor from any participation in the causes which have produced this result. Ours the sin, be ours the shame."

"The Southern Methodist Quarterly Review we regard as a valuable work in the high department of periodical literature, and entitled to the cordial support and patronage of our ministers and members."

"The Southern Ladies' Companion your committee can honestly recommend as fit to be put into the hands of our wives, daughters, and Christian ladies generally, and calculated to supersede, to the extent to which it is patronized, a class of light periodical literature dangerous to the morals of community, and we therefore recommend its more extensive circulation among our people."

SABBATH DAY.

Both the large Methodist Churches in the city were occupied during the day; also the Baptist and Second Presbyterian Churches. Bishop Andrew preached in Franklin street Church at 11 A. M., and ordained deacons. Bishop Paine preached at same hour in St. Francis street Church, and ordained elders. It was a day of much spiritual interest, and multitudes heard the word and received it with joy.

MISSIONARIES TO CALIFORNIA.

Bishop Paine called for two men to go. Conference appointed a committee, J. Hamilton, W. Murrah and A. H. Mitchell to nominate them.

The committee retired a few moments, and returned with the names of Dennis R. Leyne and Elijah B. Lockley. These nominations were unanimously confirmed by the Conference. The brethren were asked if they were willing to go, and they consented with appropriate remarks. The whole Conference then joined fervently in prayer, led by Bishop Paine, for blessings of heaven upon these brethren, and those they go to join. It was a solemn and affecting occasion. These missionaries are both single men, between 25 and 30 years old. Bro. Leyne was a convert from Popery, some years ago, under the ministry of Dr. Boring. They will probably sail in the course of a month.

MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

A meeting was held in each of the churches on Monday night. The weather was inclement, and this prevented a large attendance at both appointments. We felt a strong desire on this occasion, as on the day before, to be present at both places at the same time—but this could not be: so we heard Bishop Andrew and Dr. Sehon, at the St. Francis street Church, make out a plain and strong and moving case for those at home and abroad destitute of the Word of Life. Rev. William Wier had previously performed appropriate religious services, and the Rev. H. Finley presided. We did not learn the exact amount of money raised in each: the aggregate sum was about $600.

Conference adjourned on Wednesday evening. Next Conference meets at Marion.

Appointments.

MOBILE DISTRICT—E. Hearn, P. E.
Mobile, Franklin street..J. J. Hutchinson.
" St. Francis street..J. Hamilton.
" Wesley Chapel..To be supplied.
" Germa Mission..To be supplied.
West Ward..S. O. Capers.
Toulminville..Wm. K. Norton.
New Wakefield..Wm. Peavy.
Suggsville..H. S. Dickinson.
Monroeville..To be supplied.
Milton..J. B. Rabb.
Pensacola..T. P. Crymes.
Navy Yard..J. G. Rush.
Mt. Pleasant..S. C. Ellerbee.
Pascagoula..To be supplied.
Dog River, Miss...Z. Dowling.
Mobile City Miss...Wm. Milburn.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT—I. T. Heard, P. E.
Demopolis..T. H. Foster.
Arcola, Colored Miss...A. McBride.
Marengo Circuit..D. Duncan, J. C. Huckabee.
Magnolia, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Dayton..J. A. Heard.
Dayton, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Union Town Station..John D. Fisher.
Union Town Circuit..W. W. Thomas, John H. Gibbs.
Cahaba and Orrville..Wm. M. Lovelady.
Lower Peach Tree..Thomas Burpo.
Buckatoonie..Thomas Killough.
Butler..T. J. Campbell.
Gaston Circuit..Wm. E. Linfield.

GAINESVILLE DISTRICT—E. Callaway, P. E.
Gainesville Circuit..T. Moody.
Belmont..W. J. Powers
Livingston..J. E. Newman.
Lauderdale..T. Y. Armstrong.
De Kalb..J. A. Clemont..To be supplied.
Macon Circuit..J. W. Laney.
Macon Station..R. S. Finley.
Prairie Hill..L. Massingale.
Warsaw..J. W. Ellis, Jr.
Agent for Macon Institute..Wm. Wier.

TUSCALOOSA DISTRICT—T. J. Koger, P. E.
Tuscaloosa..O. R. Blue.
Big Sandy..J. M. Wells.
New Lexington..E. McMeans.
Brush Creek..Wm. Vaughan.
New Prospect..C. N. McLeod.
Prairie Creek..Col'd Miss...Robert Y. Rew.
New Berne and Oak Grove..G. L. Patton
Greensboro'..A. H. Powell.
Marion..P. P. Neely.
Jones Valley..Wm. E. Holliday.
Centerville..Jas. W. Holston.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT—Geo. Shaffer, P. E.
Columbus..T. W. Dorman.
Plymouth, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Columbus Circuit..D. McCutchen.
Buttahatchie..G. W. Tucker.
Athens..T. W. Manning.
Mt. Zion..M. M. Graham.
Pickensville and Carrollton..W. Murrah.
Carrollton..C. Strider.
Greene..R. W. Speuce.
Eutaw..V. L. Hopkins.
Forkland..B. S. Williams.
Pine Grove..E. V. LeVert.

BLOUNTSVILLE DISTRICT—L. B. McDonald, P. E.
Blountsville, To be supplied.
Walker Miss...To be supplied.
Pikeville Miss...John B. Waren.
Warrior Miss...Abijah Watson.
Ashville Circuit..To be supplied.
Lehanon..Jno. D. Worrell.
Sand Mountain Miss...Wm. Rhodes.
Harpersville..A. J. Coleman.

TALLADEGA DISTRICT—W. H. McDaniel, P. E.
Talladega..E. J. Hamill.
Wewokaville..To be supplied.
Coosa..H. J. Hunter, James W. Towles.
Tallapoosa..Wm. Monk.
Dadeville..R. R. Dickinson
Randolph..E. Philips.
Hillabee..L. S. Oslin.
Jacksonville..J. T. Curry.
Center..Jno. W. McCann.
Cedar Bluff..Geo. F. Ellis.

SUMMERFIELD DISTRICT—F. G. Ferguson, P. E.
Selma..James L. Cotton.
Summerfield..C. C. Calloway..One to be sup'd.
Antauga..L. M. Wilson, Jesse Ellis.
Maplesville..John Foust.
Prattville..John A. Speuce.
Wetumpka..Josiah Barker.
Greenville..Asa Skinner.
Cedar Creek..Jno. W. Ellis, Sr., W. B. Tipton.
Pleasant Hill..James W. Shores.
Camden..R. M. Saunders.

MONTGOMERY DISTRICT—G. Garrett, P. E.
Montgomery..C. D. Oliver.
Catoma, Col'd Miss...Wm. M. Shockley.
Montgomery Circuit..J. W. Brown, C. S. Hurt.
Union Circuit..John T. Roper.
Hayneville..H. Sterns, H. Urquhart.
Big Swamp, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Tuskegee Station..C. C. Gillespie.
Tuskegee Circuit..Wm. P. Miller, J. S. F. Freeman.
Auburn Station..Jacob S. Hughes.
Crawford Circuit..Wm. B. Neal, D. A. McCoy.
Uchee, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Lafayette..John W. Starr..One to be supplied.

EUFAULA DISTRICT—Samuel Armstrong, P. E.
Eufaula..John L. Saunders
Glennville..John Williamson.
Chattahoochee Miss...To be supplied.
Enon and Treadwill Miss...To be supplied.
Enon Circuit..Jos. F. Roper..One to be sup'd.
Chunnanuggee, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Clayton..D. Carmichael.
Jackson..Wm. B. Adams.
Columbia..Nathanial Skipper.
Marianna..George W. Price.
Uchee, Col'd Miss...To be supplied.
Troy..L. P. Golson.
Whitewater Miss...John W. Broxson.
Apalachicola Miss...Otis Saxton.
Geneva..Robert S. Rabb.
Pea River Miss...Joff. Bond.
T. G. Gilmore, transferred to La. Conference, and appointed to Trinity.
A. M. Box, transferred to Texas Conference, and appointed to Bastrop.
A. H. Mitchell, President Centenary Institute.
T. N. Ramsey, Prof. do. do.
T. O. Summers, general Book Editor, Charleston, South Carolina.
D. R. Leyne and E. B. Lockley, Missionaries to California.

Report on the N. O. Christian Advocate.

The publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in behalf of the Alabama Conference, made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The first year of the paper will be concluded in three numbers more, and the committee feel warranted in re-affirming the statement of last spring, that its publication can be regarded no longer as an experiment.

Every day proves more clearly the desirableness of a paper in the far South, identified with the local interest of Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, Arkansas, and Texas, etc. This want is, in the opinion of the committee, fully met in the Advocate at New Orleans.

The opportunity which has been presented to our Conference for the publication of a paper without any of the usual attendant risks, and offering to them a good profit when it shall have been fairly established, should, your committee think, be diligently improved by the Conference.

The conduct of the paper meets with the approval of the committee, and all with whom they have conversed. Its tone has been such as to command the respect of other denominations as well as our own.

The improvement of the paper in its typography, in the amount of its matter, and in the employment of special foreign correspondents at Paris and London, deserves special commendation.

Resolved, That each member of this Conference will use his best efforts to obtain and forward twenty new subscribers during the coming year: on the cash principle.

J. HAMILTON,
T. W. DORMAN,
W. MURRAH.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Rev. Z. Harmon.

The following preamble and resolution, in relation to the life and death of Rev. Z. Harmon, were passed in the Louisiana Conference, at its late session in Thibodaux, January 5, 1852, and ordered to be published in the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Rev. Zebulon Harmon was elected and ordained a deacon in the M. E. Church, South, as a local preacher in January, 1851.

He had then been laboring as a local preacher about eight years, in various places, always appearing to have but one object in view, "to do good."

He was zealous as a missionary to the people of color, active and useful in Sunday Schools, a voluntary distributor of tracts, papers and books. He was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost.

His labors among the poor in New Orleans, in the hospitals and prisons, and in the penitentiary at Baton Rouge, will only be appreciated and rewarded when our blessed Master shall call all his laborers to bring their sheaves before him.

Bro. Harmon accepted the invitation to take charge as a missionary of the plantations of Wm. St. John Elliot, Esq., the last summer, where, amid strangers, he breathed his last, and was buried, unattended by his friends. He had one with him, Jesus, the friend of sinners.

Bro. Harmon was 68 years of age when he died, and never asked for admission as a traveling preacher: he only requested such work as no one else had done, or would ask to do.

As an affectionate remembrance of his services,

Resolved, That this be published as a tribute to his memory.

Report of Committee of Alabama Conference on Education.

The committee to whom was referred the subject of education, report as follows:

We are happy in being able to say to the Conference, that all our institutions are in a healthful condition, and evince a growing prosperity.

THE CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

According to the annual exhibit of the Board of Trustees, continues to hold its way in winning public confidence, and in doing good. It has a Faculty, which for profound scholarship, a happy manner of imparting instruction to the young, an exemplary and refined social deportment for the imitation of those committed to their guardianship, is second to none in the South. The grade of scholarship and general deportment of the pupils have been of the most creditable kind, during the past year, manifestive of an improvement encouraging both to teachers and patrons.

This Institution has, for several years, had to contend with the most formidable competition. Within twenty miles of it there are schools of high pretension, numbering one thousand or more scholars, while the smallness of the village in which it is situated has made it mainly dependent on foreign patronage for life. This difficulty is being removed by the rapid increase of population, so that there is now a brighter prospect for numbers than at any former period of its history.

We think it deserving the largest patronage, at home and from abroad, and most confidently commend it to the attention of all who are interested in the subject of education.

For her younger sister,

THE MACON FEMALE INSTITUTE,

Your committee feel a very deep solicitude, owing first to its intrinsic merits, and next to the fact that it has not as yet received that attention from the members of this Conference, and that support from the public, which we regard it as so greatly entitled to. Some of us were in attendance at its last Annual Commencement, and were both mortified and delighted: mortified, that so few of the trustees appointed by this body, to hold its rights in custody, were in attendance: delighted at the increased number of pupils and the extraordinarily thorough and satisfactory examination sustained by the ladies. An examination more complete to pupils and teachers we never witnessed.

The Board of Trustees have taken care of the entire fiscal department of this institution, and at it very considerable cost, have employed the most competent teachers, repaired the building, purchased musical instruments and made sundry repairs: all which has involved them to the amount of almost $5000, which creates a necessity for an agent, in the estimation of the Board of Trustees.

We rejoice at being able to say that Macon Female Institute is in the annual receipt of numbering more pupils, sharing more of public confidence, having a more efficient and thorough Faculty, and possessing more and musical instruments to a greater extent than at any previous period of its history, and most earnestly do we press its claims on the Conference, as worthy of an increased exertion on their part in its behalf, deserving a much larger patronage than it as yet been given.

In view, also, of its indebtedness, we recommend that the Bishop appoint an agent for

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

We rejoice that this institution is rapidly rising in a condition of increasing prosperity. This increase, as to pupils, has been very considerable, during the present term, and their application and deportment, have been of the most commendable character. The indebtedness of about $5000, still hangs on the institution, which, were it paid, would contribute no little to its healthful prosperity. The trustees have reported to us a need for repairs on the college building, which could be done at a cost of about $1000. We are deeply impressed with the importance, in relation, our Conference holds, to La Grange College as well as its educational position in the Southern Church; and would, if we were we prepared at this time, to recommend some efficient means, by which it could be entirely relieved of embarrassment. We do not however, that we can do more now than recommend it to all our people, as one of the best institutions, both as to its climate and the competency of its faculty, to which they could send their sons. As solicitations have been urged, on the ground of inaccessibleness to those living in Texas, we beg leave to say, that if access can be had, from all parts of South Alabama, to Columbus, Mississippi, there is a direct route from that place to Tuscumbia, ten miles from the college: and access from Memphis and Charleston railroad will be completed, as it will be in a few years, it will be an easy matter to reach La Grange from all points of the compass. We would also respectfully call the attention of our brethren who are to represent the interests of the college to the point just alluded to: and earnestly invoke a renewed zeal in behalf of this time honored nursery of learning.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.

This youngest daughter, of our colored family comes to us, in the annual report of her Board of Trustees, with health and prosperity, and above all a firmer devotion to sanctified education, bearing from her brow. Additions have been made to the college buildings, connected with the musical department, which have consumed the already subscribed. The trustees need more help, in the way of an agent to travel for the purpose of enlarging the philosophical and philosophical apparatus, which we recommend to be granted, if the funds and cabinet are of opinion that can be spared from the regular pastoral work.

We can commend the institution, as one worthy of science to the confidence of the public, and take this opportunity of asking for it a liberal share of their patronage.

Your committee recommend the appointment of visiting committees, to attend the examination of these schools, under our control, all which is respectfully solicited.

P. P. NEELY,
C. C. GILLESPIE,
V. L. HOPKINS,
R. S. FINLEY,
A. H. POWELL.

NEW YORK AS IT IS.—A New York correspondent of the National Intelligencer, after description of matters and things in New York and speaking particularly of a religious conference then in session, says:

It was in this interval that a Minister filled his pulpit, selected the most sublime description of the Judgement, and prepared the Judge of all the earth, with nations gathered at his feet, to the eye of an inferior European State and address three thousand people at Castle Garden.

We rejoice to perceive that the Ministers of all denominations in New York wisely abstained from mingling in this abolition. It is to the conservative spirit such men that we look confidently for emergencies. New York especially needs the healthful antidote which is found in the letter and admonitions of such men. The afflicted almost every year with pestilential convulsions which seem to demand lime or chloride of lime. They are blasting the Hellgate to plate the dangerous rocks there; but what power can remove the vortex of the it vortex which so often tosses and entraps, and threatens to subvert all order in the city itself? Further north and east people are not so often nor so easily thrown into extravagances. The reason perhaps is that prodigies appear first to our great emporium, and other cities have time to prepare. Or perhaps it is owing to the peculiar genius of the multitude assembled in that city. Or, in short, the fact is so. Each year becomes, for a while, a scene of social fermentation and fury, a sort of social Hell, a huge boiler stirred by some wizard or witch, &c. when it is all—

"Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble."

It is just a year since the good people of Gotham were kissing Miss Lind, and vowing (while all Europe laughed through press and pulpit that she was a humbug. Now the fires of Peter the Hermit are out, and we are to despise the counsels of Washington, of patriotism, of common sense, of prudence in rest for a while against all princes, emperors, and nations who will not disarm. A year hence this frenzy will be passed away, but the cauldron will still boil. Some new fuel will be applied, and new bubbles arise. Still it will be—

"Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble."

DEATH OF A DEAN.—The Rev. S. G. Brown, Greensboro', an eminent Minister of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died recently in Salisbury on the 11th ult., while on his way to attend the session of Conference.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE IN ENGLAND.—The Message has been published in England and the London journals comment on it in a very friendly manner. They think it a fair State document, but the free trade views do not much like its arguments on protection.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Died:

On Friday evening, January 17, at half past 7 o'clock, Josiah BALDWIN, aged 67.

General Intelligence.

The Loss of the George Washington.

By the arrival of the steamer J. S. Pendleton, arrived last night, we have received the following particulars of the explosion and burning of the George Washington. It is a singular fact that the explosion of the George Washington and the burning of the Martha Washington occurred within an hour of each other.

The steamer George Washington, Capt. James Irwin, from Cincinnati, with two barges in tow, having between East and 1800 tons of freight, exploded her boilers on Wednesday morning, at half past 12 o'clock, a short distance above Grand Gulf; immediately took fire, destroying the books and papers of the boat and entire cargo of hemp and two barges, also instantly killing Wm. Caswell the clerk, Wm Patterson carpenter; Phillip Simpson cook, five deck hands twelve firemen, seven deck passengers, two cabin passengers, from Shawneetown; some do from Queenspore, and severely scalding Capt Irwin, Wm Pearce, second clerk, Thomas Trabue, steamd engineer; Hole of Carroll, third do. The above last have since died on board the Richmarth, Daniel Clements, chief engineer dangerously scalded; Martin Burns, second mate, badly bruised and injured; Wm. Moore, watchman, leg broken; Jas. H. Mathews, pilot hand, severely scalded and Wheeler, second cook, slightly scalded. Capt. Irwin is in a fair way of recovering. The Pendleton came down at half past 7 o'clock and took on board the surviving officers, crew and passengers. The wounded were placed in charge of three physicians, who kindly gave them their attention during the trip.

Loss of the Martha Washington.—Memphis, Jan. 15 The steamer Martha Washington, bound for New Orleans, was burned at Island 82, yesterday morning, at half past 4 o'clock. A man, his wife and two children in the ladies cabin, a man in the gentlemen's cabin, and one on deck were all burned to death.

The officers and crew were saved. The survivors were taken up by the James Millinger and Charles Hammond, the former bound up and the latter down the river. From a the time the boat caught, only a few minutes elapsed before she was entirely in flames and in full roll. The boat and barges, as well as books and papers are a total loss. The steamers Belle Key and James Millinger have passed up the running shore last night.

Deaf and Dumb Asylum.—We have received the fifth annual report of the Board of Directors of the Male Orphan Asylum in Lafayette. The report contains a brief history of this excellent institution, which was founded by an association of benevolent citizens in 1824, and an account of the operations of the Board during the past year. The results of this whole charity have thus far been a source of just pride to our citizens and we trust that the liberality of those gentlemen will never allow the benevolent work of the Directors to become circumscribed. We make the following extracts from the report before us:

The Directors have the happiness to know, that there have been inmates from this Asylum who have reached the most honorable positions in society. We have one a respectable Minister of the Gospel; Two have become distinguished navigators—one being the Commander of one of the largest packets between this city and France; the other a younger, but bids equally fair to become an ornament in the profession and soon the second officer of a fine vessel. Another is a lawyer and lately, by the confidence of his fellow citizens, has been elected, by a very flattering vote, a member of the State Legislature, and has the happiness to be one of the present Directors of this Board. Others are respectable merchant's clerks; and many adorning, by their industry and sobriety, a variety of the mechanical trades in our city; while others have been placed in honored farms in the West, and from whom we have agreeable accounts."

There have been 57 admissions during the past year, and 29 orphans now remain in the Asylum.

The receipts from all sources, during the year, have been $12,152 21, and the disbursements $11,783 64.

Grand German Demonstration—Dr. Kinkel's Plan.

An immense mass meeting was held last evening, at Banks' Arcade, the hall of that building being densely crowded by the friends of Germany and Liberty. There was probably an equal number of native and adopted citizens, the latter being mostly Germans.

The meeting was called to order by Mr J. d. Liguindalli who nominated the following officers:

President—C. Roselius.

Vice Presidents—Genl. A. P. Plauche, A. D. Crossman, Joseph Genella, J. H. Caldwell, P. Seuzeneau, Alex. Barbes, Bernard Marigny, and upwards of forty others.

Secretaries—Jos. Walker and Tourquiest Louis Watts. Paul E. Theard and Daniel Scully.

Upon taking the chair, Mr. Roselius made a few eloquent remarks, heralding the part that he had already taken in this movement, and expressing the pleasure that he felt in the opportunity of presenting to the meeting such an eloquent advocate of freedom as Doctor Kinkel. He then introduced the learned and able professor and took his seat amid great applause.

Doctor Kinkel came forward, and began his address with the expression of his gratification at finding such a multitude of the citizens of New Orleans and of Lafayette gathered to hear him on this occasion. He was especially glad to see so many native citizens, who had evidently been attracted thither by a love of the cause which it was his glory to advocate. The greatly regretted not having studied better purpose the English language but, however imperfect his knowledge of it might be, he could not forbear its employment for a few moments, before he should proceed with the address to his country men in his own language.

He had found that a calumny was spread out against him and his cause through the country, but who the enemies were that had done it he could not tell. His name had been connected with the reports of some demonstrations and resolutions—unfairly and unjustly connected—and he disavowed them most explicitly. Representing the views and the principles that he did, it could never be the determination or his wish to interfere with the internal politics of this country. America had always shown how fully she possesses the power to settle all such affairs for herself and she wants, and she would tolerate no such interference from any quarter.

But external politics were a very different matter. That was a topic upon which he might very properly engage. It was a great topic

We see the Kings of Europe ever ready to help each other when republicanism presents a threatening front, or whenever the cry of freedom makes one or the other of the tyrants tremble on his throne; and it is natural that they should do so. It is equally natural and it is more, over and a matter of duty to say nothing of safety, that a Republican Government should interfere in the affairs of liberty wherever it may present itself. Republicanism should ever be protected by republics against monarchism, and freedom against tyranny. This he considers to be the true doctrine of non-intervention.

The time will soon come in Europe when Americans must come to a pass. The decision as to the policy that they will adopt. A great struggle is about to take place, involving interests too immense for calculation, and which will involve all nations. No one nation can be a quiet spectator of the scene. And now is the time to prepare for this struggle, and, said the speaker, "I am here for this purpose."

The time has been, he continued he, and it has not been long since that you were engaged in a similar struggle. A struggle doubtful in its results, for a long time. You needed help, and you found it from Lafayette, from Kosciusko, and—I will not forget my own country man—from Baron Steuben, who gratify formed, and mainly instructed your young armies. To this struggle, also, you had aid from a Government—you had aid from France, and of the most effective kind—money. It was the nine millions of dollars sent to you from France that enabled you to prosecute the war that led to the glorious result of the establishment of your liberties.

I will now ask one question. Has ever forgotten that struggle? Have you forgotten the sun forget your rights? Will you forget from a friendly power, and would you [illegible] from history, in the approaching struggle in Europe, Republicanism against tyranny?"

The Professor was frequently interrupted by the enthusiastic applause of his immense audience, during his address. His language was good, though not elevated, and his manner and gestures quite pleasing.

He retired but a moment at the close of his English address, when he launched into the mysteries of the German tongue.

Vital Statistics.—During the year 1851, there were 2,707 marriages therein granted in Boston, an increase of one from 1850. The number of deaths during the year was 6,710, and during the previous years 3367

Geneva College (N. Y.) has been made free—there being no charge made to students for either tuition or room rent. This is the first case of the kind we believe, in the world. The endowment by the State was sufficient to pay the Professors, and the incidental expenses of the institution.

Mayor Jackson.—William H. Taylor, Esq., has been elected Mayor of Jackson, Miss.

Death of a Veteran.—Rev. J. Bennett, of the M. E. Church, aged nearly eighty-five years, died at Wilmington, N. C., recently. When a lad he followed the sea, and was engaged in two or three engagements during the war of the revolution. Hannah of Baltimore, during the revolutionary war. During the war of 1812 he acted as Chaplain of the troops at Smithville, N. C., and when twenty years of age joined the M. E. Church.

A Singular Fact Here Exists.—We see it stated in some foreign papers, that a ship glass has been exhibited in London of no greater diameter than a walnut, yet so powerful that the lieutenants of a person's face can be easily seen at the distance of a mile and a half. It weighs only one and a half ounces, and can easily be carried in the pocket of a gentleman's vest. We hope some of our ingenious will get to work and construct like telescopes so that we may have the pleasure of carrying such a handy instrument continually about our person.

Louisiana Interior.

Loss of the Steamer Rogers.—The Southern Advocate of the 8th says: The steamer Rogers, in ascending the Manchac, on the 31st ult., when near Champagnolle, struck a snag and immediately sank. She had on board considerable freight, which, with the boat, was a total loss. The boat, we understand, was insured for $6,500. Though she went down quickly, the crew and passengers saved themselves by clinging to the bushes.

Selling Liquor to Slaves.—The North Louisianian published at Bastrop, contains an article on the pernicious effects of selling liquor to slaves, which it says has been carried to a great extent in that section of the State, in defiance of the laws. It draws nearly all the evidence committed by negroes to the whisky bottle.

Appointment.—We learn from the Ouachita Register of the 30th ult. that the Hon. John G. A. Sharp has been appointed Judge of the 12th Judicial District, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. George W. Copley.

New Road.—The Thibodaux Minerva says that a subscription is now on foot in that town for constructing a road from Thibodaux to Tigerville, on Bayou Black, in the parish of Terrebonne. The distance is fifteen miles, and the estimated cost is $4,000.

Ben Bruce.—The Red River Republican of the 9th inst. says: "Since our last the river has continued to fall steadily, and there is again a riffle on the falls—boats of any size cannot safely pass them. This deplorable state of things for the steamers above will we fear continue until we have some heavy rains."

We understand that the Osceola struck a snag and sunk near Pample a few days since, but that she was subsequently raised, with but slight damage to herself or cargo. The Jefferson, with a heavy freight passed on Saturday and was obliged to discharge a portion of her cargo to get along. The river above not having risen as much as was expected. The P. Balman made her first appearance here on Saturday last, and again on yesterday. She was hailed with delight by our citizens, who expressed the highest satisfaction at her model and finish throughout. A more comfortable boat to travel on, especially for ladies and families, we never saw in Red River, or any where else. The J. E. Kimball will be up on Monday, when she will receive the same attendance as he whose name she bears was wont to receive in days of old. After this she will make weekly trips to Grand Ecore in connection with the P. Balman, as soon as the water will permit."

Town Elections.—Messrs. H. Robertson, M. R. Arnold, C. Marsh, S. A. Smith and J. Ringgold have been elected trustees of Alexandria.

The Weather.—The Minden Herald of the 1st says: "The weather, during last and the first part of the present week has been warm and calm. Tuesday night it changed a way, and we now have cool, pleasant day with heavy frost in all night."

Masonic.—The Masons of Minden intend out strong on the anniversary of St. John the Evangelist. An address will be delivered, by Bro. James K. Dodds.

Public Road.—The Minden Herald states that the houses of several ladies residing in that village have been stoned on several occasions of late. The perpetrators of these outrages are denominated in strong terms.

Heavy Wind.—The Herald says: "We understand that in the northern portion of this parish some damage has been done by heavy wind during the recent rains. Whole forests of cypress in low, fences blown down, and in one or two instances, houses were upset and their contents carried away."

The Mormons.—It is stated that about one hundred Mormons will leave St. Louis early in the spring, for the Salt Lake country.

An appropriation of $25,000 has been made by the Tennessee Legislature for the completion of the new State House.

The Defaulting Teller.—The Richmond Dispatch of the 6th instant, contains some further particulars in relation to the absconding of Samuel W. Morgan formerly Teller of the Exchange Bank of Virginia at Petersburg. The deficit of $26,000 was discovered the day before Morgan left. He was an expert officer and has long enjoyed the full confidence of the institution.

This defalcation will fix upon the Teller a problem of having occasioned a deficiency of $15,000 in the accounts of the Cashier of the Bank, a few years since. The Cashier Mr. Durkin, was sick, and it was necessary to open the vaults of the Bank. The keys were sent for and the money necessary, taken out. When Mr D returned to his duties, he discovered a deficit of $15,000 which never could be accounted for. He was afterwards removed from office and suit commenced against his securities for the amount. It is thought that this matter will now be cleared up, and the memory of Mr. Durkin, the bright deeds relieved from the stain which in the minds of some, have rested on it.

Railroad Meeting.—The citizens of Talladega recently held a meeting to adopt measures for building a railroad from that place to somepoint on the Mississippi river. $22,000 was subscribed

Kerosene.—A gentleman in Williamsport, Md. recently made use of kerosene to cure the tooth ache. After putting it in the tooth, he rubbed some on his gums. The muscles of this face soon after began to contract and he is now disfigured for life.

A Model Despatch.—The steamer Africa reached New York a little past 11 o'clock, A. M. and early in the afternoon, the Boston Transcript published nearly three columns of her news, sent by Telegraph.

A number of gentlemen at Charleston have formed an association for carrying on an extensive wholesale and retail dry goods business. They intend to import more largely than has ever yet been attempted in the South.

Passed Midshipmen.—A petition from this grade of the naval service has been presented to Congress, asking for certain changes in the laws regulating the different grades, promotion, etc., which, in the opinion of many familiar with the subject, is but a reasonable request. Previous to the year 1819, promotions to the rank of Lieutenant were made indiscriminately from the merchant marine and from the class of midshipmen, and it was found that inefficient officers were often produced by this system. Out of necessity, a grade of the service denominated "Passed Midshipmen" has arisen. It is contended by this grade that the proper distinction of rank is confounded, and that officers pronounced on examination, competent to the rank of Lieutenant, are often kept in the service as inferior officers for seven, eight and ten years. It is contended that the duties of a Passed Midshipman are unlefined—that he is sometimes required to act in the capacity of a Lieutenant, and at other times, as an ordinary Midshipman, may if he chooses employ in the higher grade of service, those who have no just claim to such a distinction, over those who are of equal rank, longer service and more experience. It is contended that the law ought clearly, to define this matter, and leave nothing to the preference of the Captain, who may or may not be guided by naval merit, in his temporary promotions. The object of the petition is to have a law passed, commissioning Passed Midshipmen, under such designation as may be deemed proper, and give them such an increase of pay as may enable them to make a proper appearance as ward-room officers.

Department of State, Louisiana, December 1, 1851

To the Governor and State Authorities of the State of Alabama, and the Authorities of Mobile, and also of the States of Mississippi and Texas:

Gentlemen:—Dr. A. G. Plough visits your State and city with the view of seeking your co-operation in an effort to establish a Great Southern-Western Agricultural and Mechanical Exhibition and Fair of all Human Industry, upon a large and Magnificent Scale. To take place in the beginning of May, 1853, in the city of New Orleans, and to be followed, by annual Fairs in the cities of Mobile and Chicago, or such other points as may favor such an enterprise.

Resolved, That the Governor of this State be requested to appoint a delegation, consisting of sixty gentlemen chosen from different parts of Alabama, to represent the State in the "Industrial Convention," to be held in New Orleans in April next.

Resolved, That the Chairman of this meeting be requested to appoint three gentlemen in each Senatorial District of the State, who shall hold their meetings in Mobile on a day whose duty it shall be to report upon the best means through out the State interested in the success of industrial fairs, with the view of preparing for a full participation by the citizens of Alabama at the proposed Union at New Orleans, and elsewhere.

The Rev. Dr. Lapsley was then called and addressed the meeting, and the proceedings in relation thereto, followed by addresses from Messrs. Plough, Hall and other gentlemen, to advance the interests of the contemplated meeting.

Hon. Mr. Hall, of Limestone, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the meeth has listened, with great pleasure to the remarks of the Rev. Dr. Lapsley, and that he be requested to furnish a written copy for publication Adopted. The meeting then adjourned.

J. B. Glassey, Secretary. Peter Williams, Chairman.

Fellow citizens—My appeal is made to the whole South in the progress of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts—more is an important one—it is to bring out the industry and the genius of the entire South—west.

This subject is interesting to people in almost every department of life. We call on the people to look to and prepare for the New Orleans Exhibition, and an important era will be dated in the South.

Yours, A. J. Pickens.

Montgomery, Jan. 6, 1852.

Indian Interview.—The final interview of the Prairie Indians in Washington, with the President, took place on the 6th. After first waiting upon Col. Lea, Indian Commissioner, the Indians left the Bureau for the President's House, where, after waiting a short time in the East room, they were conducted into the circular reception room, a considerable party of ladies and gentlemen being gathered to witness the interview. Amongst them we noticed Mrs. Fillmore, Madame Kossuth, who sat at Mrs. Fillmore's side, and the Countess Pulzsky; Mr. Secretary Stuart, Postmaster General Hall, Attorney General Crittenden, and W. W. Corcoran, Esq.

Col D. D. Mitchell, of St. Louis, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, was present, and assisted in the business of the interview.

Mr. Secretary Lea apprised the President of the object of the Indians' call upon him. They were soon going home, and had called to pay their parting respects to him; and to the Indians he intimated that, had they any thing to say, the President would no doubt listen attentively to them.

After the introductions and speeches by the Indians, the President presented each of them with a valuable medal, bearing his likeness. The medals were placed on the neck of each of the Chiefs by Major Fitzpatrick. The President then pointed them to the American flag which was held up before them. "Addressing them, he said: "I shall present each of you a flag like this. When you raise it at your homes you must remember that you are one with us; that you are part of the same people, for one people have only one flag. This flag is only for the American people and their friends. If you ever listen to wicked advisers who would turn you against us, and you become our enemies, you must destroy this flag. Remember this. And now, my red children, I have done speaking to you. I have said all I wished to say. May the Great Spirit bless you all; and may you and your families and your people happy, and glad to see you on your return."

The President admonished them that though the medals were for each as an individual, the flags were given to each tribe or band. He had given them because of the confidence he reposed in them, and in their friendship and faithfulness to the people of the United States. "If you want any thing else, make known your wants to your friend Commissioner Lea, and he will take care to supply you with whatever is necessary."

A general shaking of hands then took place, during which Madame Kossuth and Countess Pulzsky showed particular interest in the squaws present, much to the satisfaction of the latter.

After the return of the Indians from the White House we had an opportunity of ascertaining the result of the day's proceedings on their minds. They were highly delighted, and represented the great relief they experienced in the lifting off of a weight that had been heretofore pressing heavily on their spirits. They said that as soon as they saw the President they knew he was a good man, and the knowledge of this completely relieved their anxiety.

We have reason to think that the remarks of the President on this interesting occasion will be of great service to the cause of peace on the Western Plains; they were conceived in the right spirit, and, in the judgment of the veteran agent in charge, must produce every way happy effects.

It is thought that the Delegation will leave Washington this week for their respective homes.

Later from Texas.

The Mails.—The Texas papers are filled with complaints against negligent and incompetent mail carriers and Postmasters. The Galveston News estimates the loss of newspaper proprietors in the State from these causes, at $25,000 per annum.

From the Capital.—The Journal of the above date says: "We have just received from our correspondent at Austin that the bill to be entitled an Act providing for the liquidation and payment of the debt of the late Republic of Texas," has passed the Senate by a vote of 22 to 1 and is on its third reading in the House.

Twenty-Second Congress—First Session.

Washington, January 6, 1852.

Senate.—At an early hour, the various passages and lobbies of the Capitol leading to the Senate chamber were occupied and crowded. At eleven o'clock the doors were opened and the galleries were soon filled.

At 12 o'clock the Senate was called to order, and the vast crowd were comparatively quiet during the prayer.

A large number of petitions were presented and several appeals on private claims were read.

On motion of Mr. Mangum the rules were suspended so as to admit ladies in the floor of the Senate; and accordingly Mr. Davis entered with Madame Kossuth, followed by Pulszky, and several ladies. Every available standing place in the Senate was at once occupied by ladies.

Several Senators gave notice of bills. Amongst them Mr. Rusk gave notice of a joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for ships to be built to be placed on the Potomac.

The following bills were then in order, considered and ordered to be engrossed: An act for the relief of the heirs of Judith Worthen; an act for the relief of Sidney A. Norris; an act granting a pension to Sally J. Floyd; an act authorizing Victor Maire to exchange certain land reserved by him.

A bill to revive the act of 1840 granting pension to widows of deceased soldiers of the war of 1812, in pursuance of the claims of their Revolutionary husbands, was then taken up, and after debate the bill was laid on the table.

The Senate then, on motion, took up the bill for the relief of William Darby and other same remark by Mr Bradbury in favor. It was laid on the table till after the reception of Kossuth.

A message was received from the House announcing that a quorum of the Committee of Ways and Means had not been present at the meeting held this morning, and that the House had therefore adjourned over to Monday next.

Mr. Mangum said that in order that all might have an opportunity of responding to the call of the roll, he moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. Bradbury said that in order that all might have an opportunity of responding to the call of the roll, he moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

At 1 o'clock Mr. Kossuth entered the Senate chamber, accompanied by Mr. Clay, and the latter conducted him to a seat on the left of the Secretary's desk.

Mr. Mangum said that in order that all might have an opportunity of responding to the call of the roll, he moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. Bradbury said that in order that all might have an opportunity of responding to the call of the roll, he moved that the Senate do now adjourn

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Dr. Kane's Lectures.

The second course of lectures at the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, was commenced by Dr. Kane, U. S. Navy, on the 20th ult., and consisted of three lectures. The subject was the Grinnell expedition to the Arctic seas in search of Sir John Franklin, and embraced the discoveries of the season, and explanations of the natural phenomena of that region.

The second lecture was exceedingly interesting, and we give the following synopsis of it, which we find in the National Intelligencer:

The lecture opened with an explanatory reference to the geography of the Arctic regions, illustrated with well prepared diagrams. One of these was so arranged as to exhibit the views of Sir John Franklin, and upon it were drawn the lines of research of the American expedition.

The two commanders, Penny and his followers, agree that this region is a vast archipelago, whose main approach is by a large Sound, called Lancaster Sound, whose most prominent passage to the North is by a large estuary or inlet, named after the Duke of Wellington. This Inlet has been frequently observed free from ice.

Franklin was ordered by the British Admiralty to proceed through Lancaster Sound for some three hundred and fifty miles, to a Cape called Walker; thence he was to steer to the southward and westward, towards Behring's Straits. Failing to accomplish this, he was ordered to attempt a passage to the north by Wellington channel. Dr. Kane, by a series of precise arguments, which seem to me almost conclusive, shows that this was the passage which he adopted, and we see, although a few of the English officers differ with him in opinion, that the recent publications of the British press fully sustain this view. The position of Sir John Franklin's first winter quarters, at the very mouth of the channel, is conclusive as to the fact of his judicious commander having seen that no future navigation. It was the almost impossible to distinguish by his orders," and the lecturer explained many facts to show that it was a favorable alternative. Dr. Kane, in investigating the natural laws which regulate the ice-drift, showed that the eastern sides of this channel are earlier and more frequently open than the western; and the peculiar position of Sir John Franklin enabled him to see and take advantage of the very first of these early openings.

Add to this the singular and perplexing fact that Franklin left no written record of his intentions, and it really seems as if the men had determined to march to the north, and Sir John, during a temporary absence, had followed into the new route, without notice, his men, leaving a written record to that effect. Dr. Kane has shown that Franklin must have passed six years ago, reached the region north of this (to-wards) and has since been unable to [illegible] directly overhead, nearly coincident with the magnetic meridian. They were then north of the magnetic pole of our earth, and the south polar direction was read to the compass as north. In other words, their magnetic variation was 180 deg.

PARHELIA.—With the daylight came the parhelia, or mock suns. These, like the paselinæ, or mock moons, were full of variety. The lecturer very properly observed that it was a sort of profanation to attempt to describe a sky traversed with rainbows and glittering with initiative suns.

REFRACTION.—Last of these most interesting displays came "refraction," that form of it so well known to us under the name of "mirage." The marvels of this wonderful illusion, although sustained by the united experience of all arctic voyagers, surpass the conceptions of the reality. Safeconic cities glittered in the "purple of the ice sunlight"; ocean steamers fumed in the vibrating distance. All these were described with poetic yet truthful force of detail.

But, leaving all this, Dr. Kane at last escaped from the great pack ice by Baffin's Bay. Once there the vessel dashed the free water from her bows. Here a sincere but expressive outburst of his commandor and messmates came naturally from Dr. Kane. Had Dellaven had determined to renew the search to the northward, and his officers, to a man, sustained him.

THE SECOND SEASON.—Once more, then, the battered little vessels turned their bows to the north, but their path was not a free one. Icebergs beamed them in, and soon they were fast bound by midsummer ice. Here, but for the exercise of unceasing watchfulness, they were upon the very verge of being mute prisoners for a second winter. But Providence had otherwise willed it, and by inexplicable exertions they escaped.

In the concluding sentences of his lecture, Dr. Kane reviewed their operations, stating that they had fallen upon the track of Franklin, and been imprisoned a winter at the north almost directly upon his track; but circumstances beyond their control called them from the seat of search. He alluded modestly, but in terms of unrestricted commendation, to the course of Henry Grinnell, in connection with the expedition which bears his name. It is not enough, said Dr. Kane, to have impressed that name upon the furthest land range that any polar navigators have yet returned to verify; its more substantial record is that universal recognition of purity of intention and honesty of purpose which is impressed upon the convictions of our entire community.

Dr. Kane then made an eloquent appeal in favor of a renewal of the search for the missing vessels and crews, which to be appreciated should have been listened to; and thus closed one of the most interesting courses of lectures ever delivered at the Institution.

Further by the Franklin.

The mails from Havre to the 21st and from England to the 22d ult. were brought by the Franklin.

The Consultative Commission was to meet on the 23d to examine the votes for President.

In the army, 248,868 voted for President, 16,884 voted against, and 316 abstained.

In the navy, 14,675 for Louis Napoleon; 4,830 against him, and 417 abstained.

The polling places in Paris were guarded by detachments of troops of the line and National Guards. In the arrondissements of which the National Guard is dissolved, the troops of the line alone were on duty.

The London Daily News, on the faith of its Parisian agent announces that the minister of finance is to raise a loan of eight millions sterling. The news is not confirmed by the other papers, although there is little doubt that the Government will soon be embarrassed for resources.

RELATIONS OF FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—A coolness has sprung up between the French and English Governments, arising out of the late despotic proceedings of Louis Napoleon. A Paris correspondent of the London Times says that soon after the coup d'etat of the 2d a communication was received from the English Cabinet, asking, without comment or irritating remarks, an explanation, as to whether it was contemplated to completely abandon the liberal constitutional policy, which had formed the bond of alliance between the two countries. The President was reminded of the fact that the liberal policies of the two Governments had placed them at the head of civilization in Europe, and that any retrograde movement on the part of France must necessarily prove distasteful to the people of England.

The reply to this letter is purported to have denied that the President had any intention of abandoning his liberal policy, or establishing despotic authority. It alleged the difficulties of his situation, and the dangers that had not only threatened France, but the whole European continent by the rapid and fearful progress of socialist ideas, and it repeated the arguments so often put forth in excuse of the act of the 2d December.

The answer, however, was not deemed satisfactory, and a second communication, of a non-official character, was sent; but the answer to this, although entering as it did into still greater details, was equally unsatisfactory. The British Cabinet wanted some data—some assurances of a positive kind, to present to Parliament when explanations were demanded.

It was finally decided to send a person to London to confer personally with Lord Palmerston. The person to whom this mission was offered declined, on the ground that he would not be able to give the full and satisfactory explanations which the British cabinet evidently desired to possess. The writer adds, "Such is the situation of affairs, as I am led to believe, up to the present time."

FRANCE AND THE DESPOTIC POWERS.—The relations between Louis Napoleon and the despotic powers of Europe appear to be far from satisfactory. They regard the acts of the President quite as conducive to his own interests as theirs. The suppression of the revolutionary party ought, (they are said to allege) to change their view in reference to a power which had its origin in a popular movement.

FRENCH REFUGEES IN BELGIUM.—The French Minister of Foreign Affairs has intimated to the Belgian Government that the Government of France cannot tolerate that the political refugees, who have either been sent away by the French police or have sought safety in voluntary exile should find a refuge within the Belgian territory. The whole of the French political refugees in Belgium have consequently been invited to "move on." Piedmont and Switzerland has also received hints on the subject, and it is said that, if they should not accede to the wishes of the French Government, some more active measures will be adopted next spring, with the consent of Austria, to force them thus to do so.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Franklin could not, in consequence of her great draft of water, obtain egress from the Havre docks, owing to the low state of the tides on the french coast, on her appointed day of sailing, viz: Wednesday, the 17th December, and her departure had to be postponed for four days.

Hon. Robert J. Walker was about to embark for the United States.

A telegraphic dispatch from Vienna, given in the Kreuz Zeitung, states that "the sisters of Kossuth ill be shortly removed to Pesth."

A company is at last forming, and has applied for an act of incorporation, for establishing steam communication between the west coast of Ireland and the United States. The association is to be called the European and American Steam Packet Company, and is advertised in the Times of the 15th ult.

The Kreuz Zeitung states that there is a probability of the Emperor and Empress of Russia visiting Berlin during the ensuing spring.

The Austrian cabinet has announced to the German government that, though it regrets Prussia will not accept its invitation to send an envoy to the Commercial Congress, to be held at Vienna, the conference will be held as appointed.

Louis Napoleon is said to have given the Prussian Government and other great continental powers the most formal assurance of his intention to preserve peace, and devote all his forces to the suppression of the anarchical elements within the French confines.

The feral corps of twelve thousand men, to be stationed near Frankfort, is already marching to the quarters designated for it.

There little doubt that the treaty of Hanover with the Silversin will be affirmed. The Hanoverian Cambers are about to adjourn till January.

The Paris correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Un says that M. Guizot applauds the acts of Louis Napoleon.

TURKEY.

A shock of an earthquake was felt, on the 12th of October, at Berat, in European Turkey. It threw down part of the fortress, and 400 soldiers perished in the ruins. About 800 houses, a Greek church and two mosques were greatly injured. Eight hundred persons were missing, but many of them were supposed to have taken to flight. The upper part of a mountain near the town became detached, and was cast a considerable distance; a crater then opened in the centre and vomited black smoke and blocks of stone; this was followed by a sulphurous lava in a boiling state which subsequently turned to powder. Fœtid exhalations arose, which corrupted the air. The villagers near Berat also suffered greatly from the earthquake.

ITALY.

The Roman correspondent of the Daily News says:

M. de Rayneval no sooner learned the tidings than he went with them to Gen. Gemeau. The General and the Embassador then went together to Cardinal Antonelli, and communicated the news to his Eminence, who seemed upon the whole to be gratified at the event, or rather the prospect of an imperial regime being established in France, even to the exclusion of legitimacy, and expressed his joy that, at any rate, the Republic had come to an end. You, who are in possession of occurrences almost as soon as they take place in Paris, will be better able to judge of the correctness of the Cardinal's surmises than we are in this Ultima Thule of civilization. The effect produced upon the mind of Pio Nono by the unlooked-for intelligence was directly contrary to that of the Secretary of State. His Holiness appeared dejected at the prospect of new political complications, and without jumping to conclusions, like his Minister, merely expressed his regret at hearing that the Embassador had received such an alarming communication. The prelacy and aristocracy in general seem to participate Cardinal Antonelli's sentiments; they admire the President's vigor and applaud his measures, as apparently tending to Imperial rule, whereby the cause of despotism, if not of legitimacy, may be strengthened in Europe, although proceeding from universal suffrage. Some timid exceptions are to be found among the members of the Sacred College, who see danger in every change, and are already in high preparation for a second flight, in order to avoid the frightful calamities foretold by the modern sybil, St. Catherine, of Sezza, which, they apprehend, it commenced in France, may be hastened in the Roman States.

CHINA.

The following is from The Overland Friend of China, dated Victoria, Oct. 30:

China presents a troubled aspect. In Pekin treason lurks around the throne; the Northern seaboard swarms with freebooters, who, not content with plundering every vessel that crosses their path, make continual ravages in the various towns where any thing of value is to be obtained—and in the Southern provinces rebellion rears it head, every report giving additional success on the side of the insurgents. With a knowledge that for months past there have been upward of a hundred thousand imperial troops in the field, who make no headway, the great masses of the people are now beginning to despise a government for which they have hitherto felt respectful terror. Two days prior to the date of our last monthly summary, the Government forces were severely worsted in an engagement in the Yung-gan district, in which the combatants brought forth the elite on both sides. Following this battle, about the 28th or 30th ult., the rebels laid siege to the chief city of the district, called by one of our correspondents Hunmoo, which they took and sacked, mutilating, in a shocking manner, the district magistrate and his family, who, with a number of the principal inhabitants, refused to give in allegiance to the great King Tieuteth. Of the inhabitants generally, great numbers were beheaded on refusal to forswear the Hienfung dynasty.

An extensive fire occurred at Canton on the 8th of October, which, it is said, destroyed some five hundred houses and a large quantity of property. The reports are very vague.

Further by the Atlantic.

The Baltimore Sun of the 5th contains more of the news brought by the steamer Atlantic. We have given, by telegraph, many of the items, but in order to keep our readers posted, in the present exciting state of Europe, we give a copious summary of every steamer's news.

FRANCE.

The balotting on the proposition for sustaining the President in his new form of government, closed on Sunday evening, the 21st ult. The result in twelve arrondissements of Paris stood: Yeas 132,217, to 80,161 in the negative.

At 6 o'clock on Monday evening, the returns from the Departments, received at Paris, gave the following results: "Yeas," 1,770,000: "Nays," 207,000.

Numerous deputations representing the trade and manufactures of Paris, headed by Mons. Lomornaix, presented on Saturday an address to the President of the Republic, expressing their deep gratitude for the measures he had adopted.

At Amiens, the Bishop, clergy, and religious congregations voted openly in the affirmative.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says that in the arrondissements of Paris, inhabited more particularly by the working classes, majorities in favor of the President have been polled, whilst in those quarters inhabited by the old noblesse, neutrality has been strongly manifested.

The working classes generally manifest strong hopes in Louis Napoleon, believing that he is a Socialist in the proper sense of the word, and that he is already contemplating and will soon execute decrees testifying his solicitude for them; and that he will apply those doctrines with which they sympathize, and those theories that will give them a material well-being and a cheap existence.

The bourgeoisie also believe that the advantages to them from the promulgation of the powers of Napoleon will be equally great.

The Bishop of Strasburg has addressed a letter to the clergy of his diocese, urging them to vote in the affirmative.

M. de Morney, the Minister of the Interior, has commended the attention of the printers of Paris, and has informed them of the intention of the government to prevent the publication, unless previously apprised of, of any pamphlet of less than ten sheets.

Victor Hugo has made his escape into Belgium by means of a false passport.

Paris, Monday, 22d, P. M.—The result of the election as far as heard gives 2,000,000 votes for Napoleon, and 600,000 against him, being a definite majority of 2,000,000, which is expected in favor of the President.

General Cavaignac arrived in Paris on Friday night; having been liberated on that afternoon.

As the election is now over, Napoleon thinks that the time has arrived when he can with safety set free the other Generals, and a report was current that they had been liberated on Tuesday.

At Sonre, the whole garrison of 10,000 men, with the exception of 800, signed in the affirmative, and the best discipline prevailed.

The Republican Clubs in Paris have decided that no Republican Government can be attempted now in France.

At Rouen the votes were "Yeas," 28,500; "Nays," 6,810. At Lille the "Yeas" were 50,272; "Nays," 9,152. At Angers, the "Yeas," 8,897; "Nays," 1,025.

Very Latest from Paris.—The President remains determined to propose an abolition of the octroi duties, and is also resolved on making some experiments in diminishing the protective system.

AUSTRIA.

Dates from Vienna, to December 17, state that notes, complaining of the dangerous support given to political fugitives in England, were presented to the English foreign office by the representatives of Russia, Austria, Prussia, and the Germna Confederation.

On the 12th a similar note was also handed to Lord Crowley, at Frankfort, asserting that Austria will not hesitate to adopt measures which which will make it imminent or difficult for Englishmen to travel in the Austrian States as long as the just complaints of the Imperial Government are not attended to in London, and an organized communication between the revolutionary party in England and all the Continental States is carried on under the protection of the law. The note further adds that the English will have less cause of complaint, as the duration of the measure will depend on themselves.

A considerable sum of money which had been forwarded to Hungary by the London Democrats has fallen into the hands of the government. It is supposed to have been brought into Hungary by foreign emissaries. English travelers are, in consequence, closely watched.

The Archduke Albert has returned to Buda Pesth to take up the reins of government. He retains the title of civil and military governor.

MOROCCO.

Additional advices from Morocco state that the difference between the Emperor and the French is far from having terminated. A letter from Gibraltar, dated on the 30th, states that the Emperor refused to ratify the treaty, and is marching towards Tangiers with 40,000 men.

The only news from India is that old Dost Mahomed, who was reported to be dying, has recovered, and that all pecuniary difficulties between the company and the Nizam have been settled by the latter having paid the whole of the stipulated amount. The whole of India was quiet, with the exception of very important riots at Berar and Gwalior.

The Prussian financial statements for 1852 has been published. The expenses are calculated at £14,200,000, the estimates at £13,900,000, leaving a deficiency of £300,000.

The Prussian lines of Telegraph have been connected with the submarine communication between Great Britain and France, and despatches are now transmitted from Berlin to London.

The Silesian Gazette draws the attention of European Governments to the perils brewing for them in the United States of North America, "where the adherents of revolution have a fund of twelve millions of dollars, and will, when the time of action comes, be backed by the navy and military power of the Federal Government." It therefore urges the speedy establishment of a German fleet to guard the mouths of the Weser, Elbe, and Trave; the retention of the Prussian and Austrian troops in Holstein; the ejection of all suspicious Americans; and even the repudiation of all American consular agents in Germany.

THE MASSACRE IN PARIS.—A British military officer writes from Paris the following particulars of the massacres which followed the usurpation in Paris:

A more cruel, barbarous, and inhuman slaughter, I suppose, was never committed. I do not allude to the taking of the barricades, but to the massacre on the Boulevards, of which there is no mention in the Parisian papers. I had a fortunate escape myself. At about three o'clock I was in the Boulevard des Italiens, and saw an immense force—I should think between 10,000 and 15,000 men—passing up the Boulevards. I accompanied them as far as the Rue Vivienne, to see if I could find any American friend A., whom I think I mentioned in my last letter. I did not know at the time that the troops were advancing to attack a barricade at the Porte St. Denis. Not being able to find my friend, I returned up the Rue Vivienne, intending to go again on the Boulevards. When I got to the top of the street, I found a cordon of soldiers across it, who would not allow any one to come within fifty yards of them. Just about this time (half-past three o'clock) the firing recommenced in the Boulevards Montmartre and Poissonnière; and the sentries at the top of the Rue Vivienne fired deliberately down the street at us. The rush was tremendous; but I got clear round a corner, and departed for my hotel as soon as possible. I went out again afterward, and went to the bottom of the Boulevards near the Rue del Helder, to watch the firing. The regiments of the line fired at the windows of the Boulevards for several hours, but I saw no fire returned from the windows. I then went home to dinner. A. had not arrived; and we were hoping that nothing had happened to him, when a woman rushed in, pale and trembling, and asked for me. She had brought poor A.'s card; he was lying wounded in a porter's lodge in the Boulevard Montmartre. Of course I started immediately for the spot. I had much difficulty in getting there, as the streets were all occupied by soldiers, but the officers were generally civil. When I got to the place the boulevard was a ghastly sight. There were no wounded, but the dead were lying in dozens, most of them just as they fell, and the pavements were slippery with blood. They were almost all bourgeois and not ouvriers. Two or three women were arranging some of the corpses, and placing candles at their heads that their friends might recognize them. The soldiers were standing at ease in the centre of the street, very quiet, but perfectly unconcerned; there was not a living men to be seen except them. I found poor A. in good spirits, but badly wounded. He described the whole thing as a wanton massacre. He was walking along the boulevards in the same direction as the troops, and when he heard the firing commence in the Porte St. Denis he turned back, thinking it was no place for him. Almost at that instant the whole of the troops in the Boulevards Montmartre and Poissonnière fired at the windows and at the people walking in the streets, who were without arms and making no resistance. There were crowds of people at the windows, but few were hurt, as they had time to throw themselves back when they saw the muskets go up. But for the promenaders in the streets there was no escape. The first bullet struck A. on the left hand, knocking off the fore-finger; he then went down on one knee, and held up the other hand, hoping they would spare him. Another struck him in the centre of the shin, smashing the larger bone, and a dead man fell heavily across him. As he lay on the ground he saw one or two officers endeavoring to make the men fire at the windows, but some continued to fire at those on the ground. He managed to crawl into a porter's lodge, where the gate was open, and the women assisted him. He described it as a perfect storm of balls. Another bullet struck so close to him on the wall that it spattered and cut his face like small shot. As he lay in the lodge the women had to leave him and get to a safer place, as the bullets were coming in there. The firing was kept up almost without ceasing for two or three hours, although there was no resistance whatever. I never saw such wanton destruction; the fronts of the houses were perfectly riddled with shot.

GERMANY—A Fearful Winter for the Poor.—The following paragraphs threaten a fearful winter for the mass of people of Germany. Hunger and destitution and oppression will form a burden hard to be borne, and we should not be surprised any day to hear of violent efforts being made by the suffering population to better their condition; worse it can scarcely be. A Prussian paper says:

"From all that we have been able to learn, the failure in the grain crop throughout Germany will amount to full one-third of the average produce; besides which the potatoes have failed very extensively, or have been damaged by the early frosts, which found them still in the ground. Scarcity of food must produce a decrease in the revenue; and yet, instead of husbanding the increase which has taken place during the past twelve months, the Government must inconsiderately propose an increase of the expenditure. On one point it is gratifying to perceive that the Government has struck into the right path. M. de Mantueffel and his colleagues have refused to employ the machinery of Government to control the prices of food, and have set a laudable example, which might be followed with great advantage by the Cabinet of Vienna."

An Austrian paper says:

"It is much to be feared that this will prove a very disastrous winter, as the lower classes in most of the Provinces are in a sad state of destitution. Transylvania, Croatia, Styria, Carinthia, Carneola, and parts of Lombardy and the Tyrol, have suffered terribly by inundations, and, even at this early season, the quicksilver in Fahrenheit's thermometer has been as low as fourteen degrees below freezing point. The prices of corn, meat and fuel rise, while the value of paper currency falls. We have heart-rending accounts from Carinthia. The damage done by the water is estimated in that province alone at some millions of florins, and numbers of people are not only without a home, but are literally reduced to beggary, their crops having been carried away, and their fields spoilt for years to come by the sand and stones which the rivers brought with them when they quitted their beds. One of the Emperor's Adjutants is now traveling through the districts which have suffered most, and the imperial bounty has not been wanting; but much more must be done if the poor creatures are to be preserved from pestilence and famine. The snow has fallen in such masses that we are almost cut off from the rest of the world. The mails from the north have been waiting these two days, and things are not much better from the south. By advices from Agram we learn that that city is almost snowed in; at least the streets are impassible for carriages."

SIR HENRY BULWER.—It is stated that Sir Henry Bulwer will go to Italy for his health, probably in a diplomatic capacity, and that a new Minister will soon be appointed to the United States. In the mean time, special authority will be conferred on Mr. Crampton, now in Washington, to settle all pending questions.

[The following pretty ballad is from the German of Korner, the famous lyric poet of his country, a youth at once highly gifted as a poet, and greatly renowned as a gallant young soldier. He was slain in battle, his last verses, just before the engagement, being a noble lyrical apostrophe to his sword.]

THE FIVE OAKS OF DALLWITZ.

'Tis evening; in the silent west
The rosy hues of daylight fade;
And here I lay me down to rest
Beneath your venerable shade.
Bright records of another day,
Aged, but sacred from decay;
Still in your stately forms reside
Of ages past the grace and pride.

The brave hath died—the good hath sunk—
The beautiful hath passed away—
Yet green each bough and strong each trunk
Still smiles in evening's farewell ray.
Storms blew in vain, the leaves still spread
A bright crown on each aged head;
And yet, methinks the branches sigh
"Farewell, the great of earth must die!"

But ye have stood. Still bold and high,
And fresh, and strong, and undecayed;
When hath the pilgrim wandered by,
Nor rested in your quiet shade?
Ye mourn not when the sere leaves fall
At coming winter's icy call;
They perish in their parent earth.
They nurse the tree that gave them birth!

Emblems of ancient Saxon faith!
Our fathers, in our country's cause,
Thus died the patriots' holy death,
Died for her freedom and her laws;
In vain they died!—the storm hath passed
O'er Germany—her oaks stand fast,
Her people perished in the blast.]

New York Statistics for 1851.

The following statement shows the number of persons who have arrived at the port of New York during each month of the past year: January, 14,709; February, 7,170; March, 10,055; April, 27,770; May, 33,858; June, 34,402; July, 27,012; August, 30,251; September, 33,586; October, 21,497; November, 12,117. Total for the year, 289,601. Of this number 163,256 were from Ireland; 60,883 from Germany; 28,553 from England; 7,302 from Scotland; 4,064 from France; 4,409 from Switzerland; 2,189 from Wales; 2,172 from Norway; 3,798 from Holland; 618 from Italy; 575 from West Indies; 475 from Belgium; 422 from Potland; 275 from Spain; 229 from Denmark; 121 from South America; 98 from Sardinia; 81 from Nova Scotia; 50 from Canada; 42 from Mexico; 20 from Portugal; 23 from Russia; 11 from Sicily; 10 from East Indies; 9 from China; 4 from Turkey; and 1 from Greece. In comparison with the immigration of the year 1850, there is an increase of 76,895 arrivals during the past year, and with the year 1849, an increase of 68,208. The immigration of the year 1850, in comparison with the arrivals of the year 1849, shows a decrease of 8,567 during the year 1850.

The total number of persons sentenced to be executed during the year is 8, of whom 1 has been executed; the punishment of 2 has been commuted to imprisonment for life; in one case a new trial has been ordered. Writs of error are pending in two cases, and two are now under sentence to be executed on the 23d January, 1852. Sentenced to imprisonment for life in the State Prison—one man. Sentenced to imprisonment in the State Prison—men, 182; women, 17—total, 199. Sentenced to the Penitentiary—men, 731; women, 153—total, 884. Sentenced to the City Prison—men, 315; women, 68—total, 386. Sent to the House of Refuge—boys, 92; girls, 10—total, 102.

The amount received for tavern licenses was $60,470. Licenses granted, 6,047.

The total number of fires was 342, and the amount of loss sustained was $1,152,263.

The whole number of stages running is 386.

The total number of deaths during the year was 17,226.

The receipts from the Croton water were $480,104, and the expenses $158,104.

The Common Council held 111 sessions, costing the city $12,645, exclusive of the expenses of the ten-room.

A WIZARD'S TRICK OF CHARITY.—The last eminent trick of Professor Anderson, the renowned wizard, was to give to the aged poor of New York city 1000 five-pound loaves of bread, and 1000 four-pound pieces of beef or mutton, to be distributed by the Aldermen of the several wards of that city. The blessings of the poor and needy will be upon him.

FOR LIBERIA.—The Liberia packet of the Maryland Colonization Society, was to sail from Baltimore on the 3d inst. She is expected to take out about 180 emigrants, of which 40 are from Maryland, and 100 from Georgia, who are to be taken on board at Savannah.

DANGEROUS—POOR LOW.—The Louisville Journal of the 6th says: "The steamer Childe Harold, from Cincinnati, with two barges in tow, heavily laden with provisions, sunk one of her barges Sunday night, near Warsaw. A large sugar or tree, lodged under the guard of the steamer, and the end of it caught in the side of the barge, and caused it to fill with water. The barge was laden with pork, and 300 barrels were thrown overboard to lighten it. The Childe Harold arrived at Jeffersonville yesterday, and Captain Scott entered a protest in this city. He has the hull of the McLean in tow, laden with 700 tons of pork. The Childe Harold is drawing 9 feet water, and will have to lighten, or go through the canal."

The same paper says: "We understand that an arrangement has just been consummated and will soon be carried into effect, that will give us a daily line of packets between this city and Memphis, and a tri-weekly line between this and Pittsburgh.

THE HOG TRADE.—The Louisville Democrat of the 6th says: "The hog killing season is over. The houses closed on Saturday last. About one hundred and ninety thousand have been slaughtered at the houses in the city."

DIVIDENDS.—The Bank of Kentucky has declared a semi-annual dividend of four and a half per cent.

The Bank of Louisville has declared a semi-annual dividend of four and a half per cent., and an extra dividend of two and a half per cent.

WHEELING.—The City Council of Wheeling have passed an ordinance, providing for taking a vote of the people upon the question of subscribing $50,000 towards the construction of a railroad from Wheeling to Wellsville.

OUT OF COAL.—There is no coal in Nashville, and it is expected that the Gas Works will be compelled to suspend operations.

The City Council of Cincinnati has adopted a preamble and resolutions requesting their Senators in Congress and the member from that district to use their influence to have constructed a new canal around the falls on the Indian side, and also to purchase the present one.

SINGULAR CAUSE OF HYDROPHOBIA.—A letter from Stockholm, dated, the 30th November, states that in consequence of the late excessive cold, a number of dogs had gone mad, and several persons had been bitten.

The famous clipper yacht America, purchased by Lord Hauptetre for 4,000 guineas, is reported to have so much fallen off in his lordship's estimation, that he would not refuse an offer of 3,000 guineas for her. She is now en route to the Mediterranean with her owner.

FIRE IN VICKSBURG.—The large building on Washington street, near the railroad depot, known as the Martin House, Vicksburg, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 8th inst. The fire is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

VICKSBURG RAILROAD.—It has been ascertained that 17,215 bales of cotton were transported over this road, between Brandon and Vicksburg, during the month of December. This is 4319 bales more than were ever carried over the road in any one month before.

FLORIDA LEMONS.—The Jacksonville News of the 3d instant, says: "We have received from our friend Mr. Hughey, residing on Lake Monroe, in Orange county, a specimen of the large and beautiful lemons produced on his grove in the vicinity of the Lake. It is of the 'Sicily' variety, and is the largest we have ever seen. It measures thirteen inches in circumference, and weighs fifteen ounces."

Seventy-three political journals have been suspended in France, since the commencement of the recent disturbances.

BLUE LICK SPRINGS.—This splendid watering place is soon to be sold at public sale, by order of the Nicholas county, Ky., Circuit Court.

SUIT FOR LIBEL.—The Board of Directors of the American Art Union have commenced legal proceedings against the New York Herald for an alleged libel on the Directors of that institution, contained in an article of the 1st inst.

RESULTS OF LIFE INSURANCE.—M. Rutherford, formerly a broker in Louisville, but who failed some time since, died in that city on the 3d inst. He had an insurance of $5,000 on his life, for the benefit of his wife, and thus by this wise forethought, he has left her in comfortable circumstances.

RAPID ADVANCE OF PROPERTY.—A tract of land, near Hawesville, Ky., seven miles from the Ohio River, which not long since was bought for fifty cents an acre, and soon after sold for ten dollars an acre, to an Ohio coal speculator, was again sold a few days ago, to a New York company, for fifty dollars per acre. It is said to contain an extensive deposit of pure cannel coal.

THE FORREST DIVORCE CASE.—This case continues to drag its slow length along. At our last accounts, it had already been in progress fifteen days, and there was no prospect of it very speedy termination. On the 23d inst. Mr. Van Buran read the celebrated Consuelo letter, with which the public is already familiar. This interest excited by such a case should be a healthy one.

NEW COUNTERFEIT.—The Louisville papers mention the appearance of a new counterfeit $10 bill on the Bank of Louisville.

THE FIRE-ALARM.—The experiments with the electric fire-alarm in Boston have proved highly satisfactory, and the system proves to be admirable.

SOUTH-WESTERN BOOK STORE.

JOHN BALL,

No. 56 Gravier Street.

At the above establishment can always be found the following:

METHODIST BOOK CONCERN.

All the publications of this Concern to be had on application, at catalogue prices.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOOKS.

Sunday School Books of all denominations. Also, an extensive assortment of JUVENILE BOOKS, suitable for Libraries.

THEOLOGY.

This department is very large, embracing all the standard works in Theology published in this country and in Europe, among which may be found the following authors: Jeremy Taylor, Wesley, Clarke, Henry, Burkitt, Bunyan, Locke, Bacon, Milton, Collier, Sherlock, Lardner, South, Paley, Stackhouse, Burnett, Tillotson, Patrick, Lowth, Scott, Leighton, Barrow, Melville, Magee, Pierson, Chalmers, Newton, Evans, Horne, Bloomfield, Crudeu, Dr. Dick, Townsend, Kitto, Butler, Edwards, Swift, Lord, Rutherford, D'Aubigny, Luther, Calvin, etc., etc., etc.

BIBLES! HYMNS! AND PRAYER BOOKS!

An extensive assortment, of all sizes, and in every variety of bindings.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

I would respectfully call the attention of country merchants, teachers, and others in want of School Books to my large and valuable assortment, consisting in part of—

Spelling Books, Elocution, Logic,
Reading Books, Arithmetic,
Dictionaries, Algebra,
Grammars, Geometry,
Rhetoric, Surveying,
Composition, Mensuration,
Drawing, Chemistry,
Book-Keeping, Botany,
Geography, Mineralogy,
History, Geology,
Biography, Natural History,
Natural Philosophy, Astronomy,
French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc., etc.
Spanish, German and Italian Grammers, Dictionaries and Readers, etc.
Greek and Latin books, of all descriptions.

STANDARD WORKS.

In every department of Science, Literature and Art.

J. B. would call the attention of his friend and the public to his choice collection of Miscellaneous and Standard Works. All the new and valuable works published are received as soon as issued from the Press.

DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN STATIONERY.

A large and valuable stock of French, English and American Stationery, all fresh and new, comprising everything usually kept in a Stationery Warehouse; Writing, Letter and Note PAPERS, of all descriptions; BLANK BOOKS, COPYING PRESSES, INK, etc., etc., and all at the lowest cash prices.

Any orders forwarded to me for Standard and Miscellaneous Works, Foreign and American, will be promptly attended to as the subscriber is confident, from his long experience, extensive acquaintance and great facilities, that his ability to execute any order for Books of all kinds, at very moderate prices, cannot be surpassed in the Union.

Terms Cash. JOHN BALL.
Publisher and Bookseller, 56 Gravier st.
fo8

MR. JAMES WRIGHT,

Having for private reasons which no longer exist, discontinued his interest during the last business season in the firm of James Wright & Son, we have now the pleasure of announcing that he becomes this day a partner in our house, and solicits the interest of his friends and former patrons.

To correct a general misapprehension, it is proper to state that he has no interest in any other house.

JAMES WRIGHT. A. J. WRIGHT & CO.
New Orleans, Dec. 1, 1851.

A SPLENDID COLLECTION

OF

ENGLISH BOOKS,

Just Received and for Sale by

JOHN BALL, 56 Gravier Street,

among which may be found the following:

Jeremy Taylor's Works, Hebrew Uldis,
Butler's History of the Saints, Book of Genius,
Paley's Works, Bell's Surgery, Burnet's Reformation,
Ballinger's Sermons, Burnet's Own Time,
Bremer's Home, Milner's Atlas, British Essayists,
Atlas of Physical Geography, Antiquities of the Jews,
Atlas of Political Geography, Burke's Cyclopedia,
Penny Cyclopedia, 16 vols., Carter's Gothic Architecture,
Pictorial England, Dallas' Lectures, Hackett's Lectures,
Chillingworth's Religion, Pictures of Private Life,
Christina Evidences, Gibbons' Rome, Crabb's Works,
Butler's Hudibras, Crowley's Divine Providence,
Luther on Gallatians, Crinkstank's Home,
Northcoat's Fables, Carter's Animal Kingdom,
Scott's Tales, &c., D'Arbley's Diary and Letters,
Spectator, Ecclesiastical Polity, Walpole's Letters,
Davis' China, Barrington's Heraldry, Remosthenes,
Beaumont and Fletcher's Plays, D'Israelli's Amenities,
Dow's Dictionary, Fielding and Smollet,
Pyramid's Gesta, Swift's Works, Foster's Essays,
Scott's Harmony, Froissart's Chronicles,
Spottswood's Miscellany, Goldsmith's Works,
Keith's Church and State, Hall's Works, Stern's Works,
Graves on Pentateuch, Thiers' Revolution,
Life of Huntington, Thiers' Consulate and Empire,
Hunt's London Architect, Walker's Analysis,
Parsonage Houses, Gate Lodges, &c.,
Valpy's Greek Testament, Westwood's Sacra Pictora,
Huntington's Works, Wood on Rail Roads,
Bacon's Works, Black's Universal Atlas, Burke's Works,
Popular Cyclopedia, Calmet's Dictionary,
Hewlett's Scripture History, Howe's Works,
Ellis' Tales, Johnson's Works, Josephus,
Scenes on the Hosphorus, Beautifully Illustrated,
Mantell's Wonders, Constantinople, Illustrated,
Mantell's Excursion, Castles and Abbeys, Illustrated,
Drawing-Room Table Book, Illustrated,
Maxwell's Wellington, Our Village, Belgium, Illustrated,
Montgomery's Cotton Manufactures, Ruins, Illustrated,
Nicholson's Architecture, Dukes of Normandy,
Neibhur's Rome, Johnson's 800 Dictionary,
Larghorne's Plutarch, The Eternal,
Roscoe's Leo and Lorenzo, Forty Days in the Desert,
Foxe's Book of Martyrs, History of the Waldenses,
Fuller's Works, Walks about Jerusalem,
Grammar of Law, Life of Whitfield, Hems of Art,
The Cottage Bible, 2 vols., Galloway on Steam Engine,
Henry's Commentary, Illustrated, Heath's Manual,
Taylor's Enthusiasm, Dickens' Household Words,
Taylor's Fanaticism, Views in India, 5 vols. quarto,
Taylor's Elements, Calmet's Dicty, Illustrated,
Taylor's Christianity, Jones' Views in London,
Linyard's History of England, Views of Tauen-hire,
Neighbor's History of Rome Taylor's Life of Christ,
Heaspla, Bagster's edition, Newton's Works,
Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, National Gallery,
Baxter's Complete Works, 4 vols. quart,
O'Meara's Napoleon, Tomlins' History of England,
Memoirs of O'Connell, Treasury Bible,
O'Halloran's Ireland, Pictures of London,
Chambers' Information for the People, 2
Chambers' Cyclopedia of English Literature,
Pilgrims Progress, Chambers' Papers for the People,
Ports and Harbors, Kalschmidt's German Dictionary,
Kalschmidt's French and German Dictionary,
Rivers of France, Robertson's America,
Populaire, 12 vols., Sites and Scenes,
Waverly Novels, 12 vols., illustrated, Abbotsford edition,
Stuart's Dictionary, Scott's Bible, Scripture History,
Collins' Ecclesiastical History, 9 vols., Views in the Tyrol,
Dr. Lardner's Complete Works, 10 vols., etc., etc., etc.
d28

NEW ORLEANS AGENCY

OF THE

NASHVILLE MARINE, FIRE INSURANCE, AND LIFE AND TRUST COMPANY

Capital.....$300,000—all paid in.
Surplus.....$220,000—reserved fund.
Total.....

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference: W. L. KNER, W. J. BOYD, C. H. PHELPS, P. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

VOLUME 1. NUMBER 51. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1854. OFFICE, 26 GRAVIER ST.

My Mother's Bible.

This book is all that's left me now.
Tears will unbidden start
With faltering lip and throbbing brow
I press it to my heart.

For many generations past
Here is our family tree
My mother's hands this Bible clasped
She dying gave it me.

Ah! well do I remember those Whose names these records bear
Who round the hearth stone used to close
After the evening prayer.

And speak of what these pages said
And feel my heart would thrill
And check the sweet words on my head
Were they are living still.

My father read this holy book
To sisters, brothers dear.
And calm was my poor mother's look
Who learned God's word to hear.

Methought from earth I see it yet
Each shadowed well known face
And thrilling memories come
Again that little group is met
Within the walls of home.

Of all the friends e'er knew
Through constancy I've tried.
Where all were false I found there true
My counsellor and guide.

The riches of earth no treasure give
Nor could this volume buy.
For nothing else the way to live.
And taught me how to die.

REPORT

Of the Committee of the Alabama Conference on the Bible Cause.

The Committee, after the most careful attention to the subject committed to them, report that for two reasons they think a more detailed notice of the subject than this book usually had is now demanded.

The first reason is that three years have passed during which there has been no report of the agent of the A. B. S. in our field of labor in consequence of which no systematic efforts have been made in the Bible cause, and the interest formerly felt among the people has, to a great extent, passed away.

The second consideration is, the evil effects that partial of our postal laws which fix the postage on all pamphlets which the department defines to be "not periodicals" unusually high, and requires, in all cases, prepayment of postage upon them. The postage on the annual report of the A. B. S. is distance is 36 cents. (formerly 15) which parent Society do not feel warranted in paying to the multiplied thousands of Pastors, ministers and members for whose special benefit it is printed. To those who are interested this report is indispensable the law has effectually cut off its circulation and deprived the people of its valuable information.

Your committee, therefore, think it the dictate both of piety and of justice, that as far as practicable, this report should lay the subsequent facts connected with the subject before the Conference, and through them before our people, all of whom, equally with ourselves, feel the importance of the Bible. Of the Bible itself we feel that it is useless to say aught to this body of Christian ministers or to the thousands of intelligent Christian church members they represent. We receive and accredit the Bible as revealed in the Old and New Testaments, to be the written mind of Almighty God — In it are contained all things that pertain to life and godliness — By its exceeding great and precious promises it comforts the mourner, strengthens the weak and cheers the despondent. The Bible is the

"Sword of the spirit, buckler shield and armor
By these and refuge from the oppressor's power
In which the poor may find a mine of wealth,
The sick and languishing a spring of health,
The thirsty, streams of grace, the hungry food,
Options to their worshippers a God."

During the thirty-fifth year of its existence, the A. B. S. collected from donations and legacies $129,065 13; from sale of Bibles and Testaments, $156,817 10; in all, $285,882 23. Of this sum, $13,000 are the proceeds of legacies. The Southern States fall far behind the whole mass of benevolence from Georgia $1,000, Missouri $1100, Mississippi $1000, and Louisiana $200, making only $4100, from the whole galaxy of Southern States.

The number of Bibles printed during the year is 270,000, and the number of Testaments 402,000, making 672,000 copies. The issues of the same period were 572,432 copies in thirty-two languages and dialects — a still greater number issued since the formation of the Society, in 1816, is 7,502,967.

The receipts of the British and Foreign Bible Society during its last fiscal year, were £61,125 5d, and its issues of Bibles and Testaments 1,136,695 copies. There are more than twenty other Bible Societies scattered over the civilized world, of which we need not say they all seem to feel the importance of the great work in which they are engaged, and are zealously and successfully prosecuting their noble work. These light houses are blazing to and the world. From the dark dominions of the Northern bear to the burning sands of South Africa are Bible societies formed. Great is the multitude of them that publish the Word. Millions of the most part of their varied language to Bible and missionary enterprise. The direct donations made by the A. B. S. last year, were in Bibles and Testaments 38,437 copies, and in cash to China $5500, France $8500, the British Islands $1000, in all $8000. The cash thus given to which they could not resort, for want of means, were nearly $5000.

Millions of the race are now in a state of heathenism for the Bible and the Bible societies are rapidly waiting upon the Christian church and philanthropist, for the means to put the Bible in every family in the world, what calamity so great could befall man, than the suspension of the Bible Societies!

Who can depict the famine of the word of the Lord which would follow the stopping of all the Bible agents and presses throughout Christendom. The poor, the neglected, those in far distant mission fields, to whose languages but partial translations have yet been made, would die, and all, especially the shut up to the gloomy necessity of passing into eternity without the light of regeneration. How deeply ingrained in the permanency and success of this great cause into the Christian, and Christian Ministry!

While the past must be set down as a glorious year in the Bible enterprise it cannot be disputed that much more might have been accomplished, could the parent Society have commanded the services of a sufficient number of agents. Facts demonstrate that the Bible cause cannot be successfully carried on without suitable general and subordinate agents, self-sacrificing, laborious, prayerful men, who know the value of the scriptures, and feel the relation they sustain to religion; who shall visit, preach to exhort, and stimulate the people of not the wealthy cities and towns, and more pleasant and populous districts, but the more remote and lonely. Let the hills and valleys of our mountains, and plains they must go, not wait to call and gather to their homes and worship, but from which to extract the needful dollars, alone, but where the clergy and local preachers lacks have neither leisure nor taste for the shepherd. They must go there, and form societies, small and feeble though they be, as centres from which to scatter the Word of Life. Without agents devoted to this work, the Bible cause would be a total failure in a few years the sublime hopes built upon it, would die, as Autumn's sickly flowers.

The parent Society, in their last report, express the opinion and facts fully sustain them: That while the cause may for a time be sustained by the voluntary efforts of pastors and others, there can be but little doubt the services of an agent wholly devoted to the work, would before long, be found needful." Now behold the facts in the case. In the State of New York where the agency and colportage system obtain, they raised during last year, $21,662 77. In Virginia, where the Agency has lain dead on the middle, of the year $3,000 were raised. While in Alabama without a special agent regularly at the work but with the services of five of the most able agents ever in the South visiting all the towns in some portion in the State, only $1000 could be collected.

Who shall say that Alabama, with all her intelligence, piety, and wealth with her thousands of poor, are waiting in any great eagerness, for the Bible. The people with the services of suitable agents would spend that money for articles of fancy and remain destitute of the Word of Life.

We hold that as Christ commanded his disciples to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; so should the friends of the Bible carry it through the whole country and offer it at the door of every cottage. As the husbandman overcasts his furrows with the precious seeds, so should the world be supplied with the Bible, and until we do undertake the work in good earnest our State will fall sadly behind in moral virtue, and in benevolent statistics.

Your committee are of opinion that every parent and guardian, would consider it one of above all price, upon their children and wards by bestowing on each of them as they get able to read a copy of the Bible. It would be a sacred keepsake, connected with which, nothing could be of such amount of solemn and deep importance to the Church and the whole country. It would be a cheap simple and effectual way of keeping the country, in coming years, supplied with the holy Scriptures. More than $1,000 in other years, when the rising dawns shall have joined the song of the redeemed, and when those children shall have become men and are scattered wide over the world they will turn to those sacred memorials, and while they read in their sainted parent's hand writing — My son this is the book of God read its holy pages make it the guide of thy counsel it was thy parent's stay in the hour of grief. His heart will yield and fall down before God, that will seek salvation.

There never was a period when great efforts were so loudly called for as now, both at home and in foreign lands. Feeble efforts have been made to the gloomy necessity of passing into eternity without the light of regeneration. How deeply ingrained in the permanency and success of this great cause into the Christian, and Christian Ministry!

While the past must be set down as a glorious year in the Bible enterprise it cannot be disputed that much more might have been accomplished, could the parent Society have commanded the services of a sufficient number of agents. Facts demonstrate that the Bible cause cannot be successfully carried on without suitable general and subordinate agents, self-sacrificing, laborious, prayerful men, who know the value of the scriptures, and feel the relation they sustain to religion; who shall visit, preach to exhort, and stimulate the people of not the wealthy cities and towns, and more pleasant and populous districts, but the more remote and lonely. Let the hills and valleys of our mountains, and plains they must go, not wait to call and gather to their homes and worship, but from which to extract the needful dollars, alone, but where the clergy and local preachers lacks have neither leisure nor taste for the shepherd. They must go there, and form societies, small and feeble though they be, as centres from which to scatter the Word of Life. Without agents devoted to this work, the Bible cause would be a total failure in a few years the sublime hopes built upon it, would die, as Autumn's sickly flowers.

The parent Society, in their last report, express the opinion and facts fully sustain them: That while the cause may for a time be sustained by the voluntary efforts of pastors and others, there can be but little doubt the services of an agent wholly devoted to the work, would before long, be found needful." Now behold the facts in the case. In the State of New York where the agency and colportage system obtain, they raised during last year, $21,662 77. In Virginia, where the Agency has lain dead on the middle, of the year $3,000 were raised. While in Alabama without a special agent regularly at the work but with the services of five of the most able agents ever in the South visiting all the towns in some portion in the State, only $1000 could be collected.

Who shall say that Alabama, with all her intelligence, piety, and wealth with her thousands of poor, are waiting in any great eagerness, for the Bible. The people with the services of suitable agents would spend that money for articles of fancy and remain destitute of the Word of Life.

We hold that as Christ commanded his disciples to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; so should the friends of the Bible carry it through the whole country and offer it at the door of every cottage. As the husbandman overcasts his furrows with the precious seeds, so should the world be supplied with the Bible, and until we do undertake the work in good earnest our State will fall sadly behind in moral virtue, and in benevolent statistics.

Your committee are of opinion that every parent and guardian, would consider it one of above all price, upon their children and wards by bestowing on each of them as they get able to read a copy of the Bible. It would be a sacred keepsake, connected with which, nothing could be of such amount of solemn and deep importance to the Church and the whole country. It would be a cheap simple and effectual way of keeping the country, in coming years, supplied with the holy Scriptures. More than $1,000 in other years, when the rising dawns shall have joined the song of the redeemed, and when those children shall have become men and are scattered wide over the world they will turn to those sacred memorials, and while they read in their sainted parent's hand writing — My son this is the book of God

REPORT

Of the Committee on Bible Cause of Louisiana Conference.

The Committee beg leave to report, that in conference with Rev. E. H. Thrasher agent of the A. B. Society, and examining specially the W. Bible Society, all May 1853, they were in possession of the following items in relation to the Bible cause.

The Southwestern Bible Society, located in New Orleans, and chartered by the Legislature of Louisiana, is auxiliary to the Parent Society in New York. It has undertaken to build a Bible house in New Orleans, which have been subscribed for it $5500, have been expended for an eligible lot. It is thought that $20,000 will finish the building. When the building is complete the next purpose is to raise a fund sufficient to establish a select depository of the publications of the American Bible Society, and the auxiliaries at New York, price without cost of transportation included

5th. That as the American Bible Society desire the services of a member of this Conference as General Agent for Alabama we refer this matter to the Bishop.

J. T. S. Higgins,
H. N. McTyeire,
J. A. Collins,
J. W. Lanly,
W. W. Thomas.

REPORT

Of the Committee of the Alabama Conference on Sunday Schools.

In summing up the statistics of Sunday Schools in the Alabama Conference, we have to report as follows: There are 173 schools, 1611 teachers, 7001 scholars, 22,571 volumes, 2150 visitors, $88 05 cents money collected for publishing fund. We have reason to believe that more has been done towards the building up of Sunday Schools within our bounds. Some of the circuits have made no report, others have made very slight ones, showing that in either case this interest has received little attention.

We feel impressed with the importance of giving more time and labor in rearing up and fostering this institution. Other religious and Church objects urge it. To sustain the Church we must have a healthful living ministry. They have to preach to the rising generation, and to be successful they must be acquainted with the wants of the rising generation. Many of the children of the Church are lost to it, and to the world, for want of proper attention in their early years. Many of the children of the Church are lost to it, and to the world, for want of proper attention in their early years.

Respectfully submitted.

H. N. McTyeire,
Chairman.

REPORT.

Of the Committee of the Alabama Conference on Sunday Schools.

In summing up the statistics of Sunday Schools in the Alabama Conference, we have to report as follows: There are 173 schools, 1611 teachers, 7001 scholars, 22,571 volumes, 2150 visitors, $88 05 cents money collected for publishing fund. We have reason to believe that more has been done towards the building up of Sunday Schools within our bounds. Some of the circuits have made no report, others have made very slight ones, showing that in either case this interest has received little attention.

We feel impressed with the importance of giving more time and labor in rearing up and fostering this institution. Other religious and Church objects urge it. To sustain the Church we must have a healthful living ministry. They have to preach to the rising generation, and to be successful they must be acquainted with the wants of the rising generation. Many of the children of the Church are lost to it, and to the world, for want of proper attention in their early years. Many of the children of the Church are lost to it, and to the world, for want of proper attention in their early years.

Respectfully submitted.

H. N. McTyeire,
Chairman.

CIRCULAR.

To the Traveling Preachers of the South-western Conference.

Dear Brethren: As your Assistant Book Agent, I may be permitted to call upon you, and the public generally, that our stock of Methodist books and approved miscellaneous publications including Sabbath School books, in all their variety, is unusually large at this time. We now confidently believe that from the new stock this season at the western depot will be fully as large and complete as that of the Eastern depot. We therefore invite you to call and examine for yourselves, and we feel confident that we can sell you as low as you can buy elsewhere. We also invite your attention to our Sunday School Visitor, that we seek for it an extended circulation. I solicit your subscribers and calling the attention of our people to our terms. We have claimed for it a circulation of 10,000 copies, and hereby bid fair to become a standard publication. Let us all unite in the effort to make the Visitor a welcome visitor to every Sunday School in the South-west. The present year promises to be a year of great prosperity to our Sunday School interest. The present success of our ministers demands special attention to this department of our work. We hope you will engage with renewed energy and vigilance in this good work of spreading the glorious news of the Gospel of the kingdom over all the lands, by the means of the Sunday School. Visitor, that we seek for it an extended circulation. I solicit your subscribers and calling the attention of our people to our terms. We have claimed for it a circulation of 10,000 copies, and hereby bid fair to become a standard publication. Let us all unite in the effort to make the Visitor a welcome visitor to every Sunday School in the South-west. The present year promises to be a year of great prosperity to our Sunday School interest. The present success of our ministers demands special attention to this department of our work. We hope you will engage with renewed energy and vigilance in this good work of spreading the glorious news of the Gospel of the kingdom over all the lands, by the means of the Sunday School.

Yours truly,

E. Stevenson, Agent.

Our catalogue is speedily published in pamphlet form will be promptly forwarded by mail, free of charge, to such of our brethren as may desire it.

Louisville, Ky., December 2, 1853.

The Devil Keeping the Church.

An editorial in the Planters' Enterprise says:

"The devil is a powerful gentleman, and he has a powerful influence over the children of men. He has a powerful influence over the children of men. He has a powerful influence over the children of men.

"Again, referring to the Bible, they say: The Bible does not prohibit dancing. Does the Bible directly prohibit theatres, circuses, the making, the using, and the vending of the poison alcohol, going to the gambling saloons, and many other great moral evils that might be mentioned? Yet who will deny that the Gospel, in the spirit and in doctrine, in many ways unchristianly prohibit these evils? Is a gamester acceptable in the sight of heaven because the Bible contains not a command in these words: 'Thou shalt not gamble?' Then may the dancer expect to be prepared to enter heaven, when he goes from the ball room to the bar of God.

I would gladly see our Protestant brethren pursue that by means abrogatory to the majesty of the Christian religion never.

This battle was getting up with the knowledge and approbation of the pastor. The Franklinites love the dance, and there may have been other reasons than those of the religious kept them from the enjoyment of the festivities of the occasion, but as given some reasons given in the corner of the streets of Franklin. There was the incongruity between the means employed and the end in view. Mirth was as follows. Some young men were tickled with an invitation to bring along some of their lady friends to the ball. The ball was to be held in the house of the Secretary of State, to which the Governor, Auditor and members of the General Assembly would not be conducive to the public interests. By being held at an earlier period all must have observed the injurious consequences often met on the local and general elections being on the same day. I would further direct your attention to the absence of any provision in the Constitution for the Executive to remove for the same cause any officer in office. The same rule applies to the Judges. Does it not appear that the Legislature would be justified in removing from office the Secretary of State, Auditor and members of the General Assembly, who

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 24.

GERMAN MISSIONS.—This cause has had a happy impulse given to it by excellent resolutions in the Louisiana and Alabama Conferences, and by the presence and effective appeals of Dr. Sehon, the Missionary Secretary, in our city. Dr. Sehon preached in Felicity street Church on Sunday last, and lifted a collection of over $300 for this purpose. He will preach in the McGhee and Moreau street Churches to-morrow at 11 A. M. and 7 P. M., when, after the sermon, aid will be called for for building a German Church.

Next week Dr. Sehon will visit Baton Rouge, Woodville, Natchez, Vicksburg and other places, in the active prosecution of the important business he has in charge. We have no doubt that what is not accomplished by his efforts here, in building the German Church, will readily be done by the generous aid of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, when Brother Hofer calls on them.

MISSIONARY MEETING.—On yesterday four of the missionaries destined for California arrived in the city: Brothers Lockley and Leyne of Alabama, and the two Brothers Simmons, of Georgia. They leave on the Empire City. To-night a missionary meeting will be held at McGhee Church, corner Perdido and Baronne streets, at which these brethren will be present. Services to commence at 7 o'clock; conducted by Dr. Sehon. To this interesting occasion the Church and public are respectfully invited.

TREASURER'S REPORT.—The Treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Missionary Society would be prepared to submit his annual report this week, if pledges of the Anniversary Meeting at Thibodaux were closed. Will Bros. Ferguson or Reed please forward a statement.

☞ The Reports on First Page will amply repay a perusal—especially the first and elaborate one, on Bible Cause.

PARIS LETTER.—Our correspondent has been anticipated, by telegraph, as to French elections. We find in the following extract what strikes us as a very correct epitome of contemptraneous French history:

> BILL OF THE FRENCH PLAY.—Theatre Francais Elysee: Sole manager, M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. Every day, until a further coup d'etat, will be presented the laughable farce, entitled "The French Republic; or, Freedom in Fetters!" Principal characters by MM. Louis Napoleon, Bonaparte, Rother, Turgot, St. Arnaud, Ducos, etc., and Mlle. Fortune; together with a large corps of supernumeraries. In addition to whom, the performances will be supported by the entire strength of the French Army!! To give every facility for criticism, and the exercise of unbiased opinion, the free list, without the exception of the press, is entirely suspended!!!
>
> ☞ In preparation, and will be duly announced, a revival of the grand serio-comic, comic-melo-dramatic spectacle, "The Empire!!! Liberty, Equality, Fraternity! No money returned!"

STILL WITHOUT A BISHOP.—The Rev. Dr. Creighton, who was elected Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the diocese of NewYork, has formally declined the office. The diocese must therefore remain a while longer in its "anomalous position."

Alabama Missionary Treasury.

We feel in need of exclamation points, capitals, etc., and other rejoicing material, in introducing the Alabama Conference figures below. The Lord make this church territory like a watered garden. Is the $30,000 mark too high for this year!

We clip this sentence of surprise and admiration from the Western Christian Advocate of the 7th instant:

"The South Carolina Conference closed its session at Georgetown, December 16. The returns for missionary money indicate a sum of over eighteen thousand dollars. No Annual Conference in America, in one year, has raised a sum so magnificent as this."

What will Doctor Simpson say to the statement below!

MOBILE, Jan. 20, 1852.

MR. EDITOR: The Treasurer of our Conference Missionary Society informs me that the amount of our collections the last year is as follows:

From Circuits	$16,332 35
" Stations	4,525 40
" Legacy and other sources	1,532 61
" Missions	3,441 25
Total	$25,831 61

His report in full will be forwarded in a few days.

Respectfully, J. HAMILTON.

A Specimen Letter.

Just before going to press, the following was received from an itinerant brother. A good specimen, we take it:

MY DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: I with others of our Conference pledged my best efforts for twenty new subscribers this year; and here is a beginning. Please send the Advocate to Br. C. C. H., A—— Postoffice, A—— county, Alabama, and charge the amount to me. When I get enough to make even change, I will remit forthwith. Yours in Christ,

***

SOUTHERN METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW.—The January number—first of volume VI—has been received at this office. Contents:

1. English Infidelity—Rev. T. V. Moore, Virginia.
2. Ralph Waldo Emerson—J. C. Burly, Kentucky.
3. Egyptian Archæology—Rev. I. Denton, Sumter co., Ala.
4. Jewish Sacrifices—Rev. R. Abbey, Yazoo City, Miss.
5. Pulpit Homogeneities—L. M. Lee, D.D., Virginia.
6. Rule of Faith—Rev. J. C. Granbery, Lynchburg, Va.
7. Sketches of Recent Works—By the Editor.
8. Literary Intelligence—By the Editor.

Dr. Doggett has succeeded in organizing a corps of Review writers, in the South, whose ability the present number presents in a highly favorable light. For the service he is thus doing to Southern literature, the editor deserves not only the thanks but the patronage of the Southern public. In addition to this strong local reason, our own Quarterly has stronger claims to patronage in its intrinsic merits, which have, under the present editor, steadily advanced up to this point. We hope soon to see the subscription-lists that have lately passed the Annual Conferences in his favor.

THE LAY MOVEMENT—NORTH.

Some things of interest have been transpiring, of late, in the M. E. Church, North, ominous of troublesome agitation to our brethren there. On account of our absence, we have not been able to keep our readers advised of these matters as they arose. We now present them with a synopsis.

In obedience to the call of a Committee of Nine, (appointed at a former meeting) a meeting of the male members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the city and county of Philadelphia, was held in the Union Church, Thursday evening, Dec. 11, 1851.

Several speakers addressed the meeting, after it was formally organized, by appointing a President, Secretaries, and twenty-three Vice Presidents. The design of the meeting was to promote such changes in the ecclesiastical system as might allow the introduction of lay influence into the counsels and administration of the Church.

Alexander Cummings, Esq., the chief speaker, presented, among the urgent reasons for the proposed changes, the statistics of the Philadelphia Conference and the Church, North, generally. The minutes of the Philadelphia Conference were said to show that for the last six or eight years it had been at a stand, if not retrograding; and in the Church, North, it was asserted and sustained by figures, that there had been, since 1844, a steady and rapid decline. [The speaker produced statistics, proving that in the seven years succeeding the division, the Church, North, had decreased 28,552, while the Church, South, had increased 75,368. But Dr. Peck has since made a rebutting statement, from authoritative documents, showing the gratifying fact that the Church, North, has had in the time specified a net increase of 65,162.]

The following, among other RESOLUTIONS, was, after discussion, adopted by a majority:

"Resolved, That a committee, to consist of twenty persons, be appointed by the chairman of this meeting, to act as an Executive Committee, whose business it shall be to adopt the necessary measures to call a General Convention, to be held in the city of Philadelphia, on Wednesday the 3d day of March, 1852, to consist of delegates from the various stations and circuits within the bounds of our church, to take into consideration the propriety of petitioning the General Conference, to be held in Boston in May next, for such action in their body assembled, as will secure the introduction of lay-delegates into our Conferences, and such other modification in the government of our church, as the wisdom of the Convention may suggest or agree upon."

According to Zion's Herald the names of the officers indicate that the main strength of the Church in Philadelphia is in the movement.

Where or in what it will end we make no prophecy. Those foremost in it disavow anything "radical or revolutionary." The "Radicals of 25 years ago," they would stand aloof from. Great attachment is professed for the Episcopacy, the itineracy and the whole body of Ministry.

The official organ at NewYork gives the "cold shoulder" to the affair—refuses to publish the proceedings. The Boston editor is not so unfavorable. Nothing yet has appeared in the other Church papers.

We trust that wise counsels will prevail, that principles fairly settled in the past Radical controversy, at so much cost to the peace of the Church, may not be unsettled, and that any new issues that may be presented will be disposed of in best judgment and charity.

While we rejoice at the satisfacton that pervades the laity and ministry of Southern Methodism with things as they are, we confess to no great surprise at the present developements in the North. The great mass of conservative, intelligent laymen there have douhtless been sadly misrepresented in the tone and action of their ministry for the last seven years, and it is not to be wondered at that they feel like having a hand in things. Can such laymen have any sympathy with the fanaticism which pushed matters to the verge, despite all Constitutional barriers, in the General Conference of 1844, and forced a division of the Church? How mortified must have been this class of Methodist laymen in NewYork at that anti-Fugitive Slave Law meeting, which gave all concerned in it such unenviable notoriety, even at home! As good citizens, as law abiding men, they must have felt themselves compromited before the whole country by the conduct of their pastors. How must the Methodists in Baltimore, Washington and Western Virginia, who are frank, consistent, straightforward men, regard the false position they are continually made to assume before the Church and world, by their preachers in Annual and General Conference?

And to make the matter short, how strong and general must be the sentiment of disapprobation, not to say indignation entertained by the fair-dealing covenant-keeping laity of the North, at the manner in which the PLAN OF SEPARATION has been kept and the PROPRIETY divided? Their preachers have not managed this thing to suit them we venture to say—far from it. This entering solemnly into contracts and then repudiating them; this refusing to do justice until forced by law; this holding the funds of widows and orphans until a judgment of the United States Court intervenes—all these things must be very embarrassing and mortifying to the large body of laity in the Church, North. And to complete the misery, an APPEAL is talked of! It is even possible their preachers may fight it out against the claims of delayed justice to the last ditch.

Now, our lay brethren in the North must be very uncomfortable under all this. They cannot consent to these things. This situation before fellow citizens, sister churches and the world, must be annoying. How can they answer all the questions put to them about justice to the South? They are for the most part concrete men; their preachers abstract men. Many of the best of them are conservative; many of their leading preachers ultra. Who can blame the laity, under this state of things, which seems not to be on the mend, for wishing to interfere? What can keep them from interfering, if their preachers go on, without check, as they have been going on since 1844? Verily, the Northern Methodist laity have exercised long patience.

California Missionaries.

We were sitting in the sanctum on Thursday, in "quiet conference" with the missionary Secretary, and had just read and thought over the last (private) letter of Dr. Boring, dwelling upon this sentence: "Let not only TWENTY but THIRTY strong, good men be here by April, and my word and reputation, nay, my ALL are pledged to find them work and bread. If the Lord spare us we will invest this whole country," etc. Just here two Californians came along prospecting for the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. They were soon put at rest, with feet hoisted high on the stove, and announced themselves as fresh from the Methodist "diggings" about Nevada, and full of news from our missionaries there. At this the bland face of the Secretary lighted up, and he went through a set of interrogatories, of which the following are our notes in part.

Messrs. Hobby and Easely left Grass Valley, a beautiful valley about four miles from Nevada, 26th November. Rev. J. Blythe is represented by them as doing a fine work in those regions. He had lately finished a chapel in Nevada—in which there were, previously, chapels of the M. E. Church, North, and Presbyterians. In Grass Valley, Bro. B. had just opened another preaching place and built a chapel—the only one in the Valley. This is a good neighborhood, and promises to be a permanent settlement, for "the gold quartz leads about there." The chapel is not quite finished; has frame, roof, windows, floor, doors—the doors not swung when Mr. H. left. Religious service had been held once. Mr. H. knows the chapel to be well framed, for he had the job himself, and was paid for it.

Ques. How was the money raised, and how did they go about building a church there?

Ans. (by Mr. H.) "Mr. B—— came to me about the first November, while I was busy at work; but I had heard him preach at private houses about the place, and once out of doors. He said they must have a meeting house, and could I help him some. I am a Baptist. We went out on spare times, among the mines and into the quartz mills, the offices and grog-shops and private houses, and raised what we could in "dust" and subscriptions. Major N——, from Missouri, and Judge W., of Mobile, Mr. W——, a Northern man, and others, went about with the parson. Some of us were made into a building committee, and the building was contracted for, to be ready in three weeks."

Q. How did you buy a lot to build on?

Ans. (by both.) "We did n't buy at all. We just went and looked out a good site and settled down on it. The place had not yet been laid off into lots. The Methodists own that piece of ground now, and no body else: it is eighty feet square, and you may say it is on Mill street, though not exactly."

We take these two gentlemen—one from Kentucky and the other from Illinois—to be sound, sensible, plain, honest men, and their conversation has certainly been intensely interesting, so lately from the scenes in which our ministerial brethren are toiling. Our sympathies for them are greatly quickened. These join with others in representing the disposition of California to receive with open arms the messengers of the M. E. Church, South. Our section of Methodism and of Christianity had as well withdraw from Texas as from California. It would be injustice to ourselves and to the thousands of Southern men and Southern Methodists there even to falter in our course of steady reinforcement. The kindly insinuated offer to come over, from Dr. B., is assuming a pretty serious aspect in our conscience; and we answer the Doctor's letter, both the published and private one, right here, on that point, that we should like heartily to be with him at the formation of the Pacific Conference.

Messrs. H. and E. inform us that at Havana they met with our missionary brethren on their way, in good health and at their appropriate work. They spent a day on the Philadelphia, in changing steamers, and were made aware of preachers on board by religious services held morning and evening, in the cabin. They inquired who these men were, and made a brief acquaintance. "The large gentleman from Kentucky [Bailoy] read the Bible, sang and prayed in the morning, and the thin looking one [Fulton] did the same in the evening."

We regret that some letters sent to this office from the missionaries were lost on the way, with a portion of the baggage of one of these gentlemen.

DEATH OF DISTINGUISHED MEN.—The Rev. Moses Stuart, Professor of Andover Theological Seminary for the last forty years, is dead. He was 71 years of age. Rev. Walter Balfour, a distinguished Universalist preacher and writer, died recently at Charlestown, Mass., in the 70th year of his age.

Capt. Joel Cook, a soldier of the Revolution, and the last survivor of the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, died on the 19th ult., at his residence on Long Island, in the 91st year of his age.

DEATH OF MRS. POLK.—Mrs. Jane Polk, widow of Samil Polk, Esq., and mother of the late President Polk, died at her residence in Columbia, Tenn., on Sunday night, the 11th inst. Mrs. Polk was beloved by all who knew her, esteemed for her rare piety and many social virtues, and had been, through a long series of years, a faithful and devoted member of the Presbyterian Church.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Our accounts, together with a communication, touching the conditions and prospects of this branch of the Southern Methodist Book Concern, were mailed, in due time, to Clinton, La., the seat of the late session of your Conference. But from a report, just to hand, per Rev. R. Abbey, we learn that these papers failed to reach the Conference, during its session. This is deeply regretted, as we are in much need of funds, and had fully expected to have realized a very considerable amount from the members of your body. Under these circumstances, our receipts have fallen far below our confident anticipations. It is, therefore, most earnestly desired, that all who are indebted to this concern will, at their earliest convenience, transmit to us, in whole, or in part at least, the amount of their several accounts. We make this request, in view of our pending necessities.

I will add, in conclusion, that our stock of Methodist and miscellaneous books, and Sabbath School publications, is, at this time, unusually large; and it is now the opinion of your agent that from henceforth this Concern will be fully able to meet the entire demand of the Church for theological literature, in all its different forms, throughout the whole South-western range of the connection. Your orders are, therefore, most respectfully invited.

Our catalogue, as recently issued from the press, will be promptly forwarded to all the members of your Conference, whose address you may be able to obtain.

E. STEVENSON, Agent.

Louisville, Ky., January 10, 1852.

Conference Resolutions.

The following resolutions were adopted at the late session of the Alabama Conference:

Resolved, That the first Friday in May be observed as a day of fasting and prayer to Almighty God, that He may raise up and send forth more laborers into His vineyard.

Whereas suppers, fairs and concerts are becoming very common, in order to raise money for benevolent objects, and our people go to such places, and justify themselves because the objects are said to be benevolent, therefore

Resolved, That this Conference unqualifiedly disapprove of the practice, and will not countenance it among our people.

The Conference passed unanimously a vote of thanks to the citizens of Mobile, for their hospitality to its members during our session among them. Also, to the members and owners of those steamboats who have so generously, from year to year, conveyed the preachers to and from the seat of Conference, free of charge.

T. W. DORMAN, Sec'y.

Report on the N. O. Christian Advocate.

The Committee reported the following, relative to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, at the late session of the Louisiana Conference, which was adopted:

"We feel confident that from its birth to the present time it has been steadily gaining the good will of our people, not only through ours, but several other Annual Conferences.

"Your Committee heartily approve of the selection of the present editor, by the Publishing Committee, and believe that much of the success of the paper has been the result of this judicious choice; for notwithstanding its infancy, it will compare with any of our older Church papers; therefore,

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Louisiana Conference, will make our best efforts to extend the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, by obtaining cash subscribers, and the renewal of old subscriptions,"

C. A. FRAZEE,
A. E. GOONWYN.

☞ N. B. The Conference subsequently resolved, that each would endeavor to obtain twenty new subscribers during the year, on the cash principle.

Course of Study of the Ala. Conf. for 1852.

FIRST YEAR.

Bible as to Doctrines..Wm. Murrah.
Wesley's Sermons..Wm. H. Milburn.
Fletcher's Appeal..James L. Cotten.
English Grammar..Daniel Duncan.
Composition..By the whole Committee.

SECOND YEAR.

Bible as to Sacraments and Ordinances..T. O. Summers.
Watson's Life of Wosley..Jamee A. Heard.
Watson's Apology..Josiah Barker.
Fletcher's Christian Perfection..J. D. Fisher.
Ancient Geography..Thos. Y. Ramsey.
Discipline..O. R. Blue.
Composition..By the whole Committee.

THIRD YEAR.

Bible as to History and Chronology..J. Hamilton.
Ruter's Church History..C. D. Oliver.
Watson's Institutes..Parts I and II..P. P. Neely.
Rhetoric, Blair's University Edition..A. H. Powell.
Composition or Sermon..By the whole Committee.

FOURTH YEAR.

Bible Generally..Thos. W. Dorman.
Watson's Institutes..Parts III and IV..J. S. Hughes.
Powell on Succession..Thos. H. Foster.
Old Christianity vs. Papal Novelties, by G. Ousley..E. J. Hamill.
Logic..A. H. Mitchell.
Sermon..By the whole Committee.

VISITING COMMITTEES.

To Centenary Institute..J. S. Hughes, R. M. Saunders, Wm. Murrah, Josiah Barker and A. H. Powell.
To Lagrange..P. P. Neely, C. D. Oliver and T. W. Dorman.
To Oak Bowery..C. D. Oliver, O. R. Blue and J. S. Hughes.
To the Macon Female Institute..V. L. Hopkins, J. E. Newman and T. W. Dornan.

☞ NOTE.—Some of the nominations for the committees above were made by the names of the individuals, and others as the preachers in charge of certain places, which has resulted in a little confusion, putting the same person on more committees than one, thereby rendering it inexpedient, if not impossible, for such individuals to perform all the duties assigned them. Query: Would it not be better to leave this matter, hereafter, in the hands of the Bishop, the Conference requesting him to appoint such committees? T. W. D.

LETTER FROM PARIS.

PARIS, Dec. 18, 1851.

There is in Normandy an interesting missionary station, in the small town of Lizieux, near the residence of Guizot, one of the ministers of Louis Philippe. Begun four years ago, by the Rev. C. De Boinville, Wesleyan minister, amidst a population of bigoted Roman Catholics, it has slowly but steadily progressed, and now reckons about fifty converts to Protestanism. A very neat chapel, built in the Gothic style, was dedicated for divine worship on the 2d of August last. It can hold about one hundred and thirty persons, and is sometimes filled. Brother De Boinville being unwell, I was called, at the end of last month, to supply his place for the Sabbath. I had much pleasure in becoming acquainted with the simple and pious members of his flock, and to hear at a class meeting the Christian experience of some who were, a few months ago, superstitious papists.

I returned to Paris on the 2d of December, and arrived in town by rail in the evening. Every thing seemed to be as quiet as usual. However, on my way home, I noticed a large bill on white paper, (the reserved color for official acts of the Government,) and I stopped to read it. To my great astonishment, it was a proclamation from the President of the Republic to the people, and a decree declaring that the National Assembly was dissolved, as well as the Council of State, that Paris was put in a state of siege, (that is under martial law,) that universal suffrage was restored, and that the people would be called to vote in a few days on the re-election of the President for ten years.

This stirring news was at first well received, as a walk on the Boulevards an hour afterwards convinced me. Every one seemed to think that the National Assembly richly deserved its fate; the restoration of universal suffrage was considered to be a great boon; the boldness and suddenness of the President's coup d'etat won a general admiration, as well as the completeness and energy of the measures he had taken. But, on second thought, many began to say that he had violated the constitution, and had no right to act as he had done; that the National Assembly having issued out of universal suffrage, he had in fact destroyed what the people had done; and his coup d'etat was attributed merely to his tyrannical ambition, and not to his desire for the welfare of France. Some of the members of the dissolved Assembly encouraged these thoughts, and barricades were set up against the Government.

But it was useless to strive against Louis Napoleon. He had brought into Paris above 100,000 men, whose officers were devoted to him. What could be done against such an army! The barricades were soon taken, many of the insurgents killed, and after a fight of a day and a half, on the 4th and 5th, quiet was restored to Paris. It would now be impossible for a stranger to guess that our streets have lately been soiled with blood, and that the canon was roaring in the Boulevards only a fortnight ago.

Unhappily, matters have not been so quickly settled in the Provinces. In some departments, where the Socialist or Legitimist propaganda had been very active, or where there were but few troops, the insurgents have been the stronger, and have exercised, it is said, many cruelties by way of reprisals. We cannot, however, place an implicit confidence in the news now given, as the liberty of the press is for the present suspended, and we can receive in Paris no newspapers from the Provinces, but such as are favorable to the President's acts. The opposition papers have all been stopped, until they promised to say nothing unfavorable to the coup d'etat.

All the political parties that were fighting one against the other before the 2d of the month, the Napoleonians, the Orleanists, the Legitimists, the Moderate Republicans, the Red Republicans and the Socialists, have all disappeared. There are now but two parties in France, those who disapprove the coup d'etat, and those who are highly favorable to it.

The first are very violent against the President. He is, say they, guilty of high treason for having dissolved the National Assembly, in opposition to a formal declaration of the constitution. He has put Paris and nearly one half of France under martial law, when it was not necessary. He has destroyed the liberty of the press, so that the people, who will soon be called upon to vote, cannot be enlightened on their true interests, and only hear one-sided views of what ought to be done. He has not in reality re-established universal suffrage, since the people, being under a reign of terror, dare not vote freely. He has indeed shown that he cared very little for the people, for he gave orders that the persons at the barricades should be shot at once, together with all the persons passing by or looking on, whoever they might be. He has shown his weakness by his coercive and tyrannical measures, and his strength is only derived from the bayonets he has at command. In fact, he is a slave to ambition, who wished to remain in power, cost what it may, and who had nothing to lose by a coup d'etat, but every thing to gain, in case he should have the victory.

Others, in a much greater number, take a very different view of the matter. According to their opinion, the President has only acted for the welfare of France, even to the risk of his own life. He has violated the constitution, true, but he could not do otherwise. The Assembly were plotting against him, and if he had not sent to prison the leaders of the Assembly, he would have been sent there himself, which would have been the cause of much more fighting; of two evils he has therefore chosen the lesser. Besides, he has, by so doing, only hastened the crisis which was so much dreaded in 1852. By hastening it he has been enabled to destroy the subversive plans of the Socialists, who were making extensive preparations for the month of May, but, who, being taken by surprise, before they were ready, have been more easily conquered. The crisis is now past, trade and commerce can flourish in peace, no one being left in cruel suspense of what is to happen. As to the measure that have been taken against the liberty of the press, they are only for a time, and have been made imperious by the rules of martial law, and by the excitement which generally prevails. All the seemingly tyrannical measures taken by the President have been dictated by the same necessity. At the barricades he has not fought against the people, but against a few insurgents, who were hoping to pillage Paris, and to introduce anarchy. The excesses and cruelty the army are said to be guilty of, are not proven. As to voting, if a man dare not vote according to his conscience, because he is under martial law, that man is a coward, and does not deserve to have a vote. The President is not an ambitious despot; he has proved it by permitting the vote by ballot, although he had at first proposed another mode of voting. He now asks for a Lower House, elected by universal suffrage, a Senate, a Council of State, a Ministry named by the Chief Magistrate—and for that very reason held in check by the two Chambers, and through them by public opinion—a President, whose tenure of office is limited to ten years. Can this system of checks and counterchecks between the Executive and the Legislative be called pure despotism! No. Therefore Napoleon must be, once more, as in December, 1848, the man to whom all France will look for the resettlement of a government under which people may sleep without fear of having their throats cut, or being pillaged of their substance.

Whichever of these two conflicting opinions be the proper one, one thing is certain, viz.: that Bonaparte has for him the army, the Romish clergy, and many of the tradesmen and working classes.

1. As to the army, the very name of the President would suffice to excite most of the soldiers in his favor. Napoleon is for them the hero, who will bring honor and glory on the French army. A fortnight ago, I met a young soldier, who had fought that very morning on the barricades, and had seen some of his comrades fall around him. "That's the man for us," said he, speaking of the President, "I am ready to give my head for him, if it be necessary," and he passed his hand along his neck with a very significant gesture, adding: "there are many who would do the same. Vive Napoleon!" I have no doubt but this feeling is general amongst the soldiers. As citizens, they have a right to vote, and their votes have already been taken. The results are not yet known, but it is said that some of the regiments have been unanimous in favor of Louis Napoleon, whilst nineteen twentieths of the others have voted for him. Backed by the army, which numbers 400,000 men, he can do whatever he pleases.

2. The Romish clergy, who are always on the stronger side, have also from the first, approved of the coup d'etat. The Univers, published by the Jesuits, is scarcely surpassed in his eulogy of the President by the organs of the Government. M. de Montalembert has written a long letter in the papers, in order to secure his re-election as chief magistrate. The clergy, even, have deigned to enter into the political arena, and the Bishop of Chartres has sent a circular to all the curates of his diocese inviting them to vote for Napoleon, "who represents the party of order and peace." This attitude of the Romanists, in view of the approaching elections, clearly shows that the President is favorable to them. This tendency, which may lead him to persecute the Protestants, is also shown by a late decree of his, by which he has transformed the Pantheon into a Romish church, dedicated to St. Genevieve, the patroness saint of Paris.

3. The tradesmen wish him to be the master, because they hope that he will carry France quietly through 1852; and provided that they may sell their wares, they do not care much about religious liberty, or the liberty of the press.

4. Lastly, Napoleon has brought over to him many working men, by giving them work. To this effect, the Government has decided to enlarge some of the old streets in the city, and to pierce new ones, to make a railway round Paris, so as to unite the various termini of the Rouen, Northern, Strasbourg, Lyons and Orleans railways, to push on with greater activity than hereto the Lyons and Bordeaux lines, and to embellish some of sea ports, such as Nantes and Bordeaux.

It is, therefore, nearly certain that Napoleon will be elected. Yet there are many fears abroad, and commerce is rather slack, just at a time of the year when it generally is very brisk, on account of the festivities of the new year, and of the numerous presents then made and received. The elections are to take place on the 20th and 21st, and the result can scarcely be known before new year's day. There will therefore be but little buying and selling this year. Happy, if we would after this have liberty, rest and order in France for some time to come!

I am glad to receive the N. O. C. Advocate regularly. The Paris correspondent of the NewYork Christian Advocate has desired me not to sign my letters by a C. which is his initials in that paper. You will, therefore, have the kindness henceforth to sign my letters J. P. C.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Reading—To the Young.

"Give thyself to reading," said the great Apostle to the Gentiles, in his letter to his son in the Gospel, and this is said in some sense to every young man on earth. God is in the Bible, in history, and in all his works. And how many glories and wonders are there in these? How wide, how varied and attractive is the field of knowledge for the exercise of the intelligent and immortal mind of man! Cultivate, we beseech you, if you have not already done so, a taste for useful reading.

It may be asserted as a general and truthful proposition, that a young man who has no taste for reading, is doomed to ignorance and obscurity. Cultivate the habit of reading, and like every other habit, it will grow with your growth and strengthen with your strength, and become one of the richest and most unfailing sources of happiness. Resolve to know, and you shall know. Be not discouraged at difficulties, they will only strengthen you, and give robustness and vigor to the powers of the mind. Be not discouraged at the slowness of your progress; mountains are not ascended at a single bound, from base to summit, but by slow and toilsome steps, only, can their highest peake be gained. Proud palaces, the home of kings and the ornament of cities, are not reared in a day, but stone after stone and timber after timber are added until by gradual process the structure is completed. There is no royal road to knowledge; it must be acquired by labor, long continued and faithful labor. But it is a toil cheered by a thousand pleasures—pleasures that deepen and heighten with our progress.

Knowledge will give you a respectability and an influence in the community that can never be attained without it. Would you be respected? get knowledge. Would you be useful? get knowledge. Do you wish to leave some track upon the sands of time, to tell to on-coming times that once you passed that way? then seek after knowledge.

It is a want of taste for reading that leads so many of our young men, and especially in cities, to scenes of dissipation and excitement, to escape the dullness and monotony of their leisure hours; this often leads them to varied forms of vice, and ultimately to disgrace and ruin.

A habit of reading will so pleasantly occupy our leisure that we shall feel no need of exciting scenes, or gay and dissipated companions, but we shall have at home a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." And this will powerfully tend to keep you from "evil communications," that most dangerous rock on the coast of time, on which so many gallant barks have struck and gone down forever.

Nothing earthly can confer so much pleasure as a taste for reading useful books; it is a source of happiness even in youth and prosperity, but in age, loneliness and adversity, it is almost the only earthly resource for mental enjoyment.

Man is a social being—he must, he will have society of some sort; but it is not always in our power, and especially of the young, to gain access to the society of the educated, talented and traveled. But through the medium of books, we can hold familiar intercourse with the purest, the wisest and the greatest whose honored names have rolled down the tide of time. It is true they are physically dead; but their glorious thoughts are embalmed in their immortal works. Books are the only true levelers; they bring all classes together, and introduce us into daily and familiar intercourse with the noblest of our race.

But some will urge it, maybe, that they have neither the time to read, nor the money to buy books. Let us only improve the little odds and ends of time for one month, and see how many valuable ideas we shall have acquired, and then we shall see that mental improvement is possible for us; only let us not waste the hours and minutes; moments are more precious than dust of diamond.

There are few men who do not waste more time in useless visits and unprofitable talk, in the course of ten years, than would, if wisely improved, make them men of respectable information in several departments of knowledge. Books are so plenty and so cheap, that but a small degree of industry and economy is necessary to secure enough to make us quite well informed, and in time gather a respectable library. Every man, we affirm, can be generally informed who wills to be. Then let the voice of God, of patriotism and self-respect prompt you to the work with hearty good will. J. B. WALKER.

NewOrleans, January, 1852.

China and the Chinese.

As our rapidly increasing commercial marine, in the Pacific gradually draws us nearer to China, any information pertaining to the inhabitants of that country, its resources and products, becomes interesting. An intelligent correspondent of the Washington National Intelligencer, who is evidently well acquainted with the Chinese, their manners and habits, and with the country, as far as foreigners are permitted to explore, gives some interesting facts relative to this hitherto almost unknown people. The day is not far distant when the relations of the United States with China will be of such an intimate nature that a full knowledge of the fundamental organization of society in that distant land will be invaluable, and all information which may be gleaned from the experience of those who have made this subject a study, should become public property. We make the following extract from the letter of which we speak:

"The Chinese empire, as it now stands, is more remarkable for the numberless ages that it has held together, the vast swarms of human beings that are living and sustained within its limits, than for any active influence it exerts upon the destinies of other countries. The silks and teas, now the principal articles of exportation, administer to the comforts and luxuries of the wealthy and non-laboring classes of other countries, and to the very few who are employed to prepare them for use; but the large numbers of producers and laboring people in the United States and Europe are very little, if at all, benefited by the present state of trade with China. There are scarcely any foreign manufactures and products, consumed in China. The opium trade, and some few portions of raw cotton are the only counterbalancing sources of reimbursement for all the money left here for teas, silks, etc., and they are confined almost entirely to British India, and consequently redound to England's advantage."

The opium trade, which the Government has been compelled, at the mouth of the cannon, to tolerate, costs the nation $30,000,000 per annum, but as yet, none of the products or manufactures of the United States, of any consequence, have been made necessary to the wants of the Celestials. We pay vast sums of money each year for teas, silks, and other articles, most of which finds its way into the hands of the drug speculators of India, while but for this extensive monopoly we might, in China, soon have a good customer for cheap cotton fabrics, and even bread stuffs. The enormous profits which are now confined to the few, would then be legitimately distributed throughout the world, and the United States would come in for a large share. The rapid encroachments which our clippers have already made within the last few years in the carrying trade from China, is but an indication of what American enterprise is destined to accomplish in that quarter of the globe. With our steamships covering the most distant seas, an easy and rapid communication between the Atlantic and Pacific, it requires no great stretch of the imagination to see, early in the future, an American influence in the eastern world, which will unlock its hidden treasures and turn to our shores almost the entire current of wealth which has so long been emptied into the coffers of our Anglo-Saxon neighbors.

We have the advantage of the world in establishing a lucrative trade with China, and it is in the nature of the progress we are constantly making as a nation, that these advantages should soon be improved to the utmost.

The Intelligencer's correspondent says:

"It is beginning to be the opinion here that in a few years Shanghai will be the chief trading port with foreigners, or the headquarters for foreign merchants. The reasons are obvious: The provinces lying adjacent to and in the interior from Shanghai are the ports of the country where the silks are principally made and teas cultivated. By shipping these commodities immediately from Shanghai, the expense and delay of the present land transportation may be saved, which will not only expedite business operations, but save something on the first cost of the articles to the merchants. The river Woosung, on which the city is built, is deep enough for any class of merchant vessels, and is at all times a good and safe anchorage. The climate, too, as the city is several degrees further north than Canton, is more pleasant and salubrious. The people of this more northern latitude are said to be a better class, and have none of the piratical propensities for which their brethren in Canton river are somewhat celebrated. By encouraging Chinese immigrants to California, and treating them kindly, much may be done to remove the prejudices that exist in China against us."

The Christian Missionaries in this benighted country have as yet been unable to make any great progress, as they have not only the language, but the prejudices of thousands of years to contend against. The missionary hospital at Canton has, however, done signal service to the cause of humanity, and the many operations and cures performed by the Rev. P. Parker, M. D., have done much to soften and enlighten the hearts of the barbarians.

The writer speaks with great pride of the appearance of the American shipping at Whampoa. In regard to our naval force, he thinks it bad policy to employ large ships on that station. Two steamers of 800 or 1000 tons burthen, can be kept afloat there at an expense not exceeding that of one large vessel, and he made much more efficient in protecting our commercial interests.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The contemplated line of steamers between San Francisco and Shanghai is an enterprise which would confer immense benefits on the commerce of the United States, and no efforts should be spared to carry it into effect.

QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR 1852.

The January number of the 6th volume of the Quarterly Review has been sent off in due time, and some may have been sent out that should have been discontinued; in this we have done the best we could, with the lights before us. In their direction we may not have made all the changes desired; and especially in those sent to ministers whose residence we are not advised of; and we give this notice to request all who have changed their postoffice to advise us of the change, and request their former. Postmaster to forward the number to their present address. And last, but not least, to request all subscribers who have not paid in advance, to look at our terms on the cover, and send us the funds for the present volume, and all arrearages; and in all cases where funds are reported to have been paid, to tell to whom they were paid, that we may give the proper credits and make the necessary charges.

JOHN EARLY.

Richmond, Jan. 9, 1852.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

On the Tuscaloosa District, Alabama Conference.

Greensboro'	Jan. 31 and Feb.
Marion	February 7 and 8
Arcola Quarterly Conference, at Oak Grove, at New Berne	February 14 and 15
New Prospect, at Wesley Chapel	February 21 and 22
Brush Creek, at Mount Hermon	February 28 and 29
Centerville, at Mahon's	March 6 and 7
Jones's Valley, at Jonesboro'	March 13 and 14
New Lexington, at New Lexington	March 20 and 21
Tuscahoma	March 27 and 28
Big Sandy, at Mount Pleasant or Wilkinson's	April 3 and 4

THOMAS J. KIRKER, P. E.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

On the Memphis District, Alabama Conference.

Demopolis	February 14 and 15
Alabama Colored Mission	February 21 and 22
Union Town and Orrville	February 28 and 29
Cahaba and Centreville, at	March 6 and 7
Talon Town Circuit, at	March 13 and 14
Lower Peach Tree, at Moseley	March 20 and 21
Marengo Colored Mission, at Linwilliver	March
Magnolia Colored Mission	March
Dayton	March 27 and 28
Dayton Colored Mission	March
Buckatunnie Circuit, at Mount Carmel	April 3 and 4
Butler Circuit, at Bear Creek	April 10 and 11
Gaston Circuit, at Coke's Chapel	April 17 and 18

JOSHUA T.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS, &c.

For the Montgomery District, Alabama Conference.

Montgomery Station	February 14
Montgomery Circuit, at Mount Meigs	February 21 and 22
Union, at Line Creek	February 28 and 29
Hayneville Circuit, at Hayneville	March 6 and 7
Tuskegee Circuit, at Asbury	March 13 and 14
Tuskegee Circuit, at Salem	April 10 and 11
Crawford Circuit, at Bethlehem	April 17 and 18
Lafayette, at Bethlehem	April

[illegible] that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, showing us the glory of God the Father in the face of Jesus Christ, then we see and feel, in part at least, our state, deplorable by nature. We see that God is angry with us every day for our wickedness—we read our condemnation in his law—which is holy, just and good. We see our own weakness and helplessness, involved in the horrible pit of sin, the miry clay of iniquity, dead in trespasses and in sin, so that there remineth no more spiritual strength in us. Until just now, we were asleep in this death and knew it not; but now the Holy Spirit has awakened us to a sense of our danger and duty. We see by that precious light that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." We see that Christ did make an atoning sacrifice for our sins and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the world. We see the condition upon which he offers pardon, life from the dead, peace and heaven, and that condition is repentance towards God and faith in Christ Jesus.

Again, we see that to comply with this condition we must exercise our will, judgment and affections. To obtain salvation, we must believe with the whole heart unto righteousness—a heart repentant, renouncing every sin; an undivided heart, giving up all for Christ, resigning all to his holy will: and finally, we see plainly these things we cannot do of ourselves, because in us there is no good thing, no strength. The faculties of the soul being so stupefied in moral death that they cannot act; hence we are led to cry for assistance from the blessed Spirit, and the promise is sure and stendfast: "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." In answer to prayer, we receive quickening power, which brings us to the

2. Second work of the Spirit—quickening power, or energy: "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and in sins." The second Adam was made a quickening spirit. Let the lame and helpless cry, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me;" and Christ shall send the Comforter in his name to arouse to action and enable us to take him by faith. Now we believe there is a God, and that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." We now have a will to seek him, truly desiring salvation. Our judgment now becomes active, and we decide to serve God. The heart begins to

"Fear but perish if I go.
I am resolved to try:
For if I stay away, I know
I shall forever die."

And our affections are somewhat strengthened, also, so that we would love the Lord because he first loved us.

Finally, we now begin to try to do something in the way of religion, but poor is the effort and many the blunders we make—[illegible] by the light that now shineth in Religious Intelligencer.

An effort is being made at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, to establish an Episcopal church. There is no priest on the islands, and a temporary provision has been made by which one of the citizens is to act as lay-reader. The service of the Church of England is to be read regularly every Sunday.

A writer for the Episcopal Recorder compiles from the church records-statistics showing the progress of the church in the United States from the year 1832 to the present time, a period of twenty years. In 1832 the number of clergy was 564; now it is 1095. In 1832 the number of communicants was about 32,181, or 57 to each clergyman; at this time the number is about 100,000, or 62 to each clergyman.

The Baptist Recorder has a table showing the population of each of the United States, according to the census of 1850, and the number of communicants in the Baptist churches. From this it appears that the whole number of the communicants is 715,787, or one in 32 of the whole population in the United States, which is 23,081,747. In Virginia, they are one to every 61 of the population; Indiana, one to every 44 of the population; Kentucky, one to every sixteen of the population. They are most numerous in proportion to the population in Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky. They are more numerous in proportion to the population in the slave than in the free States.

General Intelligence.

THE MOBILE RAILROAD.—The good citizens of Mobile were highly delighted on Saturday last, by seeing a locomotive in motion on the Mobile and Ohio railroad. On Sunday, a locomotive with a tender attached was run over the road as far as Eight Mile Creek. The road will be finished to a point, thirteen miles from the city, in a few days. The papers think there will be but few opponents of the 2 per cent. tax in aid of the road. This subject will be voted on this week.

Sunday-work—a bad start.

Operations have been commenced on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

Louisiana Legislative Committees.

On Elections—Tulman, Dorsey, McVea.

On Claims—Cole, Labauve and Richardson, of St. Tammany.

Unfinished Business—Provost, Martin, Dorsey.

Enrollments—Hartlere, Dufour, Sandidge.

Contingent Expenses—Burthe, Baker and Cole.

Public Education—Kenner, Dorsey, Benjamin, Burthe and Wickliff.

Internal Improvements—Robb, Baker, Clark, Gillis and Snyder.

Judiciary—Benjamin, Provost, Labauve, McVea and Mayo.

Agriculture, Commerce, etc.—Declouet, Watterston and Moore.

Federal Relations—Labauve, Kenner, and Richardson of Ouachita.

Penitentiary—Watterston and Burthe.

Militia—Martin, Baker and Lacoste.

Finance—Winchester, Robb, Gardere, Phillips and Griffin.

Charitable Institutions—Dufour, Tulman and Quirk.

Amendments to the Constitution—Dorsey, Watterston and McVea.

Parochial Affairs—Provost, Burthe, Clarke, Mayo, and Richardson, of Ouachita.

Levees—Clarke, Kenner, Gardere, Snyder and Quirk.

LOUISIANA PENITENTIARY.—The following statistics relative to our State Penitentiary are interesting:

List of Convicts in the Louisiana Penitentiary for the year ending 31st December, 1851.

Remaining in confinement on 1st January, 1851	246
Received during the year	151
	400
Discharged by expiration of sentence	80
Pardoned by President of the United States	1
Died during the year	9
Escaped slaves	3
	102
Remaining 1st January, 1852	298
Colored males	284
Colored females	14
White females	3
White males	217
	298

OPPOSITION TO COLONIZATION.—Some of the colored persons in New York city, taking offence at the recommendations of Governor Hunt in his message, that an appropriation of State funds be set apart in aid of the colonization scheme, have issued a call for a State Convention at Albany, the 20th inst., to protest against so gross a violation of the Constitution and flagitious proposal to make appropriate State funds."

Lord Palmerston, the retired English Secretary of Foreign Affairs, is upwards of seventy of years. He has been connected with all the whig administrations of England for the last thirty years.

FOR THE WORLD'S FAIR.—The packet ship Caroline Reed, which arrived at New York on the 5th, had on board 217 packages of goods, intended for the World's Fair in New York. They were from the London Exhibition.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—It is just made public that the person to communicate with Sir John Franklin was Martin, of the British whaler Enterprise. It was with The Enterprise was alongside the Erebus in Melfair to [illegible] Sir John invited Captain Martin to dine with him the latter declined doing as the wind was to get [illegible] Sir John, while conversing with Captain told him that he had five years' provisions, which would make last seven, and his people were busily engaged in salting down birds, of which they had several casks full already, and twelve men were out shooting more.

BLUE RIDGE TUNNEL.—Colonel Crozet, engineer of the Blue Ridge Tunnel, contradicts the rumor that that important work had been discontinued on account of the hardness of the rock. It is about a year since the tunnel was begun, and the perforation has been extended nearly one thousand feet. Col. C. expects that the cars will be run through in a little over three years. The rock penetrated is mostly of a uniform hardness. But little trouble has been experienced from water, and there has been no necessity for ventilation. The perforation is 16 feet in width by 21 in height.

THE COLLINS STEAMERS.—It is stated in the New York Herald that this line of steamers is losing money, and that fears are entertained, unless the Government comes forward in aid of the company, the ships will be withdrawn from the line. The Herald states that the Emperor of Russia has signified a wish to purchase these magnificent vessels, to form a nucleus for a powerful steam navy. It would be a source of national regret to see these splendid specimens of our naval architecture fall into the hands of a foreign government.

SULPHUR SPRINGS NEAR NORFOLK.—A sulphur spring recently discovered on the farm of David Jordan, Esq., in Nansemond county, Va., fourteen miles from Norfolk, is said to have been pronounced by Professor Stewart, of Baltimore, to whom the test was confided, to be probably one of the most efficient and valuable medicinal waters in the world. It combines the properties of the Saratoga with that of the White Sulphur waters; and may be said to represent perfectly the water of the far-famed Harrowgate Springs.

THE ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL.—The National Intelligencer says: "The great improvement effected in the lighting of the Rotunda of the Capitol is the subject of general and deserved remark. Has has been introduced, and is made to pass into one hundred and sixty burners, equally distributed into eight jets or brackets, which are ranged above the paintings. This arrangement produces a brilliant and beautiful, but very pleasant light below, and also lends to the paintings on the walls a spirited and lifelike appearance. We have never seen the Rotunda look so well as when lighted on the present arrangement."

SLAVES BROUGHT TO CUBA.—A letter dated Havana, December 31st, states that four cargoes of Africain slaves, numbering in the aggregate 1980 souls, have lately been landed on that island. A Spanish brig, with 700 slaves, was detected in the act of landing, and 430 of them seized and bound out for seven years, after which they will be sent to Jamaica.

BRONZE BRASS CASTING.—A brass propeller for the United States steamer Princeton, was cast at Baltimore, last week, which, when finished, will weigh 10,000 pounds. Nearly one tons of metal was melted and run into the mould.

The most liberal religious toleration has been established in Piedmont; the church of the Waldenses is now entirely free in worship and of emancipation doctrine.

DEFENCES OF ENGLAND.—The Washington Republic says: "The significant appeals lately addressed by the London Times to the people of the United States appear to be based on apprehensions which are by no means confined to that Journal. The Naval and Military Gazette—an unofficial organ of the officers of the army and navy of England—is engaged in discussing the threatening aspect of the affairs of Europe, especially of France; and, in anticipation of a war at no remote date, they are vehement in their calls upon the Government to prepare for the emergency."

CALIFORNIA STATE HOSPITAL.—Dr. Williams, Resident Physician of the Sacramento State Hospital, in his semi-annual report, recently published, gives the whole number of patients admitted at 460. Out of that number, the very large proportion of 20 were set down as insane, and 26 were under treatment for wounds of various kinds. Only 48 deaths occurred.

VALUE OF GROUND IN LONDON.—The editor of the Albany Evening Journal, in one of his late letters from London, says:

"I was surprised to learn that lots in the vicinity of the Bank of England and the Royal Exchange were less valuable than in Wall street. Rents, except in the most fashionable quarters, are about the same as in New York.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE MEXICAN MINISTER.—Señor Don Luis de la Rosa, for several years past Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States Government from Mexico, took his leave of the President on the 10th inst., preparatory to returning to Mexico. He made a brief but very laudatory address, which was responded to by the President. Señor de la Rosa retires from the position he has so long occupied, in consequence of ill health.

DEDICATION.—St. Michael's Church, a large and splendid Roman Catholic edifice, in Baltimore, was dedicated on the 11th inst.

STATE PRINTER.—By a decision of the Supreme Court of California, Eugene Casserly has been declared State Printer.

DIVORCE HUNTERS, ATTENTION!—Hide this head, the Philadelphia Sunday Dispatch calls attention to the sitting of the Pennsylvania Legislature. Cruel Inclination.

SLAVES FREED.—Capt. Andrew Harris of St. Louis, has freed all his slaves, twenty-four in number, on condition that the Missouri Colonization Society built send them immediately to Liberia, which the society has undertaken to do.

DEATH.—Wm. Grimshaw, Esq., a gentleman widely known for his literary attainments, died near Philadelphia on the 6th, in the 70th year of his age.

THE SPANISH PRESS ON MR. WEBSTER.—The New York Courier and Enquirer contains a series of extracts from the Spanish press, commenting on the letter of Mr. Webster to Mr. Barringer. On the whole, the letter is viewed in a highly favorable light and its tranquillizing features are very much complimented. The following is rather rich, from the fact that the writers who permitted it has confounded the author of our boyish days' spelling-book with the profound Daniel:

The venerable author of the most complete Chronological Dictionary of the English language known in England and America, the noblest Presbyterian ever baptized, according to the tenets of Calvin, in the State of Massachusetts, the most serious and consistent of the Puritans who people the manufactories of the beautiful city of Boston, in the States of New England, in the present office of Secretary of State of the Uncle-American Republic, has answered the just claims of our Government for the excesses committed in New Orleans against the house of the Consul of Spain, and the property of certain individuals, subjects of her Catholic Majesty, residing in that city.

The note of this Honorable Daniel Webster is couched in conveniently diplomatic terms; and in points which are not closely connected with International jurisprudence, Mr. Webster speaks to our plenipotentiary with as much gallantry and historical erudition as a courtier of the time of Louis 14th, of France. But which, confessing that the conduct of the mob in Louisiana admits of no justification, he endeavors to excuse their excesses against our consul, citizens, and flag, because the news from Cuba was calculated to create a popular excitement. He argues himself of this circumstance, not to exculpate the mob in any manner, but to give to the Spanish Government a short lecture on the manner of judging of all sorts of crimes; and alleges as very sensible the custom in his country of deliberately and unhurriedly investigating the deserts of a criminal, before his sentence is pronounced. In every great it may seem or enormous it may be * * *. It is remarkable that in the note of the Hon. Mr. Webster, not a single word is said that might tranquilize the Spanish Government concerning the arming or equipping of any future expeditions against the integrity of our territory and sovereignty in the Antilles.

Very opportunely they salute M. Laborde, and the Spanish flag etc., but this does not signify that the filibusters who abound in that Union, will be watched, etc. etc. *

Time will show very soon that we are not mistaken in our prophecy, that the nation cannot regard as satisfactory the solution given in the differences raised by events in Cuba and New Orleans, between Spain and the United States. ["La Nacion," the Journal of Progress.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT IN NEW YORK.—A calamity similar to that of the schoolhouse occurred on the evening of the 12th, in a large building back of Centre street, put up by the Commissioners of Emigration for the accommodation of newly arrived emigrants. It was five stories in height, and on the various floors no less than 480 persons were stowed. The alarm bell in the vicinity rang for fire, and a woman in the upper part crying out, led the occupants to believe that the building was in flames, and a wild struggle ensued upon the stairs. The crowd soon choking up, all only avenue of escape, quite a number leaped from the windows into the yard below. Six lives were lost, all of whom are children except one, an unknown young woman aged 20. Eight others were taken to the Hospital seriously injured, five of whom will probably die. The following is a list of the killed and wounded:

Dead—John W Bolton, 8 years; John Glennan, 8 years; Mary Murphy, 8 years; young woman, unknown, 20 years; unknown boy, about 9 years; unknown girl about 6 years.

The Injured in Hospital.—John Hawk, leg and arm broken; a woman, arm broken; Eliza Savage, shoulder dislocated; Lucy Cushing, injured internally; Bridget Horrington, injured internally; William Whiden, shoulder dislocated; John Eagan, body injured; Catharine Sweeny, body injured.

On the morning of the same day, two children, who had been locked up in a house in Eleventh street, by their mother, were burned to death by the room taking fire during her absence.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.—We make the following extract from a Washington letter:

"The subject of Government expenditures has been brought up in the Senate, in the discussion of the resolution for printing the seventh census. Since the years 1825-'6, the expenditures on ordinary account have increased from twelve millions a year to forty millions. In the last year of General Jackson's administration, Mr. Woodbury estimated the necessary expenses of the General Government at twenty-one millions. They will hardly ever be again reduced below forty millions. The expenses attendant on the addition of territory, and increased foreign intercourse, and on additions to Army and Navy establishments, account for the rapid augmentation of expenditures. The question now is whether the expenditures on other account than those of national defence can be kept within forty millions. It is quite certain that they will not be. The various demands and projects now before Congress, some of which will be provided for, will augment the expenditures. Whether the revenue will continue to increase in a ratio with the expenditures, is a great problem.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND THE DESPOTIC POWERS.—A letter dated Vienna, December 17, and published in the London Times, says:

"I am unable to affirm that Louis Napoleon was assisted by the counsels of Austria before the late catastrophe, but I know that M. de Hubner was a person gratu at the Elysee. It is universally believed in diplomatic circles here, that the President is confidential friend, if not his ostensible counsellor, was M. de Kisseleff, the Russian Minister at Paris. As long as things were in suspense in France, the Northern Powers were unable to carry out their plans for bringing the Continental nations as completely under the yoke as they were before the Revolution of 1848, but now that the President has succeeded in establishing a military government, and all resistance appears impossible, the long-cherished plan will soon be brought to light. It is entirely to abolish so-called constitutional government on the Continent." I quote the following extract from a short article in the Lloyd of to-day will give you a foretaste of what England has to expect:—

"Notes, complaining of the dangerous support given to political fugitives in England, were presented by the representatives of Russia, Austria, and the German Confederation at the British Foreign Office on the 12th. A similar note was also handed by the Nuncio to Lord Cowley at Frankfort. Austria will not hesitate to adopt measures which will make it inconvenient or difficult for Englishmen to travel in the Austrian States, as long as the just complaints of the Imperial Government are not attended to in London, and an organized communication between all the Continental States is carried on under the protection of the law. The English will have the less to complain, as the duration of the measure will depend upon themselves."

From what I hear, I am induced to believe that the Northern Powers will not rest until the Sardinian Government has followed their example, and the liberal party in Switzerland has been crushed.

THE PARCHED CORN.—In Mr. Banvard's new and interesting book, entitled "Plymouth and the Pilgrims," when speaking of the endurance of the early pilgrims, the author relates the following interesting incident:

"A simple, affecting, yet very appropriate memorial of their condition at that time (in the winter of 1623) was presented at the ceelennial celebration of their landing, December 22, 1820, at Plymouth. After an address from the Hon. Daniel Webster, a procession marched to the courthouse; and as they passed down the long rows of tables, rich laden with the luxuries of the sea and land, five kernels of parched corn were observed upon every plate. They attracted attention. Some smiled, as they passed along, at what they regarded as an empty parade. Others, who were better acquainted with the Yankee character and with their fondness for significant motions, knew that these silent symbols were eloquent with some hidden meaning. These five mysterious kernels of corn were memorials of that affecting incident, when, in 1623, the colony were reduced to a pint of corn, which, when divided among the settlers, gave to them each five grains. When this was understood at the table, it produced a thrilling emotion. These five grains on each plate were full of the farina of thought and feeling."

SINGULAR MONOMANIA.—The Greek Senate has just lost one of its members, M. Marcopolitis, who was one of the new batch created lately to strengthen the ministerial majority. He was a very old man, and his death was preceded by a singular aberration of his mental faculties. He imagined that he had fallen into disgrace with the king, and, declaring himself unworthy to live, he obstinately refused to take the slightest nourishment. The King having been told of this, sent a special message to assure him of his favor, and to persuade him to change his resolution, but this unfortunate victim of a somewhat unusual affection in the present day—a too great devotion to the monarchy—only declared himself still more guilty to have displeased so affable a Sovereign, and in spite of every effort on the part of his friends he actually starved himself to death.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.—At the concert lately given to the children of Common Schools at New York, by Miss Hayes, a most affecting incident occurred near the close. Just when Miss Hayes had taken her place on the stage to sing "Sweet Home," a fine little girl stole over to her side unobserved, and presented her with a bouquet, without an accent a voice and look that, together with the nature of the song she was about to sing, it completely overpowered her with emotion. She tried twice to sing the ballad and failed, and then said something to Mr. Lavenu, the conductor, not heard by the audience, but which they supposed was a direction to him about the accompaniment. Her utterance was choked, and at length she was compelled to leave the stage by her feelings, and only returned after the long continued applause. Mr. Lavenu meantime announced the cause of the failure. She then sung "Home" with such exquisite feeling and beauty as it was never perhaps sung, even by herself, before.

FLORIDA INDIANS.—The St. Augustine (Florida) Ancient City says that the Indian Chief, Billy Bowlegs, is becoming somewhat restless, and has recently visited Tampa, and called on the commanding officer there to send a force to take or drive in a number of "conflicts." He says they wholly refuse to obey his authority, and he expresses fears they will do mischief and involve his people in trouble.

The Ancient City thinks the said William Bowlegs is playing a trick of some sort. It places no confidence in his professions, and believes he is indisposed to emigrate to the West.

APPLICATION FOR PENSION.—A curious application has been made at the Pension-office in Washington for the bounty land granted by the act of September, 1850. The man who applies affirms that he volunteered in September, 1832, in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, for an indefinite time, and served in the war of the United States against the nullifiers of South Carolina. Two witnesses testify that they saw him depart on this service and return

COMET OBSERVED.—On the night of the 12th, Encke's Comet was observed at the National Observatory in Washington, by Mr. Ferguson, through the large Equatorial. The Comet is described as a faint white nebula with brilliancy capable of bearing only the faintest illumination.

EX-GOV MINER.—It is rumored that two-thirds of the democratic delegates to the National Convention from New York, are in favor of ex-Gov. Marcy as a candidate for the Presidency.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Louisiana, Captain Lawless, arrived yesterday morning, bringing the mails, with Texas papers to the 16th inst.

A severe norther occurred on the night of the 12th, which blew the water out of the bay of Galveston, so that the Louisiana could not cross the bar. She was compelled to unship her mails and passengers, and also take her return mails and passengers outside. A large number of cattle had perished from the extreme cold weather in the vicinity of Indianola and Matagorda. During the thaw of the 12th several small vessels were driven ashore.

The Louisiana encountered the heaviest of the gale, which was one of the most severe ever experienced in the Gulf. She was somewhat damaged, but proved herself a splendid sea boat. The passengers on arriving at Galveston published a card complimenting Captain Lawless on his coolness and excellent conduct in the hour of danger.

Left at Pascagoula, schooner Wm. H. Howard, bound for New York, ready waiting for the tide to cross the bar.

Left at Galveston, ship Wm. H. Wilkerson, Gates, master, for New York, in three days.

Passed off the bar, bound for Galveston, bark Montauk, Brown, master, for New York.

There has been no steamer or mail from Houston, on account of low water.

SNOW.—A snow storm visited Galveston on the night of the 12th.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.—The newly designated military posts on the Concho and San Saba rivers are to be immediately occupied. The position on the north branch of the Concho will be near the crossing of the line of reconnoissance lately made by Lieutenant Colonel Johnston, Topographical Engineer, and will be called to be more specifically designated—that on the San Saba, will be at the head spring of that river, near the Pass road, and at the western extremity of Brownsland which closes the river bank.

The horses used for the mounted companies of the 8th Infantry, will be taken to Fort Martin Scott, where the commanding officer of the regiment will select for mounted service, at each of the new posts, a company, from the respective wings that have been heretofore instructed in that duty. The number of horses remaining, after mounting those companies, will be turned over to the Quarter-master's Department. The horses with the company at San Antonio, will be turned into the Department at once, preparatory to the movement from Fort Worth. Brevet Major Arnold will proceed to that post with his company from Fort Graham, and take command of the department of the Infantry. Brevet Col. Waite, whose promotion to the 5th Infantry may soon be expected, will remain temporarily at Fort Gates, retaining with him an officer and 14 men, as a guard to the public property until it can be removed.

Companies H and K, 1st Infantry, now at Fort Merrill. A and L of the same regiment, the former from Fort Duncan, the latter from Fort Lincoln, will be concentrated as soon as possible at Fort Martin Scott, via San Antonio, where they will march under Lieut. Col. Bainbridge, with the regimental head-quarters, to the head spring of the north branch of the Llano, and there establish a post.

In case none of the regiment of mounted riflemen shall have arrived at Fort Merrill at the time of the movement of the companies from that post, an officer and ten men will be left there to take charge of the public property until their arrival.

The selection of the exact position of the cantonments in the vicinity of the points indicated, will be at the discretion of the officers commanding, and the first buildings erected will be for the protection of the stores; secondly, the hospitals; thirdly, quarters for the men; and fourthly, quarters for the officers. This rule will in no instance be departed from, and each will be completed before the next in order is begun; the whole to be built in the most economical manner, by the troops, from materials to be found in the neighborhood, the only articles that can be furnished being nails and iron.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.—The Indians are again committing depredations in Western Texas. Lieut. Burleson, John C. Yates, and four others, arrived at San Antonio on the 4th inst., from the Rio Grande. They left Davis's rancho on the 27th ult., with a drove of mules and horses, numbering in all 51, belonging to four of the party. On the 27th of the same month, (December,) about 12 o'clock m., they had encamped about 35 miles this side of the rancho, and while eating their dinner they were charged upon by about eighteen Indians, believed to be Camanches. The party fired only one gun, and killed one Indian; the other gun, there being two in the company, missed fire. The party, finding resistance to be of no avail, fled for the chaparral, and thence to Agua Nueva on the road leading to San Patricio. There were none of the Americans wounded or injured in their persons. They lost all their animals, except two saddle horses. Mr. Yates reports that he lost property in mules, horses and gold, in value not less than $3000, which the Indians took possession of. Mr. Thomas and two companions, members of the same party, lost properly to a much greater amount.

ROBBERIES.—Robberies are frequent along the Rio Grande. The San Antonio ledger mentions two large robberies recently.

STATE PRINTERS.—Messrs. Cushney & Hampton, of the Austin State Gazette, have been elected State Printers.

LOUISIANA.—The charter of [illegible] has been repealed, the entire delegation from that city advocating and voting for the measure.

The House of Representatives has passed the Senate bill, confirming the action of the Auditor and Comptroller in scaling the public debt.

The great Internal Improvement bill is still before the House.

MATAGORDA.—P. C. Stewart, Esq., has been elected Mayor of Matagorda.

MOB OUT.—The schooner Elizabeth, reported ashore off Matagorda, has been got off.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.—The Brownsville Flag, under the head of Filibusters, has the following article in regard to the revolutionary movement:

We have nothing reliable to give our readers as to the movements of the renowned band of knights-errant, but learn they are still encamped on the Rio Grande at the mouth of the Conchas. We have seen some three or four of their leaders about town for the few last days.

No doubt what force they have is not far from this city, and it is whispered around confidentially that they have 1800 men, and two pieces of artillery arrived with Capt Ford from Texas. We judge from all we can learn that some reinforcements have actually arrived at last, and that another attack upon Matamoras is seriously meditated, perhaps ere many days. Ben Arabe has under his command at least 2500 men, with guns and entrenchments; in fact, every material requisite for a successful defence of his position. If he cannot, so situated, take care of this little band of undisciplined men, why then Mexico may as well drop out of the family of nations. News persons.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, January 13, 1852.

SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Senate of the persons employed in his office.

The Chair laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, in reply to a resolution of the Senate, communicating information in respect to certain military roads in Iowa.

Mr. Miller presented the proceedings of a public meeting in Trenton, Newberry, recommending intervention by the United States in favor of the people of Hungary.

Mr. Shields presented the petition of Alfred W. Thompson, praying that a contract be made with him for carrying the U. S. mail in steam-ships between the United States and Ireland.

Mr. Stockton gave notice of a bill providing for a line of mail steamships to ply between Jersey City and Galway, Ireland.

Mr. Soulé presented petitions praying the appointment of a new Board of Commissioners on Claims against Mexico.

Mr. Dawson reported back the House bill for the relief of the Virginia Wooden Company.

Mr. Underwood introduced a bill to purchase the stock owned by individuals in the Portland and Louisville Canal.

Mr. Bradbury introduced a joint resolution providing for the publication of an unpaid compendium of the various public documents, to be published in one volume.

Mr. Rusk offered a resolution allowing the Committee on Post-offices and Post-roads a clerk; and a resolution was submitted by Mr. Gwin, allowing a clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Senate then took up the joint resolution providing for a contract with Messrs. Donaldson & Armstrong for printing the census of the seventh census, and after a long debate the subject was, on motion of Mr. Pearce, postponed for three weeks, to enable the Senate to receive and examine such report on the plan of the census as may by that time be communicated to the Senate. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The Speaker called for reports of committees, and a number of bills, most of them of a private nature, were reported, and either laid on the Speaker's table, or referred to committees of the House, or on the state of the Union. Among these were bills regulating the carrying of passengers by vessels, and one extending the time for locating Virginia military land warrants, and for returning the moneys thereon; and one determining the time at which the United States Court in the Western District of Virginia; and one in amendment of the act, at present in force in the District of Columbia, for punishing incendiaries, by extending the punishment to cases where the out-houses which are attempted to be burnt are not occupied.

A motion to insert the word "buildings" led to a discussion of a purely technical nature, it being contended that the term "out-house" would be construed strictly, and would not meet the difficulty which the bill is intended to rectify.

At length the "previous question" put an end to the discussion, and the bill was read a third time.

Mr. Stanton, of Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings, endeavored to have the bill taken up which was sent from the Senate, appropriating $1200 for gutting on two ranges for the purpose of the library, but the motion to suspend the rule was lost—yeas 95.

A bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, declaring that all certificates of bounty land warrants be assignable by endorsement thereon, and by the same formality as when claims for land are valid in the State where such transfers are made.

Mr Dunham explained the different provisions of the bill, which embraces the allowance to the public officer to be paid by the person settling the land; what constitutes the [illegible] of service of an officer or soldier; denotes the class of persons embraced in the bill embracing those engaged in the suppression of Indian hostilities; making the certificates transferable to the widow or heirs of deceased officers and soldiers; and providing that any warrant may be located on lands subject to private location.

He moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, for the purpose of putting it on its passage, when a motion was substituted and carried to take up the business on the Speaker's table.

A message from the President, transmitting various reports of departments, was then submitted. Among others was one from the Secretary of the Interior, which it appears should have been made to the Committee on Ways and Means, and which Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, moved should not be received.

Mr Houston, of Alabama, thought the motion that had been taken of the irregularity would prevent its reception; and Mr Jones modified his motion, and it was laid on the table. He subsequently moved to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. Bayly hoped the motion would not prevail. The House having acted under a mistake.

A motion was here carried to adjourn, and at the usual hour the House adjourned over till to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Telegraphic Items.

Three Days Later from Europe—Arrival of the Arctic—Cotton Advancing—Breadstuffs Advanced—France Quiet.

NEW YORK, Wednesday, Jan 21.

The Collins steamer Arctic has arrived here, with dates from Liverpool to the 7th inst. The following is a brief summary of her commercial news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, January 7.

There has been a good demand for the Cotton market since the departure of the Asia and the sales of the three business days reach 25,000 bales, of which 5000 were taken for export. The quotations now are for Middling Orleans 5¼, and for Middling Uplands 4¾—for the prices having advanced about ¼d. since the Asia left.

Flour is about one shilling per barrel dearer. The market opened with a good demand, which however, has fallen off at the close.

The money market is without material change. Consols are quoted at 97¼. French five per cents are selling at 95.

France.

Paris and the country generally remain quiet and without any political changes of any moment.

Later from Key West.

CHARLESTON, January 18.

The Havana steam packet Isabel, has arrived here from Havana, via Key West, with dates from the latter port of the 15th inst.

Salvage had been awarded on the brig Mechanic of 15 per cent, and $5,000 the cargo, and $3,500 on the vessel. The Surveyors have reported her as worthy.

The schooner Ephraim Anderson sailed for New Orleans on the 13th, and the Eastern Queen, for the same port, on the 14th inst.

Particulars by the Arctic—Liverpool Markets.

NEW YORK, January 21.

Flour is quoted at 21@22s. 6d. ₱ barrel; Corn has advanced; Bacon is steady; the stock of Beef is exhausted; Lard is steady.

France.

The country is entirely quiet, and the public funds are rising.

Louis Napoleon's effigy is hereafter to be placed on the coin of the country.

Austria.

The Emperor has formally abrogated the Constitution. The Continental news generally is unimportant.

BOSTON, January 21.

The Cunard steamer sailed at noon to-day for Liverpool.

Political.

MAINE LEGISLATURE.—The House of Representatives of the Maine Legislature passed by a vote of 83 to 34, the following resolution:

Resolved, That we earnestly desire that the Government of the United States may exert an influence in the same case and proper manner against all such intervention as was practiced by Russia against Hungary, during the struggle of the latter with Austria.

MARYLAND.—Hon. Edward Lloyd was chosen Speaker of the House of Representatives on the 16th.

OHIO.—On the 16th, the Senate of Ohio passed a resolution declaring that the United States owe it to the cause of liberty, and ought to interfere, should Russia or any other power intermeddle with the internal affairs of other nations struggling for freedom.

NEW YORK.—Delegates have been appointed by the democracy of New York city, to attend the National Convention.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Another bill has been introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature, prohibiting the use of jails for the detention of fugitive slaves. It will be recollected that a similar bill was passed at the last session, pocketed by the Governor towards the close of the session, and vetoed by him since the commencement of the present session.

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature to repeal the fourth and sixth sections of the law to prevent kidnapping.

THE COLORED IN CALIFORNIA.—Thomas C. Hambly, Esq., formerly of York, Pa., but now a resident of California, in a letter to the editor of the York Republican, speaking of a professional visit to the town of Jackson, in Calveras county, says:

"Two courts were in session, the County and the District Courts. My case was in the County Court, before Judge Smith, and was disposed of at, I believe, the very table on which Collyer, the county clerk, died, who was shot by the same Judge Smith, a few weeks previously.

"The counsel opposed to me, Gen. Anderson, is the buckling old gentleman, was armed with a huge Bowie knife, that hung like a broad sword, by his side, and I was perhaps the only unarmed man in the body. The Judge had his Colt revolvers buckled on—the spectators had theirs—the grand jury, etc., and, as I said, the sheriff and his assistants theirs. In fact, Colt's revolvers and gun fraudy are a part of every day's dress. The County Court was held in the clerk's office, as the District Court occupied the court-house. The latter was built of pine, and the lumber came since in 1849 or 1850. The former became a few inches higher than my head, one end of the house entirely open, and no floor but the earth, which was trampled into a deep dust; except four or five boards for the judge to sit on. The building was about 25 feet long and about 15 wide. Yet in this shade building the most perfect order reigned. Every thing transpired with dignity and decorum, and the law looked as much, if not more majestic than in brick and mortar with granite pillars in front."

STEAM CARRIAGES FOR ROADS.—A Mr. J. K. Fisher has made sundry improvements in steam carriages for plank and Macadamized roads. To bring these improvements to bear upon public convenience, a company has been formed in New York, under the title of the American Steam Carriage Company, of which W. Serrell, Esq., is President, and Mr. Fisher, Secretary. The capital of the company is to be one hundred thousand dollars, divided into shares of a hundred dollars each, are faithfully executed, and he finds himself powerless for the want of Legislative enactment. For this there should be some remedy."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The commissioners appointed to superintend the public building at this place, found themselves on the eve of its completion without funds to effect that desirable object in consequence of the exhaustion of the fund appropriated for that purpose by the last Legislature. In this strait, from their great desire to complete the State House for the reception of the General Assembly, as well as from a spirit of economy, they were induced to negotiate a loan of $12,000 from the Louisiana State Bank upon their own responsibility. It must be obvious that had the progress of the building been arrested in this unexpected manner and the workmen discharged until after the adjournment of your body, the State would have suffered loss in building materials, to probably half the amount of the sum borrowed, besides the inconvenience of holding sessions in an unfinished building.

At their request I addressed a note to the President and Directory of the Bank, stating that I would recommend this loan to your favorable consideration, and that I believed the Legislature would not refuse to make the necessary provision for reimbursement.

In conformity to the provision of the act, to provide for the disposition of certain public property in the city of New Orleans, approved March 18, 1850," I caused the remainder of the old State House square, to be laid out, by the Surveyor General of the State, Louis Brengier, Esq., into lots of proper form, and sold at auction by Col. H. W. Palfrey, auctioneer, after the usual advertisements. The property being sold on credit and payable at such periods as would meet the bonds of the State issued for the purchase of said property, requiring a certain proportion of each purchase in cash to meet all necessary expenses of sale, and to enable the State to pay the first issues of the coupons of interest falling due immediately after the sale of such property. The sale is over and above the amount necessary to extinguish the debt and interest, it was thought proper to require in cash, proportioned to the different purchasers, which was placed in the treasury.

The lots having sold for a larger sum than the law contemplated, in obedience to the provisions of the second section of the aforesaid act, I proceeded, in due form of law, to transfer the lot or portion of ground designated to said second section to the New Orleans Mechanics' Society. That has been accepted, after deducting all expenses, was placed in the treasury, and the bonds, with coupons of interest amounting in the whole to $250,80 29, were delivered to the Auditor of Public Accounts."

I herewith transmit to you a letter from the Mayor of New Orleans, marked [E.] with accompanying documents, upon the subject of a naval depot and navy yard. It would seem from these to be an object highly worthy of the consideration of the General and State Governments and meriting at your hands such cooperation as you may be able to give."

Shortly after the close of the last session of the General Assembly, a number of our enterprising citizens became interested in an extensive grant, made by the Mexican Government with a view to establish a more expeditious communication between the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific, across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; and prepared to form a joint stock company for the construction of a railroad for that purpose. This work was one that promised to be of universal commercial importance and particularly advantageous to the commerce of New Orleans. In taking the preliminary steps, it was found our existing laws would not authorize the organization of a company, with power to employ so large a capital as would necessarily be required to carry on and complete a work of such magnitude. An application, supported by petitions numerously signed, was then made that I should exercise the extraordinary power vested in me by the Constitution of calling the Legislature together in extra session.

Resolutions were adopted at various public meetings urging upon me the propriety and absolute necessity of this measure.

It is at all times unpleasant for me to differ from my fellow-citizens who are possessed of greater facilities than myself for information upon subjects of general interest to the community, and who have equally the public good at heart; particularly was this the case in the present instance, as many of the principal applicants were citizens distinguished for their clearsightedness, energy and public enterprise. I could not, however, view the matter in the same light that they did, and as it has ever been my unalterable rule in the discharge of my public duties to do nothing that requires an augmentation of public expenditure, unless the necessity or advantage be apparent, I was constrained to refuse the application.

A portion of the five per cent. fund has been retained by the General Government to cover a balance for our payment of expenses during the war with Mexico. That is one that we may have payed for objects not strictly authorized by law, is not improbable, and such payment would be a fair, though not a liberal, charge against the State.

But it may well be questioned whether the accounting officers at Washington would be competent to divert this fund from its legitimate purpose. It is even doubtful if Congress for the Legislature could so raise that power.

Some legislation seems to be required relative to the inspection laws of the State. Under the voluntary system they have become a dead letter. It would, in my opinion, be as well to abolish them altogether, or to permit them to remain in their present condition.

The important duties performed by Notaries, would seem to demand some specific legislation. It has been suggested, that a license obtained after due examination before one or more of the District Judges, would give assurances of their proper qualification. A limitation of their term of office, and security for the faithful performance of the responsible trusts and duties confided to them, may be requisite.

Under the proceedings arising out of the will of the late John McDonogh, the Attorney General deemed it advisable to institute suit in behalf of the State, and to call to his aid, state counsel, for whose services I recommend suitable compensation be appropriated.

This subject, together with the proceedings in the case of the New Orleans Navigation Company, will be properly understood by reference to the letter of the Attorney General, marked [F.]

Immediately after the adjournment of the last Legislature, the Secretary of the Interior was informed that the necessary appropriation had been made by the State, to defray the expense of selecting the swamp and overflowed lands granted to Louisiana by act of Congress, approved March 24, 1849.

The principles to be observed in making the selections, were promptly determined upon by the appropriate officers of the General Government, and forwarded to the Surveyor General of Louisiana and myself, that the business might be immediately commenced. Their construction of the law was in a liberal spirit and calculated to facilitate the transfer of the lands to the State; but I conceive not more liberal than was fully justified by the spirit and liberal tenor of the law. I appointed A. D. Wooldridge, Esq., State Engineer, principal agent to represent the State under the law of the last session of the Legislature, approved March 21st, 1850. This gentleman, from his extensive acquaintance with the alluvial portions of the State, the connection of his office with kindred duties, and his prompt attention to business, appeared to me the person through whose agency the duties could have been attended to in the most beneficial manner, and with least expense to the State. The duties imposed upon him have been discharged in a way to meet my approbation, and I herewith submit his report, which contains the full history and result of his agency.

I am happy to inform the Legislature, that the serious difficulty mentioned in the report with regard to the refunding of money received by the United States for overflowed lands, since the passage of the law making the grant, and obtaining our patents for lands already selected, has been obviated, and we are assured by the proper authorities that the amount will be refunded, and the patents forthwith issued.

The suggestions of the agent are entitled to your respectful consideration, though some of his views may be of doubtful policy. The necessity of protecting the swamp lands from depredation is very apparent, and an active and faithful agent might, by uniting this with the other duties of his office, be very serviceable to the State.

Although large portions of the lands granted by Congress are evidently valuable for the timber, and are unsuited at present, for cultivation, and it might be advisable, in relation thereto, to adopt the views of the agent with regard to denying pre-emption to settlers, but as there are other portions which are now settled, which seem reasonable, whether these should not be disposed of by pre-emption when desired. The views of the agent show that the subject is not without its difficulties, but it seems to me that the usual policy of the State should not be hastily abandoned, and pre-emptions denied to actual settlers, although many of the lands selected are, doubtless, for the present, of little value; enough of the lighter, and now valuable, or will be easily made so, by the progressive improvements of the State, to show that the grant is one of great importance. Whether the lands should be at once disposed of, or withheld from sale by the State, until their value is augmented by our public improvements, a question upon which there is reason for difference of opinion, in the present state of our treasury, however, it would seem to be desirable to avail ourselves of some fund, for the prosecution of our internal improvements from this source, if practicable, and of its practicability I have no doubt. I am informed that many persons are already ready to enter and purchase portions of these lands, and that nothing to disgust or deter them, but only deprive ourselves of means we need, but, to some extent, interfer with the settlement and development of the country.

By exposing all our swamp lands to sale, we should only be able to dispose of those of greatest present value, and by using the means thus acquired in judicious improvements of our portions, which would not now sell, they would be brought into market. We only need enough ready means to begin, and this could soon be obtained, and afterwards we could go steadily forward in our work. If it be determined to sell the swamp lands, though therein, without doubt, great difference in their present values, as it is reasonable to suppose only the best will be selected, I am of opinion that the minimum price should not be fixed at less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

As the protection of our alluvial lands from inundation is a matter of paramount importance and annually increasing in interest, and as the swamp lands were appropriated by Congress to aid in protecting and reclaiming these lands, I would respectfully suggest, for your consideration whether it would not be good policy, and an act of justice, to appropriate a portion of these lands or the proceeds realized from them, to aid the front proprietors in maintaining a more reliable system of levees in the entire alluvial portions of the Mississippi River within our State. A survey might be made of the whole river and the position and dimensions of the levees determined by the State Engineer, or some other State officer; and those each proprietor required to make the levee as directed, and for which he should receive payment, in part or whole, from the fund thus created, or by the lands set aside for the purpose for which it was designed, and would be of great benefit to all, as it would increase the quantity of arable land, render that now cultivated more secure, and, by increasing the aggregate taxable property of the State, diminish our present burthen.

As the law granting the swamp lands to the State, has been interpreted as taking effect from the date of its passage, a conflict of titles may arise between the State and those who, in the mean time, have entered in the United States Land Office, land which has been thus determined as already belonging to the State; and as these entries were made in good faith, I would recommend that the State should not interfere with their titles, but grant them a quit claim, on condition that they transfer to her their right to receive from the United States, the sums they received by her through error, which will, of course, be refunded.

In dismissing this subject, I would say to your honorable body, that from my own knowledge, as well as the information derived from the State agent, I am convinced great labor has been thrown upon the United States officers here, and at the seat of government, in transferring the swamp lands to the State, which has been performed by them with cheerfulness, and for which the State owes them a debt of sincere gratitude.

Portions of the State have suffered the calamities of overflow during the last two years, and the increasing danger of the recurrence of such disasters, calls loudly for the consideration of some effective measures of protection. The attention of the Legislature was directed at the last session to this important subject; but it is believed that tangible or valuable has grew out of the measure adopted. The great and rapid extension of the above, must necessarily place the lower portion of in such peril. How this impending danger may by a better and more effectual system of for the ... ded to the State by ... reduced tributary to ... the republican spirit of the day," the monarchical lifetenure office was repudiated by all classes; and the consideration that had perhaps the greatest weight with those who desired a change of government, was the absolutism of it took monopoly, a power in the despotic tendency of which was too well attested to submit to such an arbitrary division of public sentiment.

The assembling of a Convention was a consequence of this expressed will of the people through the ballot box; and the time selected for such meeting by the delegates of the great mass, seemed most propitious. In the absence of all fruitful instinctive issues, was before that representative body the courteous and feeling letter of the donor) who was himself a conspicuous actor in those stirring scenes that now belong to history.

In compliance with a request made by the Central Authority Committee at Washington, I appointed a committee of citizens, of which Manuel White, Esq., was chairman, to select such articles of agriculture or art as might be deemed worthy of exhibition at the great London Fair. No report of the success of the enterprise has come to my hand, which I deem necessary for your consideration.

The reports of the Directors of the Penitentiary, for the two years ending the 1st inst., will be found in accompanying documents, marked II.

The condition of the institution is as good as could be expected, and I have no hesitation in recommending that the present housing system should be continued, it being as experience has shown, more advantageous to the State and the cause for which we must in some way provide. From the Reports you will perceive there has unfortunately been a considerable increase in crimes since your predecessors assembled, and immediate action is urged by the directors for an enlargement of the present limits for the reception and safe-keeping of criminals. You will perceive there has been a considerable falling off, the present year, in the profits of the institution, but the State still receives some remuneration for the expense incurred, whereas under the old system, the institution was a draw upon the treasury.

There are at present eight deaf and dumb boys and girls, from this State at the Danville (Ky.) Institute.

I continue to receive flattering accounts of their health, morals and education; allow me to suggest that the appropriation of $1500 is barely sufficient to maintain and educate that number, and it is not increased, all other petitions for the charity under the law must be refused. I would suggest the amount for this laudable purpose be fixed at two thousand dollars, a sum not more than our future wants in this regard will require.

I would recommend a careful revision of the Militia Laws of the State, to render them more effective, and especially the act passed at the last session of the Legislature, entitled "An Act, to amend an Act" entitled "An Act for the organization and discipline of the Militia for the State of Louisiana", approved 19th March, 1842, and approved March 21, 1850.

The object and purpose of the last named act has been defeated in consequence of the careless wording of the law. The intent of the framers of the Bill was no doubt praiseworthy, its chief aim being the encouragement of the formation of volunteer companies throughout the State, and as such companies are generally composed of poor young men—mechanics and laboring men who are not very able to spare their time from their monthly occupations, and incur the necessary expense of equipping themselves, it was no doubt thought by the Legislature that this very desirable object could be best attained by levying a commutation tax upon all persons required to do militia duty, and affording them the alternative of attending the regular musters now ordered by law, or of paying a small sum for exemption from this duty. The view of the subject was no doubt correct; my experience in such matters has brought my mind to the conviction that a proper organization of the local militia, under the present state of public feeling, is chimerical, and I unhesitatingly recommend the encouragement of the formation of volunteer companies, as a class of citizen soldiery whose services would be most prompt and lauded when demanded by any cause. But for the reason given, the want of perspicuity, and the general opposition to the law, your attention may be called to its revision or repeal, as wisdom may suggest."

The report of the Adjutant and Inspector General will exhibit the quantity and state of arms now on hand. It is considered that we have quite sufficient of small arms to supply all calls for a long time, but there are frequent applications for cannon, from a number of companies now fully organized and equipped, with that exception. One company, the Baton Rouge Artillery, has received a new piece from the quota due by the United States, but this has exhausted that source. There are three or four brass pieces, which have been condemned. I would recommend an appropriation for recasting the same.

The custom prevails in other States of an interchange of statutes enacted, judicial reports, and indeed all papers and documents of a public character. We have no law making it the duty of any officer to reciprocate such kind and valuable offices, and I draw your attention to this omission on our part, in the confident hope that you will meet by law such a liberal spirit on the part of others. Provision has already been made by law for the distribution of the annual decisions of the Supreme Court, and the duty of doing this is entrusted to the Treasurer. The Secretary of State would undoubtedly be the most proper officer to perform this task, and I would respectfully suggest that in passing a law, having in view the interchange suggested, you will give that officer the control of the business.

In another place I have alluded to the sale of the public property in New Orleans. The sale fully realized the most sanguine expectations, yielding a sum more than necessary to pay the bonds of the State given for the whole square. In compliance with law, as before stated, I transferred a portion of it to the Mechanics' Society of that city; and I am gratified to inform you that this Association is now erecting a building upon it, which will be an ornament to the city."

The Register of the Landoffice will submit a report, showing the condition of that office, and the criminal action of the late Register, Richard Lourks, Esq., to which I would ask your special attention. Proper measures have been taken to bring this delinquent officer to a strict accountability, and I entertain hopes that they will be successful.

I feel highly gratified in announcing to you the receipt of a message from the Governor of New Hampshire, enclosing a resolution passed by that State favoring strongly the late Compromise measures passed by Congress, and another resolution favoring the establishment of a Bureau of Agriculture in the Department of the Interior at Washington. Whilst I am deeply impressed with a sense of the vital importance of agriculture, I compass that the functions of the Federal Government are already sufficiently multifarious and complex, and that this subject should be left to the fostering care of the State Governments, which must be fully alive to the necessity of promoting it in every legitimate manner.

The new Constitution introduces the system of biennial sessions of the Legislature, an exception being made in favor of the first session. Neither the attention of that body, nor of the former Executive, was attracted to the fact that the terms of a number of offices then existing terminated at that time, and that the incumbents necessarily held over, though the period fixed by law for their retaining office had expired. There is now no mode by which successors can be appointed. The clause in the Constitution applies to the cases of vacancies occurring during the continuance of a term, and does not authorize the Executive to appoint when the term expires, and when the appointment is to be made by and with the consent of the Senate. In such case he cannot act until the arrival of the term for holding the regular session of the Legislature, when joint action can be had. There have been a number of instances of this kind, in which incumbents have held over for many months. This is true as to the Bank presidents composing the Board of Liquidation of the Citizens' Bank, the Directors of the Penitentiary, the Administrators of the Charity Hospital, the State Engineer, etc. It would be proper to make provisions by law for such novel cases as these, providing that all terms of office shall expire at a period when appointments can be made in accordance with law.

An unfortunate riot in New Orleans during the highly excited state of public feeling in regard to the fearful fate of Lopez and his followers, has, as you are aware, been made a matter of grave national correspondence between our Government and the accredited Minister of Her Catholic Majesty. I take pleasure in assuring you that none of the officers of the State were derelict in the performance of their duty; and I deem it my especial duty, as it is my desire to inform you that the good people of the city took the most summary mode of putting an end to these riotous proceedings, and vindicating the majesty of the law. Mobs are almost unknown in New Orleans, the sense of horror by citizens being utterly opposed to such anarchical manifestations; and it would be manifestly unjust to hold them responsible for a slight effervescence of feeling, confined to a few misguided men, operated upon by the most inflammable appeals.

It becomes my duty to inform you that I received a communication from W. W. King, Esq., one of the legal gentlemen appointed by my predecessor, under the act of 20th December, 1849, to consolidate and revise the statutes and codes of this state, informing me that in consequence of some delay in the printing of the work, it could not be ready in time to present it to the Legislature, on the opening of the session, but that they will be enabled to do so, by the first of February next. Annexed is his letter upon this subject.

"Accompanying the Treasurer's Report, herewith submitted, you have a letter addressed by that officer to the Attorney General, with his answer in relation to the failure of the Second Municipality to pay the interest on the bonds issued by the State in her favor, and the difficulty which the accounting officer of the Treasury felt in paying it, as seems to have been contemplated by the act. In consequence of there being no appropriation, you will no doubt see the importance of relieving the State from this dilemma by immediate action, and of guarding her credit by distinct provisional appropriation against a similar occurrence from the same cause.

By the Treasurer's report you will perceive that the receipts and disbursements of that department for the last two years have been as follows:

Balance transferred to the present Treasurer on the 12th February, 1850	$265,705 50
Total receipts from the above date to 31st December, 1850	1,008,175 91
	$1,273,971 41
Total disbursements during same period	951,545 96
Leaving a balance on the 31st Dec., 1850, of	325,426 45
The receipts for the year 1851 amount to the sum of	836,247 44
	$1,161,673 91
Disbursements during same period	852,787 54
Balance in the treasury on the 31st December, 1851	308,886 37
Composed as follows:
General fund	$76,568 03
Mill tax fund	154,671 54
Poll tax fund	19,919 66
Internal improvement fund	54,132 20
Dead and lever fund	3,594 95
	$308,886 37

From this report and the report of the Auditor of Public Accounts, you may be able to arrive at a correct understanding in regard to the financial condition of the State.

Within a brief period there has been some discussion as to the practicability of calling a convention to frame a new Constitution for our State. This discussion, so far as my knowledge extends, has not been general in its nature, nor have I been put in possession of any proof warranting the presumption that the people of the State desire the abandonment of the present and the formation of a new organic law.

The present Constitution is the result of a compromise of long cherished opinions. I may say prejudices and different, perhaps more liberal views suggested by the progress of events in this as in other members of the confederacy. The lawgivers of an earlier period in our history reconciled doubtless, what then appeared sound policy keeping in view the feelings of those to be governed, and gave the State a fundamental law, that was, perhaps, as free from objection as any instrument made in this state, at a similar time, and under like circumstances, could have been held. But it was not to be supposed that the spirit of progress and enlightened innovation every where visible would fail to exert its influence in our State; and in due course of time a call that could not be resisted, coming as it did from the mass of the people of the State demanded a second Constitution, that should be to some extent a reflex of the spirit of the time, free from the restrictions in the first instrument, and other features deemed objectionable. A convention was called for by of our State, and those you represent; and assure you it will be to me a source of pleasure to so cooperate with you in the furtherance of the ends for which you have assembled in an official capacity. JOSEPH WALKER

Later from California.

By the Empire City we have received dates from California to the 19th ult. The report which reached here by the way of New York, to the effect that the Indian troubles had been brought to an end, is fully confirmed. The hostility of the Indians did not proceed to such an extent as was anticipated, and they have all dispersed. They had fortified themselves in a deep mountain pass, about eighty miles from San Diego, and on the heights each side, had collected rocks to hurl down upon the Americans if they made an attack on them. The volunteers, who had turned out on the occasion, deemed it imprudent to attack this strong position, and after some skirmishing, they returned to San Diego.

Shortly after this, some friendly Indians succeeded in capturing a Californian named Juan Verdugo, an Indian, and the notorious Bill Marshall, all of whom were supposed to have been instrumental in exciting the Indians to revolt. They were taken to Old Town, near San Diego, and as martial law had been proclaimed, a court martial was at once formed to try them. The proceedings were very orderly and deliberate, and the prisoners were allowed the benefit of a jury. An extra of the San Diego Herald gives the particulars of the execution of Verdugo and Bill Marshall. It says:

"The graves were dug, and all the preparations made, during the forenoon, for carrying out the sentence of the court martial. At about two o'clock the volunteers were under arms, and the people began to gather in considerable numbers about the plaza and courthouse. A priest was with the prisoners most of the forenoon, and accompanied them to the gallows, where they received final absolution. They were then informed that a short time would be allowed them, if they wished to make any remarks. Marshall was the first to speak. He said that he was prepared to die, and he hoped that his friends, and the people around him, would forgive him; that he trusted in God's mercy, and hoped to be pardoned for his many transgressions. He still insisted that he was innocent of the crime for which he was about to die. This was about the substance of his remarks, as near as we could learn from those who stood near the scaffold.

"Verdugo spoke in Spanish. He acknowledged his guilt and admitted the justness of the sentence passed upon him; said he was ready and willing to yield up his life as a forfeit for his crimes and wickedness. The ropes were then adjusted—the priest approached them for the last time—said some consoling words to them—repeated a final prayer—extended the crucifix which each kissed several times, when he descended from the wagon, which immediately moved on, leaving the poor unfortunate wretches suspended about five feet from the ground. The fall could not have been more than a foot, at the most, for their necks were not dislocated. Verdugo struggled considerably, but the Sonorian scarcely moved a muscle. Both of them were in their shirtsleeves, and neither of them hood-winked. Marshall was quite a small sized man, with regular and rather agreeable features, and a head indicating, phrenologically, great determination. The other was much stouter, with a frame apparently of great power. He was a shade darker than the average of Californians, and had a most loathsome countenance.

Marshall was a notorious, desperate character. He was once an English sailor, but ran away from his ship some four years since, and married an Indian woman. He is known to have been instrumental in the murder of several men, and was known to entertain a bitter hostility to the whites. Adding to this his great influence among the Indians, there is little doubt that the commencement of hostilities by them was mainly through his instigations.

A boy who formerly lived with Hon. J. J. Warner was convicted of giving false testimony in the case of Marshall, and was sentenced to receive twenty-five lashes on the bare back. He stood the flogging with great firmness and then remarked that it did hurt some, but that he was glad to get off so.

Marshall's father-in-law, who was arrested with him, was released, more on account of his age than a belief of his innocence. In fact, he confessed that he knew of four men being murdered, and knew it was to be done beforehand, but he alleged that he was too old to take any measures to prevent the murder.

A detachment of United States troops had arrived at San Diego and had started for Agua Calliente, which is near the rendezvous of Garra, a hostile Indian chief. Captain Fitzgerald, with a company of volunteers, has also gone towards the same place, but all danger was considered over.

From all accounts it appears that in many particulars the Indians are much abused and exasperated by the whites.

The California Courier, in an article on the causes of the Indian disturbances, says:

We have heard of frequent outrages committed by the whites upon inoffensive and peaceable Indians, and without the least provocation. In the towns on our frontiers they will always be found more or less Indians who have fled there for protection, or to avoid the danger of being shot by some ruffian who considered it a virtue to kill an Indian when it can be done with safety to himself. We have heard persons boast of killing Indians within our State, as they would about killing a grizzly. No wonder, then, that the Indians become exasperated and retaliate whenever an opportunity presents.

A communication signed by a large number of miners at Watson's Gulch, has been addressed to Dr. Wozencraft, United States Indian Commissioner, giving the particulars of the murder of two inoffensive Indians, by a party of white men from the vicinity of Clements's Store, near Wilson's Rancho. The letter states that these men, held a meeting and passed a resolution to kill all male grown Indians, because it was alleged that the Indians had killed and stolen some mules. After passing this resolution, they swore they would kill the first Indian they met with, and two Indians, one of them the Chief of a Rancho, known to nearly all the miners as Jim, or Ned, were the victims of this brutal determination. The letter also states that the same party had killed several Indians who bore an excellent character among the miners at Arbuckle's Gulch. Dr. Wozencraft replies, through the Courier, and states that he is totally unable to fulfil the promises he has himself made to the Indians, and cannot protect them from the whites.

GENERAL NEWS.—The Alta California gives the following general resume of news:

The most pleasing feature of intelligence by this steamer to our Atlantic friends, will be the cheering accounts which we have from the mining districts, north and south, in many parts of the interior considerable quantities of rain fell during one week, and sufficient has fallen everywhere in the mines to re-invigorate the prospects of the miners, and cause an energetic renewal of operations. Most of the rivers have begun slowly to rise, and the great scarcity of water which has been so long complained of, has been partially supplied. Hollows, holes, and trenches, natural and artificial, now afford water, where but a month since labor was nearly or entirely suspended for lack of it. Many who abandoned digging on account of the disheartening prospects which the prolonged absence of the winter rains produced, returned in the latter part of the month with alacrity when the showers commenced. Work is now being prosecuted steadily, successfully, and in a spirit of content. The accounts from Calaveras, Tuolumne, and Mariposa, in the south, and the North and South Forks of the American, the Yuba, and Feather rivers, and Bear Creek in the north, are certainly encouraging. We have also favorable tidings from the Trinity or Shasta mining regions.

The effect of the showers has been to prepare the fortunes of the farmer. Next month and the succeeding one will be planting time in this State. A great many farms will be commenced this winter all over the country, and already the tillers of the soil are beginning to prepare their fields. Agricultural operations will be quite heavy this year.

The tributaries of the Sacramento have so risen from the rains as to open navigation to the upper towns along their banks. Steamers now ply between this city and Marysville, on Feather river.

A decided interest has been awakened in many parts of the State on the subject of fruit. It has been productive of much reflection, and in the Sacramento Valley considerable favor has been shown the project of a railroad to the mines. The survey of the San José Railroad is now complete. The estimated cost of the work will be $1,000,000.

The city of San Francisco has happily been preserved from fires, riots and excitements while the past fortnight, and with the completion of the war establishment, all is quiet. But one disaster of note has befallen us. This was the crash of the two stores of Russey, Bond & Hale, one of our most estimable business firms in this city. Their buildings fell owing to the weakness of the piles which supported them, and buried a vast quantity of goods in the water. No accurate idea of the loss sustained can yet be arrived at. The accident occurred on the morning of the 12th.

The Knickerbockers had a festival in this city on a day dedicated to their patron saint, the 6th inst.

A correspondent of the California Courier says: "A very great excitement prevails in Scott's Valley and Mount Shasta City, in respect to Humbug Diggings, eight miles from this place. Miners are averaging one ounce per day. This is no exaggeration but is truth indisputable, and you will hear greater news, ere long, of its richness. By my writing this, you need not think I have a store there, for I have located in Scott Valley, and intend to till the earth and raise vegetables for the miners and citizens of Mount Shasta City."

FROM SACRAMENTO AND VICINITY.—The Oregon Bar Company, consisting of twenty men have taken out $25,000 the present season. They have not suspended, but merely suspended operations until spring. Their dam is built so securely that they have sanguine hopes of its withstanding the floods of the present season.

The New York Deluning Company on the same stream, have relieved the river bed of about $30,000 since the 29th July last. The Company, which is composed of seven men, intend resuming operations in the spring as soon as the water permits. The frame work of their dam together with those of many others on the North Fork, are probably ere this gliding gracefully down the Rio American.

Other Rivers.—The Sacramento Union says: "We understand that there was purchased by a banking house in this city, within the last fifteen days, the sum of 12,000 ounces gold dust, which amounts to $204,000—and we presume there are several houses in this city that have bought full as much."

SNOW.—The Transcript says that snow has fallen to the depth of several feet in the vicinity of Georgetown and Grey Eagle City.

MARYSVILLE.—There are eleven quartz mining companies on Jamison's Creek. The quartz increases in richness, as they sink into it. Within the last four weeks, claims have risen from $1200 to $3000.

Mr. Wm. Ellis found a diamond in Quinn's garden, near Sonora, for which he was offered $350. He refused to sell.

A Mr. Otis dug up in Holden's garden last week, two pieces of gold weighing $501 and $80. Our informant states that he has five men employed, and averages a pound a day each.

The Los Angeles Star contains an account of the killing of Jack Hays and seven of his men by the Coahuilla Indians in May last. The account is given by George Evans, who is the only one who escaped the massacre. Irving was formerly a citizen of Erie, Pa.

TOMAS, FIGHT.—A correspondent of the Stockton Journal, writing from Fort Miller, on the San Joaquin, says: "I have just seen a gentleman who witnessed a fight yesterday evening, on the San Joaquin, between the San Joaquin Indians, Tom, Kit, Chief and King's River Indians, Pompil, chief. A number of each tribe had collected for the purpose of catching salmon, when a disturbance arose, occasioned by liquor. Two or three were killed and several wounded."

CONVICTED.—Mr. Lundy, a principal in the duel in which Mr. Dibble was killed, has been tried on a charge of murder and convicted.

POLITICAL.—Politicians are busy in preparations for a State Convention to select candidates for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency. The whigs propose to hold a State Convention on the 21st of February.

From Oregon.

The steamship Columbus arrived at San Francisco on the 14th ult., bringing dates from Portland, Oregon City and Astoria.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The Supreme Court of the United States for Oregon Territory, Chief Justice Thomas Nelson, and Hon. Wm. Strong, Associate Justice, recently convened at Oregon City. On the opening of the business of the Court, one of the parties to a suit, through his attorney, objected to the jurisdiction of the court, on the ground that it must sit at the capital of the Territory, which it was contended was Salem, and not Oregon City. After hearing arguments on this point the court adjourned, and on the following day Chief Justice Nelson delivered a written opinion which occupies nearly five columns of the Oregonian. He overruled the alterations, and decided that Oregon City was the capital. Associate Justice Strong also delivered a written opinion, almost as lengthy as that of the Chief Justice, fully concurring in his views.

Judge Pratt, one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court has withdrawn from the court, and gone to Salem, which he says is the capital. Much anxiety is manifested in regard to the opinion of the Legislative Assembly on this question.

GEN. LANE.—The Oregonian says that the impression that Gen. Lane was removed from office by President Taylor, is false. It says:

"General Lane resigned before he had any notice of his removal. We have in our possession, the original proceedings of a public meeting, held in Oregon City, in which resolutions were passed recommending the General to resign, and leave the office of Governor vacant.

Marriages have been astonishingly on the increase during the past month, in Oregon. The Oregonian contains a list of twenty-one marriages, which took place between the 13th and 30th of November. The bounty-land law of Oregon expired on the 30th ult., which we presume accounts for this sudden mania for connubial enjoyment.

Sandwich Islands.

The schooner Lyo Choo arrived at San Francisco from Honolulu on the 14th ult., bringing dates to the 20th November. The Polynesian has the following items:

The clipper ship Flying Cloud passed Honolulu on the 6th of November, being seventeen days from San Francisco.

The United States Consul, Elisha H. Allen, Esq., had returned and resumed his official duties on the 4th of November.

The ship Fanny, Captain Holt, with a full cargo, sailed for the United States on the 23d of October, but owing to her having sprung a leak returned to port on the 4th ult.

Trade and business generally was dull on the Islands, the markets being overstocked with goods.

Crime was on the increase in the Islands, many larcenies having been committed.

The French frigate Algerie, Com. Fourichon, sailed from Honolulu for Hong-Kong on the 9th ult. She exchanged salutes with the United States ship Vandalia.

Monsieur Remy, a naturalist, from Paris, arrived by the French frigate Algerie. He comes to explore the botany, geology, etc., of the Islands, and expects to devote two years to these useful investigations. It is probable that he may make discoveries of great importance to the Islands, and it is desirable that he should be every where well received.

The expedition which sailed some time since from San Francisco had landed quietly at Honolulu, and there is no reason to suppose that there will be any disturbance.

South America.

By the arrival of the British mail steamer New Oranada at Panama, on the 10th ult., dates to the 25th November were received from Valparaiso. The Mercantile Reporter, published at Valparaiso, says:

The revolution, which for nearly two months has distracted this prosperous Republic, is fast drawing to a close, though we may not, perhaps, be enabled to communicate its final termination by this steamer. The country is, happily for us, flourishing a condition; twenty years peace have developed its rich mineral and agricultural resources to such a degree that a revolt of short duration could only paralyze its movement, but not destroy its prosperity.

The revolution in the North is now reduced to the Plaza in Serena, where the insurgents are in possession—the other portions of the town being in the hands of the government troops. Col. Vedaure has generously allowed the citizens to retire from the contest, and has given sufficient time to avoid the destruction of property. He has 800 men under his command, and we expect a speedy conclusion of a revolution which is limited to a market place.

The greatest confidence reigns in Valparaiso among strangers, produced by the excellent measures taken by the Intendente in relation to protect their own and foreign interests. The greatest order and tranquility prevails in Santiago, Valparaiso and Copiapo, and a stranger would scarcely believe in the existence of a revolution, had it not contributed so much in paralyzing the trade and intercourse with the coast.

Her British Majesty's corvette Amphitrite had arrived at Valparaiso from Central American and Callao. She conveys the information that the blockade of Tigris has been given up by the British Government—all claims having been settled.

On the 15th November, the Qualification Act for voters for Deputies was read in the Plaza. The qualification has to be given from the 15th to the 29th December.

Mr. Campbell, the Engineer of the proposed Santiago Railway, has finished his maps of the line, which will presently be handed to the Government, along with a report on the same.

The sum expended by the Government in putting down the insurrection is calculated to amount to half a million dollars, including the purchase of the steamer Cazador for $60,000.

The French barque Aassatiac, of Havre do Grace, Captain Estebe, with a general cargo for Callao, ran on shore on East Falkland Island, near Salvador, August 26th, and became a total wreck. Crew saved.

The British barque Jane Strong, from Africa, bound for Newcastle, with a cargo of saltpetre, encountered heavy gales off the Talcahuano and was making water so fast that the crew consisting of nine men, were obliged to save themselves in a boat, and not being allowed to anter Talcahuano, on account of the blockade, they sailed for Valparaiso, where they arrived with the loss of four of the crew.

By a decree of the Supreme Government of the 10th November, Brazil and Nicaragua wood ten in future be imported free of duty.

Panama.

We have received files of Panama papers up to the 30th ultimo.

THE STEAMER REPUBLIC.—The Panama Star of the 30th says:

"That old hulk, the steamer Republic, left San Francisco, on the 1st December, with over four hundred passengers, and has safely reached here. Where is she? The vessel is under the command of an able and gentlemanly set of officers, and they have, no doubt done all they could, but possibly they may not have been able to keep the old thing afloat, after the many accidents which have happened to her within the past few months."

The same paper adds:

"The British war steamer Driver, Capt. Johnson, came into port on Sunday morning last, from the Gulf of Collingwood, having touched at Guaymas, Mazatlan, Acapulco, and Realjo. She is bound for 'Merrie England,' a new steamer being on the way out to take her place in the Pacific squadron.

We learn that Capt. Johnson reports the steamer Republic as having gone ashore in the neighborhood of San Blas, but having been got off again, had proceeded on her voyage in a crippled state. The river locked in at Acapulco, but learned no tidings of her."

ACCIDENT AT CHAGRES.—Five of the boats which were carrying off passengers to the steamer Ohio, on her last trip, were capsized by the heavy swell of the sea, and two of the returning Californians met with a watery grave. The remainder were rescued by great exertion and timely assistance from other boatmen.

LABORERS.—The Star of the 30th says: "The Ohio, on her last trip, brought out two hundred and sixty fresh emigrants, who had just landed in New York, to labor on the Panama Railroad."

The Star is out with a long article denouncing the agents, one and all, of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at that place. It says:

Ever since the transfer of the agency of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from the hands of Messrs. Zachrisson, Nelson & Co., and the superintendence of Capt. Forbes, the management of its concerns seems to have been growing from bad to worse. From an open, fair, business-like way of transacting its affairs, as conducted by the gentlemanly and accommodating Mr. Nelson, a system that would disgrace an apple woman at a corner of the streets in one of the principal cities at home. Where before were combined commercial integrity and popularity that brought powerful influences to bear upon the public mind in building up the concern, is now a set of irresponsible persons, who seem to take delight in making themselves as unpopular as possible.

The Star charges the Company with favoritism in selling its tickets, taking freight, etc., and charges that the steamer Northerner was lately detained two days in that port, with the United States mails, waiting for freight from an express company. It reasons, however, that the mail contract is not yet secured for another term, and that as the company is not exceedingly rich, it may yet cringe and fawn at the feet of public opinion, with as much servility as it now shows haughtiness and scorn for friend and foe.

The Star learns that the Daniel Webster was recently fined $500 for entering the port of Havana after dark.

NAVAL.—The same paper says that by the last mail, Commodore Macauley, of the Pacific squadron, received instructions to keep some vessel of war constantly in the harbor of Panama.

STRANGE ESCAPE.—The Herald says: "A party of gentlemen of this city, on Friday evening last, consisting of Messrs. Samuel Randall, Jacquet and Mocatta, and an Israelite, were proceeding to Tahoga in a small boat. The boat capsized and commenced drifting to sea. It being dark, the position of the party assumed a decidedly grave aspect; but finally their cries were heard on board the ship Lady Gough, the captain of which immediately ordered a boat, very properly, to their relief, and rescuing the four persons from their perilous position, landed them at Taboga."

SOUTH-WESTERN BOOK STORE.
JOHN BALL,
No. 56 Gravier Street.

At the above establishment can always be found the following:

METHODIST BOOK CONCERN
All the publications of this Concern to be had on application, at catalogue prices.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOOKS.
Sunday School Books of all denominations. Also, an extensive assortment of JUVENILE BOOKS, suitable for Libraries.

THEOLOGY
This department is very large, embracing all the standard works in Theology published in this country and in Europe, among which may be found the following authors: Jeremy Taylor, Wesley, Clarke, Henry, Burkitt, Bunyan, Locke, Bacon, Milton, Collier, Sherlock, Lardner, Smith, Paley, Blackhouse, Burnett, Tillotson, Patrick, How

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KEENER, W. E. BOTH, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D. } Publishing Committee
T. W. HOLMAN. } of Alabama Conference.
W. MURRAH.

VOLUME I. NUMBER 52. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1852. OFFICE, 56 GRAVIER ST.

GLENLY MOOR.... By ALICE CARY.

The summer's golden glow was fled,
In eve's dim arms the day lay dead,
And o'er the dreary woodland wild
The first pale star looked out, and smiled
On Glenly Moor.

Nor lonely call of lingering bird,
Nor insect's cheerful hum, was heard,
Nor traveler, at the close of day,
Singing along the grass-grown way
Of Glenly Moor.

No voice was in the sleepy rills,
No light shone down the village hills,
And, withered on their blackened stalks,
Hung the last flowers along the walks
Of Glenly Moor.

Within a thin, cold drift of light,
The wild rose berries still hung bright,
Where broken turf and new-set stone
Told of a pale one left alone
In Glenly Moor.

All the clear splendor of the skies
Was gathered from her love-lit eyes;
And therefore shadows, dark and cold,
Hung over valley, hill and wold,
In Glenly Moor.

And the winged morning, from the blue
Winnowing the crimson on the dew,
May never unlock the hands so white
That lie beneath that drift of light
In Glenly Moor.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

The Holy Spirit's Operations.

1. The first work of the Holy Spirit is to enlighten. "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Until we are enlightened we are blind. The Gospel is hid to them that are lost: but when the light cometh, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, showing us the glory of God the Father in the face of Jesus Christ, then we see and feel, in part at least, our state, deplorable by nature. We see that God is angry with us every day for our wickedness—we read our condemnation in his law—which is holy, just and good. We see our own weakness and helplessness, involved in the horrible pit of sin, the miry clay of iniquity, dead in trespasses and in sin, so that there remaineth no more spiritual strength in us. Until just now, we were asleep in this death and knew it not; but now the Holy Spirit has awakened us to a sense of our danger and duty. We see by that precious light that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." We see that Christ did make an atoning sacrifice for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the world. We see the condition upon which he offers pardon, life from the dead, peace and heaven, and that condition is repentance towards God and faith in Christ Jesus.

Again, we see that, to comply with this condition we must exercise our will, judgment and affections. To obtain salvation, we must believe with the whole heart unto righteousness—a heart repentant, renouncing every sin; an undivided heart, giving up all for Christ, resigning all to his holy will; and finally, we see plainly these things we cannot do of ourselves, because in us there is no good thing, no strength. The faculties of the soul being so stupefied in moral death that they cannot act; hence we are led to cry for assistance from the blessed Spirit, and the promise is sure and steadfast: "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." In answer to prayer, we receive quickening power, which brings us to the

2. Second work of the Spirit—quickening power, or energy: "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and in sins." The second Adam was made a quickening spirit. Let the lame and helpless cry, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me;" and Christ shall send the Comforter in his name to arouse to action and enable us to take hold on God by faith. Now we believe there is a God, and that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." We now have a will to seek him, truly desiring salvation. Our judgment now becomes active, and we decide to serve God. The heart begins to say—

I can but perish if I go,
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away, I know
I shall forever die."

And our affections are somewhat strengthened, also, so that we would love the Lord, because he first loved us.

Finally, we now begin to try to do something in the way of religion, but poor is the effort and many the blunders we make. True, by the light that now shineth in our path and in our hearts, and the quickening grace applied to the soul, we are determined to go to heaven; but how to go, we know not yet as we ought. It is a difficult work for us, like the infant just beginning to stand alone, fearful to make one step without assistance.

3. But the Divine Spirit now comes near for his third work, which is to draw to Christ. Jesus said, "None can come to me except the Father draw him." "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." "I drew them with bands of love;" "The love of Christ constraineth us." The Father, through the Son, hath sent the Holy Spirit into the world to influence men, and to draw them by divine motions, and the sweet words of love, "reproving them of sin, righteousness and judgment." Scripture cords are used to draw us to our Saviour. He came to lead us into all truth; "this is the way, walk ye in it." None other name is given under heaven among men, whereby they can be saved—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." He is able to save to the utmost all that come to God through him. He says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Let him that heareth say come: let him that is athirst, come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Christ is the way, the truth and the life. If any man liveth and believeth in Him, he shall never die: and if a man believeth Him, though he were dead yet he shall live. God out of Christ is a consuming fire. Sinai's thunders roar—lightnings glare around the sinner unsaved by grace; and the light he now has, and the quickened nerve of the soul, prepares him to see and feel these things in all their terror. And the pit of eternal ruin now is seen, with open mouth, near by—alarm, danger of death and hell brings many a sigh and prayer from the heart and tear from the eye: and hell affrights, and Christ invites: and as the last incentive to influence the soul, heaven opens its delights and joys close behind the cross, which fires the soul anew to press forward. But after the Spirit has brought all these things to draw to Christ, there is still a want of faith to claim the blessings promised. More light is wanting and must be had, or the chief secret will never be known, which is Christ in the pardon of all sin.

4. The next work of God's holy Spirit is to assist our faith; then by the heavenly conductor the soul is led in a way it has not known. For the Divine Spirit takes the things that are Christ's, and shows them to us, making them ours, and thus assists our faith by bringing the blessing near. When all human power, intellectual energy, determination of will, and going forth of affection have failed, then he pours out his Spirit on us, from on high, to help our infirmities.

The next thing he shows us, is the deficiency and inconsistency of our repentance. First, we have not lost all confidence in the flesh, but are still trying to grieve or weep, cry, pray or seek, by one or all these means, to get near the Cross; we are inconsistent, for we know that though these are fruits of repentance, they are not meritorious. He then shows us Christ in his love towards us; that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we, through his poverty might be rich. He was manifested, died, rose again from the dead, and now intercedeth for us in heaven. He is a propitiation for our sins, and not ours only, but for the sins of the whole world. Finally, he shows us the Cross, and on it the bleeding victim. It is sounded in our ears, and whispered to our hearts. "He died for you. Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. Look and live: believe and be saved." When the soul perceives the still small voice, it cries out, "My Lord and my God, I can, I do believe. I see my Saviour on the Cross, and seeing, I am saved. Glory to God, in the highest."

5. The fifth work is to regenerate our nature. So soon as we believe with a heart unto righteousness, and make confession with the tongue unto salvation, we are justified freely before our Heavenly Father, and He forthwith sends down a reprieve, to be read to us by the Holy Spirit; and He makes the impression on our minds so lively, that we understand as plainly as if he had spoken with man's voice, "Son or daughter, thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven: go, and sin no more." And as in a moment, He thoroughly purges the floor and cleanses the heart by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, and begets a holy principle in the soul. Out of the rubbish, destroying, pulling down and burning up old things, in order that all things may become new. That first, the main body of sin may be destroyed, and afterwards every root and branch. He now setteth in the heart as a refiner's fire, and as fuller's soap. But regeneration is only the infantile state of the Christian; that is, where and when he is born again, born anew, born from above, born of God. He is now a child of grace, having every part of a Christian: but these parts are feeble, and require time for development. Such may have now all the fruits of the spirit—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; and while they walk in Christ, as they received him, there is no condemnation. They are now plants of heaven, trees planted by the rivers of water, bringing forth fruit in season. These developments are all, all to be perfected by the same heavenly agent.

6. Connected with this is the sixth work of the Spirit—The direct witness. "Know ye not your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" When he is come he will abide with you forever. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. Christ said, "I will send Him, and he shall make his abode with you." He is a divine witness, making a supernatural impression on our spirit, by which we cry, "Abba Father." He is the only witness to be depended on. If our spirit or judgment be alone, we may be deceived; but he is the faithful and true witness, and can but be correct: and, thank God, he shall continue with us until death, unless we grieve him until he depart, by sinning against light and knowledge.

7. He is the Comforter. He is our comforter, in all his operations which we have noticed—enlightening at first, and then making that light shine more and more, unto the perfect day; quickening the dead faculties of the soul, and strengthening more and more until we become strong in the Lord, and in his mighty power coming up to the full measure of the stature of Christ. Drawing to Christ at first, and then binding us to him with all the cords he drew us with; and more, also, until we are in Him and He in us. He is the true vine, we are the branches. Taking the things that are Christ's, and showing them to us, or strengthening our faith, and from day to day revealing the deep things of God to us, until we are able to comprehend, with all saints, what is the length and breadth and depth and height of the love of God in Christ Jesus; regenerating our nature, and continuing the refining process, until our whole nature is sanctified: witnessing at all times, by these influences, the greatest amount of comfort. We are comforted directly by the following considerations: Our future reward, rest and peace. Here we have no continuing city, no home. We are strangers, sojourners below; we are happy to know that these things will not always be so—

"Soon will the toilsome strife be o'er,
Of sublunary care,
And life's dull cavities no more
The anxious breast ensnare."

Finally, we are often comforted by the Divine influence in connection with the means of grace, by inspiring our prayers, warming our exhortations, by giving unction and force to our sermons, by making all our duties plain before our faces, and then assisting us in the performance of them; keeping off evil thoughts by inspiring good ones; by giving principle and feeling to our religion; keeping the fear of God before our eyes as a pillar of cloud by day, and the light of his countenance as a pillar of fire by night.

If we are faithful to the grace given, and follow on to know the Lord, He will never leave nor forsake us, but will guide us by his counsel, and afterwards receive us to glory. Therefore, "Quench not the spirit—Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, by which ye are sealed to the day of redemption."

WM. P. MILLER.

Auburn, Ala.

"Seed Long in Dust."

Some time ago, a man of a hundred years old, who lived near Boston, sat down one day alone, and meditated on the past. Like Noah's dove, memory

"Flew o'er the dark flood of his life
Nor found one sunny resting place,
Nor brought him back one branch of grace."

He saw little else but a waste of sin and guilt. But as he called to mind departed seasons, he thought of a solemn Sabbath he spent when a sailor, in one of the seaports of England, his native country. He recollected a sermon which he heard that day from the lips of the eloquent Flavel: and how the preacher paused as he was about to pronounce the benediction, and exclaimed, "How can I invoke God's blessing on many in this assembly, to whom my text applies, 'if any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha!'" He was reminded of the fact, that as the preacher uttered these words, an English nobleman present sunk to the floor, overcome with the convictions and alarms which wrought on his soul. As the aged man dwelt on the preaching and the scenes of that Sabbath, his heart was melted; he prayed for pardon, and cast himself into the arms of the Lord Jesus Christ, whom, to his peril, he had so long refused to love. Seventy-five years had fled since he heard that sermon: much of that period he had been careering over the ocean, amid all the thick temptations of a sailor's life, and the frosts of a century had settled upon his head. But now in a calm hour, memory brings back the eloquent, soul-piercing words of one, who, for many years, had been lying in the embraces of death. The aged man is converted, and God prolonged his life 16 years—one year more than he prolonged the life of Hezekiah!

A FATHER'S PRAYER.—The following is a touching incident: A pious young man told a clergyman that he had once disobeyed his father, on which the good man retired into his room and shut the door. Curiosity led the boy to look through the key-hole, and he saw his father on his knees at prayer. The boy listened and heard his father praying for him. This struck the youth to the heart; he went away and prayed for himself; his prayer, and the prayer of his parent, were heard; the young [illegible] through the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, and became a Christian indeed. Behold the happy effects of a pious father's prayer.

PRAYER ON A JOURNEY.—As the late Dr. John H. Livingston was journeying, he invited his fellow-travelers to unite with him in an address to the throne of grace. One of them, a lady, was much displeased at the invitation, and refused to attend the exercise. From an adjoining apartment, however, she heard the good man's prayer, which made such a deep and lasting impression upon her mind as ultimately induced the important inquiry, what must I do to be saved! Some time after the occurrence, this lady, in a splendid private carriage, called to see the doctor at his house in the city of New York. She had come on from the South, where she resided, for the purpose, it is presumed, of spending the summer in a more healthy climate. The doctor did not recognize her at first; but upon her relating, very minutely, the circumstances of her behavior at that accidental interview, he remembered her; and great was his joy now that he saw her a penitent sinner, and understood from her that the prayer which she had despised had been answered in her conversion.

ANECDOTE OF THE TWIN SISTERS.—We know of a farmer in Connecticut who has a pair of twin daughters, of whom a capital anecdote is told. They both attended the same school, and not long since one of them was called up by the master to recite a lesson in geography, which she had learned very imperfectly, and in fact could not go on at all. The teacher who was getting quite out of patience, was called to another part of the room, and just at that moment, the twin sister sprung on the floor unobserved, and pushing the delinquent scholar to her seat, took her place. The master proceeded with the questions which were answered with a degree of promptness and accuracy which at the close, drew forth from him a few words of commendation. The joke was not discovered by the teacher until some days after. Of course it was too good and successful an occasion any offence. [Connecticut paper.

DO THEY MISS ME?

Do they miss me at home? do they miss me
Twould be an assurance most dear,
To know at this moment some loved one
Was saying "I wish he was here!"
To feel that the group at the fireside
Were thinking of me as from!
Oh yes! 'twould be joy beyond measure,
To know that they missed me at home.

When twilight approaches, the season
That ever was sacred to song,
Does some one repeat my name over,
And sigh that I tarry so long?
And is there a cord in the music,
That's missed when my voice is away?
And a cord in each heart that maketh
Regret at my wearisome stay?

Do they place me a chair at the table,
When evening's home pleasures are nigh?
And lamps are lit in the parlor,
And stars in the calm azure sky?
And when the "Good Nights" are repeated,
And each lays them down to sleep,
Do they think of the absent, and wait me
A whispered "Good Night" o'er the deep.

Do they miss me at home? do they miss me
At morning, at noon, or at night?
And lingers one gloomy shade round them,
That only my presence can light?
Are joys less invitingly welcomed,
Are pleasures less hailed than before,
Because one is missed from the circle?
Because I am with them no more:

Oh yes! they do miss me! kind voices
Are calling me back as I roam,
And eyes are grown weary with weeping,
And watch bot to welcome me home,
Kind friends, ye shall wait me no longer,
I'll hurry me back from the seas;
For how can I tarry when followed
By watchings and prayers such as these.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Twenty Years of Itinerant Life.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my labors on the Bainbridge Circuit, Florida Conference, for the year, and now propose a few items in connection with that event, for the columns of the Advocate.

To me it was of no ordinary importance, not that great things had been accomplished during the year, but that another year's service in the ministry, had been performed. The number of miles traveled, sermons preached, families visited, letters written, classes met, persons baptized, sacraments administered, exhortations delivered, members received, and expelled with many other duties performed, constitute an era in the life of an Itinerant Methodist preacher. These things must and will tell upon the destiny of people and preachers in the future world. Upon the imperishable Record of Heaven, they are written. It may be that many of these duties have been performed in the presence of a mere handful of brethren, in the rude log cabin, in the wild forest; no sounding bell to call the people together; no giddy crowd to applaud the preacher's performance, nothing like show, or pomp, or parade in all that was done: but God and Angels were looking on, the interests of immortal souls were at stake, and Heaven recorded the proceedings, and all these must be met and answered too, in the great day of accounts. How important then, the closing hours of the year of an Itinerant preacher!

These circumstances did not constitute all that was of interest to me; I closed these duties precisely with the close of the fortieth year of my life. What have I done in that time for myself? what for the Church? what for the world of mankind? These are questions full of interest to me, and to all who have lived forty years, upon the bounty of, and under Heaven's protection.

Another circumstance, and not among the least in closing my annual work, is, it was precisely the close of my twentieth year, in the Itinerant Ministry. At this point in life, I can but pause and reflect. For a score of years I have held connection with the ministry, in the most important branch of the Christian Church, in the world. When but a youth, I left the parental roof, without wealth, and a very limited amount of education, to brook the hardships of an Itinerant's life among friends or foes, as I might chance to find them; a stranger to the world, truly. I went forth, and have roamed from the mountain's height, to the sea-shore. In all sorts of wind and weather; from hill to dale, from palace to cabin, from the city full, to the country sparse, from good to best, from bad to worst, I have found the fare: and as I have kept a sort of Journal, I may give you a few items of the labor I have tried to perform, during these twenty years.

I have traveled principally on horseback, 75,000 miles, preached 3,100 sermons, wrote 3,500 letters, baptized 1,600 persons, and visited 5,000 families, with a great variety of other duties connected with the work of an Itinerant Ministry. I am apprised, this is but little work compared with many in the Methodist Ministry, who have been much more abundant in labors and sufferings, than I have been. Yet these items, when put together, teaches me, that great is the work of a minister, great his responsibility, and great the influence he may have upon all around him.

My observation for 20 years, has taught me that many evils have crept into Methodism, and "poisoned our simplicity." I would they could be removed. The time has come, I have no doubt, when it is important that we change our policy in some of the incidental things that belong to the economy of Methodism. One thing I may name, and that is, that we devise some plan by which all our congregations may be supplied with the Gospel on the Sabbath, by the traveling preachers. One thing I know, we are doing almost nothing, with our week-day preaching. I want to see a remedy; the venerable Dr. L. Pierce, of Georgia Conference, has written some good articles on the subject.

My sheet is full.

P. P. SMITH.

Thomasville, Ga., Jan. 13, 1852.

☞ Idleness is the parent of poverty.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Missionary Sunday Schools.

MR. EDITOR: The subject has deeply engaged the attention and feelings of the Sunday School connected with the Franklin St. M. E. Church, Mobile, for many years past.

Much good has resulted through the efforts of a Missionary Society which has been organized in the Sunday School; and my object in this communication is to stimulate officers of similar institutions to establish them in their Sunday Schools.

To be a member of the school, and the payment of five cents per month, are the conditions of membership. Some of the larger scholars give from ten to twenty-five cents, the teachers from fifty cents to two dollars per month. Some who have indulged in the use of tobacco, have obtained their consent to "deny themselves," and contribute the amount they have heretofore consumed, to this cause.

We hold our meetings on the first Sabbath of each month: the same hour of meeting in the Sabbath School. This hour secures a full attendance of the scholars. In them we wish to instil the importance of the subject, as well as to do and get good ourselves.

Sir, if you had been present at our two last meetings, I know your heart would have swelled with gratitude to God in witnessing the interest manifested by some of the scholars. While some had written pieces on the subject, others arose, and with such ardor and zeal in the cause did they speak, that they were truly eloquent. Who knows but that some of these will proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ! but that some of these boys may be instrumental in christianizing the heathen! God only knows the incalculable amount of good that will accrue from the efforts of this society! Eternity will reveal it to us.

Much good has already resulted, as I before stated. An instance is in the education and conversion of Dixon W. Lewis, the Choctaw Indian missionary. While he was but an Indian boy in the savage state, he was taken by the hand and led into this missionary society, and there manifesting an interest in the "deep things of God," the members took an abiding interest in him, and immediately took steps to educate him for the ministry that he might preach to his people. You know with what effect he has been preaching to them. Many souls have been converted to God, through his instrumentality.

One who was quite young when it was organized, is now preaching Christ, and him crucified, while another is preparing to enter the ministry. If I mistake not, one or two others will soon commence making preparations for the work. The bread cast upon the waters is being gathered, and we intend, by the help of God, to continue casting.

To the officers and teachers of Sunday Schools, let me add, that while the field is open and the ground is in good order, let us work; while the heart is tender let us impress it with the importance of this subject. The world is to be converted through missionaries, and, by establishing societies in our Sunday Schools, they will become more numerous and better trained, and the end designed by the Gospel will sooner be accomplished. All will become more interested in the cause and be better Christians. If through our instrumentality much good be done, then will the stars in our crown shine the brighter in that eternal day.

Hundreds of millions of souls know nothing of God. As Christians we will try to extend the kingdom of Emanuel to the ends of the earth. The time will come when all shall know Him; and many there are now who do not, but who might, by extra exertion on our part, be brought to this saving knowledge. As Christians, can we but do our utmost for the salvation of souls?

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

Alabama, Jan., 1852.

FICTION.—The constant familiarity with works of fiction, even with such as are not exceptionable in themselves, relaxes the mind, which needs hardening; dissolves the heart, which wants fortifying; stirs the imagination, which wants quieting; irritates the passions, which want calming; and above all, disinclines and disqualifies for active virtues and for spiritual exercises. Though all these books may not be wicked, yet the habitual indulgence in such reading is a silent mining mischief. Though there is no act, and no moment, in which any open assault on the mind is made, yet the constant habit performs the work of a mental atrophy—it produces all the symptoms of decay; and the danger is not less for being more gradual, and therefore the less suspected. [Hannah More.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A Plan for Enlarging our Missionary Collections.

Early in the year, say during the month of April or of May, after due notice, let a sermon or address be delivered, setting forth the claims of the missionary cause; let a first collection be taken up, to be followed by subscriptions on life membership in the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, to be paid before the ensuing session of the Annual Conference.

This plan lays no claim to originality. It has long been acted upon in our Anniversary Missionary meetings, and at some of our principal appointments. The suggestion is simply to carry out the same plan at all our preaching places, where circumstances will at all justify it. In many places three life memberships ($20 each) at least, could be made, 1st, by the union of four persons, contributing $5 each; 2d, by the union of ten persons, contributing $2 each; 3d, by the union of twenty persons, contributing $1 each. Thus $60 in addition to the hat collection, could be secured in a few moments and with little trouble. At many other appointments two life memberships could be made on the 2d and 3d plans, and at probably a very large majority of all our preaching places, one life membership on the 3d plan could be obtained of itself more than equal, perhaps, to the hat collection in such cases.

It is confidently believed that the general adoption of this convenient and pleasant plan, would double, if not treble our missionary collections. An incidental advantage would be a wider dissemination of missionary intelligence—all the life members of the Parent Missionary Society being entitled to the Annual Reports of the doings of the Society. If it be preferred, let simple subscriptions be secured at the missionary meeting; but whatever plan may be adopted, let us never be satisfied without going beyond the hat collection in raising means for sending the gospel to the heathen. The missionary appropriations for the current year, which the Church, South, is pledged to raise, are $92,000. We believe it can be done, with more certainty and less trouble, however, on the general plan above recommended. It may be scarcely necessary to add, that the obligations of Christianity and the present condition of mankind, imperiously demand of the M. E. Church, South, a united and continued effort, increasing in vigor and efficiency, to do her part in evangelizing the heathen, and converting the world to God.

W. H. S.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 1852.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

For the Young—Keep Good Company.

No one thing perhaps will exert a greater influence on you as a social being than the character of your associations. Let me first of all observe to you, do not be in a hurry to form the acquaintance of any man until you first learn something of him. What sort of company does he keep? How does he employ his leisure hours? What are his principles?

If he keeps none but good company; if he employs his leisure in the cultivation and improvement of his mind and heart; if he is a man of sound and elevated principles—then he will be a safe companion; an associate whose friendship will be alike honorable, pleasant and useful.

But unless you can find such, keep from them, as though the plague-spot was upon them. You had better keep company with a wild beast, than a man of corrupt principles and impure associations. Let it ever be your motto in regard to your company: the best, or none. However true it may be in regard to many of the interests of life that "a half a loaf is better than no bread," it is never true in the relations of friendship or marriage; in these interests a whole loaf or none is the only true or safe maxim. Solitude is infinitely better than corrupt associates, especially if the solitude is cheered and improved by the perusal of useful books.

Never keep company with the man who can scorn what you above all things hold most sacred, your duty to your soul and your God. He that can laugh at the immaculate purity of Christian morality, is corrupt and dangerous as a deadly poison. There are many men whose words are eloquent, whose manners are fascinating, but whose hearts are black as night, and whose moral natures are foul and rotten enough to inoculate a lost soul with new and more deadly sins. Beware of them, and let not their smiles and gentle manners lure thee to ruin.

Oh! it is mournful to think how many young men, whose brilliant talents and amiable qualities designate them as the honor and the ornaments of society, are led astray by vicious associations, and undone forever. Be afraid of the first step; remember it leads to the last, in the downward march to shame and woe. Nibble not at pleasure's tempting bait; it conceals an iron hook, sharp and strong, that will drag you down, down, forever.

None, at first, launch boldly into acts of shameful crime, but are at first led, step by step, down the inclined and flowery plane of pleasurable sin, which rapidly and surely grows steeper and steeper, and their progress more and more accelerated, until like a wheel running down hill, the velocity becomes so great that the axle catches on fire, and all is wrapt and lost in the roaring flame.

Never forget that a man is known by his company, whether you are as vicious as your company or not; it little matters in the estimate the world forms of you. They will set you down as one of the same class. You will be weighed in the same scales. The prudent and the good will shrink from you as from a leper's bed.

Be advised, then, if you would escape misery and degradation, to shun evil communications, and to seek the association of the wise and good. Such associations will polish your manners, increase your knowledge, strengthen your principles, and enhance your pleasures. Friendship, to be worth the name, must be founded on esteem. Let your friendships be few, and carefully chosen, and you may confidently hope that they will be alike permanent and pleasant.

New Orleans. JOSEPH B. WALKER.

How to Die in Faith.

Would you be so happy as to die in faith, take these advices:

1. Be careful to get faith beforehand; for death is a time to use faith, not to get it. They were foolish virgins who had their oil to buy when the bridegroom was close at hand.

2. Study to live every day in the exercise of faith, and be still improving and making use of Christ in all his offices, and for all those ends and uses for which God hath given Him to believers.

3. Frequently clear up your evidences for heaven, and beware of letting sin blot them to you.

4. Record and lay up the experiences of God's kind dealings with you, and be often reflecting upon them, that you may have them ready at hand in the hour of death.

5. Meditate much on those promises which have been sweet and comfortable to you in the time of trial, and I beg that the Lord may bring them to your remembrance when you come to die. [Williston.

Pure metals shine the brighter, the harder they are rubbed. The Lord alone can prepare our hearts to receive the splendor of light, whereby we are enabled to shine forth to his glory. If sharp trials are necessary for the accomplishment of this glorious end, what a mercy from God when he sends them!

Cost of Youthful Criminals.

The magistrates of Liverpool have given some attention to this matter, and have ascertained that the apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing fourteen juvenile thieves, over whom no proper surveillance had been kept, and to whom no suitable instruction and training had been given, cost the rate payers of Liverpool no less than £889 1s. "These victims of vice," says the Ipswich Express, "are still young, and there may be many a dark and costly page in their history yet. But this is not all. The prison was frequently their home, and they came from it without a friend in the world to love, to guide, or to help them, and as a consequence, became fixed in their dishonest and immoral pursuits. One of the number is dead, and ten of the others are transported. Alas! this is no selected tale. It is the history of every-day English life, and for it the English people must in a great measure be responsible. It is a question of hard cash, but more than this, it is a question of duty and Christianity, which, sooner or later, society will be compelled to take up." Liverpool times.

CIRCULAR.

To the Traveling Preachers of the South-western Conferences.

DEAR BRETHREN: As your Assistant Book Agent, I may be permitted to inform you, and the public generally, that our stock of Methodist books and approved miscellaneous publications, including Sabbath School books, in all their variety, is unusually large at this time. It is now confidently believed, that from henceforth this branch of the concern will be fully able to supply the entire demand of the Church for theological literature in all its different departments, throughout the whole South-western range of the connection. You will therefore allow us to indulge the hope that hereafter you will engage, with renewed energy and zeal, in the great and good work of spreading Scriptural holiness over all these lands, by a more extended and thorough distribution of our excellent books and valuable publications among the people of your respective charges. And in this we are the more confident, as the entire establishment, capital, stock and profits, with all its advantages, is alike the property of each Conference, and should, therefore, command the united, cordial and constant support and patronage of the whole Church.

The tendencies and activities of the times are mainly directed to the accomplishment of good. Our mission looks to no other object. The good, the chief good, the greatest possible good of mankind, even the present and eternal salvation of our apostate world, is the ultimatum of all our aims and endeavors. Next in point of importance to the preaching of the Gospel, is the dissemination of its doctrines through the medium of the press, whether in the form of books, tracts, magazines or weekly periodicals. The art of printing, beyond every means and instrumentality of human origin, has most successfully contributed to the diffusion of evangelical knowledge among men.

Methodism, both in Europe and America, has hitherto availed herself of this most potent auxiliary in the cause of truth and righteousness. Nor has she confided in the staff of a broken reed. Her prosperity has been unparalleled in the history of the Christian institution for the last fifteen hundred years. In the mighty conflict which is now being waged by the Church against ignorance, infidelity and sin, it becomes alike our duty and privilege to hold fast whereunto we have already attained, walking by the same rule, and minding the same thing. Let us, as with the heart of one man, come up to the fullness of the measure of our strength in this department of Christian enterprise. He who considers it beneath the dignity of his vocation to participate in the circulation of religious books and periodicals, has but very inadequate conceptions of his duty as a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ. In this age of reading and research, of enterprise and progress, of mighty resolve and glorious achievement, every minister of the cross of Christ should seek to become as well a colporteur as a proclaimer of "the truth of God." Jesus went about doing good! The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. The great Wesley, the venerated founder of our ecclesiastical connection, was not only an able and eloquent expositor, but a faithful and zealous distributor of "the Word of Life," as published under his own immediate supervision, in books, tracts, etc. Come, brethren, as Methodist preachers, let us resolve, in the strength of Almighty grace, to copy his noble example in this wide-spread field of ministerial labor and usefulness. Your orders are, therefore, respectfully invited.

E. STEVENSON, Agent.

P. S. Our catalogue, as recently published in pamphlet form, will be promptly forwarded by mail, free of charge to such of our brethren and friends as may desire it. E. S.

Louisville, Ky., December 29, 1851

The Danger of Prosperity.

As long as the waters of persecution are upon the earth, so long we dwell in the ark in safety; but when the land is dry, the dove itself will be tempted to a wandering course of life, and never return to the house of her safety.

Many are not able to suffer and endure prosperity; it is like the light of the sun to a weak eye—glorious indeed in itself, but not proportioned to such an instrument.

In the tomb of Tarentia, certain leaves inclosed under ground, many ages together, but as soon as ever they were brought into the air, and saw a brighter light, they vanished, never to be rekindled. So long as we are in the retirement of sorrow, fear, or sickness, or of any [illegible] are burning and shining lamps; but when God comes with his mercy, with his presence, and lifts us up from the gates of death, and carries us abroad into the open air, that we converse with prosperity and recreation, we go out in darkness, and we cannot be preserved in heat and light, but by still dwelling in the regions of sorrow.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 31.

QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR 1852.

The January number of the 6th volume of the Quarterly Review has been sent off, in due time, and some may have been sent out that should have been discontinued: in this we have done the best we could, with the lights before us. In their direction we may not have made all the changes desired; and especially in those sent to ministers whose residence we are not advised of; and we give this notice to request all who have changed their postoffice to advise us of the change, and request their former Postmaster to forward the number to their present address. And last, but not least, to request all subscribers who have not paid in advance, to look at our terms on the cover, and send us the funds for the present volume, and all arrearages; and in all cases where funds are reported to have been paid, to tell to whom they were paid, that we may give the proper credits and make the necessary charges.

JOHN EARLY.

Richmond, Jan. 9, 1852.

Southwestern Bible Society.

This Society was incorporated by the State of Louisiana in 1850. It operates upon the same catholic basis as the A. B. Society, to which it is auxiliary. The intention is to form a centre of Bible influence for the Southwest, affording copies of the Holy Scriptures, in various languages, of the A. B. Society publication, at the same rates to auxiliary Societies throughout the country, as the Parent Society in New York, without cost of transportation to depository here included.

The Secretaries have just laid on our table the second Annual Report. The anniversary meeting of December 29 has already been noticed in the Advocate, with the promise of further details. The officers for 1851-2 are:

President..Joseph A. Maybin, Esq.

Vice Presidents..Hon. Edward McGehee, Woodville, Miss., Hon. Arthur F. Hopkins, Mobile, Ala., Hon. R. D. Johnson, Galveston, Texas, L. Matthews, Esq., New Orleans, La.

Board of Directors..James Saul, Chairman; Thomas K. Price, Charles Gardiner, Joseph H. Palmer, P. M. Ozanne, Wm. M. Goodrich, R. B. Shepard, Wm. H. Foster, J. D. Henderson.

Secretaries..W. H. Foster, Corresponding Secretary, W. M. Goodrich, Rec'g Secretary.

Treasurer..Thomas K. Price.

General Agent..Heman Packard.

We copy from the Report the following interesting items:

"The whole number of copies of Bibles and Testaments sold from the Depository during the year, is seven thousand one hundred and twenty-two, amounting in value to $3062 24. These have been principally in English, Spanish, German and French, and embracing nine other languages. The agent informs us there is an increasing demand at the Depository for Bibles, by Roman Catholics, and that they are very careful to examine and get none but the true version. In one instance a Romanist, who had somewhere purchased a Spanish Bible of the imprint of the American Bible Society, brought it to the Depository to ascertain if it were the pure edition, and appeared highly gratified when, on comparison of type and text, he found it was a genuine copy of the Word of God—the true legacy from Heaven.

"The desire amongst the Romanists to read the Bible, is more and more manifest among the Spanish of Mexico, the French of Western Louisiana, and the German population of this city.

"A Creole planter of this State, whose three score years and ten were well nigh numbered, lately ordered his merchant, in this city, to purchase and send him a Bible, that he might learn therefrom the way to secure the salvation of his soul.

"The demand upon us from all sections of the country is increasing; frequently, too, from parts and through sources which we had

"The stock which hitherto we have been able to keep on hand, has been found insufficient to meet at all times the demands upon us, of such kinds and in such quantities as ordered. It is anticipated that the demand for the ensuing year will be considerably increased; to meet which, it is estimated a stock of full $5000 in value, of well assorted Bibles and Testaments is requisite, and confident of the continued liberality of the friends of the Bible, your Board recommend that a sufficient amount be at once raised to enable the Society to embrace every opportunity to send forth from their Depository the volume of Eternal Truth.

"The following from the balance sheet of the books, taken on the first of December, the close of our financial year, exhibits the present situation of the affairs of the Society.

Stock of Bibles and Testaments		$3226 09
Store fixtures		316 00
Bills receivable		1080 00
Cash		3889 58
		$8511 67
Due Parent Society	$1854 34
" Donation account	120 56
" Ladies Bible Society	606 21
" " 2d My	78 88
" Pres. Ch'h, Laf. Sq.	282 69
" " Prytania st.	56 58
" Bible House fund	4827 50
Balance, being net capital in store
Fixtures	$316 00
In Bibles and Testaments	368 98–$684 98	$8511 67

"The receipts in aid of the general fund of the Society, during the past year, amount to $1150 48, and the expenditures to $718 77, leaving a net balance of receipts over expenditures of $431 71. The last annual report showed a net capital acquired in five months of $253 27, which, during the past year, has been increased to the sum of $684

"These sums may seem small, but what has been accomplished is not to be measured with these figures. The organization of Christian benevolence, systematic efforts—these are results which, in moral and ultimate procedure, are in computation beyond the units, tens, hundreds and thousands of arithmetic. A nucleus is fairly attained, a stand, a rallying point is made, and the means will accumulate.

We make another extract, showing the prospects for the BIBLE HOUSE:

"Last spring, the Society was favored with a visit from the Rev. Dr. STILES, Special Secretary of the American Bible Society for the South, to whose enlightened judgment, Christian devotion, and zealous co-operation, your Board are highly indebted for the success of their first effort toward the erection of a permanent Bible House.

"Your Board, as expressed in their last Annual Report, being deeply impressed with the paramount importance of establishing a permanent Bible House, hailed the visit of Dr. Stiles as the auspicious moment to commence the work. About $6000 in cash and available notes and subscriptions, has been raised, sufficient to pay for the lot of ground which has been purchased by the Board, on Camp street, in an eligible situation for a Bible Depository, and your Board now desire to raise the sum sufficient to erect a permanent and substantial Bible House, from which for ages to come, shall be sent forth volumes of God's Truth, to enlighten, purify, and save the world. To accomplish this, and erect such a house as is required for present and future operations, it is estimated the sum of $8000 is requisite; and to raise this sum we look to the benevolence of the friends of our cause throughout city and country. A work of such magnitude and importance, calls loudly for the co-operation of all. Every one who loves the Bible should have an interest in the building. As the Bible is every man's Book, so let universal contribution make the Bible House every man's house."

THE MISSIONARY TREASURY.—Dr. Sehon, left this city on Tuesday, carrying away with him much love from the Churches and community. His sunny face was pleasant to look upon, this cold weather. His missionary operations have been quite successful. During a short stay in New Orleans, he has realized for the Treasury near $5,000; five hundred of this sum for the German Church; a small portion for the California mission, and the remainder for missions to the colored people. A gentleman and citizen-merchant of famous munificence, not only here, but in all the Southwest, sat in the congregation last Sabbath and put his mite into the treasury of the Lord, in the shape of a donation amounting to $4,000. We wish there were more such rich men. His name need not be told to be known. It is no uncommon deed of his. May he live long for blessings and being blest.

PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.—This body adjourned their session in this city last week. We had intended giving an abstract of their proceedings, but failed at the time of getting necessary information. Among other business, the Synod entertained the proposal of a house for their Board of Publications in New Orleans.

Elder David Hadden and others spoke at some length to this effect. Mr. H. urged the purchasing of a lot and the erection of a house, with a view to engrafting upon the scheme a printing office and a newspaper, to set before the world the great objects of the Church. The present condition of the world, and this peculiar locality, called for some such an effort; and he solemnly pledged himself to give $1000 to such a scheme, should it be adopted.

LIBERIA.—The brig Julia Ford cleared this port yesterday, with forty-nine emigrants for the Colony in West Africa.

Professor Gliddon's Lecture—Lyceum Hall.

This Antiquarian and Egyptian Archeologist, delivered his third discourse at the Lyceum Hall last evening. A full and fashionable audience was in attendance. The Hall presented an interesting spectacle to the lovers of novelty, of the grotesque, and of the horrible; being hung round with numerous copies of quaint, old pictures, "the counterfeit presentments" of defunct kings, who lived before the flood; with specimens of ancient history done on papyrus, older than the days of Abraham, and with arrow-headed characters more inexplicable to the uninitiated than the mystic "hand-writing on the wall."

Mummies lined the walls, having a plentiful lack of flesh, together with "MOST LEAN HANDS."

"Coffins stood round, like open presses,
That show'd the dead in their last dresses;"

and stretched on one of the shelves was the full length anatomy of a veritable crocodile, hooked up from the bed of old Nile, and having "a most ancient and fish-like smell." A body (supposed to be that of one of the ancient kings) lay in gloomy state, displaying a dark, dry and shrivelled anatomy.

The subject of the lecture was, "Egypt's place in the world's history." The lecturer sketched the history of Egyptian discoveries, as brought to light during the last six years, and compared its extraordinary developments with the rapid results brought about by the electric telegraph. He contended that the records disentombed from the sarcophagii buried beneath the pyramids were more ancient than the times of Abraham by two hundred years, and that the oldest Hebrew manuscripts represented but the middle ages of the early world. Specimens of Papyrus were shown, on one of which was written an oration against Demosthenes, and on another two books of Homer. We will not attempt to give even a sketch of the interesting topics touched upon. The lecturer was listened to with profound attention by a most intellectual audience. At the conclusion of the discourse the audience dispersed to various port of the hall, each occupied in admiring survey of the drawings that lined the room, the quaint old pictures, the arrow-headed writings, and the other wonders,

"Horrible and awful,
That even to name would be unlawful."

The next lecture will be on Tuesday next. In the meanwhile we await with anxiety "the unrolling of the mummy"!! Hope it will not turn out again to be the wrong sex! Though Moses had all the learning of the Egyptians and was cotemporary with them, he knew nothing in comparison with Mr. Gliddon, who is a recent acquaintance!!

TITLES OF BISHOPS AND ARCHBISHOPS.—The Pittsburg Catholic and the Baltimore Catholic Mirror have both decided that the title of "His Lordship," or "Monsignore," in speaking of Bishops, and that of "His Grace," in speaking of an Archbishop, were all out of place in this country. The Mirror adds that "it should be understood that our people are not ambitious of Ducal or Lordly titles."

American Colonization Society.

We know of no agent more effective and popular in the line of his duties than Rev. Mr. Pense. Within the last few years he has sprung a powerful interest on this subject in the three great and wealthy States in which his present agency lies—Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. The following letter from Gov. Collier, and the approbatory notices affixed, are important indications of the leading public mind. And, by the way, since the missionary aspects of the case are alluded to, will there not soon arise a necessity for the Southern Methodist Church to enter this grand missionary field? We do not by any means suggest any conflict or collision with our Northern brethren, but rather co-operation, or the opening of new ground. There need be no infringement upon the work and the space allotted to them. But how few of the present colonists, and those who hereafter will be colonists, belong to that section of the Church, in comparison with the number who go from the membership of this? Even the colored people North, those who are Methodists, belong, for the most part, to another Wesleyan connection. Who shall forbid the M. E. Church, South, so successful in evangelizing this people here, from sending the Gospel after them, and invading, by this means of approaching the native population, that vast and benighted land with missionary torch and sword—thus literally "carrying the war into Africa?"

But here is the correspondence, above alluded to:

"MONTGOMERY, Dec. 1, 1851.

"REVEREND AND DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry whether I am favorably impressed towards the object of the American Colonization Society, I answer affirmatively, if I correctly understand it.

"I have long entertained the opinion, founded upon the fullest observation and examination, that the White and African races can not live together upon terms of social and political equality, and it is therefore desirable that the free colored people of the U. States should be colonized abroad and fitted for self-government. Their removal would be not only beneficial to themselves, but to the white race and to our slaves.

"The establishment of colonies upon the coast of Africa, I believe, has already done more to arrest the slave trade, than all the fleets of Europe and America combined.

"Nor are these the only benefits resulting from colonization. As a missionary enterprise, it is the most effectual means of civilizing and christianizing Africa, of any that has ever been devised. In this point of view alone, it is worthy of regard and patronage.

"I think it very well that the emigration to Liberia has been so gradual, affording time to the emigrants to become familiar with their new situation, and to imbue those who may follow them with correct principles, and impress them with the necessity of industrious habits.

"I cannot doubt but Liberia will continue to prosper if the Society will give it the proper supervision, studiously avoiding all connection or interference with the political or sectional questions of the day.

"Most respectfully and faithfully,
"Your obedient servant,
"H. W. COLLIER.

"To Rev. John Morris Pense, Montgomery, Ala., Agent Am. Col. Society, for Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama.

"I unite most cheerfully with Gov. Collier in his approbation of the objects of the Am. Colonization Society. J. J. ORMOND."

"I also concur in the objects of this Society. R. DOUGHERTY."

"I am fully impressed with the importance of making some provision for getting rid of our free colored population, and will cheerfully unite in any feasible scheme for the promotion of this object.

"W. P. CHILTON."

The following, from the proceedings of the late session of Alabama Conference, is in place here, and should have been given in our columns sooner:

Tuesday, Jan. 13.—The Bishop introduced the Rev. Mr. Pense, Agent of the American Colonization Society, who addressed the Conference eloquently upon the importance of furthering its objects; upon which the following preamble and resolutions were passed:

"Whereas, in our opinion the colonization of free colored people from this country to Liberia is in accordance with the wise and benevolent arrangements of Divine Providence, at once beneficial to themselves, to their children, to Africa, and fraught with the best interests of our common country and her institutions, therefore

"Resolved, That we deem the colonization of the free people of color from this State to Liberia entirely expedient and practicable, and worthy of our aid.

"Resolved, That we look with favor upon the recent organization of a State Colonization Society in Alabama, under whose auspices this work of emigration will be promoted, and we pledge to it our cordial co-operation.

"Resolved, That we will give our influence, as far as practicable, in facilitating the labors of the authorized agent of the State Colonization Society among us."

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Religious Progress in Texas in 1851.

Two synods have been organized, old school Presbyterian and Lutheran. The former consists of about 20 members, and held its first meeting in the city of Austin, in October.

The latter consists of eleven members, and held its first meeting in the city of Houston, in November.

A Diocesan school has been established in the town of Anderson, Grimes county, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. Charles Gillett, formerly Rector of Christ's Church Houston, appointed its principal.

RED RIVER FROZEN OVER.—The Caddo (La.) Gazette says it is assured that Red River was actually frozen over above that place on the 20th instant. Silver Lake, in the vicinity of Shreveport, has been frozen over, and what is more, has been skated on.

The Red River Republican of the 24th says the river is falling at that point.

LITERARY NOTICES.

TRUE PRACTICE OF RELIGION. From the Dutch of Rev. Ewaldus Kist. D. D. 2 vols. in one. New Orleans, 1852: John Ball.

The translator gives good reason for his work. The divine blessing, it seems, has singularly attended this book, and it has gone through many editions at home. A wealthy man some years ago ordered six or seven thousand copies of it for gratuitous distribution among the Protestant Churches in Holland.

It would do great good in the Churches of America. The style, for simplicity, purity and force, speaks well for the translator. True, heart religion is urged with its reasons of necessity and delights also growth in knowledge, faith and holiness. The means, positive and negative, are enlarged upon richly: the hindrances and false pretexts, in the way of advancing to gracious maturity, are pointed out and prescribed for with the ready science of one familiar with the most complicated process of the heart—a skillful and sympathizing physician for soul-maladies. The writer urges Christian perfection. His views on this point are in advance of most of those who venture boldly the use of that term at all, but do not entirely quadrate with the Wesleyan idea. The whole substance of the book is analyzed and classified in a table of contents. It has struck us in perusing it that while useful for all striving after the whole mind of Christ, this book would be of especial benefit to class leaders, furnishing them with simple tests, apt inquiries, suitable precepts and convenient solutions of doubtful experiences, in ascertaining and helping the spiritual state of their members.

For sale by J. Ball.

THE NEW TESTAMENT, expounded and illustrated in the very words of Scripture, according to the most marginal references, together with a marginal harmony of the Gospels. By Clement Moody, M. A., of Magdalen College, Oxford. New York: 200 Mulberry st.: Lane & Scott. 1852.

We are obliged to the Publishers for the above substantial and neat and very useful book, just from the press. They have made a valuable contribution to Biblical literature in its re-publication. The utility of marginal references, in searching the Scriptures, is felt by every one who searches them. It is an easy, untiring, authoritative comment—this comparing "spiritual things with spiritual." It was a method much used by the New Testament writers. An eminent Bishop advises young students to "learn from parallel passages before leaning upon human supports." These parallel passages are often of the greatest consequence in suggesting to the reader the true interpretation of Scripture, after all other helps have failed. So true is it, even in the interpretation of His own word, that the "Word of God is a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path." The best Commentators on the Prophets are the Evangelists. It is no irreverence towards inspired writers to cross-question them. It greatly enlightens the understanding, and confirms faith to make the testimony of many witnesses bear on a single point. This method affords a kaleidoscopic view of divine truth. A Bible or Testament, without marginal references, presents the word in the utmost degree of nakedness and barrenness of which it is capable. So far from being thus suited to the popular reader, to the simple, and to babes, it is the strongest form of strong meat, and is better fit for those whose great knowledge of it supercedes these aids and helps—who are a CONCORDANCE in themselves.

These remarks apply, and we do not qualify their application, to some so-called cheap editions put forth by the Am. B. Society—a very questionable cheapness. The most valuable results of Bible study, viz.: the collection and arrangement of verbal and material references and parallels, very copious and opposite, are thus discarded, and the editing of the Word of God, save in the respect of mere mechanism, is thrown back to the rudeness of two centuries ago.

But when the margin is crowded with references, the reader of the Bible has felt a want. It is an awkward and slow work—turning over leaves, and tucking down corners, in following up these references, and it is a difficult feat of memory to retain and arrange them till their full light is reflected. An edition was wanted, not only referring to opposite passages, but placing them, "in the very words of Holy Scripture," right before the eye, in the same page, in juxta-position with the text in question. Such is the edition of the new Testament before us. We give it our heartiest recommendation. It is a simple but important step of progress, an improvement in the great work of promoting the full and accurate knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

POPULAR CYCLOPÆDIA OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE. By J. Kitto, D. D., F. S. A. Boston, 1851: Gould & Lincoln.

The book before us, of 800 pp. double column, is a condensation from the larger work. It will soon, we feel convinced, be introduced in the shape of this Abridgment or the original, into every library of any pretension, in the country. Forty-one names, of highest eminence in the various departments of Sacred Literature, of this country and Europe, are engaged in the production of this volume. The Bible Dictionaries hitherto in use, notwithstanding their many excellencies, here become like almanacs out of date. A work of this sort was much desiderated—not made up of old materials, but embodying the products of the best and latest researches in Biblical study. Numerous engravings illustrate it, especially in the department of Natural History. The epitome before us is about half the size of the original publication. The type is not uncomfortably small, except to very weak eyes; the paper stout and fair, and the binding plain. The price does not put it beyond the reach of any who prize a useful book.

For sale by J. Ball.

FAMILY WORSHIP: A series of prayers for every day in the year. New York 1851: Carter & Bro.

This is a family book, large, open type, fair paper and binding, pp. 820. A rich plate, the only picture of the book, shows a family at prayer. This volume originated in a design of pious men of the Church of Scotland to promote and revive the practice of domestic religion. One hundred and eighty ministers of that Church contributed to it; their names are given. Prayers for particular occasions are appended: as on a marriage day, or birth day, or communion, etc. Some of them are full of suggestion, and greatly assist in marking out a channel for devotional feelings: [e. g.] the prayer on a funeral occasion, furnished by Dr. Chalmers. It is very evident that the authors of the prayers are Calvinists. They breathe a pure spirit, making much mention of Christ, and constantly beseeching resignation to God's will, under all circumstances, at all times. Those who can't walk alone may be allowed crutches.

For sale by J. Ball.

SOUTHERN METH. PULPIT. Edited by Rev. G. F. Deems. Vol 1849–50

This is the second volume of the Pulpit: has some ugly faces and beautiful sermons. In it the reader will find those very racy "pen and ink sketches" that created a sensation in their day. Among the subjects discussed are: Infant Baptism, the matured effort of Bishop Soule; Right and Wrong Use of Riches, Dr. Winans; Unity of the Church; P. Donh, etc., with the Editor's excellent Miscellany and full Index. The Pulpit is worthy of this neat, substantial form, and we shall put this volume on our best shelf.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR JANUARY.

For a full view of this magnificent Monthly, see advertisement.

SARTAIN'S MAGAZINE FOR JANUARY.

The change of editor has not been of disadvantage to this Magazine. The reviews are certainly done up by an artist editor, and are very novel and teaching things in their way.

THE CHRISTIAN PSALMIST; compiled from many Authors, by Leonard & Fillmore. Revised by Rev. Wm. Gunn, of Ky., Rev. T. Harrison, of O. Louisville, Ky.: 1851.

This is the tenth edition of this neatly bound, gilt, and conveniently arranged vol. The elementary lessons preceding the body of the book are plain, considering their brevity. Numerals instead of notes indicate the sound. The music and appropriate hymns are thrown together, with an index at the end for each. Many of our best hymns and songs are to be found here. We understand that to cash purchasers, this popular book can now be had very low.

For sale by J. Ball.

THE LADIES' BOOK OF ANECDOTES. Compiled by Rev. H. Smith, with an Introduction by Rev. R. S. Foster. New York: Lane & Scott, 1851.

A book of various and entertaining contents, illustrating FEMALE character by cases taken from authentic history. The chapters present FEMALE HEROISM,—under which some stirring scenes are rung; MENTAL CULTURE, MATERNAL AFFECTION, BENEVOLENT EFFORTS, MATERNAL INFLUENCE, etc., etc. A rich chapter is the last. The Ladies, with this volume in hand, can assert and maintain great things of the sex.

THE M. QUARTERLY REVIEW: Jan., 1852.

1. Faith and Science.
2. Little Lexicography.
3. Dante.
4. Methodist Preaching.
5. Tendency of Current Events in the Moral and Material World.
6. Recent editions of the Antigone of Sophocles.
7. William Penn.
8. Positive Science.
9. Reviews of Books.
10. Literary Intelligence.

THE GOVERNMENT OF CHILDREN. By J. A. Clark, of Baltimore Conference.

THE CLERGYMAN'S WIFE; Her qualifications, duties and rewards. By Rev. H. M. Eaton. Lane & Scott, 1851.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LOUISIANA INTERIOR—JOURNEY TO CONFERENCE—PINE FORESTS—POETRY—PRAIRIES, A KIND HOST OF THE OLDEN TIME"—PIONEER HISTORY AND MEN—NOLLEY AND GRIFFIN—ATTAKAPAS—LIVE OAKS—CONFERENCE ITEMS.

MR. EDITOR: You will know by these presents" that an old correspondent begs a re-introduction; and farther, that he has been abroad for items. By which I do not mean that foreign lands have been laid under tribute. Louisiana, with all her alligators and agues and swamps, is surpassingly rich in history and beautiful in her geography. He who has merely seen her from the deck of a steamboat, can have no correct or adequate notion of what she really is. To such an observer she presents a monotonous, funeral aspect, through which there scarcely gleams a suggestion of the wealth and interest that lie hidden behind her cypress boughs and palls of moss.

Louisiana, of all the States, claims the Father of Waters as her sire; and though she sometimes feels his rage, she is more largely enriched by his munificence. Right proud is she of her parentage, and right royally she wears in one the names of consort sovereigns. The sole heir of the Mississippi, her soil and geology are the hoarded sums of more than a thousand annuities. It was due to such a land that the proudest and the bravest chivalry alone should achieve its discovery; and hence Providence has allowed the names of La Salle and De Soto to stand foremost, and almost alone, upon the pages of her earliest annals.

The opportunity, as well as the necessity, of traversing the State diagonally, from her Northwestern corner, nearly to the Southwestern extremity, recently presented itself. To escape the tediousness of diary and dates, you may draw a tolerable straight line from Shreveport to Thibodaux, and then, whip in hand, bestride it for the journey. The first object of remark is an extensive pine woods; common enough, but remarkable, nevertheless, reaching in its length from the Parish of De Soto to St. Landry, and covering in its breadth the entire ridge lying between the Red River bottom and the Sabine. It is a forest of prodigious proportions, and well filled out. The pine is of the long leaf species, luxuriant in its foliage, and giant-like in its girth and tallness. The emotions of the traveler, as he threads the obscure way and marks the bleeding blazes, which start up like sheeted ghosts around him, are grand and gloomy. The trees group about him in majestic attitudes, seemingly conscious of their aboriginal claims and their natural independence. He feels utterly alone—an intruder upon the society of nature's inanimate children. He feels their presence like an audience of mind, and almost instinctively retreats. The loftiest mood of nature is when she awes—not when she inspires. This is the mood she sometimes assumes here. The wind that grieves in the pine-tops seems to sing the dirge of dying time, and the trees stand tall and unbent, as if to mock and exult over the mortality of man. For centuries they have remained upon the ground they occupy, undisturbed by man and beast, and paying to an occasional squatter, whose preemption nobody disputes, a scanty tribute of knots and turpentine.

After days of travel amidst these associations of gloom and sublimity, we reached the edge of the great prairie country, about forty miles from Opelousas, and perhaps fifty from Alexandria. Here the aspect of the country is level—almost painfully so—varied by woodlands, and occasionally relieved by plantation improvements. The soil in the vicinity of the pine woods is very poor, and to the traveler in winter its appearance is rather sterile and uninviting.

We entered the prairie about nightfall, and were conducted by a Creole to the hospitable dwelling of one whose name belongs to the history of early Methodism. To us, cold, hungry, and weary withall, this was an oasis. There were angels here—ministering spirits who fed and warmed us, and sweetened our repose by becoming the subjects of our prayers and dreams. Our host entertained us with stories of the olden time. He recounted the adventures and hair breadth escapes of those men of God, who first braved the elements of nature and the prejudices of the people, to preach to them, Jesus and the Resurrection. Amongst others I remember the names of Nolley and Griffin. The former perished, not many miles distant, alone in the wilderness, but upon his knees. The latter has recently died, in ripe old age, the hero of more than a hundred battles. Verily if we have entered into the labors of such men as these, how carefully should we cherish the seed, sown in the sacrifice of tears and toil and life! Were there no other incentive, the bones of the faithful missionary should suffice to startle and arouse the zeal of the Louisiana Conference!

Our kind entertainer, as you may suppose, was an aged man, and he wore his years with all the goodness and moral sublimity of a patriarch. His locks had thinned and silvered o'er. For more than the third of a century he had occupied this frontier situation, where, almost alone, he has remained the friend of religion, and the host of the itinerant. May the kindest providences of God be thrown around his fortunes and family.

From the pine wood to Franklin, in St. Mary's Parish, our route lay through an uninterrupted prairie. When far out from the woods which usually skirt the plain, the scene reminds you of the ocean, and distant objects loom up like islands rising out of the sea. Whatever may be the agricultural value of the land, it is certainly unequaled for beauty.

The next feature worthy of notice is the Bayou country, lying in the limits of the far famed Attakapas. This is the Andalusia of America. Our route led along the banks of the Teche, the Atchafalaya, Berwick's Bay, Bayou Black, Bucoff, Terrebonne, and finally the Lafourche. On all of these streams, so far as we followed them, we found the country in the highest state of cultivation. Elegant mansions and mammoth sugar houses every where meet the view.

Among many other things worthy of notice, the live oak is not the least. It grows elsewhere, but not as it grows in the Attakapas. For size and beauty it is not excelled by any tree. There may be larger, but none that combine with size so much beauty. It is the very beau ideal of an ornamental tree, nor is it worthless in the eye of the utilitarian. A mechanic would see in every one the ribs, knees and bulk head of a staunch ship. In addition to the interesting lace which this section of the State presents, it is blessed with a soft and healthful atmosphere—always fanned by the sea breeze, and warmed by a sun whose rays are as genial as within the tropics.

Thibodaux, the seat of the Louisiana Conference, was the terminus of my trip, and so it shall be of my letter. Touching the Conference, what I saw and heard has been chronicled already by an abler pen; but I cannot forbear saying a word, notwithstanding. A Methodist Conference is not like any other deliberative body in the world. It is perfectly unique. A Methodist preacher is a decided character, the world over; and an assembly made up of decided characters, is of course full of decided characteristics. These peculiarities do not now, as of yore, consist either in whole or in part, in the hat-brim or coat-tail. The fact that the preachers have discarded those old time notions, speaks highly for their good sense and independence. Whatever is distinctive of them now as a class, can no longer be located in their costume. But it is rather found in their mental and devotional habits, and in their general fondness for bon hommie. The Conference floor affords opportunity for the display of all these qualities. For a specimen of mental acumen, just witness the examination of a single character. With all the skill of anatomists they dissect their subject from crown to sole; every fact is brought out and every feature of the case is examined and discussed at length. This ordeal, in some instances, reminded me of those Indians who improved their archery by making targets of their captives, and seeing how nearly they could throw the shaft and not pierce the victim.

Conference time, is, however, the preacher's holiday, and with all this severity there is a great deal of good feeling and good nature. The sermons, at the late Conference, were generally good. The Conference sermon was without doubt the best that has backed the "white horse" for many a day. That poor steed, as you know, has carried scores of riders, who would have done better on foot. The Bishop—it would be unpardonable to see one and not speak about it—Bishop Paine is a good presiding officer, hearty as a cardinal, and full of goodness in his looks and manners. But my letter has run too long, and the doings of the Conference, and the resolutions also, are they not written in the columns of the Advocate?

Jan. 22, 1852. WOODSMAN.

PARAGUAY.—Now that there is a prospect of the opening of the Parana river for free navigation, attention has been turned to the resources and productions of this country—a subject on which, owing to the exclusive character of the Government for many years, but little authentic information has hitherto been elicited. In a lecture on Paraguay, delivered in New York by Mr. Hopkins, before the Geographical and Statistical Society, which is fully reported in the New York Evening Post, we find the following interesting account of the vegetable productions of that country:

The vegetable kingdom of Paraguay presents the richest attractions, not merely to the professional botanist, but to that important class which is devoted to mercantile enterprise. The medicinal herbs which abound in the greatest profusion are rhubarb, sarsaparilla, jalap, bryonia, indigo, sassafras, hollywood, dragon's blood, balsam of copulba, nux vomica, liquorice and ginger. Of dye-stuffs, too, there is an immense variety—the cochineal, which is, indeed, an insect, but requires for its food a species of the cactus plant; two distinct kinds of indigo, vegetable vermillion, saffron, golden rod, with other plants, producing all the tints of dark red, black and green.

Many of the forest trees yield valuable gums, not yet familiar to commerce or medicine; and they comprise some of the most delicious perfumes and incense that can be imagined. Others, again, are like amber—hard, brittle, and insoluble in water. Some cedars yield a gum equal to gum Arabic; others a natural glue, which, when once dried, is unaffected by wet or dampness. The seringa, or rubber tree, the product of which is now almost a monopoly with Para, and also the Palo Santo, which produces the gum gallacdin, crowd the forests, ready to give up their riches to the first comer; and the sweet flavored Vanilla modestly flourishes, as if inviting the hand of man.

Upon the hills, the celebrated Yerba Matte, which is the exclusive beverage of one-half of South America, has only to be gathered. Its preparation is in an exceedingly crude state, and could be beneficially improved by employing some of our corn-mills; and probably its use could be introduced into this country with advantage.

Upon the fertile alluvial banks of so many large streams, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco of a superior quality, rice, mandioca, Indian corn, and a thousand other productions, vegetate with profusion; while seven varieties of the bamboo line the river banks and dot the frequent islands with islets of lonching beauty. On the plains, quantities of hides, hair, horns, bones, tallow, etc., are lost for want of transportation. If we go to the forests, we find two or three kinds of hemp, vast quantities of wax, nux saponaria, or soap nut, the cocoa, and vegetable oils in abundance, with two kinds of wild cotton, admirably adapted for the manufacture of paper.

But it is with the forest trees of Paraguay that I have most to dwell. Giants! there they are, vast and noble in their aspect, and able to, as it were, to utter for themselves the sublime music of the wilderness. Sixty varieties already known, furnish timber of all kinds and colors, and degrees of durability, elasticity and buoyancy. I have seen timbers of the Lapacho that have supported the roofs of houses in Buenos Ayres, for more than two hundred years. They are now as sound as ever, and to all appearance, capable of performing the same service to the end of the world. A door sill of the same wood, half imbedded in the ground, and marked "1632," belonging to the front door of the house which I inhabited in the city of Asuncion. Upon the closest inspection, it was in a state of perfect preservation. Several other woods of the same variety are so heavy as to sink in water, and all, while difficult to burn in houses, form, under strong draft, a fire almost equal to stone-coal in intensity.

Another tree, the Seibo, when green, is spongy and soft as cork, and can be cut like an apple, but when dry it is so hard as almost to defy the action of steel. Again, we have seen the Palo de Vivara, or snake tree, whose leaves are an infallible cure for the bites of serpents. The Palo de Leche, or milk tree, may be called a vegetable cow, and the Palo de Borracho, or drunken tree, a vegetable distillery. The latex or resin is found at the roots of trees, under ground, and is a natural pitch, ready prepared to pay the seams of vessels.

AUSTRIAN CRUELTIES.—Mr. C. L. Brace, who has recently returned from Europe, is delivering a series of lectures at New Haven, upon Hungary. The Palladium gives the following notice of portions of his first lecture:

"Mr. B. related several instances of cruelty on the part of Austria towards Hungarian men and women, which almost made the blood of his listeners curdle in their veins—and his appeals in behalf of that suffering but gallant and warm-hearted people, were solemn, touching, and in all respects most affecting.

"Among the instances of Austrian cruelty related by Mr. Brace, were these: A young Hungarian lady was imprisoned at Gross Wardein, while he was confined there. He had often seen her looking out from the gratings of her window. Her offence was loving Hungary more than Austria. She was a high born and accomplished lady, who had always lived in influence. Since the lecturer had reached this country, he had learned from a correspondent at Vienna, that the woman had been tried after the Austrian fashion of trial, and been condemned to twenty years' imprisonment in the horrid place which she had previously occupied!

Another case was that of a married woman who, for a similar offence, was compelled to run the gauntlet through a file of a hundred soldiers. Each soldier was armed with a stick, and, compelled to strike heavy blows as she passed, she being stripped to the waist, and allowed only to step as the drum tapped. The effect of the degradation and punishment was such as to unsex the maniac of her. The husband, finding his feelings insupportable after such a family sacrifice to the vengeance of the tyrant, blew out his brains with a pistol, and their only son was drafted as a common soldier in the Austrian army.

Another case of murder was that of a soldier who had been ordered to receive twenty-five lashes for shouting a hurrah for Kossuth. It is a custom of these tyrants, in their whipping, to make the victim thank the person who lays on the blows! Oh, the depths of meanness to which tyrants will descend to gratify their fiendish malice! The soldier refused—to thank his whipper—whereupon he was ordered to receive twenty-five more lashes—he still refused, and twenty-five more were given. At length the thanks were extorted from him; but he added, at the same time, "My back belongs to the Emperor, but my heart belongs to Kossuth."

Kossuth, said Mr. Brace, is the idol of the nation, and all classes are devoted to him with a constancy and respect and love that amounts to almost frenzy. They believe that he is destined to lead them to victory and independence; and if, said the speaker, he were to appear in Hungary, backed only by a hundred men, he could instantly set the entire nation in the whirl of revolution.

FRIENDSHIP.—Lieutenant Montgomery had seen much military service. However, the wars were over, and he had nought to do, but lounge as best he could through life upon half pay. He was one day taking his ease at his tavern, when he observed a stranger, evidently a foreigner, gazing intently at him. The Lieutenant appeared not to notice the intrusion, but shifted too, and still, with an unbleached gaze, he stared. This was too much for Montgomery, who rose and approached his scrutinizing intruder:

"Do you know me, sir?" asked the Lieutenant.

"I think I do," answered the foreigner, who was evidently a Frenchman.

"Have we ever met before?" continued Montgomery.

THE UNKNOWN WORLD.

There is a world we have not seen,
And time can ne'er that world destroy,
Where mortal footsteps hath not been,
No ear hath caught its sounds of joy.

There is a region lovelier far
Than sages know or poets sing—
Brighter than Summer's beauties are,
And softer than the tints of Spring.

There is a world with blessings blest
Beyond what prophets e'er foretold;
Nor might the tongue of angel guest
A picture of that world unfold.

It is all holy and serene!
The land of glory and repose!
No darkness dims the radiant scene,
Nor sorrow's tear within it flows.

It is not tainted by Summer's gale,
'Tis not refreshed by vernal showers;
It never needs the moonbeams pale,
Nor there are known the evening hours.

No—no! this world is ever bright
With azure radiance all its own;
The streams of mercy'ed light
Flow round from the eternal throne.

There, forms that mortals may not see,
Too glorious for the eye to trace,
And clad in peerless majesty,
Move with unaltered grace.

In vain the philosophic eye
May seek to view the fair abode,
Or find it in the curtained sky—
It is the dwelling place of God!

THE FURNACE. The three Hebrew children might have escaped the fiery furnace upon very easy terms; one obsequious bow would have done it. They could have delivered themselves, but they rather chose to be delivered by their God. Perhaps you are detained in a fiery furnace, that you may be kept in a holy, humble, child-like dependence upon God.

JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST, being the very able and eloquent sermon preached by the late H. B. Bascom, D. D., LL. D., immediately preceding his Ordination to the Episcopal Office; together with a sketch of the facts and incidents of his illness and death; to which is added the Funeral Discourse delivered on the occasion, by Bishop Jas. O. Andrew, D. D.

This work has been brought out in the neatest style of the art. Its subject matter is of the first importance, and can not fail to secure for it an extensive circulation.

Price, in best English cloth ..... 50 cents.
In best English cloth, gilt extra 75

A discount of one fourth will be allowed to preachers and wholesale dealers. Orders are invited. E. STEVENSON, Agent.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 30. 3t17

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Hymeneal.

MARRIED—Dec. 31st, 1851, by Rev. Wm. Seat, MARCUS C. ZUNTS, of New Orleans, La., to Miss MARGARET C. MAYREDER, eldest daughter of Major John H. Mayreder, of Madison Co., Miss.

Obituary Notices.

DIED—On the 9th inst., WILLIAM HENRY BASCOM, infant son of Rev. Wm. and S. L. Seat, aged 1 year, 3 months and 8 days. The night following Bro. [illegible]'s arrival here, to commence the ardnous duties of his charge for this Conference year, little Bascom was seized with cholera infantum, which, in spite of all that friendly aid and medical skill could do, terminated his existence in less than 10 hours. The subject of prayer and of faith, he was from his birth consecrated to the service of the Lord. Yet the Lord has taken him away. "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

How soon are the fondest and nearest and dearest severed, and how quickly are our mortal tries severed, and how quickly are our brightest earthly hopes blasted! Here, two fond parents who have dedicated themselves and all they have, and are to the service of God, are, in a moment of time, abused, bereaved of their dearest earthly joy. But the Lord had need of him, and why should we repine! If earth is poorer heaven is richer.

JAS. MACLENNAN.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 5, 1852.

DIED—In Mobile, of consumption, on the 2d inst., in her 24th year, Mrs. FRANCES WARE, consort of Mr. Henry Ware, merly of Union Town, Perry Co., Ala., and only daughter of Richard R. and Elizabeth B. Jeffries, of that county.

Frances embraced religion and joined the M. E. Church in June, 1843, when about 15 years of age, during an extensive revival of religion, so well remembered by many of that community. And notwithstanding the short time between that and her marriage, which took place on the 14th of Oct. 1846, spent at school, and away from home, under circumstances well calculated to wean her from Christ and his Church, yet she returned to the end, a consistent member of the communion she had chosen at so early age.

The writer of this notice was well acquainted with the deceased; he often made the house his home during the last three years. They had learned hospitality so thoroughly at the homestead of childhood, and practiced it so well at their own hearth-stone, that the home of this youthful couple was always a desirable resting place to the humble servants of God.

In my occasional conversations with sister Ware, I always found her to entertain an humble view of her own unworthiness, mingled with much misgivings; and although she would often reproach herself for the want of ardor and zeal, yet she loved the church, and delighted in the service of God. When called to her bed-side on the night of the 15th, and informing her of the fact that her end was nigh, she was startled, and for a short time shrank from the swelling flood; but, summoning Christ to her assistance, she yielded with calm resignation to the mandate of Heaven, and her end was peace. She had "remembered her Creator in the days of her youth," and in the hour of need she was neither forgotten nor forsaken by him.

THOMAS D. HORMAN.

Mobile, Jan. 24, 1852.

So. Ch. Advocate please copy.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

In the Tuscaloosa District, Alabama Conference.

Jackson	Jan. 31 and Feb. 1
[illegible]	February 7 and 8
Bethel and Oak Grove, at New [illegible]
[illegible]	February 14 and 15
Prospect, at Wesley Chapel	February 21 and 22
Brook, at Mount Hermon	February 28 and 29
Carmille, at Malone's	March 6 and 7
Valley, at Jonesboro'	March 13 and 14
Livingston, at New Lexington	March 20 and 21
Town	March 27 and 28
Bethel, at Mount Pleasant or Wilson's	April 3 and 4

THOMAS J. ROGERS, P. E.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

In the Demopolis District, Alabama Conference.

Linden	February 14 and 15.
Mt. Calvary Colored Mission
Newbern	February 21 and 22.
Warsaw and Orrville at Salem	February 28 and 29
Town Circuit, at Asbury	March 6 and 7
Peach Tree, at Mount Olivet	March 13 and 14
Spring Circuit, at Linden	March 20 and 21
Gallis Colored Mission
Marion	March 27 and 28
Union Colored Mission
Sumter Circuit, at Mount Carmel	April 3 and 4
Circuit, at Bear Creek	April 10 and 11
Circuit, at Coke's Chapel	April 17 and 18

JOSIAH T. HEARD, P. E.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

In the Montgomery District, Alabama Conference.

Montgomery Station	February 15 and 16
Montgomery Circuit, at Mount Meigs	February 21 and 22
Wetumpka Station and Line Creek	February 28 and 29
Wetumpka Circuit, at Haynesville	March 6 and 7
Pine Level	March 27 and 28
Hayneville Circuit, at Asbury	April 3 and 4
Pleasant Hill Circuit, at Salem	April 10 and 11
Lowndesboro' Station, at Bethlehem	April 17 and 18

Q. (Garrett), P. E.

New Orleans District.

APPOINTMENTS FOR FIRST QUARTER OF 1852.

Poydras street, Quarterly Conference, 30th inst., 7 P. M.; Love Feast 9th Feb., 7 P. M.

Algiers Circuit, Q. Conf., 5th Feb'y., 3 P. M.; Love Feast Feb. 8, Algiers.

Algiers Station.

Rev. Richard Cooke in charge. Q. Conf. Feb. 10, 7 P. M.; Love Feast Feb. 16, 7 P. M.

Poydras street. Q. Conf., Feb. 19, 7 P. M.; Love Feast Feb. 23, 7 P. M.

Bayou Sara, Scuddy and Wimms' Chapels. Quar. Conf. Feb. 21, 7 P. M.; Love Feast Feb. 15. P. M.

Mission. 1st, 2d and 3d. Q. Conf. Sherrel st. Feb. 27, 7½ P. M.; Sacrament Poydras st. Feb. 29, 11 A. M. and L. F. 3 P. M.

Carrollton. Q. Meeting March 6 and 7; Q. Conf. of Saturday, 3 P. M. and L. F. 7 P. M.

Bayou Sara and Bayou Black. Q. Meeting Mar. 13 and 14; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P. M. and Love Feast 4 P. M.

Jacksonville and Lafourche Cold Mission. Meeting March 20 and 21; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P. M. and L. F. 4 P. M.

Jacksonville and Preston's Cold Mission. Meeting April 3 and 4; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P. M. and L. F. 7 P. M.

Jeremie. Q. Meeting April 10 and 11; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P. M. and L. F. 7 P. M.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

EMIGRATION TO CALIFORNIA.—The emigration from New York to California is again on the increase. It is stated that every steerage room, and even standee, in the Vanderbilt, which is to sail for San Juan de Nicaragua on the 4th of next month, are likewise engaged. This is the first of a new line of the Panama route. The steamship Vanderbilt was forced to stop the sale of tickets; for nearly all the berths for the vessel which is to be the first of next month, are likewise engaged. This is the first of a new line of the Panama route. The steamship Illinois, of the Panama route. The steamship will leave on the 24th instant, and all her berths are engaged.

General Intelligence.

LOUISIANA SENATOR.—J. P. Benjamin has been elected United States Senator to succeed Hon. S. W. Downs.

ALABAMA RIVERS.—The Mobile Tribune of Tuesday says:—"The Warrior has recently risen some twelve feet at Tuscaloosa, but at last accounts was falling. The rise was occasioned by rain above that point. There has also been a considerable rise in the Tombigbee at Gainsville, also caused by rains far above. All the small water courses and ponds in that region were frozen hard, and it was believed that when the ice and snow melted, there would be quite a swell in the river.

SECESSION.—The Houston (Texas) Telegraph suggests that while the Legislature of that State is engaged in forming plans to extend Railroads through the State, it applies a small portion of the surplus fund to remove the bars of some of the harbors and all the mouths of rivers.

FOR LIBERIA.—The Liberia packet was to sail from Savannah on the 23d, with about one hundred passengers. The Rev. Eli Ball, who has for some time past acted as agent for the Foreign Board of Missions for the Southern Baptist Convention, is among the passengers.

A DEAD SHOT.—There was a rumor in London on the 24th instant, that Louis Napoleon had been shot at, but it was nothing but a rumor. Nevertheless, the effect was to depress the funds materially—just the thing the story was probably designed to accomplish.

PROPOSED MUSEUM OF MUSKETS.—Mr Pulliu, the great traveler among the North American Indians, is now engaged in a novel scheme for the purpose of forming a museum of mankind. In consequence of the march of civilization, and the clearing of the forests of America, several tribes of Indians are now nearly extinct. He proposes to engage a large steam vessel to visit the coasts of America, and there to collect individuals of those tribes that will in a few years entirely pass away, and with his own collection of American Indian curiosities, to visit the principal cities of America and Europe, affording thereby to the public a sight of those extraordinary people who will soon be lost forever. The scheme has received great favor from a number of scientific gentlemen of England, and exertions are being made to carry it into effect.

REPORT OF THE LAND REGISTER.—W. Hestrenshaw, Esq., Land Register, has submitted his annual report to the Legislature.

At the date of the last report, February 4 1850, there remained unsold 1,350,956 acres of the Internal Improvement lands.

The Seminary land remaining unsold is 10,155 82-100 acres.

The quantity of School lands to which the State was entitled, was 554,520 47-100 acres, of which 200,043 four acres has been sold. Mr. Creighton mentions the fact by his predecessor, Richard Loucks, Esq., of several fraudulent warrants for lands and the circumstances are such, that the money cannot be returned.

GEORGIA LEGISLATURE.—This body adjourned on the 22d inst. All the bills before it, granting aid to railroad companies in the southwestern portions of the State, failed.

THE UTAH DELEGATE.—It will be seen by the proceedings of Congress, that doubts are entertained of the legality of Mr. Hernhisel's right to a seat in the House of Representatives as a delegate from Utah. Mr Briggs has offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Elections to inquire into the matter.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTIONS PAID.—At the City of Norfolk on Tuesday last, the Commissioners appointed by the corporation of Norfolk, subscribed on the part of that city $200,000 to the Raleigh and Boston Railroad, and $50,000 to the Weldon and Gaston road. Two of the Commissioners then proceeded to Clarksville, to subscribe $150,000 to the Clarksville and Ridgway Railroad. A subscription of $75,000 was made by the corporation of Norfolk some weeks ago, to the Seaboard and Roanoke Railroad.

SENATOR BUTLER.—The Charleston Mercury states that this gentleman is detained from his seat in the Senate by illness. He is now at his plantation in St. Bartholomew's Parish.

ARGONAUTS.—Andrew J. Ogle, of Pennsylvania, has received the appointment of Charge to Copenhagen.

APPOINTMENT.—A dispatch in last evening's Picayune states that the Hon Mr Hunnicke has been appointed by the President Charge d'Affaires to Rome.

SINGULAR CAUSE OF DEATH.—Two colored men named Fisher and Bayard died recently in Cecil county, Md., from inflammation of the lungs, caused by inhaling the gas from a fire of boards steeped in vitriol.

FROZEN UP.—There are thirty-five sailing vessels and two steamboats frozen up at Chesapeake City, and two steamboats and a large ship, "Hogue's Harbor," in Elk river, a few miles below.

OUR SLAVES.—The Ogdensburg, (N. Y.) Republican states that a company of six men, who were hunting on John Brown's tract, killed three hundred deer between the fifth day of November, 1851, and the first day of January, 1852. The saddles of these three hundred deer yielded about $1000.

THE COLONIAL YEAR.—On Tuesday morning the 20th Jan. 1852, the thermometer stood at Griffin, Georgia, at only 3 degrees above zero. This is, says the Fulton, without doubt, the coldest weather ever seen since the settlement of this country.

The American Colonization Society was to celebrate its fifty-fifth anniversary at Washington on the 20th. In consequence of the illness of Mr. Clay, President of the Society, Mr. Webster, one of the Vice-Presidents, was to preside.

The estimated dedication of the Missouri State Treasurer is between forty and fifty thousand dollars.

ELECTION OF POST-MASTERS.—Judge Allen of Massachusetts has introduced a resolution into the House of Representatives, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report an amendment to the Constitution, by which Congress shall be empowered to authorize the election of Deputy Post-masters by the qualified voters of the respective localities in which Post-offices are situated.

ROBBERY.—The jewelry store of Mr. H. W. Harris, under the Madison House, on Maine street, Montgomery, Ala., was opened on Saturday night last, and robbed of jewelry to the amount of $10,000, principally watches. Runners have been sent in all directions in pursuit of the burglars. Three suspicious looking characters left their boarding-house on that night, without having paid their board, and it is thought that they are the guilty parties.

EXAMINED.—Samuel W. Morgan, the defaulting teller of the Petersburg (Va.) Bank, has been examined and held to bail in the sum of $6000, for trial.

LETTERS TO CALIFORNIA.—The Alta California states that 70,000 letters were received at that place by the last mail from the Atlantic States.

DIAMONDS CONFISCATED.—The suit in New York relative to the diamonds which were sent in letters through the Post-office, and seized, on the ground that the owner intended to avoid paying duty, has been decided in favor of the United States, and the diamonds confiscated.

WELCOMES.—Persons have been appointed by the Governors of Rhode Island and Massachusetts to personally invite Kossuth to visit their respective capitals.

A NEW PRODUCTION.—The New York Journal of Commerce gives an account of a novel production which the Bay State Mills—those which recently drove the British Shawls out of the market—have produced. It is a Felt-Cloth Carpet, printed in black work, and designed, according to weight, either as a floor-cloth or stragget. The threads of wool are not spun or woven, but drawn out and laid together, the whole massbeing felted like a hat body. Within a few months fabrics have been put together in this way, showing a different color on either side, and designed for coats to be made up without lining. The Bay State Mills make this cloth with a white ground, about forty-eight inches wide, weighing from four to twenty-four ounces per yard, and print in elegant carpet designs, showing the richest combination of brilliant colors, and furnish it at seventy-five to ninety cents per yard.

A SURGICAL MIRACLE.—A venerable American judge relates the following anecdote:—"The morning following the battle of Yorktown, I had the curiosity to attend the dressing of the wounded. Among others, whose limbs were so much injured as to require amputation, was a musician, who had received a musket ball in the knee. As was usual in such cases, preparations were making to lash him down, of the table, to prevent the possibility of his moving. Says the sufferer;

"Now, Doctor, what would you be at?"

"My lad, I am going to take off your leg, and it is necessary you should be fixed down."

"I'll consent to no such thing. You may pluck the heart from my bosom, but you'll not confine me. Is there a fiddle in the camp? If so, bring it to me."

"A violin was furnished, and after tuning it, he said:

"Now, Doctor, begin." And he continued to play until the operation, which took about forty minutes, was completed, without missing a note or moving a muscle."

HONOLULU AND ITS FASHIONABLES.—A late letter from Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, says:—

"Honolulu is a very pleasant place, the climate beautiful, the country heavenly, and the fair sex lovely, notwithstanding some shade darker than the Americans. Their costumes are very picturesque, and the choice of colors is arranged with a great deal of taste, the head dress particularly so. They wear a very neat straw hat, ornamented with pretty ribbons and green veils; they ride on horseback gentleman fashion. The men dress chiefly in European dresses; all the chiefs that I saw were dressed as we do. I perceive that I have the better sizes of native ladies dress like Europeans, as you saw the Queen in church; she had on a black silk dress and a velvet mantlet over her shoulder, embroidered in black with a great deal of taste. She is a lady, I should judge, of about 35 years of age, not pretty, but lady-like in appearance. The King is not in town, the rest of the family are all here."

NEW NORTH SIGNAL FOR STEAM AND SAILING VESSELS.—Mr. Thomas H. Dodge, of Nashua, N. H., has invented some excellent improvements in night signals for steam and sailing vessels, for which he has taken measures to secure a patent. The improvements consist in the employment of two lights of different colors applied in the same diametrical line to a revolving vertical axis, which is surrounded by a stationary ring upon which the points of the compass are graduated. By turning the axis, so that the lights in such a position that an imaginary line drawn through them will intersect that point of the compass upon the ring, corresponding to the actual point in which the vessel is heading, the color of the light which is the pointer, being known, the course of a vessel will be visible at night to the crew of other vessels, and collisions may thus with certainty be prevented.

Owing to the great number of steamers and sailing vessels which now traverse the ocean, the nightly pathway between Europe and America it appears to us to be imperative that night signals should be employed on all vessels, more especially steam ships. Many accidents have already taken place, by one vessel running down another in dark and murky nights, and such accidents will become more numerous, unless stronger measures are adopted to prevent them. It is also a subject of some anxiety to passengers on vessels, they fear collisions. A razor, to be sure, is placed near the box on the look-out; but when the spray is running over the forward deck, not much dependence can be placed on a sentinel. We hope that all vessels will adopt these signals of Mr Dodge, which are excellent in every respect; and it would be well to have a look-out box for the sentinel, who should be able to communicate by a bell signal quickly with the commander of the watch.

PATENT PHYSIC.—The Columbus (Ga.) Times says:—"We feel it our duty to put the public on its guard against a patent preparation by which we have been poisoned and nearly murdered. It is a preparation that purports to be a cathartic pill, enveloped in a capsule of paste. According to directions, we swallowed two of these potions, hoping to discover so agreeable a method of getting down a nauseous dose. Of pure oil, the two could not have contained more than would have been in those for an inundation of the poisonous contents of the capsules, it was nearly sufficient to have finished our earthly peregrinations. We had to resort to medical aid, and it was only by rough treatment and several days of confinement to our bed that we escaped the fatal consequences of this foul imposition. These capsules undoubtedly contain creosote, the most powerful purgative in the materia medica, or some other highly acrid or deleterious oil. Nor is ours the only case. A young gentleman of our acquaintance has been made ill by them. Another gentleman of our acquaintance, one of the most distinguished of our citizens, was purged to fainting by taking two of them, and equally dangerous results occurred in a fourth case, in the family of one of our friends. These cases are enough to warn the public from using them and the apothecaries from selling them."

MAGNETIC SPECTACLE.—The St. Anthony (Minn.) Gazette says:—"At the bed of the Mississippi River, below the falls has presented a grand scene during the past few days. The ice, which forms far up the river, and in coming down over the rapids and falls is crushed up therein, commenced filling in against the body of ice which has formed across the channel some miles below the falls, on Thursday last. By Friday morning the water had risen over fifteen feet, and the white field of ice had grown at least up to the foot of the falls; at this stage the body below, unable longer to sustain the immense pressure gave way, and the whole plane of ice moved down stream with a terrible crashing. About 10 o'clock, Friday morning, it commenced filling in again, and at the time we go to press this (Saturday) morning, it is quite up to the previous high mark, and is still rising. We have been informed by those who know, that this is the first year in the last twenty-four in which this has occurred. We have heard of no damage to property by this unusual occurrence, but one or two warehouses are in danger."

EXCITEMENT IN STEAMBOAT OWNERS AND OFFICERS.—Judge Hitchcock, in the Supreme Court of Ohio, in the case of Firemen's Insurance Company et al. James May, a few days since, gave his decision on the following points:

If a steamboat, or other vessel be overloaded or unduly laden, she is unseaworthy. But whether or not unduly laden depends upon the capacity of the boat or vessel, not upon the depth of water upon the shoals and bars in the river upon which she is being navigated.

The capacity of the craft, not the capacity of the river, is to be counted in deciding a question of this character.

If a boat or vessel insured meets with a disaster, the captain and crew are bound diligently to labor in the recovery of the property, but the insertion of a clause in the policy requiring such labor and effort, does not impose any additional duty upon the assured.

MONUMENT TO COUNT PULASKI.—The Commissioners of the Greene and Pulaski Monument Lottery, by an arrangement during the past twelve years with the extensive lottery contractors and managers, J. W. Maury & Co. of Washington, and by the accumulations of interest, have succeeded in raising about $25,000. Seventeen thousand dollars of this sum is to be appropriated to a monument to Count Pulaski, to be erected in Chippewa square, in the city of Savannah. The remainder, with future accumulations, will be applied either to the improvement of the monument to General Greene, in Johnson square, or to the erection of a new one in its place. The corner stones of both these monuments were laid, the one in Johnson, and the other in Chippewa square, on the 21st of March, 1825, by Gen. Lafayette, who was then on a visit to Savannah.

REFRAINING THE POST-OFFICE.—The Supreme Court of the United States has decided a case of some importance under the act for the prevention of frauds in the revenue of the Post-office Department. The captain of the packet boat Empire, which regularly performed trips on the canal between Albion and Rochester, in the State of New York, on which line the mail was transported under the authority of the Post-office Department, was prosecuted for transporting otherwise than in the mail divers letters, packets, and packages of letters, being mailable matter other than newspapers, etc., and having relation to the cargo.

The evidence before the District Court showed that the steward of the boat carried from Albion to Rochester an unsealed letter, or written order for some tobacco, which order was delivered. The tobacco was sent by the return boat, and the steward received fifty cents for his trouble. The District Court decided that the order was not a letter or mailable matter, within the meaning of Congress, but was a paper having a different and distinct character of its own, and could be lawfully carried by the said steward and they directed the jury to find for the defendant.

The Supreme Court has reversed the opinion, deciding that the letter or order was not within the exception of the statute, as it did not relate to the cargo or to any article on board the boat. It was folded in the form of a letter, and directed as such, though not sealed. A seal was not necessary to constitute a letter or to make it chargeable with postage. The Supreme Court declared that it was a letter, and that its conveyance was a violation of law. The opinion was given by Mr Justice McLean.

The Post-office Department, as has been repeatedly shown, loses a considerable portion of its revenue yearly by violations of the law. This is one of the first occasions in which the Post-office Department has been sustained in legal controversies.

JUDGE SHARKEY.—The Baltimore Sun says that Judge Sharkey is extremely dissatisfied with his position at Havana. The Captain-General refuses to recognize him as Consul, but has intimated that he will acknowledge him as Commercial Agent of the United States. If he will make the application, Judge Sharkey, however, it is alleged, has determined to act as Consul or not at all.

A COUNTRYMAN AT PARIS.—This morning, as we were taking a very comfortable breakfast at the coffee-room of our hotel, and as I was reading Galignani's daily paper, I found a person at the next table addressing me, in unsolicited terms. Stranger—Is the coffee-house a reliable place? I assured him that he passed for an authority. Laying down his paper on the table, he pathetically described the troup which the programme for the night's seeing of yesterday's paper had given him, and declared his inability to keep up with the instructions for that day. Finding that he was a character, I carried on the conversation; and he talked most edifyingly to all the room as he spoke loud enough to be heard at the very end. I inquired if he had been to London. "His reply was, I reckon I have; why, I came on purpose to see the Crystal Palace." "Well, sir," I said, "and how did you like it?" "Oh, that exhibition is some!" "And pray, sir, what did you think of the Greek Slave?" "There, now, stranger, I take it that where she were raised, cotton was dreadful scarce!" [Young American Abroad.

STEAMSHIP LINES.—There are numerous memorials before Congress for new steamships, and from all parts of the country from Boston to New Orleans. One of the memorials asks for a line to Venezuela once a month. It is proposed to land just at Cape Haytien in St. Domingo (1270 miles from New York); thence to St. Johns, Porto Rico (270 miles); thence to St. Thomas, (40 miles); thence to Santa Cruz, (450 miles); to Laguayra, thence to Curacoa. Mr Schamberg, of New York, is the petitioner. Norfolk (Va.) wants a line to Europe. California wants a line to the Sandwich Islands and China. But it is not probable that the system, under Government auspices, will be carried any further than it is now extended. The Vanderbilt line via San Juan to California is however making a strong push. The Post-office and the Naval Committees have most of these projects in their charge.

BURNED TO DEATH.—The Pinnading (Miss.) Clarion says:—"We learn from the Mourne Democrat, that Mrs. Polnian an aged lady of Aberdeen, breathed her last on the 11th inst., her death resulting from a severe burn, occasioned by the overturning of a cologne bottle, the contents of which rolling fire communicated to the clothing of the deceased—a case precisely similar to that of the late lamented Mrs. Swann, at Jackson.

Mrs Massy a respectable lady of Attalla county, also died on the 6th inst., her death being occasioned by her clothes taking fire, which burned her so severely that her only relief from intense suffering was by falling into the Congressional.

SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate a report from the Interior Department, of estimates to the 1st deficiencies in the appropriations for that Department.

After petitions and reports,

Mr. Bright moved and the bill making land warrants assignable was made the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. Breese gave notice of the bill making provision for ascertaining and paying the claims of American citizens for spoliations by the French prior to 1801. He said it would call the subject up on Friday in February.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Seward, calling for the proceedings of a Naval Court of Inquiry concerning the loss of the U. S. sloop Edith in 1849.

Mr. Seward offered a resolution, asking the Secretary of the Treasury to lay before the Senate all the information he may have in regard to the project of repealing or modifying the act concerning tonnage duty on spanish vessels. Adopted.

A bill was reported by Mr. Hamlin, granting a register to engineers, etc., and it was ordered to be engrossed.

In addition, authorizing the employment of clerks, by the Committee on Post offices and Post roads, Naval Affairs, and Commerce were taken up, debated, and then adopted.

The Senate then took up the memorial praying that flogging be restored as a punishment in the Navy, and Mr. Mallory addressed the Senate in favor of the resolutions. The hour not concluded when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Mr. Barrett, the delegate from Utah, rose to a question of privilege. He complained that the report communicated to the House a few days ago by the President of the U. S. from the three United States officers returned from that territory, is not in the copy forwarded to him from the Department of State. He was as much surprised at the appearance of the official printed report as he was at the publication of their report a few days before in the New York Herald, both of which are different from the report which had been furnished to him by the State Department. He protested against the change or alteration of an official report containing such serious charges against the Government and people of the territory which it was the labor of to prove, and was about to submit a motion, when he was called to order and prevented from continuing—general cause is being necessary.

The select committee on the subject reported yesterday a bill explanatory of the Bounty Land law of September last; Mr. Bissell debated until the expiration of the morning hour, the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, of which he was in favor.

Mr. Hopkins complained of the delay in the public printing, and said that it prevented action on the appropriation bills.

The House then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1852

SENATE.—Mr. Fish presented the memorial of E. Collins and his associates, of New York, asking additional facilities to aid them in the transportation of the mails by steam ships. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. Clemens presented the first resolution of the Legislature of Alabama, recommending an adherence to the policy of non-intervention in the affairs of European nations.

Mr. Pearce presented the petition of Charles Fletcher, asking that a charter be granted to himself and associates to found a railroad within the District, to run to a point on the bounds of the District of Columbia, there to connect with a railroad as may be authorized by Maryland, to connect the District via Bladensburg, with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at the point of Bucks. Referred to the Committee on the District.

Mr. Shield reported a bill to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown.

The Senate then took up the petition on the subject of the cadets in the navy, and Mr. Mallory continued his speech in favor of the restoration.

To do away solely in cases where those events affect our political relations with them, or to show their operation on our commerce. Further than that, it is neither our policy nor our right to interfere. Our best wishes on all occasions, our good offices when required will be afforded to promote the domestic tranquility and foreign peace of all nations with whom we have any intercourse. Any intervention in their affairs further than this, even by the expression of an official opinion is contrary to our principles of national policy, and will always be avoided.

SNOW.—THE MAILS.—The Baltimore Patriot of the 26th says:—"The snow which commenced falling on Saturday night continued throughout Sunday and a part of Sunday night, leaving a new coat of a depth of eight inches or more, on a level. The mails are thus retarded. The train from Washington, due here yesterday at 8 A. M., arrived at 11 A. M., bringing all the mails due from the South, to New Orleans inclusive. The train which left Washington at 9 P. M. on Sunday, only reached here at 6 A. M. yesterday, having been detained by running off the track when near the Annapolis junction, in consequence of the obstruction by the snow. The engineer, John Shockley, had his leg cut off, and the fireman had his toes cut off by the locomotive passing over them. No other personal injury was sustained, though the locomotive and cars were considerably damaged. The mail from the East, which left Philadelphia at 10 o'clock on Sunday night for Baltimore, crossed the Susquehannah river at Havre de Grace at 9 o'clock yesterday morning, as we learn by telegraph, and worked its way to Stemmer's Run, about nine miles east of this city. The train from Washington, which left at 5 P. M., yesterday, came in at 8 P. M. The train from Annapolis had not arrived at the junction when the former passed that point, and we are therefore without our usual advices from the Legislature.

It will be seen that in consequence of the low's in the river, the Norfolk boats will start from Annapolis daily, after the arrival of the afternoon train from this city."

ENCOUNTER WITH TWO BEARS.—The Lancaster (N. H.) Democrat gives an account of an encounter in that town, between two bears and two boys. The boys, one thirteen and the other nine years old, were the sons of one Chas. Sweeney, who was absent from home. About thirty rods from the house, whilst engaged in getting wood, they were attracted by the barking of the dog, about twenty rods from them. Thinking there might be game, the eldest took a loaded gun, and the youngest an axe, and went to the tree where the dog was. The youngest discovered a small hole in the ground, and thrust therein his axe handle, when presently out came a bear.

The eldest boy fired, and wounded the bear in the breast. The bear, not relishing his entertainment, rose in defence, when the youngest met him with the axe, and laid him senseless on the ground. Immediately another bear made his appearance. The gun was unloaded, and it was the elder boy was busily reloading the gun, attacked the younger. As often as it sprang at him, the boy struck it with the axe, repeating at each time, "Now I think you've got it, sir." A few blows, and the battle was over—the bear was dead.

AN ECCENTRIC STORY.—A French paper has the following paragraph:

"On a well-dressed body discovered hanging from a tree on the road from Versailles to Sceaux, the following letter was found:

"Those who shall discover my body swaying itself at the impulses of the winds, as did those formerly suspended to the gibbet at Montfaucon, will, no doubt, feel either terror struck or moved with pity. 'Behold,' they will exclaim, 'another victim of wretchedness or grief.' They will be mistaken. I have always been perfectly happy. I feel that with old age will come infirmities, and it is to avoid the slightest pain, the most petty annoyance, that I have determined to put an end to my life. This may appear absurd, but I am of opinion that when one has lived comfortably for more than sixty years, one ought to have had enough of life. I was not an inhabitant of Paris; I therefore think that it will be impossible to know who I am. Besides, I have taken every precaution for insuring this; and, if the last wish of a dying man commands any respect, I entreat that no inquiries may be made on the subject. I left my house after selling everything, and giving out that I was starting for a foreign country. My property is all realized, and the bank notes which it has produced will leave positively reached the hands of an honest father of a family, whom it will render happy. I have so managed that he should be ignorant of their source. Having no further business in this world, I am going. Good-bye. (Signed)—An Original."

RAILROAD MEETING.—The Mobile Register says:—"There was a very respectable and intelligent gathering of our citizens at the Franklin Hall, Saturday night, to take into consideration the subject of internal improvements in this and the adjacent States, and the meeting was very impressively and eloquently addressed by Mr. Burwell, of Virginia, who is distinguished for his efforts in the cause, and who is on his return from the recent Railroad Convention in Newtirbugs, of which he was one of the most prominent and influential members. His views upon the great advantages which must result from a transfer of the great trade between the North-East and South-West, from coast-wise to internal channels, were very striking and felicitous."

A HARD PASSAGE.—Willmer & Smith's Times, of December 27, states that the splendid packet ship Staffordshire, Capt. Albert H. Brown, (of Train & Co.'s Boston Line) arrived at Boston on the morning of Christmas, after a rapid run of fourteen days. She sailed in company with the steamship Asia, and kept side by side with her four hours, until she headed for Halifax.

ARMY ARTILLERY.—The Washington Union of the 18th contains a lengthy communication from an artillery officer suggesting a reorganization of this branch of the land service. The writer says, with much truth, that from the time of the battering rams of the ancients to the artillery of the present day, this corps has ever been considered all important, and has been cherished with peculiar care by all nations. He also says, that for the last thirty years the United States Government has paid less attention to this branch of the military than to any other. The artillery has suffered much in efficiency by the want of proper instruction in its officers, and the writer says that never, until 1851, was a book of tactics issued by authority for siege, garrison and sea coast artillery. The writer suggests many important changes, and concludes thus:—"The Artillery and Ordnance Department, as at present established, consists of 22 field officers and 223 captains and lieutenants, 15 military storekeepers and 3563 enlisted men, and costs, per annum, including all allowances, $362,751 56. The proposed corps will consist of 185 officers and 5012 enlisted men, and will cost per annum, for the same, $533,207 60, making a saving to the Government, per annum, of $170,543 57."

NAVAL.—The U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur arrived at Pensacola on the 19th, from a cruise.

The people of London annually drink about nine thousand gons of chalk in the mixture they call milk.

Ten thousand tuns of lard oil were exported from the United States to England last year.

Mr. Charles L. Bruce, the heroic pedestrian, who was imprisoned by the Austrian Government, is lecturing in Boston.

In consequence of the great demand for small change at Vienna, in lieu of paper money, the Government have resolved to strike a considerable amount of copper coin. This will command a premium of 12 per cent.

The city of London stands upon 62,000 acres of ground and has a population of 2,000,000, and the city of Houston, Texas, includes 2,500 acres with a population of 900. The taxable property of the former is £140,000,000.

'TIS NOT FINE FEATURES MAKE FINE MINDS.

BY J. C. CRENSHAW.

A Peacock came with his plumage gay
Strutting in regal pride one day;
Where a small bird hung in a gilded cage
Whose song might a nightingale engage.
The bird said, in the peacock's ear,
Vaunting his plumes to the neighbors near,
And the peacock soon opened his mouth to bright
That the bird flew back to his golden cage.
But the small bird came in its own sweet sound.
'Tis not fine features make fine minds.

The peacock strutted a lord so fine
Never ordered food to satisfy the eye.
While the small bird hung in a cottage door
And asked only a pittance for its store.
Man, the lord of the rainbow'd wing,
He who condemned he lived to sing;
And they who make the bir

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Further Details by the Asia.

We give place to the following details brought by the steamer Asia, arrived at New York on the 16th:

The steamer America arrived at Liverpool on the 29th. The Asia arrived at eight o'clock on the morning of the 1st inst. Henry Illingworth, a passenger on board the Arctic, died December 23.

On entering the Mersey, the Arctic came in collision with a steam tug, towing a ship. The tug was badly, and the ship slightly, damaged.

FRANCE.

At the latest accounts Paris was perfectly quiet. The whole number of votes cast at the election was 8,116,173 of which Louis Napoleon received 7,439,216; against him 640,737; majority 6,798,479. He was inaugurated on the 1st inst., and the ceremonies passed off without disturbance. On Wednesday evening, M. Rouher, on presenting the result of the votes, addressed the President, to which he replied as follows:

"France has comprehended that I departed from legality to return to the right. Upwards of 7,000,000 voters have chastised me. My object was to save France, and perhaps Europe, from causes of trouble and anarchy. I understand all the grandeur of my mission. I do not deceive myself as to its difficulty, but with the counsel and support of all right-minded men, and the deputedness of the army and the protection of heaven, I hope to secure to the destinies of France, by forwarding institutions created by the democratic instincts of the nation, a system of government which re-constitutes authority without wounding the feeling of equality or closing any path of improvement. I hope to found an edifice capable of supporting a wise and beneficent liberty."

Cries of "Vive Napoleon!" followed the speech.

On the same evening the diplomatic corps was presented to the President by the apostolic nuncio. The Archbishop of Paris in his address to Napoleon, offered his congratulations and good wishes for the success of the high mission that had confided to him. The President thanked him in a short speech.

The Canon of the invalides fired a salute of ten guns for every million of votes obtained by the President.

The Globe's correspondent says that Louis Napoleon constantly assures persons about him that he desires peace, and the only means of re-establishing the finances and placing trade on a prosperous footing.

It is understood that in order to tranquillize foreign governments, Napoleon will instruct all his Embassadors desiring them to give their courts the most positive assurances of his desire for peace.

The Tuileries will henceforth be the official residence of the President.

A grand national fete was celebrated on the 1st inst., in the chief towns of the departments. In Paris the troops were marshaled at 9 o'clock a. m. to take up their position along the streets and quays. When the cortege passed Notre Dame the gates were thrown open. The day was kept as a grand holiday. All the public offices and the theatres were closed. The French eagle has been re-established on the banner of the army and on the cross of the Legion of Honor. On the 11th, a grand Te Deum will be celebrated in all the churches.

The Havre Chamber of Commerce has been dissolved, and an election of a new Chamber ordered.

The Moniteur publishes a decree inviting the administration of indirect contributions with that of the Customs, and an administrator of the Customs and indirect taxes has been appointed.

The Prefect of the Seine had placed 80,000 francs at the disposal of the Mayor of Paris for the relief of the indigent of the capital.

M. Faucher has gone to Belgium to demand the extradition of all insurgents of December 2d, and also request the immediate payment of the sum for which the Belgian government is indebted for the expedition to Antwerp, in 1831.

The French territory is by a decree divided into 21 military divisions, each department to be formed into subdivisions.

The Commission of the Seine, created by the decree of September, 1848, is dissolved.

A municipal commission of the city of Paris, consisting of 36 members, has been appointed.

ENGLAND.

The proposed loan of £300,000 for the Great Western Steamship Company, on 6 per cent. debentures, repayable in 1857, has been completed in London.

The London Morning Advertiser states that the cause of Palmerston's resignation was the interference on the part of the Prime Minister with the affairs of the Foreign Secretary. Lord Palmerston, on learning the fact, was indignant and demanded an explanation. The answer of the Premier was vague and shuffling, and the result was a hasty mutual correspondence between the parties.

At the Cabinet meeting only three members of the fifteen members were present, and Lord John Russell stated that, in consequence of some misunderstanding about foreign affairs, Lord P. had resigned. His resignation was agreed to without the real cause being understood. Mr. Premier, it is said, wishes a place in the Cabinet, in order to propitiate the people, liberal and independent men.

On the other hand the News says that it most clearly indicates treachery on the part of some members of the English Cabinet, and that a conspiracy would seem to exist between some one and the Court of Vienna to sacrifice Lord Palmerston, and that apparently a close alliance may be formed between England and Austria. On the other hand, the Times states that Palmerston's last act was to oppose the approbation of Napoleon's coup d'etat. The Chronicle states that all sorts of rumors are afloat as to the resignation of members of the Cabinet, and applications of members of former governments to take part in the present one, but as far as our information goes these rumors are baseless. The Herald says the friends of Palmerston are very indignant at his dismissal from office, and strong rumors are current as to its effect on the Cabinet. It is understood that Palmerston will bring the whole matter before Parliament, and some who profess to be well informed say that, to avoid such an event, Lord John Russell will resign before the assembling of that body. The Herald, however, believes the Ministry will hold on as long as possible, but must ultimately dissolve.

SPAIN.

Letters from Madrid state that the Queen and infant Princess continued in good health.

AUSTRIA, PRUSSIA, AND RUSSIA.

The news from these countries is of a very contradictory character. Whilst a certain degree of anarchy is discernible among the subaltern portion, it is not unmixed with the suspicion that the ambitious propensities of Louis Napoleon, and the most active military preparations are observable in every quarter.

DENMARK.

Accounts from Copenhagen state that all parties are now agreed to concede nothing further to Germany respecting the Duchies. The Danish Ministry had been defeated on a question relating to the credit of the marine service, by a vote of 23 to 20.

TURKEY.

Letters from Constantinople express no little alarm concerning the movements in France.

Perote, by the by, is the scene of frightful confusion.

The downfall of Miss Kahn, the Prima Minister since 1848, had been followed by a complete state of anarchy.

The Sultan of Turkey had granted to his Christian subjects, the freedom of holding their meetings.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Meteor we have received Galveston papers of the 23d.

FUNERAL OBSEQUY AT BROWNSVILLE.—The Galveston News says: "Among the passengers taken by the steamer Yacht on Monday to Brazos Santiago, were the Hon. J. P. Watrous, and the U. S. Attorney for the District, Mr. Wm. P. Ballinger.

We understand that Mr. Watrous will immediately organize a branch of the Federal Court at Brownsville. It is expected that the first business of the Grand Jury, when impannelled, will be to inquire into the offences committed against the United States, by those who have been participating in the difficulties on the Rio Grande. The U. S. Attorney having received instructions from Washington to prosecute the same."

TROOPS ARRIVED.—The U. S. steamer Fashion landed infantry horse and eighty men of the Regiment of Mounted Rifleman at Matagorda.

MATAGORDA.—The News of the 23d says: "A gentleman came down from the steamer Jack Hays, on Tuesday. He says this steamer is still aground on the lower side of the bar, and the Ella on the upper side, and that there is but about ten inches water on the bar. He also states that the steamer Magnolia is aground, at the shoals, near Circleneil."

The water was so low on Matagorda bar when the Yachman left, that she touched, although drawing but six feet. The Trinity and Colorado rivers are very low.

RECEIVED.—Dr. John S. Ford, lately connected with the revolutionary movement in Northern Mexico, has been elected to the State Senate in place of Gen. Burleson, deceased.

GALVESTON AND BRAZOS NAVIGATION COMPANY.—A new set of directors for this company were elected on the 19th. From a report of the secretary, it appears that the cash collections for behalf of the canal amount to $20,901 90, out of which there has been paid to the contractor, the sum of $20,895 49. The new directors are all understood to be in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the work.

POST-OFFICES.—The Postmaster General has established Post-offices in Texas, at Sumpter, Trinity county, T. M. Bailey, P. M., and Myersville, DeWitt county, A. Myer, P. M. The office at Union, Jasper county, has been discontinued.

FIRE AT AUSTIN.—The Austin State Gazette of the 16th, says:

"The dwelling house of the Rev. G. G. Baggerly, in this city, was consumed by fire last night, together with the dwelling of Mr. Case, which stood near Mr. Baggerly's. All the contents of both houses, of any value, were also consumed, and the family of Mr. Baggerly, consisting of the time of his wife and two children, and eight or ten young ladies, members of his boarding school, barely escaped with their lives. There seems to be no possibility of doubting that the fire was the work of an incendiary, for it was, when first discovered, issuing from the weather-boarding on the north side of the house, from which the wind at that time was blowing strongly. We hope our citizens will take the matter in hand and see that it is properly investigated.

THE LEGISLATURE.—The school bill is still under consideration. A motion has been made to strike out two millions and insert one million as the appropriation.

An Appropriation bill has been reported to the House. It fixes the number of Senators at thirty-three, and the Representatives at ninety.

Mr. Bigelow, Senator from Cameron, has submitted a bill, charging an ad valorem duty for the adoption of a system of free banking.

The House had not yet passed the bill providing for the payment of the public debt.

A joint resolution, complimenting Gen. Houston for the Presidency, was introduced in the House and was ordered the engrossment. Twenty-one members voted against it.

SAD WORK.—From a communication from the agent of the Board of Underwriters, at Key West, the Mobile Advertiser has made the following extract:

"The number of vessels that have been arrives on this coast, and put into this port to discharge, during the year ending the 31st of March, 1852, is 1,000. Salvage, $70,000. Steamers, 6; salvage and expenses, $10,000. Value of vessels for which was received, $100,000. Value of property, $500,000. Salvage, $125,000. Expenses, $17,000. Total, $142,000. Salvage and expenses for 1851, one-fifth less than the previous year."

CAMDEN AND JACKSON RAILROAD.—The contracts for grading the Camden and Jackson Railroad, in Mississippi, have all been taken. The length of the road is twenty-three and a half miles.

FATHER MATHEW'S RETURN TO IRELAND.—Father Mathew, on his return to Ireland from the United States, was received by his countrymen with every demonstration of regard and esteem. The Common Council of Cork presented him with an address of congratulation, to which he responded in a speech of much feeling and eloquence, in the course of which he thus referred to the people of the United States, and the manner in which he was received by them:

"No language, gentlemen, which you could frame can sufficiently express the measure of our common obligation to the noble-hearted and generous citizens of America. You have had ocular demonstration of their bountiful sympathy, when, in the day of tribulation, you witnessed in your magnificent harbor the star-spangled banner proudly floating over the frigate Jamestown, the distribution of whose precious freight (a great nation's spontaneous offering on the altars of humanity) saved hundreds readily hope that the strong feelings of sympathy and friendship which now exist between the people of Ireland and America may continue as permanent and durable as the many virtues they possess in common. Your allusion to my dear expatriated countrymen, whom I had the happiness to meet in the great Republic, and the greater happiness of enrolling among my disciples, has touched a chord which vibrates through my whole frame. Though painfully struck with the sad contrast which our dearly beloved country presents in many particulars with the favored land which I have recently left, I yet see no reason for apathy or despair. Ireland—this is not the place to investigate the cause—is now passing through a severe transitory ordeal, from which I trust she will ere long brightly emerge, and enter on that glorious career of national prosperity to which her ample resources, now in progress of development, most naturally entitle her. I feel delight in already recognising marked indications of a spirit of industrial activity and enterprise, which, combined with self-reliance and perseverance, can not fail to effect for her that social regeneration which it has already accomplished for so many nations in the history of mankind."

OUR STEAM MARINE.—The New York Courier and Enquirer introduces statistics of the steam marine of that port, with some interesting remarks, from which we extract the following:

"Fifty years ago all intercourse among nations was conducted upon the same general principles which had governed intercourse eighteen hundred years before. In trade, time and experience had indicated no new elements. In maritime affairs little had been added which did not partake of the stamp of commerce at its infancy; and even in the cut of a sail—the shape of a helm—such a thing as dead-reire from established usage was regarded with distrust, and treated as a dangerous innovation. But all these things have undergone a change. Steam and electricity, as mechanical agents, have dissolved the fetters of ignorance, and opened the doors to enterprise. We are no longer hemmed in by continents. The genius of industry and intercourse stalks throughout the universe."

"In a paper before us, the Post-master General at Philadelphia, writes to his Deputy at Boston that, owing to arrangements I have entered into, the mail from one city will reach the other in about three weeks, which is a saving of several days' time;' and now the distance is performed in eleven to thirteen hours. About the year 1828 the whistle of the first locomotive in the United States was heard. Now our canals and railroads, if united, would circumnavigate the globe. Ten years ago the first telegraphic pole was erected. What do we witness at this hour? Wires stretching from continent to continent, and connecting by a single manipulation—an intelligible, speaking vibration—the East with the West—Europe with Asia—the shores of the Pacific with the shores of the Atlantic.

"But this application of steam to navigation excites equal wonderment. Its mission is not in the future, but what a profound page do we already ponder upon! On the 3d day of October, 1807, the first steamer for the Hudson river trade was launched. This was the earliest practicable attempt in the United States. The steamer Comet, launched at Glasgow, in 1811, four years after, and intended for the navigation of the Clyde, was the first practical attempt in England. At the close of 1849, that country had in service 1,147 steam vessels; while in the United States, up to the same period, there had been built 2,000 of all classes, including our foreign steamers. The voyage on the ocean between New York, prior to 1811, was a three month's performance. Now the distance is overcome in less than ten days. Even with steam the trip from New Orleans to Pittsburgh required twenty-eight days, while now it is performed in seven. From Dublin to Holyhead, in 1830, when Great Britain esteemed her appliances as next to perfect, eight hours were consumed, which now require but three and a quarter. And such, in the brief space of forty-five years, has been the progress of this indispensable agent. The first steamship which crossed the Atlantic was the Sirius, from Liverpool, arrived in our harbor on the 23d of April, 1838, and shortly after, on the same day, the Great Western, from Bristol, both vessels making the passage in little less time than would at present be required by one of our fastest clippers. This was the origin of the steam mail service between the United States and Great Britain, which has become an element in our marine progress of such consequence.

THE CLAYTON AND BULWER TREATY.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer gives the following particulars of the delays and difficulties connected with the execution of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty:

"It is well known to the public that points of discrepancy existed between that treaty and the convention negotiated by Mr. Squier with the State of Nicaragua, which occasioned the rejection of the latter to be suspended in the Senate. There was reason to hope, when Mr. Marcoletta came to the United States as the nominally accredited agent of Nicaragua, that these difficulties would be reconciled and an arrangement consummated by which all complications would be adjusted. Since then, however, a new condition of things has arisen in Nicaragua, and revolution has almost effectually extinguished all substance, if not all appearance, of government. Mr. Marcoletta now finds himself without power to commit Nicaragua to any act which he may undertake in her name; and virtually all his diplomatic functions are suspended by the anarchy which exists. To complicate still further the present embarrassments for an adjustment, a federation has been proposed between the States of San Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, by which each would be necessarily dispossessed of its separate sovereignty, and this tripartite Union would stand as the actual Government. But no progress has been made in this scheme, and things generally in Central America are dislocated and deranged. It may easily be asked, what should be done in such a deplorable contingency; but the enquiry cannot be so readily answered. There is but one mode which I can discover for making a beginning, and that is, to require Great Britain to relinquish all possession and dominion. Until this step is taken, there will always be confusion and conflict. It may be stated in this connection, although Mr. Kerr, our Charge d'Affaires to Nicaragua, has been several months in that country, he has not yet been able to find any responsible Government, to whom he might present his credentials. The last intelligence from him was dated at San Leon, some time in November, when he was still pursuing his search for something in the shape of a functionary who might receive him in an official capacity."

CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.—Captain Cook, the celebrated circumnavigator, described a cure for this complaint, which is practiced among the Otaheitans. It ought to be generally known, that in desperate cases the experiment may be tried.

While lying in a harbor in the island of Otaheite, he was troubled with a severe rheumatic pain, which extended from the hip to the ankle. As soon as the circumstance was known on shore, a numerous body of women flocked on board and volunteered their services in curing the disorder. His accepted their friendly offer, and submitted with a good grace to their directions. He was requested to lay down, when all who could get near him began to squeeze him with both hands all over the body, but more particularly in the parts complained of, till they made his bones crack, and this, Cook became almost a mummy. He suffered this severe discipline for about an hour, when, he was happy to get away from them. But the operation gave him immediate relief, and encouraged him to bear it repeated before he went to bed. And it was so effectual that he found himself easy the whole night after. His female physicians obligingly repeated their prescription the next morning, and again in the evening when the cure was completely effected.

The beneficial effect which is sometimes derived from the use of the flesh brush, is well known. But this squeezing and pinching operation, called by the natives romee, seems to be more effective than any other kind of external friction, and is universally practised among the islanders. If at any time a person appears languid and tired, and sits down, the romee is immediately practised on his legs, and it always has an excellent effect.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—Great loss of life.—Between two and three o'clock on Wednesday morning an accident occurred on the Harlem Railroad, near New York, but fortunately no person was injured, yet over three hundred and fifty lives were lost.

It appears that one of the Harlem Company's freight trains, heavily laden with sheep and cattle, on their way to New York, for some purpose or other stopped at Williams's Bridge. While standing on the track, and another freight train belonging to the New Haven Company, came on behind them, and the engineer not observing the usual signal, concluded they had gone ahead.

The locomotive of the New Haven train struck the rear car of the Harlem train, split it in two, and the two cars being ill, completely through the centre. Upwards of 350 sheep and six or eight head of cattle were killed by the force of the collision, and their dead bodies scattered in every direction about the road in the vicinity.

At the time of the collision a stove in the accommodation car in the New Haven train was upset, and not being observed by any of the men, it set fire to the car, which was totally destroyed before the flames could be extinguished.

ANOTHER.—Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—The 9 o'clock train of cars this morning from New York, when off Bristol, ran off the track, owing to the switch having been left open, and ran into a small brick car house. An empty car in the house was driven through the gable end into the adjoining dining room of Wm. Stewart, completely demolishing it. Stewart with his wife, three children and a small girl were sitting at the dinner table at the time, and were all buried beneath the ruins. Singular to say, they all escaped with slight bruises, with the exception of a child, who was cut on the head. The engineer escaped with slight injury, having jumped off the engine. The two firemen, Jas Kelley and Jas Logue, each had one foot so badly mashed as to render amputation necessary. The locomotive and tender were smashed to atoms, but the baloons of the train was uninjured. None of the passengers ware hurt. The people of Bristol say there is no one to attend to the switch, the old switch tender having been discharged for the sake of economy.

SOUTH CAROLINA RAILROAD.—The Board of Directors of this road recently held a meeting at Hillsborough. The President was authorized to make contracts for iron, and purchase the locomotives and freight cars.

Information being furnished the Board that there were now, actually employed on the road from Charlotte to Salisbury 630 men and 264 boys, and it being made to appear probable that the whole of that part of the road would be graded during the present year, the President was authorized to contract for the delivery of timber for the superstructure along that part of the line by the first of February.

Dr. J. B. Lindsay, a member of the Alabama Legislature, from Sumter county, died at Montgomery, on the 23d.

Later from Texas.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.—The Bellevue says: "We learn from Mr. A. J. Mason, who has just returned from Port Lavaca, that the Indians have made their appearance in considerable force and committed extensive depredations upon the owners of property. They have stolen several hundred horses and mules, and are menacing all the ranches and settlements between the Rio Grande and Nueces. A band of twenty-two was seen some ten or fifteen leagues this side of San Patricio, and another band of twenty, was seen near the sea coast. And it is evident that they are sweeping this whole section of the country in pretty large force.

"We have not yet heard that they have killed any body, but it will be a miracle if they should depart without committing numerous murders and carrying off many captives. We are looking daily for their making their appearance in the neighborhood of Brownsville. In the perpetration of these outrages our national government has much to answer for. It has suffered the rangers to be disbanded—it has left the frontier unguarded, and for every drop of innocent blood that is shed, it is directly responsible to the country and the world. We appeal to Congress for relief—we hope that the voice of distressed humanity will not be heard in vain."

The people of Western Texas doubtless feel that they have had good grounds for complaint in this respect, but the Government is now taking measures which will remove them. The mounted riflemen which have been sent to the western frontier will soon teach the Indians to keep at a respectful distance.

THE WEATHER.—The cold weather extended to the valley of the Rio Grande. "There was ice two inches thick at Brownsville on the 13th.

THE REVOLUTION.—The Rio Bravo does not contain a word about the movements of the revolutionists.

A writer in that paper states that, in one of the first engagements between Urega's lancers and Carvajal's troops, five of the latter—three Mexicans and two Americans—were taken prisoners and butchered on the spot, the lancers riding over and mutilating their bodies after they were dead.

HIGHER LAW DOCTRINE.—The New York Journal of Commerce has a very lengthy review of the "higher law doctrine," as delivered by Rev. Dr. Bacon, of Newtleven, on Thanksgiving day. The conclusion is that—

"It is not in the lowest decree credible, that the Constitution of this Christian country should contain a provision, or that Congress should enact a law, contrary to an express law of God. When, or in what circumstances, can such a thing be supposed to happen? a law, for example, requiring murder, theft, perjury, etc. The only case of the contrariety of a law of this country to a divine law, which is at all likely, or even liable to happen, is a case of constructive contrariety, or contrariety by inference. But in every such case, nineteen-twentieths of the people have higher and better evidence in the character and religious opinions of the rulers, and especially (in the present case) in the opinions of new and great and good men—lawyers, judges, statesmen, divines, etc., that the law is not contrary to God's law, than they can have from any other source, that it is. They are, of course, to be governed by the best evidence to be had in the case, and if they do not judge correctly, theirs is the responsibility of a wrong judgment, when it ought to be right. It will still be asked, what is a person sworn to a particular law of the State to be contrary to God's law? We answer, that in a case where he is bound to judge right, if he judges wrong he has no exemption for either judging wrong or doing wrong. But may not his judgment be right? Possibly it may. Possibly the civil law may be contrary to an express law of God. Possibly there is no room for doubt on the question; and possibly every honest mind must so regard it. Then, we say, 'obey God rather than men.' But when did, when will such a case actually occur? And until it does occur, what has the bare possibility of it to do with the propriety or truth of the proposition that every subject of civil government ought to obey its laws? What qualification of this law is proper or even called for, in practical life, until the possible exception actually exists? When it does exist, the case will be a plain one, and the voice of remonstrance will be universal. Until a case too plain to be doubted by reasonable men does occur, we say, take care; the law of God is, 'Submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake.'"

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD PROJECT.—The Washington Union publishes, with highly favorable comments, another memorial presented to Congress by Mr. Asa Whitney, praying for action on his Pacific Railroad project. The prominent features of Mr. Whitney's plan are already pretty well understood by the public. He asks a grant of land sixty miles in width from Lake Michigan to the Pacific ocean, comprising altogether about seventy-eight millions of acres of good, bad and indifferent land, at ten cents per acre. This land is to be sold to settlers, sections of twelve miles at a time being thrown into the market, as soon as the road for such a distance shall have been completed. In the words of the memorial, "thus enabling your memorialist to create, by his own efforts and means, out of this wilderness-land, the means to construct a line of railway from said Lake Michigan to the Pacific ocean, which he proposes to effect by connecting the sale and settlement of the said lands with the building of the road, and thus carry on and carry out the two great objects together, and, as an individual enterprise, involving no constitutional question or difficulty, construct a great highway for, and make, the commerce of, the world tributary to it. For the cost of its construction, as well as for its free use forever after, the people of the United States and of the world would be taxed for passage and transport only sufficient for the necessary expenses for its operation and repairs—with the mails transported free from charge to the people or the Government."

Mr. Whitney mentions the action of the Legislatures of several different States, declaring this the only feasible plan of accomplishing the great work; and he also shows that his project has been viewed with high favor by scientific men in Europe. The Union thus concludes an article on the subject:

"And we are as frank in saying that we do approve of Mr. Whitney's plan, and sincerely hope it may be acted upon and adopted during this session of Congress. We approve of it because it is expedient, and we believe it to be feasible. We approve of it because it involves no constitutional question. The lands are sold to him under such conditions and restrictions as will guard the rights and interests of the people; and he will build the road as an individual enterprise, without risk or hazard to the people, and if he fails in it, it can in no way involve the Government or people. We approve of it because it is an individual enterprise, over which, as such the people at large, the States through which it will run, and Congress, will hold full and perfect control, which could not be, were it an organized company with State or national corporate powers. Finally, we approve of it because it will carry the main free, and will be a free road to all the people, except for the cost of its operation and repairs, and because it involves no expenditure by the Government, and creates no debt; but will add immensely to the wealth of the nation."

COLD WINTERS.—The extreme cold weather which has been experienced in the South, thus far during the present winter, gives some interest to the following statistics:

In 1133 the river Po was frozen from Cremenla to the sea.

In 1206 the Rhone was frozen over.

In 1234 loaded carts and wagons crossed the Adriatic in front of Venice.

In 1305 all the rivers in France were frozen over.

In 1534 it was possible to travel from Denmark to Leubec and Dantzic on the ice.

In 1534 all the rivers of Provence and Italy were frozen. At Paris the frost lasted two months and 28 days.

In 1468 it was necessary to break up the wine in Flanders with hatchets, in order to serve it out to the soldiers.

In 1544 the same became requisite in France.

In 1594 the sea was frozen from Marseilles to Venice.

In 1657 the Seine was entirely frozen over.

In 1677 the Seine was frozen for 35 days.

In 1709 the Adriatic and the Mediterranean, from Marseilles to Genoa, were frozen.

In 1716, shops were established on the Thames, and the Seine was entirely frozen over in 1742, 1744, 1766, 1767, 1776, 1788, and in 1829.

REMARKABLE PROPHECY.—The following prediction of St. Cæsarie, Bishop of Arles, in the year 542, may not be considered void of interest at the present moment. It is taken from a book entitled "Liber Maralabis," printed in Gothic characters, and deposited in the Royal Library, Paris:

"The administration of the Kingdom (France) will be so blended, that they shall leave it without defenders. The hand of God shall extend itself over them, and over all rich; and the nobles shall be deprived of their estates and dignity; a division shall spring up in the church of God, and there shall be two husbands, the one true and the other adulterous. The legitimate husband shall be put to flight; there shall be great carnage, and as great a profusion of blood as in the day of the Gentiles. The universal church and the whole world shall deplore the ruin and destruction of a most celebrated city, the capital and mistress of France. The altars of the temple shall be destroyed, the holy virgins outraged, shall fly from their seats, and the whole church shall be stripped of her temporal goods; but at length the black eagle and the lion shall appear hovering from far countries. Misery to three. The wealth of philosophy (thou shalt be subjected!) A captive, humbled even to confusion, shall at last receive his crown, and destroy the children of Brutus."

GREGON.—The Hon. Joseph Lane, delegate from Oregon, has issued a circular, in which he estimates the population at 80,000, and says the emigration is rapidly increasing, owing not only to the natural advantage of the country, but to the liberal provisions made for actual settlers by a late law of Congress. By that law liberal donations of lands are made to all who will settle upon them previous to the first day of December, 1853. To a single man one hundred and sixty acres, and to a married men three hundred and twenty—one half in his own right and the other half to his wife in her own right, upon condition that they will live upon and cultivate it for four years. The population is of a substantial character, much better than is generally found in new countries. Those who contemplate emigrating to Oregon should be ready to leave St. Joseph, on the Missouri River, with a proper outfit by the first day of May. Ox teams are much to be preferred. Provisions for the trip, and sufficient blankets for bedding, with such tools only as are necessary to repair a wagon, should be taken. Dry goods, groceries, furniture, and farming utensils, of all kinds, are abundant in Oregon, and no one should think of taking such things with them. It must not however be supposed that no inconveniences are to be experienced by immigrants after they arrive there.

NEW OCEAN STEAMERS.—The keel of the Adriatic, the proposed fifth steamer of the Collins line, has not yet been laid, and it is estimated that it depends upon the result of the application for government aid, whether it ever will be. The new steamers Arabia and Persia, of the Cunard line, will soon be ready.

SAGACITY OF THE ELEPHANT.—Although much has been written about the sagacity of this wonderful animal, the following narrative will be found interesting:

In the course of my early morning rides about the vicinity of Colombo, I frequently reined in my steed to watch the quiet labors of a couple of elephants in the service of the government. These huge animals were generally employed in the commissariat timber-yard, or the civil engineer's department, either in removing or stowing logs and planks, or in rolling about heavy masses of stone for building purposes. I could not but admire the precision with which they performed their allotted task, unaided save by their own sagacity. They were one morning hard at work though slowly, piling up a quantity of heavy pieces of ebony. The lower row of the pile had been already laid down, with mathematical precision, six logs side by side. These they had rolled in from the adjoining wharf: and, when I rode up, they were engaged in bringing forward the next six for the second row in the pile. It was curious to observe those uncouth animals seize one of the heavy logs at each end, and, by means of their trunk lift it up on the logs already placed, and then arrange it crosswise upon them with the most perfect skill. I waited whilst they thus placed the third row, feeling a curiosity to know how they would proceed when the timber had to be lifted to a greater height. Some of the logs weighed nearly twenty hundred weight.

There was a short pause before the fourth row was touched; but the difficulty was no sooner perceived than it was overcome. The sagacious animals selected two straight pieces of timber, placed one end of each piece on the ground with the other resting on the top of the pile, so as to form a sliding way for the next logs; and, having seen that they were perfectly steady and in a straight line, the four legged laborers rolled up the slope they had just formed the six pieces of ebony for the fourth layer on the pile. Not the least amusing part of the performance was the careful survey of the pile made by one of the elephants, after placing each log, to ascertain if it were laid perfectly square with the rest.

The sagacity of these creatures in detecting weaknesses in the jungle-bridges thrown across some of the streams in Ceylon is not less remarkable. I have been assured that when carrying a load, they invariably press one of their forefeet upon the earth covering of the bridge, to try its strength; and, that if it feels too weak to carry them across, they will refuse until lightened of their load. On one occasion a driver persisted in compelling his elephant to cross a bridge against the evident wish of the animal; and, as was expected by his comrades, the rotten structure gave way, elephant and rider were precipitated into the river, and the latter was drowned.

THE INTERIOR OF AFRICA.—A writer who lived for several years on the western coast says a state of civilization exists among some of the tribes such as has not been suspected hitherto by those who have judged only from accounts given of the tribes with which travelers have come in contact. They cannot be regarded as savages, having organized townships, fixed habitations, with regular defences about their cities, engaging in agriculture, and the manufacture of cotton cloths for clothing, which they ornament with handsome dyes of native production, and exhibiting handicraft in their convertion of iron and precious metals into articles of use and ornament. The merchants entrust their goods to the care of native traders in various parts of the country, stored in huts, without protection, yet preserved in safety, acts of robbery being very rare. Native traders are held in high respect, especially if wealthy, and in some cases whole tribes engage in the business of itinerant traders, no impediment being offered to them even among nations where a state of war exists.

SINGULAR DECEPTION.—Some abolitionists in Boston, last week, contributed funds sufficient to defray the expense of a large hall for one evening, at South Boston, in order to hear a colored man, who had been a slave, give an account of his life. Instead of opposing slavery, however, he surprised and confused the contributors by defending it, and had no objection to going back to "Old Virginia." He was frequently interrupted, but persevered to the end of his statement.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT.—J. H. H. Smith, treasurer of the Washington National Mounment Society, reports that during the year 1851 he received the sum of $36,551 84, which, with a balance on hand of $2627 96 at the beginning of the year, made a total of $39,179 80; of this, he expended during the year $36,542 35, leaving on hand $2,637 14.

GEORGIA.—The Georgia Legislature has passed an ad valorem tax bill, in place of the specific one, which has for several years been in force.

THE FRENCH PEOPLE AND THEIR RESOLUTIONS.—The London Times has a resume of French resolutions contained in its Paris correspondence, in which there is one point to which the reader's attention may be serviceably directed. The sketch referred to included the successive replies of the French people to the appeals periodically made by authorities in power. Sometimes it was a Convention which appeared as appellant, sometimes a Directory, sometimes a Senate, sometimes a Consul, sometimes an Emperor. At one period the people were asked to confirm a Republic, at another an Empire, at another a Monarchy, at another a charter. The vote required might be of an aristocratic, democratic, or republican tendency; but there is this remarkable feature in every chapter of the history, that whatever was the proposition, an affirmative vote was always forthcoming, and by a majority of millions. Never were fifty thousand suffrages found in the whole French nation against any proposal of the powers in being, and it was rare indeed to find five thousand. Either because the appeal was never made until it became superfluous, or because the people were perfectly indifferent to the form of government, or because they were ignorant of the meaning of an election—for some reason or other, the result of a universal poll was invariably what we see it now.

THE ACCIDENT TO THE SIXAMSHIP REPUBLIC.—It was stated in the California news a few days ago that the steamship Republic, formerly of the port of Philadelphia, had been disabled at Acapulco. It appears she left San Francisco for Panama, with 400 passengers, and when four days out sprung a leak, but managed to reach Acapulco, where, on the stoppage of her engines, she immediately sunk in twelve feet water forward and twenty-four feet aft. Every thing on board, except forty-seven barrels of sugar, was saved. On the next day, however, through the exertions of Capt. Hudson and Capt. Tyler, she was pumped out and got afloat again. A survey was called, and the ship, being pronounced sea-worthy, was to have sailed for Panama on the 24th ult. The accident was caused by the falling out of a sharp stone, which had entered her starboard bow at the time she struck on the ledge near San Francisco, and which was not discovered when she was hauled up for repairs at Benicia.

THE BRITISH PRESS AND THE UNITED STATES NAVY.—The British United Service Journal thus speaks of our Navy:

"From its infancy to its present state, most bravely, most gallantly, have the officers and men in the naval profession of America held up the honor of their flag. There is scarcely one action in which the slightest imputation can be cast on any individual. They have never avoided their enemies, excepting when it would have been the height of imprudence to have faced them. They love fought with the most determined valor. They have, in many cases, been successful over a nation which held undisputed the command of the ocean; and this very circumstance of combating an enemy flushed with almost universal victory, adds a great laurel to the navy of the United States.

The Bank of England now holds £17,444,000 in coin and bullion, a larger amount than it ever held before. It has reduced its rate of interest to two per cent. on loans secured by government stocks.

The wonderful divisibility of matter is shown in the fact that a single drachm of cochineal will dye nine hundred and eight miles of sewing silk, and the color imparied will be an intense red.

The Scientific American states that an adulterated tea is becoming more common every day. There is scarcely a pound of good tea to be found; it is adulterated first in China, and then it undergoes a finishing process when it comes here. Can this be correct.

Universal suffrage has not increased the vote of Virginia so much as was expected. In 1848 the vote was between ninety-two and ninety-three thousand; and in the recent Gubernatorial contest it was (judging from the returns) about one hundred and forty thousand.

The Rev. Sebastain Streeter, of the 1st Universalist Church in Boston, has united in marriage the past year, 248 couples; and during his ministry in that city, (27 years,) 3174, or an average of over one hundred per year.

It is stated that before the commencement of business, in the Senate of New York, on Monday last, the prayer which is usually offered was made by Rabbi Wise the minister of the Jewish synagogue in Albany. Rabbi Wise is a German by birth, and is one of the most talented of the Hebrew Clergy in this country.

The Postmaster of Bangor Maine, has commenced suits in the U. S. District Court against some individuals there for using postage stamps a second time. He had remonstrated with them (knowing the individuals,) but to no effect, and on violating the law again, he took the legal course in the matter. The penalty is $50 for each offence.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Baltimore Sun states that the steamers Osprey and Albatross are to be withdrawn from the Philadelphia and Charleston line and sold at public auction, if not disposed of at private sale.

The Liverpool Albion says that three sheriff's officers boarded the United States mail steamer Baltic when on the point of sailing on her previous trip for New York. They stated they were in search of an absconding debtor, and as Capt. Comstock refused to wait till they found him, they were carried off, notwithstanding their entreaties to the contrary.

Legislatures of the States.

Political complexion and times of meeting of the Legislatures of the several States of Government:

States.	Majority of Legislature.	Times of Meeting.
Alabama*	Union (dem.)	2d Monday in Nov.
Arkansas*	Democrat	1st Monday in Nov.
California	Democrat	1st Monday in Jan.
Connecticut	Democrat	1st Wednesd'y May.
Delaware*	Democrat	1st Tuesday in Jan.
Florida*	Democrat	1st Monday in Nov.
Georgia*	Union	1st Monday in Nov.
Illinois*	Democrat	2d Monday in Jan.
Indiana	Democrat	2d Thursday in Jan.
Iowa*	Democrat	1st Monday in Dec.
Kentucky	Whig	1st Monday in Dec.
Louisiana	Democrat	3d Monday in Jan.
Maine	Democrat	2d Wednesday Jan.
Maryland	Democrat	1st Wednesday Jan.
Massachusetts	Dem. & Free Soil	1st Wednesday Jan.
Michigan	Democrat	1st Monday in Jan.
Mississippi	Union	1st Monday in Jan.
Missouri*	Democrat	Last Monday in Dec.
New Hampshire	Democrat	1st Wednesday June
New Jersey	Democrat	2d Tuesday in Jan.
New York	Whig	1st Tuesday in Jan.
North Carolina*	Democrat	3d Monday in Nov.
Ohio*	Democrat	1st Monday in Jan.
Pennsylvania	Democrat	1st Tuesday in Jan.
Rhode Island	Democrat	In May and October
South Carolina	Southern Rights	4th Monday in Nov.
Tennessee*	Whig	1st Monday in Oct.
Texas*	Democrat	1st December.
Vermont	Democrat	2d Thursday in Oct.
Virginia*	Democrat	1st Monday in Dec.
Wisconsin	Whig & Free Soil	1st Monday in Jan.

*In the States marked with an asterisk, the Legislatures meet biennially. The Pennsylvania Legislature is largely democratic in the House, but in the Senate the vote is mucerinli. It may be either in a majority or a minority of one vote. The Senate of New York is democratic, including the casting vote of Lieutenant Governor; the Assembly is whig. In Maryland the Senate is in doubt, the House is democratic.

GOVERNORS OF THE STATES AND TERRITORIES.

All elected by the people, except in South Carolina,

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. E. HOYT, H. D. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D. / T. W. DOUGLAS. / W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 1. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 53.

From the Youth's Magazine

The Crop of Acorns.

There came a man in days of old,
To hire a piece of land for gold.
And urged his suit in accents meek.
"One crop alone is all I seek:
That harvest o'er, my claim I'll yield.
And to its lord resign the field."

The owner some misgivings felt,
And coldly with the stranger dealt,
But found his last objection fail.
And honeyed eloquence prevail.
So took the proffered price in hand.
And for one crop leased out the land

The wily tenant sneered with pride.
And sowed the spot with acorns wide.
At first like tiny shoots they grew.
Then broad and wide their branches threw.
But long before those oaks sublime,
Aspiring reached their forest prime.
The cheated landlord mouldering lay
Forgotten, with his kindred clay.

O ye, whose years unfolding fair.
Are fresh with youth, and free from care.
Should vice or indolence desire
The garden of your souls to hire.
No parley hold—reject the suit.
Nor let one seed the soil pollute

My child, their first approach beware:
With firmness break the insidious snare.
Lest as the acorn grew and throve,
Into a sun-excluding grove.
Thy sins, a dark o'ershadowing tree.
Shut out the light of heaven from thee.

L. H. S.

NOTES FROM ABROAD,

AMERICAN ARTISTS IN FLORENCE—THE DUOMO—THE SIX TOMBS OF THE GREAT DEAD—THE TRIBUNE—VENUS DE MEDICI—THE PANDECTS OF JUSTINIAN—THE MEDICIAN CHAPEL.

I had almost forgotten Florence, the Athens of artists. Here are the richest stores of paintings and statuary in the world. Hundreds of persons are here continually, who have been drawn solely by the advantages which are here afforded to the student and artist. I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Mr. H. Powers, Mr. Galt and Mr. Hart, American sculptors, and Mr. Sanders and several other gentlemen, American painters. They were all very affable—Mr. Greenough was out of town. Several of them bid fair to be an honor to their country—artists of the highest order of talent and genius. Powers was dressed in an old morning gown, with the crown of an old straw bonnet on his head; not with chisel and mallet, but working at a vice, with a punch of his own contrivance, making a file, which he has invented for working out plaster models. It is a very ingenious little instrument, and a desideratum for filing soft metal, or any thing that would choke a common file. He told me that he had worked some years formerly in iron. He showed me several instruments that he had supplied himself with from his own invention. He is eminently practical, and has a very large share of matter-of-fact talent, as well as the highest order of genius for conceiving the beautiful, and for power of expression in marble. I saw his Eve, California, and America, in model. The Eve has not tasted yet, but holds the forbidden fruit in her hand. Her stature is larger than life, which gives great dignity to the figure. I could see no fault in its proportions. California stands, holding in her left hand a divining rod, which points to a mass of gold and quartz at her feet; she holds her right hand behind her, and, in it a crown of thorns; the expression of her countenance is sinister—indicating that the good fortune of riches is not unalloyed, and that is not gold that glitters." The figure is nude and youthful, indicative of the State. America stands erect, with her right hand on a fasces—Union, and her left elevated toward heaven—the fingers open—the whole action beautifully free and expressive. Her countenance is resolved, confident in the rectitude of her purposes. The statue is slightly draped. It is wonderful to see with what ease and naturalness he tells the story. The Library Committee of Congress reported in favor of buying this statue. If the Government should purchase it, it will be made colossal.

Mr. Galt, a young Virginian, invited me to his studio. He has a model bust nearly finished—a Psyche: the face is beautiful and of rare delicacy of expression.

The face and neck were finished, and the artist was giving the last touches to the hair. The whole was on clay. Indeed, the mere chiseling of marble is a work which day laborers perform. For instance, the finest touches of the Greek Slave were chiseled in exact copy after a clay model, by a man who receives about $2 50 per day. Mr. Powers does not touch the marble, even in finish, but works, as all artists do, in clay and in plaister. The art of the sculptor is that of expressing ideas in some solid form. To arrest a thought and fix it in clay, or on canvas, is the work of genius; but to copy it afterwards, very exactly, requires only talent. I asked Mr. G. how long he had been employed in modeling his Psyche? He replied, "Six months;" and it would require several months still; that a bust which he had sent to the United States, his first, had cost him a year's labor. I am ready to say that I have derived much benefit from the example of the young sculptor, who is content to spend a year on a single bust, that he may excel and perfect himself in his art. I felt as clear a conviction of laziness, and of impatience in laboring to perfect the end of my calling, as ever a sinner felt of sin; and determined just there, in that studio, the Lord helping, to work, the rest of my life, for higher results as perseveringly as the artist does in the production of his art.

Upon entering the Duomo, the celebrated Cathedral of Florence, I felt architecture to be the science of saying great things in a great way. At the first view of its simple, yet grand proportions, I held my breath; afterwards the effect was less; yet it would be impossible ever to be otherwise than impressed with the genius which reared its great dome and left its impress upon all parts of the building. Michael Angelo derived his great design of St. Peter's from this work of Brunelleschi. He used to say that no one could surpass it, few might hope to equal it. The cupola is the largest dome in the world. The summit of St. Peter's is at a greater distance from the ground, yet dome separately compared with dome, that of Brunelleschi is the higher. It is 138 feet 6 inches in diameter. The length of the whole building is 154 feet; the length of the transept 331 feet; the height of the nave 154 feet; to the summit of the cross 381 feet. The stained glass windows are among the richest in the world. The altar is immediately under the dome. I heard a hundred priests and a great many embryo priests, about fourteen years old, in long clothes and broad three-cornered hats, chanting a morning service. Their notes swelled and pervaded the whole church, filling dome and arches with rich melody: the fine effect mainly owing to the position of the altar.

In Santa Croce the principal church of the Black Friars, are the tombs of Michael Angelo, Galileo, Dante, Alfieri, Leonardo Aretino and Machiavelli—six illustrious dead. These tombs are, in themselves, objects of interest, as magnificent structures, designed and executed by such artists as Canova, Spinazzi and Donatello. The church is not crowded, as Westminster Abbey, with great and small, but seems to have been reserved as a resting place for men pre-eminent in genius and in science. Every thing about their resting place conspired with the association of the great results that belong to such names to fill me with mournful reverence and sublimest contemplation.

Next to these tombs, the statues which have been erected to the honor of great Italians are the most interesting. They are on the front of the wings of the Uffizi Palace, which are opposite to each other. These statues are larger than life and highly characteristic, besides being good likenesses. What so inspiring to the artist or student as a walk between the two rows of great masters? When I saw the great name of Galileo, Amerigo Vespucius, De Vinci, and such like, I envied Italy such men, and for a moment thought that all the great were gone, there were none left for America.

The great centre of fine arts in Florence, and in the world, is the Uffizi Palace. One room, three, called the Tribune, contains the Venus de Medici, the Apollino, the Dancing Fawn, the Group of Wrestlers, and the Slave Whetting his Knife, besides some of the choicest pictures of M. Angelo, Raphael, Titian, Paul Veronese, Correggio, Van Dyck, and many others, the great artists of all time.

The ancient statues were found among the ruins at Rome, and were collected by different members of the great Medici family. Extensive halls are filled with rich specimens of art, marbles, bronzes, busts and medals, until the eye and mind weary with the rich profusion. The Hall of Niobe gave me more pleasure than I found in any other department. The group consists of several statues—the mother and children—which are ranged round the room. They were probably originally placed in the tympanum of a temple. The terror, beauty, grandeur of form and dress of these statues, are inexpressible.

The Medician Chapel is a building intended originally for the actual reception of the Holy Sepulchre. In 1604, a fleet of galleys was dispatched to the coast of Syria to acquire the most revered relic in Christendom. While they were detaching the Sepulchre from the rock they were discovered and compelled to take flight. The failure was regarded as a great misfortune. Afterwards the building was converted into a burial place for the princes of the Medici. There are four tombs in it, than which none can be more costly and imposing. The building is circular, about 100 feet in diameter, with a dome in fine proportion. The pavement and walls are covered with highly polished marbles, agates, porphery, and other valuable stones, exquisitely laid in mosaic. The dome is ornamented with fresco paintings, which represent the Creation, Adam and Eve, the Fall, the Adoration, the Crucifixion, and the Resurrection: all finely conceived and executed.

There is a library in the cloisters of San Lorenzo which contains many valuable MSS.; Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Greek and Latin, more especially of theological writers, and also the famous Pandects of Justinian, the veritable earliest manuscript itself, which was so highly prized, and from which laws have been taught to all the world. This last is in good condition; the writing is distinct and the parchment white. They keep it in a glass case, under lock and key, and show it with a flourish. It had a great day once—this parchment—and barely escaped being worshipped. It was captured by the Pisans when they stormed Amalfi, (1135), and was preserved with as much care as if it had been the Ark of the Covenant. After the fall of Pisa it was removed to Florence, and treated in the same way. Every three months it was visited by a deputation of the magistracy. Tapers were lighted, monks and magistrates stood bare-headed, as before holy relics, and the works were opened beneath a silken pall. "The work is written in a bold, beautiful character; is composed of two quarto volumes, with large margins, on a thin parchment, and the Latin characters betray the hand of a Greek scribe." [Gibbon.

Here, also, is the earliest manuscript of Virgil—the Mediciun Virgil—(A. D. 494,) complete, with the exception of a few leaves of the Bucolics, equally prized with the former.

K.

None have ever been so good or so great, or have raised themselves so high, as to be above the reach of troubles.

The Modern Belle.

Extracted from Mr. Sayle's Poem, recited the late N. Hampshire Fair

The daughter sits in the parlor.
And rocks in her easy chair;
She's clad in her silks and satins.
And jewels are in her hair
She winks and giggles and simpers.
And simpers and giggles and winks.
And though she talks but little.
'Tis vastly more than she thinks

Her father goes clad in russet,
And ragged and seedy at that
His coats are out at the elbow
He wears a most shocking bad hat.
He's hoarding and saving his shillings.
So carefully day by day.
While she, on her beaux and poodles
Is throwing them all away.

She lies a-bed in the morning.
Till nearly the hour of noon
Then comes down snapping and snarling.
Because she was called too soon;
Her hair is still in the papers.
Her cheeks still dabbled with paint.
Remains of the last night's blushes.
Before she intended to faint.

She dotes upon men unshaven.
And men with "the flowing hair."
She's eloquent over moustaches.
They give such a foreign air.
She talks of Italian music.
And falls in love with the moon.
And tho' but a mouse should meet her.
She sinks away in a swoon.
Her feet are so very little.
Her hands are so very white.
Her jewels are so very heavy
And her head so very light:
Her color is made of cosmetics,
Though this she never will own.
Her body's made mostly of cotton.
Her heart is made wholly of stone.

She falls in love with a fellow,
Who swells with a foreign air.
He marries her for her money.
She marries him for his hair:
One of the very best matches—
Both are well mated in life,
She's got a fool for a husband.
He's got a fool for a wife.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Little Matters—For the Young.

"Tall oaks from little acorns grow,
Large streams from little fountains flow."

Now that's familiar—it's like the broad and sunny smile of an old friend: it does one good to read such wholesome and venerable truisms. I apprehend, however, that you will not be much startled by the novelty of the text: but though trite, it is not less true: though, perchance, it may be less forcible. Stay, however, a moment, your critic's laugh: we are going to indulge in a few small cogitations upon little matters, mostly for the benefit of little folks. We wish our essay to be symmetrical, and to correspond in all parts, root and branch. You take, do you? then we'll proceed.

Large things are but an assemblage of little things; the ocean is composed of drops, the globe of atoms, and empires of individuals. Small matters, then, in their congregated capacity, constitute great matters, and as such may be worthy of some individual consideration.

"Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves," is as true in regard to the acquisition of knowledge as it is of the accumulation of wealth. He that would be wise and have his mind stored with rich and varied knowledge, must take care of all the little ideas he may acquire by any and every means, just as ladies take care of quilt pieces and carpet rags, until they have enough to make something valuable. Grand and impressive trains of thought on questions of high and grave import do not often occur; and when they do are not apt to be forgotten: but small and disconnected ideas, touching various things that may be learned every day—gone at a time, in our readings, conversations or reflections—are too apt to be reckoned of little importance, and as such, like golden sands, are swept down the tide of time, and lost to us forever. Whereas if we would treasure and preserve these ever-coming and ever-going thoughts, we should be rich in that wealth which is unwasting and immortal. These little rays, if kept and concentrated, would make resplendent suns. Write down and thus preserve these fugitive little ideas, or else, in the multitude of life's thousand cares and activities they will be lost forever. These little and seemingly unimportant ideas, when preserved, become food for the mind, and like little coral reefs, are the beginning of large and fruitful islands, or to change the figure, intellectual elevations, on which the mind may stand and take a survey of far distant objects, unseen before.

It is as true in reference to the formation and establishment of character, as it is in relation to the acquisition of either material or intellectual wealth, that if we attend to little matters the great ones will attend to themselves; and this is so from the inherent importance of great matters: they will command attention. So far as my observation of social affairs extends, I have observed that most persons who lie under the ban of social condemnation, do so from the fact that some little points, which have been regarded as too trivial to demand attention, have been neglected.

For illustration: I know several really worthy and estimable men who are suffering under the imputation of being stingy and close, not because they are so, where hundreds are concerned, but in some small affairs, higgling with a merchant about the price of a dozen buttons, dewing the tailor or bootmaker to full a dime or two below their ordinary price, or trying to beat down the market folks to a little less than the usual asking. Now, care and economy are certainly commendable traits of character; and if is not at these we are aiming; but at an extreme of care and littleness, that is so apt to degenerate into meanness. These over-scrupulous grumbsavers gain nothing in the end: selling folks soon learn to ask them more than others. At best they gain but a little, while their otherwise honorable and spotless characters are belittled and degraded, and they know it not, because they feel that in all the great points they are most sacredly regarding the law of mercy and the doing of justice. But little points must not be overlooked. Just let a merchant measure his cloth to a thread's exactness, split a grain of coffee for niceness of weight, and do so with exactness and anxiety in all his little transactions, and he is sure to have his character stamped as a little, mean, stingy, tight-fisted man, and a loss of custom will follow as certainly as a loss of character.

The old are confirmed in their ways, but let me exhort you, young readers, while you are economical and careful to avoid these extremes in little business transactions, it looks like meanness, and it will injure more than the gain will profit you.

Little matters are equally important in the moral and religious relations of life. It is in little matters we begin to neglect, and go astray. We are seldom at the first of evil doing or short-coming, guilty of any great sin, either of commission or omission. We can not so shock ourselves or others: but little duties are neglected, little temptations are thought too small to need resistance. But these prepare the way for greater and graver wrongs, and we soon become cold to duty, and our moral sensibilities so blunted that we can neglect the most imperative duties and commit the grocest sins, and scarce feel a "compunctions visiting."

It is against little temptations we are least guarded: we take the least account of little words of idleness and sin, slight departures from the Spirit of our Master. We would do well to take heed to the admonition. "Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these Commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of Heaven."

J. H. WALKER.

New Orleans, Feb., 1852.

Conscience.

Conscience may be lulled to sleep for a season, but the energies of this faculty are not, on this account, weakened in the least degree, their exercise being simply put off to some future period of light and conviction, perhaps a dying bed, perhaps the day of judgment. Conscience depends much upon light and training; a conscience trained in the light of God's word acts more powerfully than the conscience of a man who is ignorant of it: but if a man be willfully ignorant of it, this will not prevent the future and vigorous action of conscience when that man's deeds come to be reviewed in the light of it. Conscience may be perverted, and sometimes is fearfully so, by habits of wickedness, so as to put evil for good, and darkness for life. Now in such a case evil deeds may really be committed under the impression that they are good deeds: but it is manifest this only shows how dreadfully evil a man must become: and by-and-by, when in the light of truth, those deeds are reviewed, the action of conscience in regard to them will be just as terribly severe as if they had been performed in that light. Paul speaks of some whose very mind and conscience were defiled; the darkening, perverting, defiling power of their evil courses of action having reached to the movements of their intellect, their understanding, and moral sense. He speaks of some in their wickedness, left to so strong delusion as to believe a lie. Now the steps in every case, by which men arrive at such delusion are well known and gradual: to the eye of God they are distinct, and though they may not at present be remembered by the mind, there will be a day when they will be seen as clearly as God sees them; and then the judgment of conscience in regard to all the acts that followed such delusion will be terribly severe.

Sometimes the blindness and silence of a perverted conscience continue almost uninterrupted even to the hour of death; but generally the light of truth breaks in upon the soul, and conscience shows her power in remorse, when remorse is all that the soul seems capable of. There are some striking and impressive instances in history, and one which is related by Hume himself, in a manner that would seem to indicate, in his own mind, some serious belief in that future existence and retribution at which he afterward scoffed! It was the end of Henry VII., a monarch of England, distinguished for his insatiable avarice. "When he found he could live no longer, he began," says Hume, "to cast his eyes toward that future existence, which the iniquities and severities of his reign rendered a very dismal prospect to him. To allay the terrors under which he labored, he endeavored, by distributing alms, and founding religious houses, to make atonement for his crimes, and to purchase by the sacrifice of a part of his ill-gotten treasures, a reconciliation with his offended Maker. Remorse even seized him at intervals, for the abuse of his authority by Empson and Dudley, but not sufficient to make him stop the rapacious hand of those oppressors." Poor rich monarch! beneath the terrors of an angry conscience of what avail were all things ill-gotten possessions! How gladly at that hour would the king have changed places with the beggar, for a mind at peace with God! [Bibliotheca Sacra.

The whole Roman hierarchy, says Wesley, even with all the improvements of the Augustin age, does not afford so much as a name for humility. The word from which we borrow this, as is well known, having in Latin a quite different meaning: nor was it found in all the copious language of the Greeks, till it was made by the Great Apostle.

This World a School of Faith.

Dr. Chalmers has a delightful chapter in his Bridgewater Treatise on the adaptation of the world to render a holy race happy. His telescopic survey of the world's great elements and characteristics, every where significantly shaped to minister to the good of the race, furnishes him a glowing argument in behalf of the being and goodness of God. If any find the world not so happily adjusted to their insensibilities and susceptibilities, the fault must be in the occupant rather than the tenement. There is no obligation upon a holy Being to model his works or shape his schemes for the behoof of the unholy and disobedient. From this point of view the argument is beautifully conclusive. The word is adapted with a divine science, to the most delicate susceptibilities and minutest wants of the soul as God made it.

But the world has its sides which bear a less inviting aspect. The permissive conceals make us acquainted with scenes and experiences suggestive of any thing but goodness: and which, if unexplained by an exegesis of grace, would aggravate perplexity into despair. Asaph felt this when his soul was envious at the prosperity of the wicked, and his foot well-nigh slipped upon a world turned upside down. Dying in firm strength and without bands—free from the trouble and plagues of other men, their eyes standing out with fatness, and smothered with blessings more than heart could wish, it seemed to him that it was better to be evil than to be good. Providence appeared to put a reward upon sin, and to mark the men of violence for distinguishing favors. It is as if the world were constructed on the principle of helping on the evil, and of blocking up the way of the good. If a man enter upon the career of sin—if he open a dram-shop to poison the bodies and souls of his fellow-man, or plan bloody expeditions, or conceive gigantic purposes of conquest and wrong, he will find enough to help him. A thousand concurring voices give him countenance and cheer. He will lack neither capital nor companionship. All things will conspire for his encouragement and aid, as if to do evil were the permitted, welcome thing in this world, and the course and constitution of nature were formed for the special purpose of facilitating it. But let a man earnestly and lovingly set about doing good, and all things conspire against him. No favoring concurrences of Providence, or natural correspondences in the world, can he count upon to assist him. Opposition, detraction and persecution are natural the rewards of godly beneficence; that religion and self-denial have become synonymous in Christian experience. The constitution of the world as it is, tends to discourage good: it gets no thanks nor co-operation. Not occasionally, as if by mistake, but uniformly, on principle and by design, evil gets acclamation, and good is frowned upon and opposed. Piety is not a favorite with the world—it has no home here, and only stays by a compulsory sufferance. The good things of life fall sparingly and grudgingly to the share of the righteous. The sun and the rain, by a prescriptive right, they obtain equally with the unjust and unthankful: but more than this they get with pains and penalties—for the law of this world is not to favor the good, but to frown upon it.

But far Asaph's sanctuary we should all slip in Asaph's steps. Outside the hallowed circle, where the Divine light explains the riddle, there is but little in the arrangements of the world, and the course of things, that would seem to indicate the government of a righteous, benevolent being. And so it is designedly, eloquently, impressively. A splendid lesson of faith is taught us by all that is going on. Written in all history and enforced by all experience, we have, in this order of things, the transforming truth, that the things that are seen are temporal, illusive, cloudy and untrustworthy. The invisible is the only reality; the only things true, are the things not seen; the only objects really to be trusted, are those apprehended by faith; in the sanctuary all is plain; out of it perplexing. God's providence finds its vindication and its glory where the present is lost sight of in the future and the unseen. Clear as the day shine forth the meaning and the drift of this crooked world, when looked upon through the glass of faith. Faith is our business here—our one grand lesson to learn preparatory to another life. And how wisely is the very evil permitted in the world overruled to be our perpetual prompter, and made to minister to the growth of that principle which alone assimilates us to heaven.

[N. Y. Evangelist.

A TIMELY PARAGRAPH.—Mrs. Swisshelm says the following beautiful passage by Washington Irving, in the "Home Book of the Picturesque," might almost make a November day cheerful:

"And here let me say a word in favor of those vicissitudes of our climate which are too often made the subject of exclusive repining. If they annoy us occasionally by changes from hot to cold, from wet to dry, they give us one of the most beautiful climates in the world. They give us the brilliant sunshine of the south of Europe, with the fresh verdure of the north. They float our summer skies with clouds of gorgeous hues or fleecy whiteness, and send down cooling showers to refresh the panting earth and keep it green. Our seasons are all poetical; the phenomena of our heavens are full of sublimity and beauty.

"Winter, with us, has none of its proverbial gloom. It may have its howling winds, and chilling frosts, and whirling snow-storms; but it has also its long intervals of cloudless sunshine, when the snow-clad earth gives redoubled brightness to the day; when at night the stars beam with intensest lustre, or the moon floods the whole landscape with the most limpid radiance; and then the joyous outbreak of our spring, bursting at once into leaf and blossom, redundant with vegetation, and vociferous with life—and the splendors of our summer—its morning voluptuousness and evening glory—its airy palaces of sun-gilt clouds, piled up in a deep azure sky; and its gusts of tempest of almost tropical grandeur, when the forked lightning and the bellowing thunder volley from the battlements of heaven and shake the sultry atmosphere—and the sublime melancholy of our autumn, magnificent in its decay, withering down the pomp and pride of a woodland country, yet reflecting back from its yellow forests the golden serenity of the sky. Surely we may say that in our climate, the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth forth his handiwork; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

Gems from the Rabbis.

THE VINE.

On the day of their creation the trees rejoiced, each exultingly praised its own good qualities. "The Lord has planted me," exclaimed the lofty cedar: "firmness and fragrance, durability and strength are united in me."

"The mercy of the Lord has planted me as a blessing," said the umbrageous palm-tree: "beauty and utility are combined in me."

The apple-tree said, "I stand glorious amongst the trees, like the sun amidst the celestial hosts." And the myrtle exclaimed, "Like the rose among thorns, I stand distinguished amongst my kindred, the underwood." All boasted: the fig-tree of its fruit, the olive of its richness; even the pine-tree and the fir could rejoice and exult.

The vine alone remained drooping and silent. "To me," it mournfully said, "every thing seems denied: stems nor branches, blossom nor fruit, can I boast; yet such as I am, I will wait in silent hope." It sank downward its tendrils wept in sorrow and solitude.

Not long it wailed and wept; when behold, the new-created lord of earth, kind hearted man, approached. He saw a feeble plant, a plaything to the winds, sunk low, as if imploring his aid. In pity he raised it, and wound the tender tree around his arbor. Joyfully the air saluted the glowing vine, the heat of the sun penetrated its lurid green grains, and prepared that sweet moisture, the most precious beverage of man. Decked out in the fulness of its rich grapes, the vine bent down to its preserver: he tasted its refreshing juice, and called the vine "his friend." The proud trees envied the feeble plant, for its fruit was more valued than theirs; but it rejoiced in its slender stem, and the accomplishment of its hope. Therefore its juice still invigorates the human heart, it cheers the desponding spirit, and imparts its gladness to the mourning mind.

* * * * * * *

Ye who are suffering and abandoned, do not despair, but persevere in patience and hope; there is an eye above that beholds even you; the humblest plant yields the most precious juice; the feeble vine begets vigor and animation.

Popery Dying Out.

The London Tablet utters the following lamentation: "Many, alas, too many in America, as well as in England, bid a long farewell to the practice of their religion when their foot presses upon the foreign strand. Their children are left to grow up Protestants; and if they return in old age to the practice of their religious duties, they too often defer the last confession that they made from the last week spent in the place of their birth, or in the port from which they sailed. Until now the Church has been gaining ground in England; nobles and peasants, learned and unlearned, have entered into the fold; but now, possibly, the tide may turn. Acts of Parliament have been always dangerous to the Church; from Henry III. to Elizabeth, they have had great and abiding influences, and we must not shut our eyes to the danger lurking in them. The first persons to suffer from them have been courtiers and those in high stations, from whom the poison spreads through every vein of the body politic. Half a dozen Peers turned the scale against the Church under Elizabeth, and again under Charles II., when the Catholic Peers and Commoners were shut out from Parliament. The bad legislation of those days was submitted to, and daily apostacies were the result. It may be so again!" This was said with special reference to what the Tablet called the "apostacy" of the Premier Duke, the Duke of Norfolk. It would seem from this that Romanism is to stand or fall with princes and nobles.

An Oriental Myth.

An Arabian sage—so says an Oriental myth—wishing to explain that all things are not as they seem, bade his disciple to go to a fountain that gushed out of the sand, by his tent-side, and dip up a calabash of its water, and told him to sit down and look intently into it, and tell what he saw.

"I see strange things," said the disciple, after he had gazed stedfastly awhile. "I see a caravan just perishing with thirst, and the water is all gone from the water bottles of the Arabs, and the camels even are fainting; and I see an old Arab prostrate himself upon the hot sand and curse Allah in his rage of thirst. It is awful to see!"

"Look again," said the sage.

"Now the camels are snuffing a moist wind newly blowing. They revive, and hasten on till they bring the perishing Bedouin to a place of springs and palms, and there they drink and are refreshed, and bless themselves that their good fortune carried them to this fountain of a thousand years.

"Look again."

"Ah!" said the disciple, "I see the strangest thing! The palm trees are inverted, and their roots are in heaven, and the stream is pouring out of the hollow of God's hand."

"Yes, my son," said the sage, "He saved their lives even while they cursed Him. Remember, our trees of blessing are all rooted in heaven, though it seems not so to us; and our rivulets of comfort, though they reach our lips through the golden goblet of one friend, or the poor gourd of another, and we think these friends as the givers, do they not all flow from the hollow of His hand? Now, therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name!"

BEAUTIFUL METAPHOR.—The comparison of the journey of life to a transit across a desert, is very felicitously expressed in the following lines, by Charles Wesley:

Here, in this body pent,
Absent from Heaven I roam;
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home!

The South American Snake-Plant.

A PERILOUS [illegible]

Venamous serpents abound in all the tierras calientes (hot lands) of America. The frequent fatality following their bite—particularly among the Indians, who roam barefoot through the tangled woods—renders the knowledge of any counteracting remedy a matter of great importance to these people. In consequence, much diligence has at all times been used in seeking for such remedies; and many, more or less efficacious, have, from time to time, been discovered.

That of surest virtues yet known is a plant called the guaco—the sap of whose leaves is a complete antidote against the bite of the most poisonous reptiles. The guaco is a species of willow, and is a strong, healthy plant, but grows only in the hot regions, and flourishes best in the shade of other trees, along the banks of the streams. It is not found in the colder uplands (tierras frias;) and in this disposal nature again beautifully exhibits her design, for here exist not the venomous creatures against whose poisons the guaco seems intended as an antidote.

That part of the plant which is used for the snake-bite is a sap or tea distilled from its leaves. It may be taken either as a preventive or cure; in the former case, enabling him who has drunk of it to handle the most dangerous serpents with impunity. For a long time the knowledge of the antidotal qualities of the guaco remained a great mystery, and was confined to a few among the native inhabitants of South America. Those of them who possessed the secret were interested in preserving it, as through it they obtained considerable recompense, not only from those who had been bitten by venomous snakes, but also from many who were curious to witness the feats of these snake tamers themselves. However, the medicinal virtues of the guaco are now generally known in all countries where it is found; and its effects only cause astonishment to the stranger or traveller.

Being at Margarita some time ago, I heard of this singular plant, and was desirous of witnessing the test of its virtues. Among the slaves of the place there was one noted as a skillful snake-doctor; and as I enjoyed the acquaintance of his master, I was not long in obtaining a promise that my curiosity should be gratified. A few days after, the negro entered my room, carrying in his hands a pair of coral-snakes, of that species known as the most beautiful and venomous. The negro's hands and arms were completely naked; and he manipulated the reptiles, turning them about, and twisting them over his wrists with the greatest apparent confidence. I was, for a while, under the suspicion that their fangs had been previously drawn; but I soon found that I had been mistaken. The man convinced me of this by opening the mouths of both, and showing me the interior. There, sure enough, were both teeth and fangs in their perfect state; and yet the animals did not make the least attempt to use them. On the contrary, they seemed to exhibit no anger, although the negro handled them roughly. They appeared perfectly innocuous, and rather afraid of him.

Determined to assure myself beyond the shadow of a doubt, I ordered a large mastiff to be brought into the room and placed so that the snakes could reach him. The dog was sufficiently frightened, but being tied he could not retreat; and after a short while one of the serpents "struck," and hit him on the back of the neck. The dog was now set loose, but did not at first appear to notice the wound he had received. In a few minutes more he fell, and struggled over the ground in violent convulsions, similar to those occasioned by hydrophobia. Blood and viscous matter gushed from his mouth and nostrils, and at the end of a quarter of an hour by the watch he was dead.

Witnessing all this I became extremely desirous of possessing the important secret—which, by the way, was not then so generally known. I offered a good round sum; and the negro, promising to meet my wishes, took his departure.

On the following day he returned, bringing with him a handful of heart-shaped leaves, which I recognized as those of the bejuco de guaco, or snake-plant. These he placed in a bowl, having first crushed them between two stones. He next poured a little water into the vessel. In a few minutes maceration took place, and the "tea" was ready. I was instructed to swallow two small spoonfuls of it, which I did. The negro then made three incisions in each of my hands at the forking of my fingers, and three similar ones on each foot between the toes. Through these he inoculated me with the extract of the guaco. He next punctured my breast, both on the right and left side, and performed a similar inoculation. I was now ready for the snakes, several of which, both of the coral and cascabel species, the negro had brought along with him.

With all my wish to become a snake-charmer, I must confess that at the sight of the hideous reptiles I felt my courage oozing through my nails. The negro, however, continued to assure me, and as I took great pains to convince him that my death would cost him his life, and I saw that he still entreated me to go ahead, I came at length to the determination to run the risk. With a somewhat shaky hand I took up one of the corals, and passed it delicately through my fingers. All right. The reptile shewed no disposition to bite, but twisted itself through my hands, apparently cowering and frightened. I soon grew bolder, and took up another and another, until I had three of them in my grasp at one time. I then put them down and caught a snake of the cascabel species—the rattlesnake of the north. This fellow behaved in a more lively manner, but did not show any symptoms of irritation.

After I had handled the reptile for some minutes, I was holding it near the middle, when, to my horror, I saw it suddenly elevate its head, and strike at my left arm! I felt that I was bitten, and, flinging the snake from me, I turned to my companion with a shudder of despair. The negro, who, with his arms folded, had stood all the while calmly looking on, now answered my quick and terrified inquiries with repeated assurances that there was no danger whatever, and that nothing serious would result from the bite. This he did with as much coolness and composure as if it had been only the sting of a mosquito. I was more comforted by the manner of my companion than by his words, but to make assurance doubly sure, I took a fresh sup of the guaco tea, and waited tremblingly the result. A slight inflammatory swelling soon appeared about the orifice of the wound, but at the expiration of a few hours it had completely subsided, and I felt that I was all right again.

On many occasions afterwards I repeated the experiment of handling serpents. I had myself taken in the woods, and some of them of the most poisonous species. On these occasions I adopted no further precaution than to swallow a dose of the guaco sap, and even chewing the leaves of the plant itself was sufficient. This precaution is also taken by those—such as hunters and wood choppers—whose calling carries them into the thick jungles of the southern forest, where dangerous reptiles abound.

The guaco no doubt has saved many a life. The traditions which the Indians relate of the discovery of its virtues is interesting. It is as follows: In the tierras calientes there is a bird of the kite species—a gavilan, whose food consists principally of serpents. When in search of its victims, this bird utters a loud but monotonous note, which sounds like the word gua-co slowly pronounced. The Indians allege that this note is for the purpose of calling to it the snakes, over whom it possesses a mysterious power, that summons them forth from their hiding-places. This, of course, is pure superstition, but what follows may nevertheless be true. They relate that before making its attack upon the bird always puts the leaves of the bejuco de guaco. This having been observed, it was inferred that the plant possessed antidotal powers, which led to the trial and consequent discovery of its virtues.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, February 7.

The New Volume.

One full round year of newspaper existence—the first year, the hardest year—has been completed, and not, as we humbly hope, without results, and the opening of prospects of a favorable character to the Church and the cause of Christ.

A year ago, under gloomier skies than we care now to think of, the publication of the N. O. C. Advocate was begun, at the instance of two Annual Conferences, with three hundred and forty subscribers! It was begun after careful consultation and much anxious waiting, upon the only plan that a religious periodical could be published in the Emporium of the South. All were agreed there ought to be a religious paper in New Orleans—but how to get it, was the question. One Church and another tried it and failed signally. After brief experiments the sheets ceased to be issued, and a heavy debt had accumulated. Many prophecied against the present enterprise, not from any ill feeling, but honest apprehensions of failure, founded on experience of the past.

They looked, in the greatest kindness, to see it die before three months were out; and then six months was the limit: and then they began to believe it would see New Year's day. And now to all who wrote out the OBITUARY of the Advocate we say—"Put it by or throw it away and be prepared for the time when it shall record yours." The skies are bright and brightening. We shall live and not die. The subscription is steadily on the increase. The Conferences lately visited by the editor, and other Conferences he was not able to visit, are not to be mistaken in their purpose of having and sustaining a Church paper on the Gulf, convenient for supplying their religious, social and commercial wants. Recent events will go to satisfy them, if before they doubted, of the dispatch with which their PROCEEDINGS may be received and published back among themselves from this point, while they are yet fresh and of interest to both preachers and people. The credit in this respect, is not due to the management of the paper, but is solely owing to the advantages of its point of publication for receiving and communicating news.

For the friendly reception that the N. O. Christian Advocate received from the contemporary religious press, and especially the large and prosperous Advocate family, we make our best acknowledgments, coupled with an expression of profound satisfaction at the friendly relations it has continued to enjoy with them all. These are the relations pleasantest to us, and we hope to maintain them. [illegible] this. We stand reasonably in nobody's way. Of the many things spoken and written about multiplying the Church papers to an evil extent, the friends and patrons of this paper have taken none to themselves. Editors and people, preachers and bishops, have all and all along admitted that it was desiderated. They have said it ought to be if it could be, and the prospect now that it can be, and be permanently, yields us a pleasure that is greatly heightened by an assurance of general sympathy.

It will surely be no mean praise or prestige to the Methodists of the South-West, if they are the first in establishing here a religious newspaper. We covet this distinction for them to be first to supply what all conceded the necessity of, and to succeed where others have failed over and again. We beg to name a few things to which this success is mainly attributable:

1. Connectionalism: by which Conferences and congregations, preachers, and people can be united readily and effectually in purpose and action. This advantage our brethren of other Churches have not.

2. Itinerancy: Itinerant preachers, for energy and fidelity, make the best agents in the world. They go everywhere, all over and through the land, canvassing it thoroughly, using other places besides cross-roads and cities. Then there is no tardiness or Stuart-counting of hireling agents. The preachers are interested in the paper; they make it co-ordinate to their own pastoral labors and promote its circulation, as they preach, for conscience sake. For these reasons, a Methodist paper may do well where other Church papers will die out. This is one of the many instances of the superior efficiency of our system in promoting religious knowledge among men.

3. THE CASH PRINCIPLE: We are more than ever resolved to stand by it. A cotemporary, in noticing the New Orleans Advocate's first issue, said of the price—"It was $2 50 first, last, and all the time." Now there is no last and all the time about it; but $2 50 first. Compliance with these terms and the zeal of friends and the advantageous economy of the Church, have alone kept it and will keep it, from going by the board. Small bills due over half a dozen states of the Union will not pay bills falling due, weekly, on the spot. The itinerant agency, which is, above all others, an effective, is also a cash agency; for the itinerant goes away soon and leaves all but cash accounts in a confused way. It might be an accommodation to credit a man for $100; but who in this country that reads can receive much accommodation in a credit for $2 50? Nothing could be accommodated but a procrastinating disposition, and in this respect, a year will hardly improve one's condition. Short accounts make long friendships. Pay down at once and be done with it. Owe no man anything, and read your own paper.

Our brethren will not mind the occasional failures they meet in procuring subscribers when they announce the cash principle. Some will draw back at that announcement. Let it be so. We prefer that they should be supplied elsewhere on a credit. There are persons, a good meaning, tolerable sort of persons too they are, that will take anything on a credit. Their names swell a subscription list as much as any and give it the deceptive appearance of doing well, when every such patron is a drain. We ask deliverance from such patrons. Pass on—and when by-and-bye you find one who can so estimate his wants and the worth of a paper and his ability to afford one as to pay down for it, then you have stirred up the right sort of subscriber—one apt to continue, and if he ever quits, he will quit even.

We can therefore in no case enter any subscriber upon the books until the subscription price is paid. If it be inconvenient for the brother acting as Agent to remit the money when the names are sent, he can have it charged to himself.

☞ Brethren will please receive subscribers for the Advocate on these terms. ☜

A strict adherence to them will lose many names but very little money. It will winnow the mail list in the beginning and not in the end of the year. It will show us our resources before we go in debt, not afterwards. It will contribute to the solid, if not the seeming prosperity of the paper.

This is a long article on such a subject, but one such may be allowed once a year.

Old Dress—Shad-Coats, etc.

A writer in the R. C. Advocate is giving a series of interesting articles on the history of Methodism in Petersburg, Virginia, from old times down to the present. He gives the following description of the men and dress of a former day. Doubtless some of our readers will recall images that have almost faded from memory:

"Much has been said concerning the style of dress worn by the old Methodist preachers. I chanced to meet with a young brother, a few years ago, who had just furnished himself with what he called 'an old-fashioned Methodist coat.' One glance was sufficient to convince me that he had mistaken the thing altogether; the only point of resemblance was the 'strait breast,' or what is humorously, but not delicately, called the 'shad belly;' but even what he called the 'strait breast,' was rounded off from the collar to the bottom of the skirt, somewhat in the shape of a bent bow, which was quite different from the Methodistic coat of former days; in every other respect it was fashioned in the latest mode, and was in reality a fashionable coat.

"I hope I shall be pardoned for attempting a description of the apparel worn by those old veterans who battled so manfully for the cause of truth, previous to, and somewhat after, the commencement of the present century. First, the coat was cut with a strait breast, the front rounded off very little, with what may be called a standing collar, the back long, the skirts full, with large pockets, the buttons of that kind formerly known as paper buttons, of a glossy black. The waistcoat was long, reaching to a point below the hips, rounded or cut with circular slope at the bottom, on each side forming what was called flaps. The waistcoat pockets were large, and a man could thrust his hands into them very easily. Shorts, or knee-breeches, were invariably worn, fastened to the knees with plain black buckles, or tied with stripes of the same color. Long boots, coming up nearly to the knees, and sometimes projecting in front over the knee, fitting the leg very neatly. In the absence of boots, shoes were worn, fastened with buckles of metal.

"The hair was combed back from the forehead, and fell over the shoulders to a moderate length. In some instances, a portion of the hair in front was combed over the forehead and cut short, or at even length, about half way down the forehead. I am not certain, but I have seen some within the last twenty years, who wore their hair in this way. To crown the whole, a hat with a broad brim, either white or black, but most generally the former color. I ought not, however, to omit the neck attire: Cravats were not worn in that day, but neat dimity stocks, buckled behind with a silver buckle. I beg particular attention to this, inasmuch as a young preacher, the other day, who is about to take the field as an itinerant, was heard to say that he intended to wear the white cravat with long ends hanging down before, as being the neck appendage of the old Methodist preachers. This, I can assure him, is a mistake. If he intends to go back to first principles, he must go beyond what he has seen in the modern dress, to arrive at the true standard. The garb of a Methodist preacher, at the present day, I hesitate not to say, is not only graceful but convenient; but I well recollect when the lappel coat was introduced, that some of our good friends heaved deep sighs, and concluded that the glory of Methodism had departed."

A NEW DEGREE.—Our brother Rottenstein, of Texas, has started one—D. E. Q. Whether the grade be above or below D. D. he does not inform us. But can the reader make it out?—D. E. Q.: not quod erat demonstrandum but DOCTOR of the EDITORIAL QUILL!!

CONSEQUENCES.—It is stated in the Washtenaw Whig, published at Ann Arbor, that Dr. Whedon has been dismissed from the Michigan University, for preaching on the Higher Law. A northern exchange says: this is an outrage worthy of the Dark ages.

TEMPERANCE MEETING.—Rev. J. P. Campbell will lecture on Temperance in Moreau-street Church on Tuesday night next. The ladies are getting up a fine choir for the occasion. Mr. C. has held meetings at other points in this city, highly satisfactory.

METHODIST PRESS.

KOSSUTH AND INTERVENTION.—The W. Christian Advocate presents its readers with a very respectable "Wood cut" of the Hungarian hero, and also, a column of his biography. The Editor gives an able article against the intervention doctrine now assuming so serious an aspect; concludes:

"We repeat, then, while we honor Kossuth—while we consider him one of the greatest men of this or any other age—while we bow before the intellectual power which pervades all his speeches—and while, from our inmost heart, we sympathize with the oppressed of every clime, color, or creed, yet we must pause, ere, in the impulses of our hearts, we take one step which shall endanger the integrity or stability of our glorious Union, or risk the entrance upon a war which may enfeeble us, and which in the issue would, we fear, retard rather than advance the progress of freedom throughout the world."

In apologizing for cutting down obituary notices, the Editor remarks:

"It would require, in ordinary, good-sized type, from one half to one full side of the Advocate every week, were we simply to insert biographies just as they are sent us.

"Our brethren who study brevity have our thanks. Notices of the death of Christians are not read because it is important to find out when they got married, and when they moved from one State to another. The great object of them is to encourage believers, and to follow Christ, and how to enjoy him when we come to die. 'Did he die happy?' This is the great question connected with the departure of our friends. True, we can state how long they served in the militant Church, and record any other really important matter."

KOSSUTH AND PROTESTANTISM.—The Texas Banner contains an article of a column and more, part editorial, on the great Magyar. The editor, who is himself a German of the Republican School, thus speaks. He is at home in such matters and we quote him largely:

"We have been long convinced of the fact that religious liberty is the only sure foundation of civil liberty; that one cannot exist without the other, and that Protestantism is the only guardian of both; for, whatever infidelity and skepticism may say to the contrary, without Christ there never was and never will be a free people. History attests it; facts have demonstrated it; we tried it. From 1776 down to this time, one nation after the other arose and struggled for liberty, and just the weakest nation of all, without money and without shoes, uneducated in the art of war, and in the language of an English writer, 'With Washington, a militia Colonel at their head,' achieved the victory over the best troops of the then known world. But this militia Colonel bowed his knee at the foot of the Cross; he took his oath of office on the Bible, he was the instrument in the hands of Christ to gather a people of all nations, and kindred and tongues and tribes, on this happy shore for the protection of true liberty.

"Kossuth is the representative of Protestantism and liberty; the best recommendation given to him is the abuse heaped upon him by the Romish Archbishop Hughes, in New York, and his abettors. Hungary's liberty is now the desire of the civilized world; it is the triumph of Protestantism over superstition, priestcraft and infidelity. If Kossuth and his people will be true to Christ, as he has been thus far, he must triumph—for Christ has promised liberty to his people; for, 'if the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.' What is true of individuals, is true of nations. Never were more anxious prayers offered to God for the success of Kossuth and the welfare of all nations, than at this time. The next war will be the holy alliance of the people against the three headed monster—Rome, Vienna and Petersburg.

"Tom Paine, Marat, Mirabeau and Desmoulin, sustained by all the valor of the French nation, could not succeed. Napoleon, who trampled the Bible under foot, ended his life in exile; Germany, with all its learning and its hard fought battles, is the dupe of four-and-thirty crowned blockheads. The light of Protestantism has been dimmed and veiled by the ignis fatuus of Rationalism; the blood of hundreds of thousands of patriots hath flown in vain; it was Christless. Mazzini—the virtuous Mazzini, the most devoted patriot that we have ever known, (we thought him almost "patriotism personified,") knows nothing about experimental religion; detesting the mummery, superstition and tyranny of Romanism, he fell in the hands of Unitarianism in England, and he, once a triumvir and triumphant in Rome, is now again an exile in England. Red Republicanism, communism and socialism, are nothing but infidelity, and of course worse than Louis Napoleon's tyranny; and thirty-six millions of Frenchmen have sealed the fate of the former."

DISCUSSIONS ON SANCTIFICATION.—The Northern Advocate has been the theatre of some spirited articles for some weeks on sanctification. The editor has been obliged to "shut down," with drawers full of articles. One of the most prolific, pointed disputants, Professor Mattison, has said:

"Unfortunately for us, Prof. Upham's work was published by a Methodist firm in Boston, and on that account soon acquired currency among our people. In a short time its most exceptionable theological peculiarities were incorporated into a small volume, and issued from our Book Room; and thus the tares of new divinity have been widely scattered over our Zion."

"The small volume" is Mrs. Phœbe Palmer's "Way of Holiness." The pastor of Mrs. P. vindicates her from this charge of plagiarism, by proving that "Interior Life" was published six months after the Way of Holiness.

SAME SUBJECT.—The leader of the S. C. Advocate deprecates some things in the treatment of Christian Perfection, as doing mischief:

"The first is a heated, impassioned, hyperbolical mode of speaking and writing of Christian Perfection. Immense evil has resulted from this. Sanctification does not consist in ecstacy and excitement—asceticism and sanctimoniousness—though it is sometimes connected with both the former and the latter. If any great degree of prominence be given to these accidents, the consequences are always injurious. You will find no mysticism, no sentimentalism, in the Sermon on the Mount, or in the Epistles of Paul, which so luminously set forth the doctrine in question. Every thing is plain and practical, manly and robust. And so, in the very nature of the case, it should be. But how different are the presentations of the subject in the looks and lives, books and conversation of some good people. There was beyond question true sanctity in the lives of DeRenty and Gregory Lopez, so often alluded to by Mr. Wesley, and in Madame Guion and Catharine Adorna, whose works have been patronizingly interpreted by Prof. Upham; but no healthy, religious character can be formed upon these Romish models. Accordingly, we can not recommend the perusal of these works without caution and qualification. Some of them, indeed, we are not inclined to recommend at all.—Accordingly, when consulted by a good brother, who was hawking the Life of Lopez in New York, about the propriety of his canvassing the South for the sale of that and similar works, we discountenanced the project. On the subject of holiness we want nothing crude, nothing factitious. Moreover, we want no dilutings—no namby-pamby wishy-washy disputations—ill-told and better-concealed experiences, such as are sometimes found in Guides, Notes and Letters on holiness, and in meetings designed for its promotion. Every thing in the way of explanation, argument, enforcement, should be simple, sober, earnest—there should be no efforts of imagination, no fancy work; figurative language should be sparingly and cautiously employed, an egotistic spirit and manner as much as possible avoided, and all cant and mannerism carefully eschewed. It seems to us that in treating on holiness, wire-drawn argument, ambitious eloquence, ornate style, and fiery declamation, are all out of place. And we are greatly mistaken, too, if the precedence do not belong to those great elements which can be bodied forth in living excellence in the character, rather than to those feelings and fervors which seek no incarnation in moral action."

LAY MOVEMENT.—ZION'S HERALD.—As developments go on, it appears that agitation in the northern section of Methodism, started in dissatisfaction of the people with the course of their preachers in matters pertaining to the division of the Church. A private letter from Philadelphia, freely quoted by the editor of Zion's Herald, says:

"What it may lead to, I cannot surmise. It is an observable feature, that those of the leading laity whose sympathies are largely South, give their unqualified approbation to the whole movement."

The same writer remarks that a strong feeling exists in Philadelphia against the office of Presiding Elders, and for the extension of preacher's appointments from 4 to 6 years.

N. C. ADVOCATE.—The Philadelphia correspondent of this paper agrees substantially with the above letter, adding, however, that there is also a disposition among the Philadelphians to have the appointment of class leaders rendered elective in the classes. Thus changes upon changes are talked of. Our Northern friends already feel the need of Southern Conservatism.

R. C. ADVOCATE.—Dr. Lee is sifting Howell on "Infant Baptism." In this paper, G. W. Langhorne, an eminent member of the Virginia Conference, is submitting a number of Articles, elaborate and argumentative, against the prevalent policy of our Church in appointing preachers to professorships, etc. He has reached No. V.

MERRY TIME FOR THE PAPER MEN:—In Zion's Herald of the 21st ult., there is given a tempting paragraph. It takes one out of a gloomy mood to read it. This paper, though one of the oldest and most important organs of the Church North, is published at their own risk, by an Association of individuals, for the benefit of the Church and the cause of Christ. We hope, in time, to be present at such a re-union of the entire corps of the New Orleans Christian Advocate office—Publishing Committees, and Printers, and Editors and friends generally—as is given below:

The Herald Rooms, At No. 7, Cornhill, were the scene of a very interesting occasion on Monday evening, the 12th inst. These rooms, as those of our readers who occasionally visit us know, comprise three, the editorial sanctum, the publisher's office and an adjacent apartment for committees and business meetings in general. In the later our enterprising agent provided at his own expense, on the occasion referred to, a very palatable collation, of which the Publishing Association, with the corps of the office, partook. The Association includes a large proportion of the best energy of our church in the city and vicinity—we have no hesitancy in pronouncing it the most efficient board of management that we know of in the Methodist Church, and certainly no Boston meeting of leading Methodists ever excelled in character.

Not only were the eatables of the occasion an "entertaining" surprise, but "the feast of reason and the flow of soul" which followed were exceedingly agreeable. Impromptu speeches were made by Messrs. Thomas Patten, Sen., Dr. Snow, D. S. King, Wm. C. Brown, (a former editor of the paper,) Geo. C. Rand, (our enterprising printer,) F. Rand, E. Otheman and the Editor. Many an old reminiscence of the early struggles of the paper was related; its success, its prospects, its financial and editorial policy, &c., &c., were referred to, and the conclusion seemed unanimously reached, that we had "fought a good fight," that our affairs were in better train than ever before, and that we must "go ahead," right straight "ahead," in the course which a gracious Providence had so manifestly designated before us.

Personally, we were gratified at this re-union, by the harmonious endorsement which seemed to be given to the editorial policy of the Herald. Its liberal range of discussion, its progressive tendencies, properly sober as we deem them, its combination of the characteristics of an ecclesiastical organ with those of a family paper, its general character and course, in fine, were made matters of more cheering congratulation than we are accustomed to receive in our hard labors. The book accounts of the publisher received emphatic commendation. We do not believe that the business affairs of any other Boston paper are managed more prudently. After the election of officers, the assembly broke up in hearty good humor, quite tempted to believe that the whole corps of us—editorial, publishing, printing and managing—is about as clever a body of well meaning men as any of our neighbors.

LITERARY NOTICES.

THE LIFE OF JOHN STERLING; by Thomas Carlyle. Boston: 1851. Phillips, Sampson & Co.

In reading this book (and we could not otherwise than read it through) we have been reminded of what a preacher, an original, once said to us—"He did not much care what his text was: he could always find enough in it, or bring enough to it, to make out a sermon." By the latter process Carlyle has made out a readable volume. Having some leisure on his hands, he concluded to "fling down on paper" some outline of his friend who was a "bright, beautiful soul;" a mind of coruscating wit, not of great store of knowledge, but that lay ready about him; restless and generous; the sum total of his activities not amounting to much; a genius of the sheet-lightning order, whose energies could not be condensed into a bolt. Here is another illustration of the truth, that the interest of a biography depends more on the graphy than the bios. Sterling was sufficiently out of the common way, and impractical to offer a fair chance for Carlyle to throw off some of his peculiar notions of things. The text is meager: the sermon abounds in rich irrelevancies and episodes and is not over evangelical.

For sale by J. Ball.

THE BETTER COVENANT; by the Rev. F. A. Goode, M. A. New York: 1852. Carter & Brothers.

The Bishop of Ohio, C. P. Mellvaine, furnishes a flattering preface, encouraging the republication. The author is of the Church of England. The book is founded in Heb. VIII. 6.—first published 1833. The writer belongs to that class called Moderate Calvinists. We should think ourselves very immoderate to go the length with him. It is due to say, however, that his teachings on this point are rather devotional than controversial; not well argued, but warmly exhorted. There is a very comforting and bright side to this doctrine, viz—election: it can be made, and so Mr. G. makes it, copious in consolations and encouragements to those who have the "adoption of Sons." We suppose moderate Calvinists are those who keep this view in the foreground and its necessary consequent reprobation in the background. Bishop Mellvaine, by way of apology for the Calvinism of his protege author, remarks that "if those Episcopalians who find fault with him, for it will look to the Articles of their Church, they will see him nearer the standard than themselves!" Such a wholesale endorsement from such hands should prepare Methodist Episcopalians for a time that is fast coming, when they will be left alone to bear the banner of Arminianism.

For sale by J. Ball.

CHRISTIAN DUTY; by J. Angel James. New York: 1852. Carter & Brothers.

G. P. R. James writes much, but neither he or his writings are much akin to the Angel-ic James. This is no novel, but the substance of many earnest and searching PASTORAL ADDRESSES, chiefly on the subjects of Christian Duty. Among the subjects are: The Duty and Benefit of Meditation; Attendance on Week-day Services, Satanic Temptations, Religious Joy, The Proofs of Sanctified Affliction, Different Degrees of Glory, etc. Those who have read "Christian Professor" need not be told that these topics are handled in a most pointed, evangelical style.

For sale by J. Ball.

MANUAL OF DEVOTION, for the Morning and Evening of Each Day in the Month, for the use of Schools and Private Families; by N. C. Brooks, A. M. New Orleans: 1852. John Ball.

Professor Brooks has evidently put forth this little volume with no ambition to play the author, but with a design to do good. No man is better able, from position and occupation, (he is President of Baltimore Female College) to know the nature and extent of the want he aims to supply. There is too little recognition of God in our educational systems, and that little is not always calculated to interest the youthful mind. By way of educational reform in this respect, Prof. B. has arranged those RELIGIOUS EXERCISES, presenting the fundamental truths of Christianity, well digested and classified: with a hymn for morning and evening. To prevent wandering of attention while the Bible is being read in the ordinary school way, and to make all present parties in devotion, the larger part of the Exercises consists of readings and responses by the Teachers and Scholars; the sentences used are accurately quoted from the Bible, with chapter and verse. It strikes us as one way, and a very unexceptionable one, of engaging the attention of children, both at school and in family worship, where they are like to be listless, and at the same time imbuing their minds with TRUTH. For sale by publisher.

OLIVE LEAVES; by Mrs. Sigourney: Illustrated. New York: 1852. Carter & Brothers.

Those short chaptors, making, 18 mo., 300 pages, are addressed to "Sweet Young Friends—buds of the Olive and the Rose," and combine, in one shape or other, all the excellencies of Mr. S. Happy for the daughters of our country that they have such a writer to polish them "after the similitude of a palace."

For sale by John Ball.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC PHYSICIAN: containing the Treatment of Diseases; with popular explanations of anatomy, physiology, hygiene, and hydropathy; also, an abridged Materia Medica; by J. H. Pulte, M. D.; 3d edition; revised and enlarged. New York: 1852. A. S. Barnes & Co. Cincinnati: H. W. Derby & Co.

We have heard that this physic does no harm if it does no good; it leaves you no worse than it found you: we can therefore safely advise our friends to try it. The old ungenerous saying that doctors kill more than they cure, can not be brought against homœopathic doctors, and that is no small matter. Our present purpose is to search this book, and we have no disinclination to believe in a doctrine so palatable. We hate hard drugging almost as bad as drumming, and judge them nearly equal in point of damage.

COMPENDIO DE LA HISTORIA DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS; por Emma Willard.

MIGUEL TOLON. Traductor. Nueva York: 1852. Publicado por A. S. Barnes y Compa.

This translation of Mrs. Willard's history is a compliment to the author, and an indication of a foreign interest in our history that will be appreciated by all Americans. The privilege of telling our own story is not a small advantage to republicanism, and we are always pleased to see this work going on. The publishers have done their work in a capital manner. For sale by J. Ball.

We have before noticed the publications of the General Protestant Episcopal S. S. Union, D. Dana, Jr., Agent, New York. They are not to be surpassed by any similar publications for the tasteful and taking elegance of their "getting up." Before us are three more of this class:

WATCH AND PRAY, or Helen's Confirmation; by Cousin Alice.

THE CHERRY STONES, or Charlton School; a tale for Youth; by Rev. W. Adams.

FAIR PRIZE DAY, and other Sketches; by the author of "Charlie Burlop," etc.

THE LADIES' COMPANION, for January.

SAINTAN, for February.

LADIES' REPOSITORY, January.

Professor Gliddon—Pyramids.

This celebrated voyager and stirrer-up of the dry bones of Egyptian mummyology delivered his fourth lecture, Tuesday, to an overflowing audience. His subject was "The Pyramids." He described them as historic monuments, built by the vanity of departed kings for the perpetuation of their memories, and gave their number as sixty-seven, each having been erected by an individual monarch, thus proving the existence during their erection of as many rulers in Egypt as there exist Pyramids. He exhibited the drawing of the largest, supposed to have been built by Cheops, who has slumbered in a state of mummyism for more than five thousand years.

This pyramid, he said, was originally four hundred and eighty feet high, but that by the vandalism of the Ishmaelites, it had withered down to exactly four hundred and fifty feet, nine inches. Others, he mentioned, of less dimensions, each being smaller than the other, and dwindling in height by geometrical retrogression, as the lower rounds of a ladder are not equal in altitude to the upper, or, as King Lilliput was of shorter stature than his illustrious visitor Gulliver, from having been earlier checked in his growth. Each of these monuments, he said, were commenced by different Kings, in the first year of their reigns.

They were built from the ground up, commencing at the foundation, where the King's chamber was located, wherein, after his demise, he held his grand banquet of worms; and then, if he found it convenient to depart this life, the whole structure was immediately encased and the work brought to a close. But, on the contrary, if his Majesty concluded to remain some years longer, the work was continued upward in the stair-step fashion to the end of his kingship's "mortal coil," and only plastered and smoothed over at his demise. By this process of building, the antiquarian was enabled to discover the number of layers of masonry composing the pile, and thus to ascertain the years employed in its structure; in the same manner that the antiquity of beef is known by the number of rings on the living cow's horn.

The mass of the Pyramid, he said, built by Cheops or "Choofoo," was more than a thousand times greater than that of the Bunker Hill Monument, and asked, if the latter had occasioned so much joy by its completion, what joy did the like consummation bring to the builders of the Pyramid of "Choofoo"? (Did we hazard an opinion, we would venture to say that the "hod carriers" who walked up the ladders of this immense mound of antiquity, and piled it to its present altitude, if called on to answer the query, would vote that there was more of sweat than joy on the day of its finishing.)

The Professor passed from the Pyramids to the Memphian cemeteries, and waked up the legions of mummydom that have rested in their marble sarcophagi since thirty centuries prior to the Christian era; gave glowing pictures of the scenery of the Nile, and enchained the attention of his auditory during an hour and a quarter with a discourse replete with the lore of ancient times and abounding in instructive illustration.

A quotation illustrated the folly of erecting marble mementoes to perpetuate the names of the dead; for

"How can a monument give you or me hopes,
When not a pinch of dust remains of Cheops?"

WORKS OF DR. OLIN.—The New England Correspondent of the W. C. Advocate, gives this definite account of the coming volumes which are looked for with interest:

"The writings of the much lamented Olin are soon to make their appearance, in four volumes, from the press of Messrs. Harper, New York. We learn that "the first volume will contain sermons and sketches of sermons from his manuscripts, which have never yet appeared in print. The second volume will be made of addresses, on various occasions, and miscellaneous articles from his powerful pen. His admirable lectures to the students of the University, on the theory and practice of scholastic life, with his baccalaureate discourses, will make a third volume; and the fourth will comprise an extended and graphic account of Greece and Constantinople.—They will be a valuable addition to our literature; but we regret that they are not to be issued by our 'Book Concern.' They are passing through the press under the supervision of Dr. Floy, and will be out in the course of a few months."

The last hours of Professor Stuart are thus referred to in the funeral sermon of Professor Park:

"The old age of Mr. Stuart honored God in illustrating the wealth of his word. In his 67th year he read all the tragedies of Æschylus, merely for the sake of illuminating the sacred page. Once when he made a certain discovery of a fact in Biblical interpretation, he could not sleep for more than thirty-six hours. His solace was in the Word of God. At his death he had formed a plan for three years more of labor in expounding this revelation. It never tired him: It was his meditation all the night. When asked whether he retained his confidence in the great system of truths which he had defended, his emphatic reply was 'Yes.' 'Have you any doubts with regard to your former principles?' His answer was 'No. I have long since learned,' he said, 'that feelings in religious experience are deceptive. I look mainly to my life for my evidence. I think my first aim in life has been to glorify God, and that I have been ready to labor and suffer for him.'"

HILLSBOROUGH.—Rev. Mr. Howell has arrived at Panama, to labor in the Bethel church. He was sent out by the American Seamen's Friend Society.

CONVERTED.—Rev. H. L. Richards, of Columbus, Ohio, formerly a minister of the Episcopal Church, has become a Roman Catholic.

TEMPERANCE.—Strong efforts are being made in New York by the temperance people to obtain the passage of a law abolishing entirely the traffic in liquor.

The Asia brought intelligence of the death of the Rev. John Taylor Jones, A. L., of Bangkok, on the 13th of September. Dr. Jones had been for nearly twenty-three years one of the most highly esteemed missionaries of the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions.

NORTHERN CORRESPONDENCE.

WINTRY ITS SEVERITY—ENJOYMENTS—AMUSEMENTS—RELIGIOUS EFFORTS—CHURCH BUILDING—THE WEATHER—MR. LAUGHEY'S NEW BOOK—RAPID SALE.

MR. EDITOR: The winter in New England is very severe. December was extremely cold, and during most of the month there was good sleighing generally. January came in mildly; but after about two weeks of severe cold weather commenced again, and now it is so cold that most of our rivers are frozen, and many of the steamers find it quite difficult to make their usual trips.

The winter months here are the best months of the year—all is activity and life. The farmer improves them in getting his wood and grain to market, and in providing a good quantity of fuel for the spring and summer. Merchants are busy in supplying the people with suitable clothing, etc., and the manufacturers find it the most profitable season for turning out their various kinds of goods. Mechanics are busy in laying their plans and making arrangements for the coming spring. School teachers find ready employment in teaching the "young idea how to shoot," while lecturers are visiting nearly every city, town and village, enlightening the people on politics, science, morals and religion. All sorts of meetings are held as every body claims the liberty to go where and where he pleases. Nowhere, perhaps, are the people so willing to be humbugged as here—for this they will spend their time and pay their money.

Among the winter amusements are sleighrides, of which the people are exceedingly fond. Visiting is carried on extensively. Almost every family must make more or less visits during the sleighing time. To ride thirty or forty miles in a sleigh, with almost railroad speed, and visit old friends is viewed as a rich treat. Young people, too, are alive in these parties of pleasure. Sleigh-rides parties among the young, consisting of from twenty to fifty persons, are frequently seen driving off with great velocity, while the bells on the steeds ring merrily.

In the religious department there is unusual activity. Protracted meetings and special efforts for the quickening of the Church and the conversion of sinners, are seen almost every where. It is the season for revivals, but few revivals, comparatively, are experienced in the summer. The nights are now long, which affords a good opportunity for holding religious meetings after dark. Many churches, which seem comparatively dead during the rest of the year, are now alive and making vigorous efforts for the conversion of their friends and neighbors. Better be alive in the winter, than never; but these periodical excitements, we fear, often pass any thing but the right impression respecting religion on the minds of the unconverted. The soul is of as much value one season of the year as another, and always in danger of being lost.

Church building is carried on among us quite extensively. The Methodists formerly built many of their houses of worship in unfavorable locations, and in many instances they were small and cheaply built. In many places large and costly edifices are now taking their place, more advantageously located. New societies are erecting them for churches. No denomination, in New England are building better churches than the Methodists. Already they have by far the most costly church edifice in Boston, in New Haven, one of the best in the city, and so in Providence, R. I. In most of these churches there are organs. Some opposition has been manifested to instrumental music in our churches, but it is evidently dying away. Choir singing prevails almost universally in the M. E. Church. In a few instances an effort has been made to sustain congregational singing, with good success. Were a suitable effort made, this kind of singing might be introduced and sustained in nearly all our churches. Choir singing prevails in all denominations in New England, and it will be likely to continue for some time to come.

The subject of temperance has recently received a new impulse. The passage of the Maine liquor law, and the effects of its operations, has waked up the people of Massachusetts, and other States, to secure the enactment of a similar law. The Massachusetts Legislature is now in session, and petitions are pouring in from all directions, calling for a prohibitory law similar to that of Maine. It is confidently expected that such a law will be passed, and if so the liquor dealers of Boston must wind up their business. Of course they oppose any enactment of the kind, and they will resort to desperate measures in the opposition. The people of Rhode Island are also calling for a similar law. The subject is agitated somewhat in Connecticut. It will probably soon become a subject of interest in all the New England States, and the friends of temperance are now looking to legislation to suppress this great evil in our country.

The book of Mr. Caughey, entitled "Revival Miscellanies," to which we referred in our last, has been published, and the third edition is in press. The first edition of 1000 copies, we learn, was sold in less than one week. The demand for them is almost unprecedented. Multitudes are anxious for the sermons of this distinguished revivalist. The sermons are reported sermons, but they are more valuable on this account, for they give us fair a view of the character of Mr. Caughey's pulpit efforts as can be seen on paper. The second part of the book contains various extracts from Mr. C.'s writings, on a great variety of subjects, which are exceedingly valuable. The book will have an extensive circulation, and will do good. It can not fail to promote the spirit of revivals and holiness wherever read.

Jan. 20, 1852. TRAVELER.

A FIERY TRIAL.—Hon. Rufus Choate, in a late speech in Boston, referring to the stormy aspect of the political horizon in Europe, said:

"It has seemed to me as if the prerogatives of crowns, and the rights of men, and the hoarded up resentments and revenges of a thousand years, were about to unsheath the sword for a conflict, in which the blood shall flow as in the Apocalyptic vision, to the bridles of the horses, and in which a whole age of men shall pass away, in which the great bell of time shall sound out another hour, in which society itself shall be tried by fire and steel—whether it is of nature and of nature's God, or not!"

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Hymeneal.

MARRIED—On 26th January, in Napoleon, Miss., by Rev. E. D. Pitts, Mr. RICHARD W. WILLIAMS, to Miss MEDORA C. EAGAR, all of that place.

QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR 1852.

The January number of the 6th volume of the Quarterly Review has been sent off, in due time; and some may have been sent out that should have been discontinued: in this we have done the best we could, with the lights before us. In their direction we may not have made all the changes desired: and especially in those sent to ministers whose residence we are not advised of: and we give this notice to request all who have changed their postoffice, to advise us of the change, and request their former Postmaster to forward the number to their present address. And last, but not least, to request all subscribers who have not paid in advance, to look at our terms on the cover, and send us the funds for the present volume, and all arrearages: and in all cases where funds are reported to have been paid, to tell to whom they were paid, that we may give the proper credits and make the necessary charges.

JOHN EARLY.

Richmond, Jan. 9, 1852.

JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST, being the very able and eloquent sermon preached by the late H. B. Bascom, D. D., LL. D., immediately preceding his Ordination to the Episcopal Office; together with a sketch of the facts and incidents of his illness and death: to which is added the Funeral Discourse delivered on the occasion, by Bishop Jas. O. Andrew, D. D.

This work has been brought out in the neatest style of the art. Its subject matter is of the first importance, and can not fail to secure for it an extensive circulation.

Price, in best English cloth ..... 50 cents.
In best English cloth, gilt extra ..... 75 "

A discount of one fourth will be allowed to preachers and wholesale dealers. Orders are invited. E. STEVENSON, Agent.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 30. ja17

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

On Pleasureville District, Alabama Conference.

Bloomfield Circuit at Bristow's Cove	March 6 and 7
Lebanon Circuit at Lebanon	March 13 and 14
Coal Mountain Mission at Pine Grove	March 20 and 21
Asheville at Scales	March 27 and 28
Harpersville, at Harpersville	April 3 and 4
Warrior, Miss., at Holly Spring	April 10 and 11
Walker, Miss., Jasper	April 17 and 18
Pikeville, Miss., at Centre	May 1 and 2

L. B. McDONALD, P. E.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

On the Tuscaloosa District, Alabama Conference.

Greensboro'	Jan 31 and Feb 1
Marion	February 7 and 8
New Berne and Oak Grove, at New Berne
Bethel	February 14 and 15
Newtown, at Wesley Chapel	February 21 and 22
Bush Creek, at Mount Hermon	February 28 and 29
Centreville, at Mahon's	March 6 and 7
Jones's Valley, at Jonesboro'	March 13 and 14
New Lexington, at New Lexington	March 20 and 21
Tuscaloosa	March 27 and 28
Big Sandy, at Mount Pleasant or Wilkinson's	April 3 and 4

THOMAS J. KOUNTZ, P. E.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

On the Demopolis District, Alabama Conference.

Demopolis	February 14 and 15
Aycock Colored Mission
Union Town	February 21 and 22
Whatley and Perryville	February 28 and 29
Palm Town Circuit, at Asbury	March 6 and 7
Lower Peach Tree, at Mount Olivet	March 13 and 14
Marengo Circuit, at Linden	March 20 and 21
Magnolia Colored Mission
Dayton	March 27 and 28
Dayton Colored Mission
Tuskaloosa Circuit, at Mount Carmel	April 3 and 4
Butler Circuit, at Bear Creek	April 10 and 11
Gaston Circuit, at Coke's Chapel	April 17 and 18

JOSHUA T. HEARD, P. E.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS

For the Montgomery District, Alabama Conference.

Montgomery Station	February 15 and 16
Montgomery Circuit, at Mount Meigs	February 21 and 22
Union, at Line Creek	February 28 and 29
Hayneville Circuit, at Hayneville	March 6 and 7
Tuskegee	March 13 and 14
Tuskegee Circuit, at Ashury	March 27 and 28
Crawford Circuit, at Salem	April 3 and 4
Lafayette, at Bethlehem	April 10 and 11
	April 17 and 18

G. GARDETT, P. E.

Advocate Office, February 7.

By Rev. R. Harrell: (n. s.) Jesse Joiner, Selma, Ala., Less $2 50.

By Rev. O. H. Binns: (n. s.) Dr. C. P. Howard, Auburndale, Ala., Less $2 50.

By Post-master: (n. s.) W. S. Powell, Grenada, Miss., Less $2 50.

By Rev. E. W. Griswold: (n. s.) Rev. H. L. Ivey, Bolton, La.; (n. s.) T. Duckenham, Winnsboro, La., Less $5.

By Rev. P. P. Smith: (n. s.) Ira Sanborn, Hainbridge, Ga. $2 50

By Post-master: J. Cleveland (104): (n. s.) Miss Rina Ward, Springfield, Ala. 5 00

By J. Simms, Post-master: (R. S.) Elisha Tyler, Providence, Miss., Less 50c. 2 00

By E. A. Taylor, Post-master: (n. s.) Robt. H. Allen, Demopolis, Ala. 2 50

By R. J. Harp: (n. s.) W. Cunningham, Troy, Mi., Less $2 50.

By Rev. T. J. Lacey: (n. s.) Margaret Williams, Donaldsonville, La., Less $2 50.

By Rev. D. S. Goodloe: (n. s.) Z. M. Lawrence, Irvington, Mi., Less $2 50.

By Rev. A. T. M. Fly: (n. s.) Joseph Smith, Whitesville, Mi.; John Simmons, James A. Thurk, Jackson, La., (new subs.), Less $7 50. ☞ No. 47 is exhausted.

By Rev. H. Bearden (104): 2 50

By Rev. H. H. Montgomery: (n. s.) A. Saddler, Canton, Mi., Less $2 50.

By Rev. H. C. Thweatt: (n. s.) Jeannette Herriman, (n. s.) Caroline Williams, (n. s.) Sarah A. Fortune, (n. s.) Jane Ardrey, (n. s.) Mary A. Auld, Emma Godwyn (101) Thirsi Municipality, N. O.... Less $15 Less $2 50.

By Rev. L. B. McDonald: T. Smith, Mt. Nells, Ala., Less $2 50.

By Rev. L. P. Gelson: J. M. Beramus, Autaugaville, Ala., Less $2 50.

By Rev. H. Sterne: P. Ware, Budleyville, Ala., Less $2 50.

By Rev. J. W. Lacey: Dr. J. P. Brown, Prairie Point, Mi., Less $2 50.

By P. Ch: C. F. Biggs, Oceola, Fla., Less $2 50.

By Rev. T. W. Berman: A. L. Pope (104), Liberty Hill, Ala.: (n. s.) Thos. Cannon, Gaston, Ala., Less $5 00.

By Rev. L. Pierce: H. K. Harrison, Rev. L. Cately, Savannah, Ga. $5 00

Lewis Lyons, N. O. 2 50

By Rev. Brown, P. M.: W. W. Harper, Cane Ridge, La. 2 50

By W. E. Mount: for self (104), N. O. 5 00

Thos. Mount, Raymond, Mi. (104) 5 00

Thos. L. Mount, San Francisco, Cal. .....

By Rev. J. Hamilton: D. Walker, Mobile, (Feb. 1854) 5 00

(n. s.) N. G. Gutchet, Montgomery, Ala. 2 50

(n. s.) Col. J. E. Gutchet, Enon, Ala. .....

By Charles Stewart: for self N. O. 2 50

(n. s.) Wm. Stewart, Winchester Town 2 50

By Rev. G. Garrett: (n. s.) F. L. Ashley, Montgomery, Ala., less $2 50 ..... 2 50

By Rev. J. Soller: Algiers 2 50

By Rev. F. Roper: (n. s.) Martha Moore, Pine Hill, Ala. .....

(n. s.) Rev. R. H. Haynes, (n. s.) Rev. J. Percy, (n. s.) M. H. Palmore, Bligley; A. Seale (n. s.) Chuquenagge Ala., Less $7 50. ..... 5 00

By Rev. J. W. Shores: (n. s.) Dr. C. A. Edwards, Prattville, Ala., less $2 50. ☞ The correction in case of L. B. is duly made.

Good Luck.—The Washington correspondent of the Charleston (S. C.) Standard, narrates a piece of intelligence from California which must be gratifying to the friends of the Hon. I. E. Holmes, member of the last Congress from that district, who, failing in a re-election sent to California. Soon after his arrival he purchased for a valuable real estate in San Francisco. It was in litigation, but the Supreme Court of California has decided the case in Mr. Holmes's favor; and he is now actually receiving a ground rent of $1,000 per month in advance. This, with an annual income, independent of his profession, of $10,000, he rents the lots and the tenants build the houses. This is decidedly better than serving the public in Congress.

A FALLING COMET.—A writer in the Boston Traveler, giving an account of Encke's comet, which has recently made its re-appearance, says it has the striking peculiarity that its orbit and periodic times are gradually decreasing. This comet, it is said, "is certainly falling towards the central luminary," not theoretically falling as the earth and other planets are supposed to fall towards the sun, as their orbits bend around the centre of revolution, but actually falling, actually drawing nearer at every revolution. Sir John Herschell believes "that it will ultimately fall into the sun"—provided it is not dissipated before that time.

General Intelligence.

NEW ORLEANS BRANCH MINT.—The following is a statement of the deposits and coinage at the Branch Mint, New Orleans, during the month of January, 1852:

Deposits.

Gold, of which $300 107 05 California	$680.5[illegible] 78
Silver, of which $1 469 17 parted from California gold	9,470 88
Total value of deposits	$690,054 66

Coinage.

Gold ..... 38,750 double eagles	$775,000 00
Silver ..... 24,000 half dollars	12,000 00
62,750 pieces ..... Total coinage	$807,000 00

BUILDINGS ERECTED AND DESTROYED.—The Commissaries of the Wards have handed in their returns of buildings erected and destroyed in the Second Municipality during the year 1851. We condense the following from their Indices:

First Ward—BUILDINGS ERECTED.—Two brick and sixteen wooden buildings, at a cost of $67,075.

Second Ward—Four brick and sixteen wooden buildings, at a cost of $50,700.

Third Ward—The buildings erected in this Ward are all of brick, except one school-house, which is wooden. The cost of those that have been $114,200, including $10,000 for the school-house.

Fourth Ward.—Nine brick and seventeen wooden buildings have been erected in this Ward, at a cost of $130,050, including the Catholic church in Bryadys street, which cost $20,000.

Fifth Ward.—The following is the return of buildings erected, or in progress, in this Ward:

The Old Fellows' Hall	$50,000
S. F. Slatter, rebuilding City Hotel	50,000
John Freeland, four four-story stories on the corner of Magazine and Gravier streets	30,000
Crescent Insurance Company, a four-story building, corner of Camp and Commercial Place	30,000
H. S. Buckner, corner of St. Charles and Commercial Place	50,000
D. Dubois, opposite corner	10,000
Additions made in building corner of Camp and Commercial Place	10,000
Two three-story stores on Magazine street, between Notre Dame and Julia	6,000
J. Fitzpatrick, a two-story store on Julia street, between Camp and St. Mary	2,000
A. Walther, four-story store on Camp street, near Girod	10,000
Improvements on old buildings	50,000
Total	$278,000

Sixth Ward.—Fifty-three brick buildings have been erected in the Sixth Ward during the year, at a cost of $2,45,000.

Seventh Ward—Three brick and thirty-nine wooden buildings were erected in this Ward during the year, at a cost of $82,100.

The total cost of the buildings erected in the Second Municipality, including $15,000 for repairs in the Second Ward, is thus shown to be $1,000,125.

BUILDINGS DESTROYED IN THE SAME TIME.

First Ward.—Two wooden buildings, of one story each, last valued at $4700, have been burned during the year.

Second Ward.—The value of the property destroyed by fire in this Ward is estimated at $35,500.

Third Ward.—The losses by fire in this Ward are stated at $18,250.

Fourth Ward.—Four wooden buildings destroyed—value $4,200.

Fifth Ward.—Losses, including the destruction of Banks Arcade, $38,000.

Sixth Ward.—The following immense losses are reported in the Sixth Ward for the year past:

St. Charles Hotel	$350,000
Two three-story brick buildings	9,000
Two two-story brick buildings	10,500
Six two-story frame buildings	19,500
Two one-story frame buildings	2,500
Mr. Clapp's church, organ, etc.	50,000
Methodist (Methiere) church, with fixtures, etc.	50,000
Total	$464,500

Seventh Ward.—Seven wooden buildings have been destroyed by fire in this Ward—value $8250.

The total losses for the year, from the destruction of buildings by fire in the Municipality, have been $572,000. Thus it will be seen that the value of property built without counting the St. Charles Hotel and many other fine buildings in course of erection in the Fifth Ward, exceeds that destroyed during the year, by the sum of $47,225.

LOUIS NAPOLEON.—A Paris correspondent of the London News says that nothing is more evident than that Louis Napoleon stands in bodily fear. His carriage is ball-proof—at the theatre he is coldly received—his receptions at the Elysee have been abandoned—all the chimneys of the palace are covered without from crane-work, to prevent the descent of bomb-shells or demagogues. The terror with which the atmosphere is charged has insinuated itself like a moral plague, into the imperial presence. It is stated that during the recent jubilee in honor of the election, especial care was taken to protect the President from assassination. All the houses along the route of the procession were examined and closed, and guards rode by his carriage ever on the qui vive. This is a great penalty to pay for a little elevation.

HALIFAX AND NEWFOUNDLAND TELEGRAPH.—The New York Journal of Commerce states that the project of running a telegraph line from Halifax to St. John's, Newfoundland, has become a fixed fact. All the stock has been taken—a good portion of it in this city, and arrangements are making for purchasing the wire. The whole length of the wire will be 380 miles, of which 60 will be sub-marine. The remainder 320, will be extended over marshes, on the ground, and will, of course, require insulation. The persons contracting to construct the line, stipulate to have it completed in eighteen months from the present time. It is a great undertaking, and should a line of steamships be put on the route from Galway to Halifax, touching at St. Johns, as is contemplated, London will be brought within six days of the city of New York.

THE SALE OF THE PAMPERO.—A correspondent of the New York Express, writing from Jacksonville, Fla., and speaking of the sale of the steamship Pampero, says: "Previous to the steamer's being offered for sale, Mr. Duncan McIntosh, Esq., of this place, briefly addressed the assembled crowd, and appealed to them in behalf of Mr. Sugar and kindly not to force his agent to bid her off at full value, which he was prepared to do if case necessity required it. Mr McIntosh's remarks doubtless had their effect, judging from the low sum for which she was sold."

OCEAN PASTAGE.—Mr. J. W. Farrelly, Auditor of the Treasury for the General Post-office Department, has presented to Congress a statement of the amount of postage received by the United States through the different steamship lines for the fifteen months ending on the 30th September last:

Cunard line	$130,359 95
Collins line	224,336 18
Bremen line	109,138 45
Ogive line	53,178 01
New York and California	680,201 11
Charleston and Havana	15,502 57
	$1,131,776 87

Assuming the different quarters to have been equal, the amount received in twelve months is $905,421 48. The appropriations made at the last session of Congress for the various lines of ocean mails form a total of $1,141,600. Of this sum, $854,600 are devoted to the steamers running between New York and Liverpool, between New York and Northern ports, Havana and Chagres, and between Panama and Oregon; the balance—$287,000—being applied to the routes from New York to Bremen and Havre. In the larger sum is included the amount appropriated to the Collins line of steamers, viz: $385,000. The performance of extra trips during the winter season, at the instance of the Post-office Department, is the ground of a recommendation by the Post-master General for extra and liberal compensation.

This line, as we have already noticed, has applied to Congress for an increased appropriation, on the ground that the present is insufficient to sustain the enterprise. In order to show what an estimate Great Britain places upon her steam marine, we give her annual expenditure on her principal lines at mail steamers:

The Cunard Company	£145,000
West India do	240,000
Pacific do	60,000
Screw Steamship do	40,000
Peninsular and Oriental do	300,000
East India Company, for the line between Suez and Bombay	310,835
	50,000
	£724,835

Upwards of three and a half millions of dollars are, then, paid annually by the British Government to six steam navigation companies; and it can not be doubted that the result is to secure—in conjunction with private enterprise—an extent of steam communication much greater than mercantile speculation and resources would alone have availed to provide.

The Washington Republic says: "Placing the two great rival undertakings in juxtaposition, we have $725,000 paid annually to the Cunard Company, against $385,000 to the Collins Company; and yet the latter have succeeded in outstripping their formidable competitors in all that relates to construction or management. It will indeed be mortifying if, after beating the British steamers in a fair race, in fine weather and foul, our noble craft and their public-spirited owners shall be compelled to withdraw from the scene of their triumphs.

Arkansas is said to be the only State in the Union where the mineral called lapis lazuli is found. It is worth four times its weight in gold.

A Genoese gentleman has erected in his grounds, on a beautiful knoll overlooking the harbor of the city, a magnificent marble statue of Washington.

It is cited as an evidence of good management that of 174,000 passengers carried over the Little Miami Railroad last year, the life of no passenger was lost.

The young ladies, pupils of Mr. Wm. Murrill's Seminary, Mobile, have started a manuscript periodical called "The Young Ladies' Mirror," which has reached its third number.

Steam is now used in propelling canal boats on the Erie Canal. It is thought it will almost entirely supersede the use of low boats and canal horses.

Arrival of the Philadelphia.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

News from Oregon and the Sandwich Islands.

LATER FROM CHINA

The steam-ship Philadelphia, Capt. Mellowan, arrived yesterday from Chagres, bringing the California mails of 1st January, three hundred and twenty-five passengers and about $25,000 in gold dust. Our freight, besides a large amount in the hands of passengers.

The Philadelphia arrived off Chagres on the afternoon of the 23d of January. The sea being unusually rough but few of the passengers attempted to land until the following morning. Several boats, however, came off to the ship and succeeded in returning to the harbor in safety with the exception of one, which was carried into the breakers and capsized. It was manned by four natives, and contained also four passengers—three of whom with two of the natives were drowned. The passengers drowned were Haight, from St. Louis; Schaick, or Sharpe, of New York. The name of the third could not be ascertained. Mr. C. E. Collins, of Ohio, the one saved, reached the shore much bruised and completely exhausted, having been in the water more than two hours, clinging to the wreck of the boat. Search was made for the bodies of the drowned during the night and the following day, but without success.

FIRE IN SAN FRANCISCO.—The dwelling-house of Mr. Fitzmaurice in San Francisco was destroyed by fire on the 22d December, and two of his children perished in the flames.

POLITICS.—A perfect Babel-like confusion prevails at present in the political affairs of California. There are two sets of candidates for almost every office from Constable up.

LUMBER.—Extensive running operations will be carried on first summer in the mines, and lumber as well as rum will be in great demand. We learn from the Marysville Express, that the Presque Isle Flooring and Mining Company have got up a "saw mill," and are getting out lumber to be in readiness to commence the construction of a flume 1000 feet long early in the spring.

In San Francisco there is a Council without a Mayor, and a Mayor without a Council; two men claiming office—one on the ground that he was elected by a majority of all the votes, and the other that he had obtained a law in the charter, and has been elected informally by a minority.

SALE.—A severe gale occurred at San Francisco on the 29th, which did considerable damage to shipping in the harbor.

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE.—On the evening of the 26th December two shocks of an earthquake were experienced at San Francisco. No damage was done.

SMALL POX.—Small pox is said to have made its appearance in San Francisco, in a very severe form.

MORE GOOD DISCOVERIES.—The Calveras Chronicle says: "Some of the most astonishing discoveries of gold we ever heard of have during the past week, been made within a mile of this place, in an easterly direction. The whole town, in fact, seems to have run mad—every class of our community, from the lounging idler to the most energetic digging gone pell-mell, to the new El Dorado (some of them even late at night) and staked off claims for nearly a mile up and down the hill-sides bordering upon the head of the Chilian Gulch.

"The hole which created the furore is one hundred and ten feet deep, and commenced paying well at thirty-five feet from the ledge. The majority of the claims are being worked with a will, and we shall soon know if the whole hill is rich, or if this one claim alone is to yield fortunes to its owners.

"Another hole, lower down the hill-side, has commenced paying at seven feet from the surface; the owners averring most positively that they get from five dollars per bucket. A tunnel company has also been formed and has commenced operations in the hill. The indications of gold here are the same as those on French and Stockton Hills.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES.—The Indian troubles in the Southern part of the State appear to have been ended, and no further disturbances are anticipated.

DEATH OF JUDGE JONES.—Judge Jones, United States District Judge for the Southern District of California, died at San Jose, on the 14th of December, of consumption.

CONSOLIDATED MINING STOCKS.—Messrs. R. M. Folger & Brother are making extensive arrangements for establishing a machine shop in Sacramento. They are about to put up two lathes thirty feet long, swinging five feet, and weighing each 15,000 pounds. Their machinery is to be propelled by two engines of ten horse-power, and facilities will be provided for manufacturing and repairing machinery, engines and apparatus of every kind. The great demand arising from the extensive introduction of machinery in the working of the quartz mines, and the great increase in the number of river steamers and consequent frequency of accidents, has started this enterprise.

San Francisco has already a number of extensive foundries and machine shops, where everything can be manufactured from the main-shaft of a steamship to the smallest cog-wheel of a crushing mill.

CANALS.—The San Francisco Herald says:

"Although we have not in our State a regular canal for the conveyance of merchandise in boats, there are a number of them in the mines, upon which immense labor has been expended, designed to carry a supply of water from the rivers to the dry diggings. In El Dorado such a canal has just been completed, being fourteen miles in length, and built by the individual exertions and enterprise of miners."

THE RAINS.—All our exchanges from the interior contain cheering accounts of the heavy fall of rain in their vicinity.

LAUNCH.—The iron propeller Kangaroo was launched recently at Happy Valley, by Mr. M. Vice. She is intended for a ferry-boat to Contra Costa.

LARGE LUMP.—The San Francisco Herald says: We examined yesterday, at the jewelry establishment of Messrs. Jacks Woodruff a magnificent specimen of mingled gold and quartz in the proportion of about three-fourths of the precious metal to one-fourth of rock. It weighs 176 ounces, and was taken from a vein in El Dorado county. It is valued at $4000.

RAGE FOR TITLES.—In the list of passengers' names for the Vilicio Ball, there appear no less than 28 Honorables, 28 Captains, 14 Colonels, 13 Generals, 11 Mayors, and 10 doctors. There are but seven names out of the lists which have no title prefixed to them.

Later from Oregon.

The Columbia arrived at San Francisco on the 29th December, having left Portland on the 23d. Snow was falling at the time she sailed.

POLITICAL.—The Legislature was still divided as to the seat of government, and the members were holding separate sessions at Salem and Oregon City.—Each party held independent meetings, and adjourned from day to day. The Judges had delivered lengthy and conflicting opinions on the subject.

W. Buck has been appointed Territorial Treasurer, and Allen P. Miller Librarian.

PUGET'S SOUND.—This part of the country was attracting considerable attention. Several parties had returned from there with highly favorable reports.

From the Sandwich Islands.

By arrivals at San Francisco, the Polynesian to Dec 6, has been received.

NEW CONSTITUTION.—G. P. Judd, Commissioner on the part of the King, John H., Commissioner on behalf of the Chiefs, and William L. Lee, Commissioner on behalf of the people, appointed in June last to revise the Constitution, have reported the form of a new Constitution, which is to be submitted to the Legislature at its next session. It is a very curious instrument. The election of Representatives was to take place the first week in January, but it did not excite much attention.

From China.

By the way of San Francisco we have received dates from China, and although they are not as late as have reached England by the overland route, there are some details which have not yet been published.

EXPORT OF TEAS AND SILK.—The total export of teas from Hong Kong for the year 1851, up to the 29th Sept. was 22,757,000 lbs., being an increase of about 5,000,000 over the amount exported during the same period last year. The number of bales of silk reported this year was 6384, a slight decrease as compared with last year, but double the quantity for the year before.

INSURANCE TO HONG KONG.—An ordinance has been adopted in Hong Kong dispensing with the necessity of unanimity in the jury, except in capital cases. This is, we believe, the first instance of such an innovation in countries governed by the old common law.

PIRATES.—Notwithstanding the exertions of the cruisers of half a dozen different nations, pirates still abound in the Chinese seas. An attack was made on the English ship Adelaide, near Amoy, which was defeated by the energy of the Captain.

THE DEATH OF MOOLRAJ.—The Straits Times gives the following account of the death of Moolraj:

"Moolraj is dead. He expired on the morning of the 11th, off Purtunpoor, on the Ganges. The following is from a correspondent at Bupar: 'The State prisoner, the Ex-Dewan Moolraj, expired on the morning of Monday the 11th, off Purtunpoor, below this place. For some days after leaving Culcutta he appeared to mend, and his spirits improved much. His strength also seemed about to return, and without an attachment to life and an attempt to fix its contrivers which he had not manifested when the same aboard, nor for some considerable time previous to his leaving Fort William, he continued in this state. His health and strength improving, until the weather changed and became less propitious, and the westerly winds blew strong and cold. With this change of the weather a proportionate change for the health of the prisoner took place; he began to sink, and gradually lost his strength until death closed his career as mentioned above. The steamer, casting off the troop-boat, conveyed his remains to the bank of the river, where his funeral obsequies were performed by the servant who had followed his fortunes, and the Hindoo corps of the guard; and there was a due expenditure of sandal-wood and ghee, etc., among the times of which the body was consumed, and his soul took its flight to the regions of responsibility. There had been no other penalty on board the steamer's troop-deck, except one case of cholera which proved fatal. The steamer was four days at anchor below Buxar, and with the prevalent winds and current did fair to remain there for an indefinite time, should no change occur.

"The State is rid of a troublesome prisoner, and the prisoner of a miserable existence. We beg to compliment the captor, and wish the captive a better destiny in the next than attached to him in this world.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, February 4

In the Senate, to-day, Mr. Clarke's non-intervention resolutions were postponed until Monday.

Mr. Stockton presented petitions for a line of steamers to Galway, Ireland, and for an appropriation of half a million of dollars for fitting out an expedition by way of the Arctic Ocean in search of Sir John Franklin. Petitions were presented from merchants in Philadelphia asking for the removal of obstructions in the Ohio and Schuylkill Rivers.

The bill to establish a Navy Yard and Naval School at New Orleans was taken up, and one providing for a Superintendent of Indian Affairs in California, and also one to regulate the discipline of the Navy, were passed.

In the House, a communication was received from the secretary of the Navy giving the result of scientific examinations respecting salt water in steam boilers, and prepared.

A bill granting quarter sections of land for the head of each family, under certain conditions, was referred.

A bill regulating the publication of laws, etc., and ordering that they be published in two papers having the largest circulation in each Representative District, was passed.

Steamer Sailed—Specie

NEW YORK, February 4

The Cunard steamer Canada sailed to-day for Liverpool. She takes out a little over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in specie.

Steamers' Movements.

NEW YORK, February 5

The steamer Humboldt has arrived at her dock, last from Halifax. The steamers Prometheus and Chesapeake have sailed.

Presidential Movement.

PHILADELPHIA, February 5

The Philadelphia County Convention to-day passed a resolution instructing the delegates in the General Convention from this county to vote for Mr. Buchanan for the Presidency.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, February 5

In the Senate, to-day, a resolution was passed providing for the appointment of a Charge d'Affaires to Switzerland. The Irish exile sympathy resolution was postponed. Census Printing bill was discussed, but no definite action was taken before adjournment.

In the House, Mr. Houston presented the Annual Appropriation bill. Bounty Land bill still under discussion until adjournment.

WASHINGTON, February 5

A fight took place to-day at the Capitol, just after the adjournment of the Senate, between Senator Borland, of Arkansas, and Mr. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Census. The greatest amount of injury was sustained by Mr. Kennedy, who had his nose broken.

Ohio River Markets.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 5.

The river is still rising with rainy weather. There is considerable ice running, but not sufficient to impede navigation. But little has been doing in our markets to-day. Sales of 50,000 lb. Bulk Sides at 6¾c ₱ lb. Lard is selling at 7¾c ₱ lb.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, Feb 5

The demand has been limited to-day in the Cotton market, and the sales embrace barely 300 bales—prices close in favor of buyers. Flour has improved, owing to the favorable accounts from England and some 9,000 bbls. have been sold to-day at $4 62½@4 87½c. ₱ bbl. Corn has been in fair request at 60@70c. per bushel. New Mess Pork has sold at $14 50@15 25c. per bbl. Lard has been very firm with sales at 10½@10c per lb. Rio Coffee 8½@9c. per lb. New Orleans Sugar steady, at 4½c per lb. Molasses, 27½@28½c. per gal. Freights are advancing. Cotton to Liverpool, 5-32@3-16d. per lb.

Jenny Lind's Marriage.

The report of Jenny Lind's marriage is confirmed—Otto Goldschmidt is the happy man.

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA.

Cotton Active and Firm—Important from France—Promulgation of the Constitution—Insult to Americans in Vienna.

NEW YORK, Wednesday Night, Feb. 4.

The Cunard steamer Niagara has arrived at Halifax, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 17th January. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, January 17

There has been a good demand in the Cotton market during the week, and the sales reach 41,000 bales. Prices have generally been firmer, but the quotations remain without alteration, as follows: Fair Orleans 5¼, and Fair Uplands 4¾d. The sales for the 3000 bales to exporters and 4000 on speculation. The stock on hand last evening was 408,000 bales of all descriptions, of which were American 210,000 bales. Holders have been pressing somewhat on the market. The sales yesterday were 6000 bales.

Flour has been in good request at firm prices, but without change in quotations. Ohio is quoted at 21@22s. and Western Canal at 21s. 6d., with an active demand. Corn has also been in good demand, and prices have advanced 1s. 6d. per quarter. The quotations are now for Mixed 29s. 6d.@30s., and for White 32s. There has been a good demand for Provisions, at firmer prices, but without material change.

General Intelligence—France—New Constitution—Powers of the Chief Magistrate—Approaching Marriage of Louis Napoleon.

The New Constitution has been promulgated. Under it Louis Napoleon is styled Prince President. In his name justice is dispensed. He has the pardoning power, and is to originate all laws. He commands the forces, is empowered to declare war and to make treaties; appoints Senators and all officers of State, who are to take oaths of obedience to the Constitution and the Prince President! He will present an annual message to the people.

In case of the death of the Prince President the Senate is required, by the Constitution to convoke the nation, which will proceed to the election of a new President, but Louis Napoleon is to designate the candidates, selecting such citizens as may merit the confidence of the people. The names of the Senators was published on the 17th.

The National Guards delivered up their arms without producing any trouble.

The marriage of Louis Napoleon and the Princess of Sweden seems to be settled, and preparations are making for its celebration.

Prussia.

The Council of State is revived at Berlin.

Austria—Insult to American Charge.

At a Grand Ball given by the First Minister of the Crown at Vienna, all the foreign Ministers at the Court were invited except the Charge d'Affairs of the United States, and the Turkish Ambassador.

Lafayette Annexation—Capital Tax.

BATON ROUGE, February 5.

The bill for consolidation of Lafayette with the three Municipalities has passed the Senate, and also the bill for removing tax from capital.

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.—Washington, Feb. 4.—In the Senate, to-day, the bill relative to flogging in the Navy was engrossed, and also a bill providing for holding United States Courts, in cases of sickness of the District Judges; after which the Iowa Land Appropriation bill was debated and laid over for future consideration.

Mr. Pass gave notice of his intention to call up, to-morrow, his resolution respecting non-intervention.

Mr. Cooper, of Pennsylvania, presented a remonstrance from the citizens of Philadelphia against the establishment of a Mint in New York.

The bill providing for a Superintendent of Indian Affairs, in California, was ordered to a third reading.

MR. CLAY ON KOSSUTH.—Washington, Feb. 4.—The National Intelligencer, of this morning, publishes officially the speech of Mr Clay to Kossuth, in which decided opposition is taken to Kossuth's doctrine and proceedings in the United States.

THE POPE.—STEAMBOAT ARRIVALS AND DEPARTURES.—Louisville, Feb. 4.—The river here is now stationary, and is nearly clear of running ice. Weather pleasant.

The steamboat Paul Anderson, Fashion, Pontiac and Hungarian have arrived from Natchez and the same, Bella Key, Yorktown, United States, Buckeye, Susquehanna, Cleona and the Gen. Lafayette have departed for the same place. [Pic. Delta.

M. Guizot.—It is stated among the items brought by the Arctic that Louis Napoleon has invited M. Guizot to accept an office under the new regime.

Some three years or more ago, soon after the first election of Louis Napoleon to the Presidency, a treatise on Democracy in France was published by Guizot. It had an extensive circulation and was very generally read, as every thing from the pen of so able a man deserves to be.

There are passages in that work which are worthy of being recalled to mind in the present condition of things in France.

"Let the friends of freedom," says Guizot, "never forget that nations prefer absolute power to anarchy. The first want, the first instinct, of communities, as well as of governments or of individuals, is self-preservation. Now, a community places itself under absolute power; under anarchy it is lasts, it must perish."

The readiness, the eagerness, with which nations throw their liberties into the gulf of anarchy, by the desperate attempt to place it, he calls a shameful spectacle. "I know nothing more lamentable to witness." He says, "than this sudden renunciation of all the rights so nobly and vehemently demanded." The instantaneous acquiescence at the French people recently, in a bold usurpation of absolute power by Louis Napoleon furnishes a striking commentary upon this poignant text.

But our author goes on to speak of absolutism more fully. He says:

"Let not France, whatever bother peril, reckon on absolutism power to save her. It would not justify her confidence. In her ancient society, absolute power reposed on a principle of moderation and of permanency, while under the Emperor Napoleon it constituted a principle of strength, either of which it would vainly seek for now. Despotic tyranny or military dictatorship may be the expedient of a day but can never be a form of government. Free institutions are now as necessary to social peace as they are to individual dignity; and power, whatever be its nature or origin, whether republican or monarchical, has no better resource to pursue than to learn to use them, for they are now its only instruments and its only stay."

Western Items.

EXPLOSION OF THE PITTSBURG MILLER.—The steamer Pittsburg Miller, coming out of the mouth of White River, on the morning of the 19th ult., split open and was burned. Several lives were lost. Much does not prove to be the case. Fortunately no one was injured. After the explosion, the Miller floated down the river about a mile and a half, where she grounded on a sand bar, and her freight was taken on shore. Some of it was damaged. The accident is attributed to a deficiency of water in the boilers, arising from the freezing up or chocking of the supply pump by the weather being excessively cold at the time.

EARTHQUAKE.—The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer gives the following account of the shock of an earthquake which was experienced in that city on the 25th ultimo:

"At 2 o'clock yesterday (the 24th) our city was startled by another earthquake which seemed to come from the usual localities of all the earthquakes of the Southwest—the direction of New Madrid, Missouri. The shocks continued in rumbling succession about ten seconds and were much severer than those experienced last May. A considerable degree of insecurity was generally felt by those who happened at the time to be enclosed by brick walls and one or two chimnies in Front Row and some old brick walls in the southern part of the city, we understand, were shaken down. We hope the next visitation of the kind will be from a 'younger' and gentler member of the Earthquake family."

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Benjamin Robbins Curtis, of Massachusetts, to be one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the place of Levi Woodbury, deceased.

Ferdinand Ceroso, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of the Legation of the United States in Brazil, in the place of Franklin H. Clerk, resigned.

William Rich, of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of the Legation of the United States to the Mexican Republic in the place of Buckingham Smith, recalled.

Alexander Wilkin, of Minnesota, to be Secretary of the Territory of Minnesota, in the place of Charles K. Smith, removed.

Julius C. Kretschman, of Pennsylvania, to be Consul of the United States, for the port of Palermo, in Sicily, in the place of H. M. Edney, resigned.

Leonard W. Jerome, of New York, to be Consul of the United States for the port of Trieste, in Austria.

William H. C. Mills, of Georgia, to be Marshal of the United States for the District of Georgia, in the place of William M. Brown, resigned.

John T. Rush, of New York, to be Marshal of the United States for the Northern District of New York, in the place of P. V. Kellogg, removed.

John Dickey, of Pennsylvania, to be Marshal of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania, in the place of William Irwin, resigned.

Spruce M. Baird, of New Mexico, to be Agent for the Indians in New Mexico, in the place of R. H. Weightman, resigned.

Thomas Parkery, Ichis Parkery, W. J. Mc

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Kossuth and Captain Long.

Difficulties Aboard the Mississippi—Letters from Kossuth Captain Long, Officers of the Mississippi, &c.

In accordance with the resolution of Congress the following important documents have been given to the public. They give all the facts relative to the difficulties which occurred at Marseilles between Kossuth Captain Long, of the frigate Mississippi, and Consul Hodge and we publish them entire, as we are confident they will be read with great interest. The New York Times, in which these letters were published on the 23d ult., states that the action of our Government in sending for Kossuth and his companions met with the strong disapprobation of John S. Hodge, Esq., U. S. Consul at Marseilles; that Commodore Morgan, of the Mediterranean squadron, opposed to detaching any of his vessels, particularly the Mississippi, for this service; and that Captain Long was opposed to going in her. What the authority of the Times is for making this statement we are unable to say.

The Times speaks of the application of Kossuth to pass through France, and thus concludes its introduction:

On the third day an answer was received, refusing him permission. Kossuth gave to a Marseilles editor the request which he had made and the answer which he had received. They were published. This alarmed the Prefect and Consul Hodge, and the Consul addressed a letter, couched in violent and offensive terms, charging Kossuth with having compromised the flag of the United States, to Captain Long, who handed the letter to Governor Kossuth, thereby impliedly endorsing its sentiments.

Kossuth, who had been waiting on shore the answer of the French Government, returned on, board the Mississippi. Soon there were many boats floating about the ship, filled with people, who sang the Marseillies Hymn and sent up cries of "America," "Captain," etc. Capt Long paced the deck with a stern look, and in much apparent excitement. A beautiful wreath was taken from a United States flag in one of the boats and thrown up to the deck of the Mississippi. But Capt Long still deigned no notice of the complimentsand honors which the patriotic people were showering upon him. A general order was given to come down from the poop, guards, and other prominent places. Capt. Long then walked up to Gov Kossuth and requested him to withdraw from the poop of the ship, adding that he was compromising our flag, or that if he remained there he would compromise our flag. Gov. Kossuth withdrew, and on the same day he addressed the following letter to Consul Hodge:

U. S. Frigate Mississippi, }
September 30, 1851. }

Sir—The Government of the United States having accorded me its generous protection, knew very well to have accorded it to a man who has the honor to meet sympathy everywhere where the words "freedom and human rights" have an echo in the breasts of men.

The people of the United States themselves expressed this sympathy highly enough; and the Government of the United States did not take this expression for a motive not to grant me its protection, but rather for a motive to grant it.

So the Government of the United States will be pleased to confidently trust, to hear that even in every place of Europe, where we stopped, this sympathy is freely, openly, warmly shared by the people.

That is one view which I take about the political direction of the sentiments of your Government.

The other is, that I confidently trust that your Government was willing to give me liberty, and not a prison, sir, else I would have not accepted your Government's offered protection to me.

Please to remember all that has happened since my arrival here.

I requested permission to pass through France. No answer was given me before the third day. I was advertised, meanwhile, that I was free to leave the Hotel in order that I might not provoke any manifestation of that sympathy which I consider not only lawful not to push back, but even bound in honor to feel honored with, and thankful to accept. You know the people of Marseilles were rather anxiously scrupulous not to cause any difficulties to me by the display of their sympathy. All was quiet.

The refusal came. It was an answer to my letter, written to M. le Prefet by myself. The answer was given through your interference; but it was, and must have been given to me. Yourself, sir, considered it to be so, because you handed me the letter without any restriction rather with the advice to take a copy of it. I would have felt authorized to do so; even without your advice; because it was only and exclusively myself who was concerned in the matter.

A government, and chiefly a constitutional one—yes, a republican one—should never shun publicity of the order it judged lawful and convenient to issue. Does a government, on the contrary, shun its publicity? In my opinion the principles of the United States can only approve and side with publicity, which is in no way contrary to law even in the French Republic.

Besides, I had a right to complain; the French Republican Government having, without any reasonable motive (if having offered to pass rapidly, without stopping in any place, and even declared to you to be willing to accord every loyal and honorable advice of the government in respect to my passage; so that my passage would and could not produce any excitement, wherever, to forbid this passage, could but produce excitement, of course.) I had a right to complain against the refusal, violating, without any motive, the rights of humanity and hospitality, which I was the more entitled to claim as the French constitution proclaimed to the world to take for basis the principle of freedom and fraternity.

And yet I made no complaint. I only communicated to a newspaper, without any additional remarks, the letter I wrote and the answer I received. It was lawful, it was due to my position, and not even contrary to the rules of etiquette, which I am well acquainted with, and will ever observe, except where etiquette should claim the sacrifice of my honor and my rights.

But you know, sir, it was not this communication which caused the people of Marseilles express to me, in a warm, but dignified and graceful manner, their sympathy; because this happened at noon and afternoon; the letters were published in the evening; the remarks, and annexed opinion of the editor, I have nothing to do with.

You yourself did me the honor to accompany me from the hotel to the boat. You saw that the acclamations of the people, being in no way provoked, had nothing of disorder in themselves; but rather were highly honorable to myself, to the people, and even to you.

We returned to the frigate. In the afternoon a hundred boats were floating around the Mississippi, singing national songs, offering garlands of laurel to me, garlands of immortals to America, and shouting "Hurrahs!" to the Republic, to the United States of America, and to myself. I also joined in the shouts of the people. I mounted on the deck, and uncovering my head bowed to thank the people without speaking one single word. I was surprised to see the captain of the frigate walk along the deck, without even waving his cap to acknowledge the cheers given to America; but my surprise was still heightened, to see Captain Long accost me in a reproaching manner—that I was compromising him by staying on deck. I answered, "I hope I will meet a vigorous welcome from your people also, and I am sure you will not have me repulse it. I am in the very position here. I will, in honor and conscience, feel bound thankfully to acknowledge, every where, the sympathy I meet; and am confident that your people and your government can but approve this, and feel in no way compromised to learn that the people of Marseilles did. In a graceful manner cheer the United States and cheer myself. You knew whom you received on board your ship; and I beg to be assured that I have the sentiment of what is due to you and convenient to me. It appears we have different ideas about what may be thought compromising to your position. So I free you from the embarrassment and entreat you to land me where ever you please. But, as long as I have the honor to be on board your ship, you have to command, and your commands shall be obeyed." And I left the deck, and caused all my companions to do the same. The people in the boats continued to cheer yet for a while, then went away peaceably as it came, without the consolation of a single acknowledged sign from the Mississippi.

These are the incidents of our staying in the Bay of Marseilles.

And yet, sir, you were pleased to judge convenient to send me word to-day (and that, also, not directly, but by a letter written to Capt. Long) that "your position and the flag of the United States had been compromised by these incidents."

This is a heavy charge, sir, deeply wounding my honor and my sentiments of deepest respect to your glorious land.....

It cannot be passed in silence. I feel bound in honor to bring the matter before the people of the United States and your government, and entreat their verdict about it.

But having the firm conviction that wherever I meet a free, spontaneous, lawful, and honorable expression of whatever people's sympathy I am bound in honor and conscience to respect it with esteem—and not to refuse it, but thankfully to accept—on the other side, you being here the organ of your government which I am revering with high veneration, it is my duty to deliver the Mississippi of the presence of myself, who by his position seems, in your opinion, to be a man who compromises the glorious flag of the United States.

Therefore, though in the most solemn manner protesting against the imputation you charge me with, I have the honor to tranquilize you, sir, by declaring that I will no longer embarrass you, but with everlasting gratitude to your country and to your government I will leave the Mississippi at the first place it will stop; which is, I suppose, Gibraltar.

M. L. S. Bonaparte has driven me away from France, and you are forcing me to consider myself driven away from the Mississippi, because the people of Marseilles had shown some kindness to me.

I will go by some private conveyance to the United States, will make my excuses for not having further protested of the hospitality of your Government's vessel by the publication of this letter I have the honor to send you, and will confidently await the judgment of the public opinion of the United States.

I am sorry that your above said letter came not some hours earlier; you giving therein order that, from the Mississippi, no communications should be sent to any public paper of Marseilles. I feel surprised, but will make respected your orders. I am sorry to say, that feeling it to be my duty of honor to thank, by some few words, the kind sympathy I was honored with in Marseilles, sometime after the arrival and communication of your quite unlooked for and unexpected intimation, I sent sobered a letter to the said effect. When you read it in some public paper, I hope you will, by its contents, not judge compromised the flag of the United States.

I beg leave to assure you, sir, of my high regards and my particular consideration; having the honor to sign myself to be, sir, your humble and obsequious servant.

L. Kossuth.

On the following day, October 1 the Mississippi sailed for Gibraltar. An interesting incident connected with her departure from Marseilles is thus narrated by an officer on board, in a private letter to a friend:

We hurried through coaling and left Marseilles Wednesday evening. 1st of October, having again to encounter the many-headed as we passed through the narrow entrance of the port of Marseilles. The mole-heads were crowded with men, who were loud in their expressions of sympathy for Kossuth and his cause. The warm and right-hearted sailors determined, if their gun will tore, to have some manifestation of fellow-feeling. As we entered the narrow mouth, suddenly our fore-rigging was swarming with human beings, much to the astonishment of our Frenier and Captain. After they were in the rigging there was a moment's pause, during which Captain ordered them down immediately. One of the boys said "Three cheers, my hearties, before we go." Accordingly, three as hearty cheers were given as could issue from the lungs of one hundred and fifty men. Immediately it was responded to from the shore. Then the men came down and added one more from behind the bulwarks. The Hungarians were much pleased with the demonstration, all thinking, though at the time that it was done by order of the Captain."

An attempt was made, shortly after this, by the First Lieutenant, to affix a stigma upon Kossuth by showing that he thanked the men for three cheers, which was regarded by that officer as an act of insubordination. But the effort failed utterly; the charge was proved to be false, and served only to cover its author with ridicule.

Under the flag of the United States the writer continues:

"I fear that perverted accounts of air this will reach you before this. One of the Captains ships said last night that they were not so much surprised for all the hurrays as honors as might be supposed. "Three weeks since" said he, evidently alluding to Spezzia, "reports went home only some fifty shillings at much cost and many difficulties on the part of those entrusted with so noble a charge."

It is proper to remark that this statement respecting reports having been sent home three weeks previous, was affected by the writer whom we have been quoting, of the bad effects upon Capt Long's reputation in the United States, which would be produced by his treatment of Kossuth and the other Hungarians.

In the same letter this correspondent remarks:

"The accusation of having compromised the flag still remains against Kossuth. Till that is withdrawn Kossuth will not go home in the ship. If the Captain states in writing that the charge is groundless, Kossuth will forget the other indignities from them and continue with us."

And thus matters continued until a number of the officers not being addressed letters, expressive of their own sentiments, to Gov. Kossuth. Amongst those letters were the following:

United States Steam Frigate Mississippi }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—Permit me to express to you the sincere regret we feel at the prospect of so soon parting from you. The resolution of Congress," by which a ship of war was put at your disposal, and sent to convey you and your companions to the United States, will at once convince you of the deep concern taken in you, and of the sympathies of the people of the United States. They have already heard with infinite pleasure, sir, of your release from Kutahia and of your embarkation on board the Mississippi at the Dardanelles. Their arrival at New York without your presence on board, with in the highest degree, disappoint the expectations of the people of the United States, who model me assure you are anxiously awaiting to greet you and to do you honor.

But if the determination on your part to leave this ship at Gibraltar, not again to return to her, is made in consequence (as I have the best reasons to believe) of the groundless outcry against you of having, "on two occasions," compromised the flag of the United States, and of having restraint, so repugnant to your feelings, imposed upon your actions on board this ship, their indeed, will mortification be added to the disappointment of the American people and sorrow most sincere be felt by myself and by many of my companions here present.

Since I have had the honor of a personal acquaintance with you, I certainly have seen nothing, sir, which has been done, or which has been said by you, that, in my opinion is, in the remotest degree, derogatory to the high position you hold, or which has, in the least, changed in good opinion, the good wishes, nor the high respect entertained for you by myself and by other of my brother officers on board the Mississippi.

I have the honor, sir, to be, most respectfully, and very truly yours,

Henry Ettins, Purser United States Navy.

To Governor Louis Kossuth, on board the United States steam frigate Mississippi, at sea.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—I feel it a duty I owe myself, as an officer of this ship and a citizen of the United States of America, to express to you, sir, the nation's guest, my sincere and heartfelt regret at the determination you have which have imposed your determination to leave this vessel, and to disarm any participation in the complaints and charges that have been brought against you and your noble associates, finding that this manifestation of my true feeling may meet with credit on your part, and that prosperity may attend you and your glorious cause, I am, sir, with high esteem, etc.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 4, 1851. }

My Dear Sir—I cannot allow you to leave the Mississippi under the present circumstances, without expressing to you the pain and mortification I feel at the occurrence which has recently induced you to adopt this resolution. I cannot hope, sir, that this expression of my personal feelings, and those of a similar nature which I know you will receive from other officers, will produce a change in your determination. It would be folly in me, sir, to endeavor to alleviate the accusation which has been made against you; an accusation which, although I may disapprove of and consider unfounded, is still existing. You have not to do with the unfounded accusations or opinions of my brother officers. You cannot receive from me a refutation of charges which have been made by the only agents of the government with whom you have to deal. You have been charged by them with having compromised the flag which offered you protection. You, sir, while a guest of the national ship placed at your disposal by the unanimous votes of our representatives in Congress, you have been charged by a commercial agent, with having compromised that country's banner!

When the American people, through their representatives, have extended to you a mark of their respect and sympathy—which has never been paid to any man with the exception of Lafayette—he has, without considering the consequences, undertaken to say in you that which would oblige you to decline their proffered honor. I, sir am not a diplomatist. My profession does not often place me in a position to decide upon questions of political intricacy. But I cem be allowed to judge and express my opinions upon subjects as devoid of ambiguity as this appears to me to be. I am familiar with every circumstance which has led to this accusation. I have watched attentively every movement of yourself and every word, almost that you have spoken since you came on board at the Dardanuelles, and I do not hesitate to venture my opinion that in no one instance have you, in the least, compromised the American flag.

I do firmly believe that upon two occasions, your whole course of conduct will meet the entire approbation of the American people. I know it is a piece of presumption in me to make such an explicit declaration, and particularly after those whose experience and situation entitle them to so much more respect, have decided otherwise. But there are cases in which men of the finest tact and judgment may be deceived. There are cases in which men, from a strict sense of duty, may be misled; and in my humble opinion, this is one of those cases. I cannot think that Capt. Long considered the consequences of the becoming a party in this charge, the impossibility of remaining under the flag after having been accused of compromising it, unless it is satisfactorily retracted and explained. I see the disappointment which will be produced at home, among the parties and classes when they become acquainted with these mortifying, these painful facts. I hope most sincerely that such explanations will be made to you as will exculpate Capt. Long, and that you will, after receiving them, reconsider the resolution which I know you have made.

In conclusion, sir, allow me to express to you the personal satisfaction I have experienced in an association to which I shall always recur with pleasure and with pride, and regretting more than I can tell you, if you persist in your resolution to leave us, the causes which have produced it.

I remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant.

J. Van Ness Philip, Lieut Mid Mississippi

Directed Gov. Louis Kossuth.

U. S. Steamer Mississippi, }
At Sea, Saturday, October 4, 1851. }

Dear Sir:—I have heard with real pain of your intention of leaving our ship, and if the causes which have impelled you to that step. But before your departure from amongst us, I have thought that it might not be altogether displeasing to you to know that there are many of my brother officers, besides myself, who are far from being of the opinion that you have done the least thing to compromise our country; and who, therefore, by no means subscribe to the charge that has here so unhappily laid at your door.

The resolution of our country in your favor was hailed with just pride, but it became a matter of especial gratification when it was known that the vessel to which we are attached, was destined for the honor of conveying you from bondage to freedom. Your presence upon our decks was therefore received with joy, and as far as yourself and your company are concerned, has been a source of uninterrupted pleasure up to the present time. It is but natural, then, that your leaving us, even under the most favorable circumstances, should cause pain; but when it takes place under circumstances so little gratifying to us all, I feel absolutely at a loss to express the sentiment it produces; and I do not deceive you as to the character of the American people, when I declare it my firm conviction that they will be deeply mortified at learning that any course of conduct on the part of their fellow-citizens, and agents abroad, should have been such, no matter how inadvertantly, as to drive a national guest from their doors.

I trust you will not view this voluntary expression of sentiment as an impertinence. It is not intended as such; but is rather from the sincere desire that you will do justice to your well-wishers on board, and not depart from us under the unpleasant and unjust conviction that any act on your part has occasioned the least displeasure.

With sentiments of great esteem for yourself, personally, sir, and a warm sympathy for the cause you sustain, I am, very truly, yours. Charles W. Ast.

Gov. Louis Kossuth, on board the U. S. steamer Mississippi.

And, finally, even Capt. Long himself was prevailed on to do something, and he wrote the following letter to Gov. Kossuth:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi, }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 6, 1851. }

Sir—I have the honor, by your request, to send you a copy of the extract of a letter from John L. Hodge, Esq., U. S. Consul at Marseilles, France, in being the same that I read to you on the 30th September, ultimo.

"Articles on this affair, the publication, and what has followed, have compromised me and my flag with this Government. Please request Mr Kossuth not to send articles to the paper Le Peuple while under the banner of the United States, as it would appear that we encourage or attempt to produce an emeute or serious disturbances."

I do cheerfully state to you, in furtherance of your request, that I have never said, nor to my knowledge have you, during the time you have been on board this ship, compromised the flag.

I am, sir, with the highest regards, your obedient servant.

J. P. Long, Captain.

To Louis Kossuth, Ex-Governor President of Hungary U. S. steamer Mississippi.

Governor Kossuth, after what had now taken place, would have remained on board the Mississippi, and have come to the United States in her, but for reasons which fully appear in the following letter, which, considering what had just taken place, is certainly most magnanimous so far as it relates to Capt Long personally:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 13, 1851. }

Sir—Having had the honor to state that though my return from England to Gibraltar, and continuing my passage to the United States, would require to be some twenty days longer at the present late season, than to go directly from Liverpool to New York, I still would prefer to go on board the Mississippi frigate to the United States, this honor and this distinction. You, sir, had the highly obliging kindness to inform me that you will await my return here from England in the steamer which leaves England on the 1st of November next.

Though I felt very much pained at the idea that my most ingenious duties forcing me to ask and to accept this delay I may have augmented the sufferings of the officers and crew of this ship, as also to my associates still I felt somewhat consolated at the conviction that leaving Southampton on the 27th, I will be back again on the 2d of November, and that you might yet reach New York before the end of that month.

Unhappily and quite unexpectedly I learn now, from the agency of the Oriental Company, that the boat expected to-morrow on board of which I intended to embark for England makes eleven days to Southampton from Gibraltar, as it has to touch Cadiz and Lisbon. I cannot expect to land at Southampton before the 25th, and having to return the 27th. I had only one single day to arrange my public and private business.

On the other hand the next packet boat not leaving England but on the 5th November, and making likewise the passage to Gibraltar I could not be back here before the 10th of November, so that if you would be teased to grant me yet this delay also, the Mississippi could but on the second half of December reach New York.

Now, sir, you having requested me to take into consideration that any longer delay here would render my associates as well as the officers and crew of this ship, liable to approaching your coast at a late season to endure extraordinary severe and uncomfortable cold and stormy weather; I consider it, under the above said untoward circumstances, in honor and conscience my duty to be not to request, but to urge your desperate care for the comfort of all on board this ship. One of the Captains ships said last night that they were not so much surprised for all the hurrays as honors as might be supposed. "Three weeks since" said he, evidently alluding to Spezzia, "reports went home only some fifty shillings at much cost and many difficulties on the part of those entrusted with so noble a charge."

It is proper to remark that this statement respecting reports having been sent home three weeks previous, was affected by the writer whom we have been quoting, of the bad effects upon Capt Long's reputation in the United States, which would be produced by his treatment of Kossuth and the other Hungarians.

In the same letter this correspondent remarks:

"The accusation of having compromised the flag still remains against Kossuth. Till that is withdrawn Kossuth will not go home in the ship. If the Captain states in writing that the charge is groundless, Kossuth will forget the other indignities from them and continue with us."

And thus matters continued until a number of the officers not being addressed letters, expressive of their own sentiments, to Gov. Kossuth. Amongst those letters were the following:

United States Steam Frigate Mississippi }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—Permit me to express to you the sincere regret we feel at the prospect of so soon parting from you. The resolution of Congress," by which a ship of war was put at your disposal, and sent to convey you and your companions to the United States, will at once convince you of the deep concern taken in you, and of the sympathies of the people of the United States. They have already heard with infinite pleasure, sir, of your release from Kutahia and of your embarkation on board the Mississippi at the Dardanelles. Their arrival at New York without your presence on board, with in the highest degree, disappoint the expectations of the people of the United States, who model me assure you are anxiously awaiting to greet you and to do you honor.

But if the determination on your part to leave this ship at Gibraltar, not again to return to her, is made in consequence (as I have the best reasons to believe) of the groundless outcry against you of having, "on two occasions," compromised the flag of the United States, and of having restraint, so repugnant to your feelings, imposed upon your actions on board this ship, their indeed, will mortification be added to the disappointment of the American people and sorrow most sincere be felt by myself and by many of my companions here present.

Since I have had the honor of a personal acquaintance with you, I certainly have seen nothing, sir, which has been done, or which has been said by you, that, in my opinion is, in the remotest degree, derogatory to the high position you hold, or which has, in the least, changed in good opinion, the good wishes, nor the high respect entertained for you by myself and by other of my brother officers on board the Mississippi.

I have the honor, sir, to be, most respectfully, and very truly yours,

Henry Ettins, Purser United States Navy.

To Governor Louis Kossuth, on board the United States steam frigate Mississippi, at sea.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—I feel it a duty I owe myself, as an officer of this ship and a citizen of the United States of America, to express to you, sir, the nation's guest, my sincere and heartfelt regret at the determination you have which have imposed your determination to leave this vessel, and to disarm any participation in the complaints and charges that have been brought against you and your noble associates, finding that this manifestation of my true feeling may meet with credit on your part, and that prosperity may attend you and your glorious cause, I am, sir, with high esteem, etc.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 4, 1851. }

My Dear Sir—I cannot allow you to leave the Mississippi under the present circumstances, without expressing to you the pain and mortification I feel at the occurrence which has recently induced you to adopt this resolution. I cannot hope, sir, that this expression of my personal feelings, and those of a similar nature which I know you will receive from other officers, will produce a change in your determination. It would be folly in me, sir, to endeavor to alleviate the accusation which has been made against you; an accusation which, although I may disapprove of and consider unfounded, is still existing. You have not to do with the unfounded accusations or opinions of my brother officers. You cannot receive from me a refutation of charges which have been made by the only agents of the government with whom you have to deal. You have been charged by them with having compromised the flag which offered you protection. You, sir, while a guest of the national ship placed at your disposal by the unanimous votes of our representatives in Congress, you have been charged by a commercial agent, with having compromised that country's banner!

When the American people, through their representatives, have extended to you a mark of their respect and sympathy—which has never been paid to any man with the exception of Lafayette—he has, without considering the consequences, undertaken to say in you that which would oblige you to decline their proffered honor. I, sir am not a diplomatist. My profession does not often place me in a position to decide upon questions of political intricacy. But I cem be allowed to judge and express my opinions upon subjects as devoid of ambiguity as this appears to me to be. I am familiar with every circumstance which has led to this accusation. I have watched attentively every movement of yourself and every word, almost that you have spoken since you came on board at the Dardanuelles, and I do not hesitate to venture my opinion that in no one instance have you, in the least, compromised the American flag.

I do firmly believe that upon two occasions, your whole course of conduct will meet the entire approbation of the American people. I know it is a piece of presumption in me to make such an explicit declaration, and particularly after those whose experience and situation entitle them to so much more respect, have decided otherwise. But there are cases in which men of the finest tact and judgment may be deceived. There are cases in which men, from a strict sense of duty, may be misled; and in my humble opinion, this is one of those cases. I cannot think that Capt. Long considered the consequences of the becoming a party in this charge, the impossibility of remaining under the flag after having been accused of compromising it, unless it is satisfactorily retracted and explained. I see the disappointment which will be produced at home, among the parties and classes when they become acquainted with these mortifying, these painful facts. I hope most sincerely that such explanations will be made to you as will exculpate Capt. Long, and that you will, after receiving them, reconsider the resolution which I know you have made.

In conclusion, sir, allow me to express to you the personal satisfaction I have experienced in an association to which I shall always recur with pleasure and with pride, and regretting more than I can tell you, if you persist in your resolution to leave us, the causes which have produced it.

I remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant.

J. Van Ness Philip, Lieut Mid Mississippi

Directed Gov. Louis Kossuth.

U. S. Steamer Mississippi, }
At Sea, Saturday, October 4, 1851. }

Dear Sir:—I have heard with real pain of your intention of leaving our ship, and if the causes which have impelled you to that step. But before your departure from amongst us, I have thought that it might not be altogether displeasing to you to know that there are many of my brother officers, besides myself, who are far from being of the opinion that you have done the least thing to compromise our country; and who, therefore, by no means subscribe to the charge that has here so unhappily laid at your door.

The resolution of our country in your favor was hailed with just pride, but it became a matter of especial gratification when it was known that the vessel to which we are attached, was destined for the honor of conveying you from bondage to freedom. Your presence upon our decks was therefore received with joy, and as far as yourself and your company are concerned, has been a source of uninterrupted pleasure up to the present time. It is but natural, then, that your leaving us, even under the most favorable circumstances, should cause pain; but when it takes place under circumstances so little gratifying to us all, I feel absolutely at a loss to express the sentiment it produces; and I do not deceive you as to the character of the American people, when I declare it my firm conviction that they will be deeply mortified at learning that any course of conduct on the part of their fellow-citizens, and agents abroad, should have been such, no matter how inadvertantly, as to drive a national guest from their doors.

I trust you will not view this voluntary expression of sentiment as an impertinence. It is not intended as such; but is rather from the sincere desire that you will do justice to your well-wishers on board, and not depart from us under the unpleasant and unjust conviction that any act on your part has occasioned the least displeasure.

With sentiments of great esteem for yourself, personally, sir, and a warm sympathy for the cause you sustain, I am, very truly, yours. Charles W. Ast.

Gov. Louis Kossuth, on board the U. S. steamer Mississippi.

And, finally, even Capt. Long himself was prevailed on to do something, and he wrote the following letter to Gov. Kossuth:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 6, 1851. }

Sir—I have the honor, by your request, to send you a copy of the extract of a letter from John L. Hodge, Esq., U. S. Consul at Marseilles, France, in being the same that I read to you on the 30th September, ultimo.

"Articles on this affair, the publication, and what has followed, have compromised me and my flag with this Government. Please request Mr Kossuth not to send articles to the paper Le Peuple while under the banner of the United States, as it would appear that we encourage or attempt to produce an emeute or serious disturbances."

I do cheerfully state to you, in furtherance of your request, that I have never said, nor to my knowledge have you, during the time you have been on board this ship, compromised the flag.

I am, sir, with the highest regards, your obedient servant.

J. P. Long, Captain.

To Louis Kossuth, Ex-Governor President of Hungary U. S. steamer Mississippi.

Governor Kossuth, after what had now taken place, would have remained on board the Mississippi, and have come to the United States in her, but for reasons which fully appear in the following letter, which, considering what had just taken place, is certainly most magnanimous so far as it relates to Capt Long personally:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 13, 1851. }

Sir—Having had the honor to state that though my return from England to Gibraltar, and continuing my passage to the United States, would require to be some twenty days longer at the present late season, than to go directly from Liverpool to New York, I still would prefer to go on board the Mississippi frigate to the United States, this honor and this distinction. You, sir, had the highly obliging kindness to inform me that you will await my return here from England in the steamer which leaves England on the 1st of November next.

Though I felt very much pained at the idea that my most ingenious duties forcing me to ask and to accept this delay I may have augmented the sufferings of the officers and crew of this ship, as also to my associates still I felt somewhat consolated at the conviction that leaving Southampton on the 27th, I will be back again on the 2d of November, and that you might yet reach New York before the end of that month.

Unhappily and quite unexpectedly I learn now, from the agency of the Oriental Company, that the boat expected to-morrow on board of which I intended to embark for England makes eleven days to Southampton from Gibraltar, as it has to touch Cadiz and Lisbon. I cannot expect to land at Southampton before the 25th, and having to return the 27th. I had only one single day to arrange my public and private business.

On the other hand the next packet boat not leaving England but on the 5th November, and making likewise the passage to Gibraltar I could not be back here before the 10th of November, so that if you would be teased to grant me yet this delay also, the Mississippi could but on the second half of December reach New York.

Now, sir, you having requested me to take into consideration that any longer delay here would render my associates as well as the officers and crew of this ship, liable to approaching your coast at a late season to endure extraordinary severe and uncomfortable cold and stormy weather; I consider it, under the above said untoward circumstances, in honor and conscience my duty to be not to request, but to urge your desperate care for the comfort of all on board this ship. One of the Captains ships said last night that they were not so much surprised for all the hurrays as honors as might be supposed. "Three weeks since" said he, evidently alluding to Spezzia, "reports went home only some fifty shillings at much cost and many difficulties on the part of those entrusted with so noble a charge."

It is proper to remark that this statement respecting reports having been sent home three weeks previous, was affected by the writer whom we have been quoting, of the bad effects upon Capt Long's reputation in the United States, which would be produced by his treatment of Kossuth and the other Hungarians.

In the same letter this correspondent remarks:

"The accusation of having compromised the flag still remains against Kossuth. Till that is withdrawn Kossuth will not go home in the ship. If the Captain states in writing that the charge is groundless, Kossuth will forget the other indignities from them and continue with us."

And thus matters continued until a number of the officers not being addressed letters, expressive of their own sentiments, to Gov. Kossuth. Amongst those letters were the following:

United States Steam Frigate Mississippi }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—Permit me to express to you the sincere regret we feel at the prospect of so soon parting from you. The resolution of Congress," by which a ship of war was put at your disposal, and sent to convey you and your companions to the United States, will at once convince you of the deep concern taken in you, and of the sympathies of the people of the United States. They have already heard with infinite pleasure, sir, of your release from Kutahia and of your embarkation on board the Mississippi at the Dardanelles. Their arrival at New York without your presence on board, with in the highest degree, disappoint the expectations of the people of the United States, who model me assure you are anxiously awaiting to greet you and to do you honor.

But if the determination on your part to leave this ship at Gibraltar, not again to return to her, is made in consequence (as I have the best reasons to believe) of the groundless outcry against you of having, "on two occasions," compromised the flag of the United States, and of having restraint, so repugnant to your feelings, imposed upon your actions on board this ship, their indeed, will mortification be added to the disappointment of the American people and sorrow most sincere be felt by myself and by many of my companions here present.

Since I have had the honor of a personal acquaintance with you, I certainly have seen nothing, sir, which has been done, or which has been said by you, that, in my opinion is, in the remotest degree, derogatory to the high position you hold, or which has, in the least, changed in good opinion, the good wishes, nor the high respect entertained for you by myself and by other of my brother officers on board the Mississippi.

I have the honor, sir, to be, most respectfully, and very truly yours,

Henry Ettins, Purser United States Navy.

To Governor Louis Kossuth, on board the United States steam frigate Mississippi, at sea.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 3, 1851. }

Sir—I feel it a duty I owe myself, as an officer of this ship and a citizen of the United States of America, to express to you, sir, the nation's guest, my sincere and heartfelt regret at the determination you have which have imposed your determination to leave this vessel, and to disarm any participation in the complaints and charges that have been brought against you and your noble associates, finding that this manifestation of my true feeling may meet with credit on your part, and that prosperity may attend you and your glorious cause, I am, sir, with high esteem, etc.

United States Ship Mississippi, }
At Sea, October 4, 1851. }

My Dear Sir—I cannot allow you to leave the Mississippi under the present circumstances, without expressing to you the pain and mortification I feel at the occurrence which has recently induced you to adopt this resolution. I cannot hope, sir, that this expression of my personal feelings, and those of a similar nature which I know you will receive from other officers, will produce a change in your determination. It would be folly in me, sir, to endeavor to alleviate the accusation which has been made against you; an accusation which, although I may disapprove of and consider unfounded, is still existing. You have not to do with the unfounded accusations or opinions of my brother officers. You cannot receive from me a refutation of charges which have been made by the only agents of the government with whom you have to deal. You have been charged by them with having compromised the flag which offered you protection. You, sir, while a guest of the national ship placed at your disposal by the unanimous votes of our representatives in Congress, you have been charged by a commercial agent, with having compromised that country's banner!

When the American people, through their representatives, have extended to you a mark of their respect and sympathy—which has never been paid to any man with the exception of Lafayette—he has, without considering the consequences, undertaken to say in you that which would oblige you to decline their proffered honor. I, sir am not a diplomatist. My profession does not often place me in a position to decide upon questions of political intricacy. But I cem be allowed to judge and express my opinions upon subjects as devoid of ambiguity as this appears to me to be. I am familiar with every circumstance which has led to this accusation. I have watched attentively every movement of yourself and every word, almost that you have spoken since you came on board at the Dardanuelles, and I do not hesitate to venture my opinion that in no one instance have you, in the least, compromised the American flag.

I do firmly believe that upon two occasions, your whole course of conduct will meet the entire approbation of the American people. I know it is a piece of presumption in me to make such an explicit declaration, and particularly after those whose experience and situation entitle them to so much more respect, have decided otherwise. But there are cases in which men of the finest tact and judgment may be deceived. There are cases in which men, from a strict sense of duty, may be misled; and in my humble opinion, this is one of those cases. I cannot think that Capt. Long considered the consequences of the becoming a party in this charge, the impossibility of remaining under the flag after having been accused of compromising it, unless it is satisfactorily retracted and explained. I see the disappointment which will be produced at home, among the parties and classes when they become acquainted with these mortifying, these painful facts. I hope most sincerely that such explanations will be made to you as will exculpate Capt. Long, and that you will, after receiving them, reconsider the resolution which I know you have made.

In conclusion, sir, allow me to express to you the personal satisfaction I have experienced in an association to which I shall always recur with pleasure and with pride, and regretting more than I can tell you, if you persist in your resolution to leave us, the causes which have produced it.

I remain, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant.

J. Van Ness Philip, Lieut Mid Mississippi

Directed Gov. Louis Kossuth.

U. S. Steamer Mississippi, }
At Sea, Saturday, October 4, 1851. }

Dear Sir:—I have heard with real pain of your intention of leaving our ship, and if the causes which have impelled you to that step. But before your departure from amongst us, I have thought that it might not be altogether displeasing to you to know that there are many of my brother officers, besides myself, who are far from being of the opinion that you have done the least thing to compromise our country; and who, therefore, by no means subscribe to the charge that has here so unhappily laid at your door.

The resolution of our country in your favor was hailed with just pride, but it became a matter of especial gratification when it was known that the vessel to which we are attached, was destined for the honor of conveying you from bondage to freedom. Your presence upon our decks was therefore received with joy, and as far as yourself and your company are concerned, has been a source of uninterrupted pleasure up to the present time. It is but natural, then, that your leaving us, even under the most favorable circumstances, should cause pain; but when it takes place under circumstances so little gratifying to us all, I feel absolutely at a loss to express the sentiment it produces; and I do not deceive you as to the character of the American people, when I declare it my firm conviction that they will be deeply mortified at learning that any course of conduct on the part of their fellow-citizens, and agents abroad, should have been such, no matter how inadvertantly, as to drive a national guest from their doors.

I trust you will not view this voluntary expression of sentiment as an impertinence. It is not intended as such; but is rather from the sincere desire that you will do justice to your well-wishers on board, and not depart from us under the unpleasant and unjust conviction that any act on your part has occasioned the least displeasure.

With sentiments of great esteem for yourself, personally, sir, and a warm sympathy for the cause you sustain, I am, very truly, yours. Charles W. Ast.

Gov. Louis Kossuth, on board the U. S. steamer Mississippi.

And, finally, even Capt. Long himself was prevailed on to do something, and he wrote the following letter to Gov. Kossuth:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 6, 1851. }

Sir—I have the honor, by your request, to send you a copy of the extract of a letter from John L. Hodge, Esq., U. S. Consul at Marseilles, France, in being the same that I read to you on the 30th September, ultimo.

"Articles on this affair, the publication, and what has followed, have compromised me and my flag with this Government. Please request Mr Kossuth not to send articles to the paper Le Peuple while under the banner of the United States, as it would appear that we encourage or attempt to produce an emeute or serious disturbances."

I do cheerfully state to you, in furtherance of your request, that I have never said, nor to my knowledge have you, during the time you have been on board this ship, compromised the flag.

I am, sir, with the highest regards, your obedient servant.

J. P. Long, Captain.

To Louis Kossuth, Ex-Governor President of Hungary U. S. steamer Mississippi.

Governor Kossuth, after what had now taken place, would have remained on board the Mississippi, and have come to the United States in her, but for reasons which fully appear in the following letter, which, considering what had just taken place, is certainly most magnanimous so far as it relates to Capt Long personally:

U. S. Steam Frigate Mississippi }
Bay of Gibraltar, October 13, 1851. }

Sir—Having had the honor to state that though my return from England to Gibraltar, and continuing my passage to the United States, would require to be some twenty days longer at the present late season, than to go directly from Liverpool to New York, I still would prefer to go on board the Mississippi frigate to the United States, this honor and this distinction. You, sir, had the highly obliging kindness to inform me that you will await my return here from England in the steamer which leaves England on the 1st of November next.

Though I felt very much pained at the idea that my most ingenious duties forcing me to ask and to accept this delay I may have augmented the sufferings of the officers and crew of this ship, as also to my associates still I felt somewhat cons

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. M. DOTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D. }

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 2. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 54.

THE WINE CUP.

Pass the glowing wine-cup by.
Nor let thy lips its poison drink,
Though it be sparkling warm and high
Yet pause and on its rim think.
Amidst thee at the festive board
Crowned with its jests and ringing laughter
And temptation brightly poured—
But oh, what heavy days come after!

Engulf the soul a feverish power
That wild and flashing words to speak
And lights a cold and gloomy hour
Where hope nor sunlight seemed to break.
Like a transient magic spell.
The draught within you gilded chalice.
Covered lips that love it well
Kept too late the burning malice.

Then a fearful record kept
Of pure angel from on high.
And tears of blood are o'er it wept.
From eye that slumber not nor die—
And the names of those like thee
Wrongly touched and lightly tasted
Of Love gone down so silently
In treasure tarks that rocks have wasted.

Voice of warning sternly comes
From where the young and proud were wrecked.
And from thou treat earth's ruined homes
And ask thy gaily intellect!
Mortly jewels of thy brain—
And wouldst thou have their brightness scattered!
And the maddest sense of pain
Might have thy reckless life-strings shattered!

Give no hallowed spirit fled
Is hover round and guard thy fate!
Whisper from the sainted dead.
To say thee ere it be too late!
Some human heart that's thine.
Enshrined by ties thou wouldst not sever!
Turn and flee the sparkling wine
Then wouldst keep that love for ever.

Watching angels stand between
Thy priceless soul and its dark grave;
And wouldst thou trample love unseen
That lines thy path to shield and save!
We are not our own but His
Who by a wondrous mystery wrought us,
And should guard a truth like this
That by His costly blood He bought us.

All the star-bright hopes that shine
Just make thy future dazzling room.
Their eagle aspirations thine.
Lead by ambition's gorgeous dream:
All the prayers that upward go.
Deep and passionate emotion.
Spread this strong temptation low
And save for Heaven a heart's devotion.

Love is a bird in Eastern skies.
That will not sail its wings with earth—
A peerless bird of Paradise—
Art thou not too of Eden birth?
Then leave the wine that's foaming high
Though joyful friends shall praise its gladness.
And leave the cup untasted by.
Untainted from its ruin and its madness.

[Ibn.

NOTES FROM ABROAD.

ROME OF THE CÆSARS—RUINS OF CARACALLA BATHS—CONSTANTINE'S BASILICA—DAY LABORERS COLISEUM, NOT BY MOONLIGHT—BRUTUS AND CASSIUS—GRAPES AND OIL—THE THIRD HOUSES—MECENAS VILLA—AN IRON SAWING MILL—THE FOUNTAIN OF EGERIA—THE TULLIAN DUNGEONS.

I find that I have said nothing about that which every body writes—the Ruins of ancient Rome. I can not speak very enthusiastically of them: on the whole they rather disappointed me. For one or two years of life, I came, the "Rome of the Cæsars," is one half of the horizon, in the shape of a Latin grammar and a Cæsar; and both books gave witness then, in their dangling covers and curling leaves, to the immense attention that attended our introduction to each other, and a subsequent, unpleasant, unexpected and persisted acquaintance. I need not say that this superinduced a very excited conception of Rome, which over-wrought itself in its temples and gods. But strange to say, every thing in size and shape was altogether within the region of the possible, and not quite out of reach of Yankee genius or common sense.

Every traveler has meditated about the Forum, the Capitol, and the Arch of Titus, and some "by moonlight." The great Forum, however, which gives most length to the shadows, awe to the height, or wonder to the size of these ruins, is that of history—"the Mistress of the World!" "I saw in my night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly." The wheel of Time has rolled over the kingdom, and left upon the hills and plains a few scattered fragments of its iron sway.

The Baths of Caracalla are second only to the Coliseum in size. They consisted of immense apartments, which were for gladiatorial contests in water. For warm baths, for pictures, and a retreat for the Court. The floors were mosaic, and the walls covered with marbles. The ruin is at present a pile of brick work, with arches and apartments half filled, covering about twelve acres. The second story was supported by arches, I should suppose sixty feet high: some of them are still standing. The larger part of the body of the building has been cleaned out, but several acres of rubbish are still there, unexcavated—a sort of mine of ancient fragments. This is occasionally worked. Some modern Romans had just employed two or three score Italians to dig amongst the walls. They worked like connoisseurs, by the day, moving with indescribable, almost painful leisure. The Italians are the laziest people I have yet seen: still there must be some thing in them, for they resisted the French for forty-nine years, constantly fighting, and had a very long line of defence to maintain.

The Coliseum is the most interesting ruin in Rome, as it gives one an idea of the architecture of the Romans, and of their customs and morals. No part of the building is perfect, yet enough remains to fill the visiter with wonder, and enable him, in his imagination, to people its vast platforms and terraces, and to fill the arena with combatants, as it may be with Christians, awaiting the opening of the doors and the crash of the lions. The number of spectators which the Coliseum is estimated to have contained is 80,000; which I should think a fair estimate. The length of the arena is 287 feet; its width 180 feet. The whole is an ellipse; the major axis 620 feet, the minor 513. At its dedication, by Titus, 5000 wild beasts were slain in the arena. It is built of a rough whitish, porous stone, called travertine. The first story is Doric, the second Ionic, the third Corinthian, and the fourth Corinthian pilastres: and above all there was an attic covered with temporary shelter. The whole height about 160 feet. On the very top lashes are growing, which gave a finish to this great ruin.

"But the gladiator's bloody Circus stands
A noble wreck, in ruinous perfection!"

Immediately by are the extensive walls and arches of the palace of the Cæsars. Part of the first story is standing—a very small part of the whole. The whole ruin is covered with bushes, and over some of the arches grapes, figs and pomegranates are cultivated. I cut one or two canes from among the "imperial hearths," as mementos of the sad desolation which now reigns over the habitation of those who once lived the proudest of the human race. The ruin is of travertine and brick: the marble has disappeared.

The Palace of the Cæsars, the Coliseum, the Temple of Venus and Rome, the Temple of Antoninus and Faustina, the Temple of Peace, of Jupiter Tonans, the Temple of Saturn, the Temple of Mars, that of Hadrian, the Temple of Castor and Pollux, the Arch of Constantine, the Arch of Titus, the Arch of Septimus Severus, the Column of Phocas, and the Capitol—the ruins of these great structures are fronting on both sides, and in the center of the same street, and near each other. Just imagine what a noble array of buildings that must have been; and then that in the midst of them, and formed by them, was the Roman Forum. What must have been the amazement of Barbarian princes, as they followed their conqueror's chariot, and passed through these palaces and temples, and the thousands who crowded their roofs and porticos to gaze at the triumphal procession!

I was walking upon the Appian Way—the ancient pavement. It leads into the city by the great buildings of the Forum, and passes through it. Here, thought I, was once a man greater than those who built these temples, who entered by this way into Rome—St. Paul. How hopeless seemed the mission of Christianity in the person of the Apostle, as he came into this Forum, a prisoner, and halted a moment amid these rich shrines of Roman idolatry!

At the end of the Forum, on the declivity of the Capitoline Hill, is the ancient State prison, called the Mumertine prisons. It is under ground, of massive architecture, and consists of two chambers excavated in the tufa rock, and built one over the other. Livy mentions the prisons of Servius Tullius—"Carcer ad terrorem increscentis audaciæ, medio urbe, imminens Foro, ædificat." So there can be no doubt this is the Tullian prison. Sallust says, in relating the fate of the accomplices of Catiline: "In the prison called the Tullian there is a place about ten feet deep, when you have descended a little to the left: it is surrounded on the sides by walls, and is enclosed above by a vaulted roof of stone; the appearance of it, from the filth, darkness and the smell, is terrific." [Murray's Hand Book of Rome.

The construction of this prison proves it to be of Etruscan origin, and of very great antiquity. You descend twenty-eight steps, and turn to the left into a door which leads into the upper chamber. The walls are of massive peperino, a brown, porous stone, of volcanic origin, without cement. The dungeon is 30 feet long, 22 wide and 14 high. In the pavement of it is a round hole, about two feet in diameter, through which prisoners were let down into the "lower deep." This latter dungeon is six feet and a half high at the highest point, and five feet and a half at the wall; a semicircle in form, 22 feet in diameter, and is made like the upper one, with the stones overhead fastened by iron clamps. I went down first into one and then into the other—horrible hole, to be shut in there! The floor was covered with mud, from the water which had filtered through it from the recent rains. These prisons were exclusively reserved for State offenders. I quote a striking passage in connection with them, from an appendix to Sallust's Jugurthine War, by William Rose:

"When the triumph ended, and the captives, as usual, were to be sent to execution, Jugurtha was led to the Tullian dungeon, the same in which the accomplices of Catiline were afterwards strangled. Such was the haste of the lictors to strip him, and to seize the splendid ornaments of his person, that his robe was rent to pieces, and the tips of his ears torn away, together with the rich pendants with which they were adorned. On being precipitated naked to the bottom of the vault, says Plutarch, he cried out with a frantic smile, 'Heavens! how very cold is this bath of yours!' which were the last words he was heard to utter. There, struggling for six days with cold and hunger, he met a fate which was worthy of his life and the multitude of his crimes."

The Romish tradition says this is the prison in which St. Peter was confined, by order of Nero. As the thirteenth verse of the fifth chapter of the First Epistle of Peter informs us that he was once "at Babylon," and as St. Paul was there a State prisoner, and both principal offenders, it is not impossible that one or both of them should have breathed its damp and felt about on its walls. What if the sublime Epistle to the Ephesians, which was "sent from Rome by Tychicus," were written, by a lamp, in this gloomy place! "I therefore the prisoner of the Lord," and "I Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles," writes this "ambassador in bonds" in this letter; in which, also, he writes to Jews and Gentiles, of "the middle wall of partition between us" as "broken down," making "both" apartments "one," and discovering to each the same "foundation of the Apostles and Prophets:" "all the Building fitly framed," yet, not like this unholy, but-a "holy temple;" or, looking at its narrow bounds, he writes of "breadth and length and depth and height" of love: of the love of Him who "ascended up on high and led captivity captive," but who "descended first into the lower parts of the earth." The thought that such an association might belong to the place, would not lessen the interest with which one could look at its dark stones, by the candle of the guide.

Out of the city, on the Appian Way, are the tombs of Scipio, of Cecilia Metella—

"But who was she, the lady of the dead, Tomb'd in a palace!"

and also the Circus of Romulus, or Maxentius, an oblong of 1580 feet by 260, inclosed by a high brick wall, which stands nearly entire. At one end were the Carceres, where the chariots stood. In the centre is the Spina, a long, low, straight brick wall, ending each way in a round tower, called the Meta. The chariots run around this Spina several times at a single heat. The seats of the spectators ranged against the outer walls, in terraces. I remembered the text, "let us run the race," and some of the sermons I had listened to upon Roman and Grecian games, and so took good notice of this Circus.

Not far from the city is the Fountain of Egeria, a lovely spot. I took a drink of the water, which doubtless flows as it used to in the days of Juvenal. I found it as he wished it might have been left—"Vigida si margine clauderet undas herba;" its marbles and mosaic pavement had all disappeared, and its edges were once more fringed with green moss, and a beautiful creeper, which was new to me. I took some of its leaves, and picked up out of the stream a few little pieces of mosaic glass, and bade good bye to Egeria forever.

We made an excursion to Tivoli and to Hadrian's Villa. There we saw ruins, of course, but nothing especially interesting in itself. The associations are pleasant to those who have had to murder Virgil and Horace, and on a Saturday, to exclaim, eloquently, "Hear me, for my cause, and be silent that you may hear." The olive, and the grape flourish here on the site of the Villas of Brutus and of Cassius and of Horace. The villa of Mecænas presents a ruin of one story of heavy arched ways and chambers, built on the perpendicular side of the Hill of Tivoli: and is now occupied by an iron rolling mill, the only sign of life I have as yet seen in or about Rome.

The Falls of Tivoli are cascades, with a fall of one hundred feet, and make the scenery of this charming region complete—below and all around is the soft grey foliage of the olive orchards, and the green vineyards: in the distance is the city of Rome, with the dome of St. Peter's high against the horizon; and before you is the Campagna, with the long ruins of the aqueducts stretching over it.

On the way to Tivoli you pass the Lake of Tartarus, a water which petrifies plants and wood in a very short time. It is of a milky color, and gives out a strong smell of sulphur. The petrifactions look like an assemblage of stalagmites. K.

Practice What You Know.

The Scriptures are designed, not to fill the mind with notions, but for practical purposes. The Word of God should regulate our thoughts and affections, our speech and behavior. Thus David says, "Then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect unto all thy commandments;" "I will keep thy statutes;" "a young man shall cleanse his way by taking heed thereto according to thy word;" "I will keep the commandments of my God." Christ said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." James says, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if a man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Practice makes sure our knowledge in a way that nothing else does. It is so in the exact sciences, in the useful and ornamental arts: above all it is so in religious truth. Practice is the very life of piety, the very end of divine teachings. [Rev. Dr. Plumer.

I Can Not.

"I can not get ready in time for public worship on the Sabbath morning; I am so tired on Saturday, so hard at work all the week." Could you not get ready if you had a pleasant journey to take?

"I can not keep awake in the house of God, I am so drowsy." Would you be drowsy sitting to hear a will read, if you were expecting a legacy was left you, though the reading of it lasted an hour?

"I can not find time for secret prayer or reading the Scriptures in private." Rather say, I am not willing. Were you to receive triple wages for one hour's early rising, would you say, I can not?

"I can not have family worship. I never was accustomed to it." Do you tell the beggar what he has to say? Can you calmly read in Jeremiah x. 25, "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name," and not feel; and, friend, will this excuse please you on a death bed?

"I can not make a profession of religion, for fear of dishonoring the cause of God." Does not the Lord promise to assist you, for none goes a warfare on his own charge? does not Paul say, "I can do all things, through Christ strengthening me!"

"I can not now give my heart to Jesus; by-and-by I hope to do so." Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. Will this excuse do at the judgment seat? [Tract Magazine.

The greatest blessing known to humanity, is the possession of true Christianity.

BE NOT CAST DOWN, MY SOUL!

Be not cast down, my soul! But feed
That beauty lingers still;
No unredeemed deformity
Ev'r sprung from God's great will!
Christ said, unto the godly one,
Years, long years before,
"If none condemn thee, nor do I
Do thou, and sin no more!"

Unfurl the standard of revolt
Against usurping sin,
And let unhallowed purposes
No longer reign within.
Press onward in the noble task
Of self-redemption—See!
One firm resolve, but firmly kept,
Brings immortality!

The shadow trembles on the wave,
To disunited break its glass;
And brighter shine reflected stars
When decay clouds its pass.
Then, oh! my soul! Be not cast down!
For beauty lingers still;
No unredeemed deformity
Ev'r spring from God's great will!

February 5, 1852.

Financial Plan of the Florida Conference.

ARTICLE I.

There shall be a joint Board of Finance, composed of two lay members from each district in the Conference, an equal number of ministers, and a chairman: all of whom shall be appointed by the Conference, and continue in office so long as their official conduct shall be satisfactory to this body.

ARTICLE II.

§ 1. This Board shall have charge of the support of the superannuated preachers, and of the widows and orphans of preachers, and of raising supplies to meet the deficiencies of preachers, so far as to determine the amount that ought to be raised for each object, and the sum to be raised by each district, and the manner in which the money raised shall be appropriated to the several objects.

§ 2. To make it act with efficiency, the Board shall have power to create any offices in its own way, or pass any by-laws for its government that may be deemed necessary.

§ 3. It shall be authorized also to recommend such measures as it may judge calculated to secure the collection of the amount deemed necessary to carry out the plans and accomplish the objects committed to its care, provided such measures shall in each case be submitted to the Conference for its approbation.

§ 4. The lay members of the Board shall be allowed to speak and vote as members of the Conference, on all financial questions connected with the business and operations of the Board.

ARTICLE III.

§ 1. This Board shall meet annually, at the time and place of the Annual Conference, and hold its sessions during the recesses of that body. A majority of the Board shall constitute a quorum, provided that should a quorum not be present, the Conference shall supply the vacancy, by the appointment of a member or members pro tem.

§ 2. Before the Board, at these meetings, shall be laid the number, condition and claims of the superannuated preachers, the widows and orphans of preachers, and also the deficiencies of preachers.

§ 3. The Board shall determine the amount necessary to be raised for these objects, and apportion the amount among the several districts of the Conference, according to their ability and liberality.

ARTICLE IV.

The Board shall make a full report of its doings to the Conference during its sessions. This report shall embrace the amount raised and the disposition made of it; and should there be a deficiency, they shall report the district, circuit, station or mission, with the amount of deficiency. Should any member of the Conference feel aggrieved at any action of the Board, he shall have the privilege of laying the ground of his complaint before the Conference, which shall have power to recommend a different action, should it see fit.

ARTICLE V.

It shall be the duty of the Presiding Elder, together with the lay members from each district, to apportion the amount to be raised by the district among the several circuits, stations and missions of the district.

ARTICLE VI.

It shall be the duty of each Presiding Elder to inform the Stewards of each circuit, station and mission in his district, as soon after Conference as practicable, of the amount thus apportioned to them; and he, together with the Stewards, shall apportion said amount among the several leaders and classes; and it shall be the duty of the preachers in charge, in connection with the leaders, to use their best endeavors to secure the collection of the amount so apportioned; and the Presiding Elder shall inquire, at each succeeding quarterly meeting, how this collection progresses, and see that proper means and efforts for its completion are used.

ARTICLE VII.

The moneys so collected shall be paid over to the Treasurer of the Joint Board, at the Annual Conference, if not done sooner, by whom the amount shall be distributed among the several classes of claimants hereinbefore provided for, according to their claims, subject to the approval of the Conference.

E. L. T. Blake, Ch'n.

Report on the Bible Cause of the Florida Conference.

While we view with lively interest the various means that are now being used for advancing the moral and intellectual improvement of the world, we believe there is none other so well adapted to secure the best interests of mankind, both for time and eternity, as the dissemination of the Bible; therefore

Resolved, That we have entire confidence in the plan and operations of the American Bible Society, and pledge ourselves to a zealous co-operation with its agent in forming auxiliary societies, collecting funds, and distributing Bibles in our bounds.

Resolved, That we most respectfully request the President of our Conference, at its present session, to appoint Rev. E. L. T. Blake agent for the American Bible Society.

Resolved, That we earnestly solicit Brother Blake, at such time during the session of our Conference as may best suit his convenience, to present the claims of the American Bible Society to the congregation in the Methodist Church, in this place.

H. H. Lukey,
R. McK. Typings.

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 29, 1852.

Anecdotes of the Battle of Plattsburg.

BY WILLIAM WALCOTT.

The battle of Plattsburg was one of those occasions when people arise in their might, and prove, by a most triumphant success, that good hearts, and a good cause, are unconquerable. The plan of landing three well-appointed armies in three different parts of our country, and by a series of victories supposed certain, from the character of the troops, they being veterans of many battles, to either entirely conquer or dismember the Union, was a scheme as brilliant as was the promptness with which it was put into execution. The result of these three expeditions is a matter of history with which every schoolboy is now acquainted, rendering it useless to enter into a detailed description. But there are incidents in every battle, too insignificant for history, which, nevertheless, contain more of interest, more romance, when one or two individuals alone are concerned, and which often contain a more peculiar charm, than the most splendid accounts of the greatest battles. Many of these occurred at Plattsburg, well worth relating.

It is told of a young officer, Lieutenant A. C. Fowler, that he could fire a cannon with as much precision as an old hunter his rifle. He was stationed with his gun in a small sand-work, still remaining at a point nearest the lake, and commanding the mouth of the Saranac River, and that part of the town of Plattsburg lying on its north side. An ammunition wagon belonging to the British was pointed to him, passing to some particular point. He immediately aimed his piece, with the remark, "that he would cut the fore-wheels from under it," which he did—the horses running off with the tongue, while the body and the hind wheels remained—one end cocked up in the air—in the road, very much to the amusement of all who witnessed it. At another time, an officer of some standing was seen leading a detachment of the enemy forward, when Lieut. Fowler said, pointing his gun, "that he would not hurt him; but merely give him a tumble." In a moment more, as the gun recoiled with the fire, the horse was killed under this officer, and he sprawling on the ground.

The American army was divided into two divisions—one occupying the fortifications on the banks of the Saranac, and commanding a bridge crossing that river and the town of Plattsburg; the other posted several miles up the river, to prevent and dispute the advance of a division of the enemy, who had taken a circuitous route, in order to cross the river, and attack the republican forces in flank, simultaneously with the advance on the front, and the attack on our fleet lying in the bay; and, while the action was raging all along the line, and on the bay, communication was kept up between the two divisions by officers of the staff, who delivered their messages verbally, as nothing could be entrusted to paper, and carried by the subordinates, for fear of falling into the hands of the enemy—who had crossed the river in a large body—and thereby reveal the plan of our operations.

At length it was shouted from point to point along the line, that McDonough was victorious on the lake, which, so soon as the British learned, caused them to retreat. This made a change in the disposition of the two armies; and, just at this time, Major Skinner was dispatched with a message, and, not being aware of the change, was surprised, and taken prisoner. Before leaving home, he had put two hundred dollars in gold in his pocket, saying to his wife, that, should he be taken prisoner, American money would not pass in Canada. This they robbed him of; and, when he protested against such conduct, he was felled to the earth, and otherwise maltreated. They urged him towards the British lines, and when crossing the river, one soldier being each side of him, he made great exertions to escape; but being weak from the bad treatment he had been subjected to, his exertions were of little avail. Just at this time a company of the Republican Volunteers, from the town of Keeseville, arrived on the bank of the river, and saw the two soldiers, as they supposed, assisting some wounded officer to escape, and were upon the point of proceeding, when Major Skinner turned his head, and was immediately recognized. The captain and one of the corporals immediately levelled one of their rifles, fired, and the two soldiers fell dead in the water, carrying Major Skinner with them. The current bore them some distance down the stream; but the Major succeeded at last in extricating himself from the gripe of the dead men, and reached the shore in safety. The distance fired was very great, and, considering that all three were close together, and walking with the irregular motion consequent in treading on round slippery stones, was very extraordinary.

The night preceding the battle was stormy and dark. The enemy, taking advantage of the weather, advanced in a body, and built a battery on a prominent point near the bank of the Saranac, and within close musket shot of all the American works; so near, indeed, was it, that their picks could be distinctly heard, as they labored industriously through the night and storm. A young officer, named McGlassen, proceeded to the head-quarters of Gen. McComb, and stated the case to him, asking the privilege of taking the work. The General replied, that it was a dangerous undertaking, and that the men could not be spared, as all would be wanted on the next day. Mr. McGlassen acknowledged all to be true that the General had stated, but represented the greater danger of the enemy occupying such a point, and within musket shot of the General's own quarters. Gen. McComb then asked how many men he wanted, and he replied that he would go with what he could get, but that he would like one hundred and fifty. Gen McComb said that one hundred and fifty could not be spared, but that he might have sixty; and McGlassen said he would take the battery with that number. Gen. McComb then wrote him an order for the sixty men. McGlassen went to his post, showed the order to the commander, and called for volunteers.—Hundreds sprang forward eager to go, but he would take no more than the sixty, and from the whole selected that number. He ordered them, every man, to take the flint from his musket, and fix the bayonet; then they advanced, crossed the river noiselessly, and proceeded quietly through the small wood towards the work. At a certain distance he ordered a halt, and proceeded cautiously alone to secure the sentinel. After succeeding in which, he returned, divided his little party into two divisions, one of which he ordered to take a circuitous route, so as to attack on the opposite side. The other he led himself; and, calling out in a thundering voice to "charge on the front and the rear," they rushed, with all the noise possible for the few number to make, upon the enemy. They were altogether taken by surprise, and, supposing themselves surrounded by overwhelming numbers, took to their heels, and fled like sheep. In vain their officers tried to rally them—panic-stricken, there was no stopping them; and even the officers themselves were borne along with the frightened mass. Without continuing the pursuit Mr. McGlassen spiked the cannon, and returned to the camp, having accomplished his object thoroughly, and without losing one man.

McDonough had formed his line of battle—his vessels lying at anchor across Plattsburg Bay, the head of the line near the main land that runs out and forms Cumberland Head; the space intervening being commanded by a battery of one gun on the shore, and reaching to a bar near Crab Island. Small vessels were out watching the British fleet, and word constantly passed to McDonough's vessel of their progress. At length the small boats came in, and the little American fleet, silent as death, awaited their approach. The forward vessel rounded Cumberland Head, and on seeing our vessel at anchor, gave three loud cheers. These were answered by the other vessels, and could be heard by the firm band of Americans, as they were caught up, vessel after vessel, until they died away over the distant lake. When at last the whole British fleet hove in view, and not one vessel remained concealed by the Head, then there went up from McDonough's fleet a cheer, loud as if uttered by ten thousand throats, followed by another, and another, and by three times three, carrying with confident assurance that they were ready and willing to meet their bullying foe. The battle of Plattsburg Bay was one of the most destructive actions ever fought, and maintained with desperate perseverance on both sides. Almost every vessel was cut to pieces, and nearly one-third of the whole number engaged were either killed or wounded.

In one part of the Plattsburg cemetery, almost all of the officers of both armies, who fell in battle, are buried together; foe no longer, but resting peacefully side by side in their eternal sleep. Conspicuously among them stands a large tablet, bearing the inscription: "Sacred to the memory of George Downie, Post-Captain in the Royal British Navy," erected by his sister. He was commander of the British fleet, and fell on board the Confiance, in the battle on Plattsburg Bay. Then follow the names, Lieut. William Gun, R. N.; Lieut. William Paul, R. N., Capt. Alexander Anderson, British Marines; Capt. John Fuchas, 65th Regiment, British Army; Charles Jackson, Boatswain, British Navy; Col. Wellington, 3d Regiment, Buffs, British Army; Lieut. John Chapman, 3d Regiment, Buffs, British Army.

Then the American dead, Midshipman John M. Baldwin, U. S. N.; Joseph Barrow, pilot, ship Saratoga; Smiling-master Rogers Carter, U. S. N.; Lieut. John Stansting, U. S. N.; Lieut. Peter Gamble, U. S. N.; Lieut. George W. Burk, U. S. A., 5th Regiment.

Here they lie; those from their homes across the wide Atlantic, who came to force upon us a wrong, and those who sprung to their arms to assert their country's rights, and to maintain the great principle—the "freedom of the seas." Here they lie after the battle; they, the victims to a misunderstanding—a difficulty between two nations. They are dead; but the great contention is settled, and the flag of the United States floats, respected and feared, from thousands of mast-heads in every sea. God bless the people!

Origin of the English Version of the Bible.

We take the following interesting account of the origin of our English version of the Bible from the Report of the Committee on Versions, which was recently read and adopted by the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society:

"Besides the translation of Wickliffe, completed about A. D. 1380, but existing until quite recently only in manuscript, six Protestant English versions had been printed and circulated, anterior to the one now in use.

"The earliest published English Bible was that of Tyndal. The New Testament was printed in Holland, in 1526, and several times afterwards; the Pentateuch at Hamburg, in 1530. This version was followed in 1535 by Coverdale's translation of the whole Bible; which was twice republished, in 1550 and 1553. Matthew's Bible, so called, was printed in 1537, in Hamburg, or some other part of Germany. The name Thomas Matthew is understood to be fictitious; and the work seems to have been mainly made up from the translations of Tyndal and Coverdale. According to some, the real editor was the martyr John Rogers.

"In 1539 was published Cranmer's, or the Great Bible, in folio, printed at London by Grafton and Whitchurch, king's printers; and hence sometimes known also as Whitchurch's Bible. This was a revision of Matthew's version; and measures were taken to have it kept in the churches and publicly read. Other editions appeared in 1540.

"The Geneva Bible, so called, was translated at Geneva by English scholars, who had taken refuge there during the reign of Queen Mary. The New Testament was printed at Geneva in 1557; and the whole Bible in 1560. This version was reprinted at London in 1572, and often afterwards.

"In 1268 appeared the Bishops' Bible, so called, in folio. It was a revision of Cranmer's, or the Great Bible, by archbishop Parker and other bishops, and took the place of Cranmer's Bible as the authorized English version.

"At the accession of King James I., in 1603, the two versions last named, the Bishops' Bible and the Geneva Bible, were those mainly in use in England; the former authorized to be publicly read in the churches, and the latter mostly used in private families.

"The immediate occasion of the present translation was the celebrated Hampton Court Conference, held before the king, Jan. 12, 1604. On the second day, Dr. Reynolds, the leader of the Puritans, proposed to the king that there should be a new translation of the Bible, because of the imperfections of the former versions. The king entertained the proposal, with the understanding that the new version should 'last of all be ratified by his royal authority, and so the whole Church be bound to this translation, and not to make any other.' Accordingly, before the middle of the same year, 1604, the king commissioned a large number of scholars, of both the universities and elsewhere, to meet and consult together, in order to make a new and more correct translation of the Bible. These were divided into six classes, comprising forty-seven persons, whose names are given, who were to meet at Westminster, Cambridge and Oxford, two classes in each place. The original Scriptures, including the Apocrypha, were in like manner divided into six portions; one of which was assigned to each class for translation. Certain rules, prescribed by the king, were transmitted to the translators by the bishop of London, at midsummer, 1604. Among these, the following serve to mark definitely the character of the translation, and the manner of proceeding:

"1. The ordinary Bible read in the church, commonly called 'The Bishops' Bible,' to be followed, and as little altered as the original will permit.

"14. These translations to be used when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible, viz. Tyndal's, Coverdale's, Whitchurch's [i. e. Cranmer's] Geneva.

"6. No marginal notes at all to be affixed, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek words, which cannot, without some circumlocution, so fitly and briefly be expressed in the text.

"7. Such quotations of places to be marginally set down, as shall serve for the fit reference of one Scripture to another.

"8. Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters, and having translated or amended them severally by himself where he thinks good, all to meet together, to confer what they have done, and agree for their part what shall stand.

"9. As any one company has dispatched any one book in this manner, they shall send it to the rest, to be considered of seriously and judiciously.'

"Besides these forty-seven translators, it appears that 'three or four of the most eminent and grave divines of each university' were appointed to be overseers of the translations; and these with the others probably made up the number of fifty-four mentioned in the king's letter of July 22, 1604.

"After the work was actually commenced, more than three years, or as the original preface has it, 'twice seven times' seventy-two days and more,' were spent by the several companies in completing the first draught of the new version. When thus far finished, three copies of the whole Bible were sent to London; one from Cambridge, one from Oxford, and one from Westminster. From the companies in these several places, two persons were now selected from each place, six in all, who met in London to review the whole work, and prepare one copy from the three, to be committed to the press. Their labors extended through three quarters of a year. Last of all, Bilson, bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Myles Smith, afterwards bishop of Gloucester, again reviewed the whole work, and prefixed arguments to the several books, by which 'arguments' are probably intended the contents of the chapters, etc. Dr. Smith also wrote the preface. The translation thus laboriously and faithfully prepared, was first printed and published in A. D. 1611, in folio, and in the old black letter.

"In the preface, the translators say: 'We never thought from the beginning, that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one; but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against, that hath been our endeavor, that our mark.' This is doubtless a true and appropriate statement of the object and motives which these eminent persons had before their minds in executing the great work thus solemnly committed to their charge. They claimed no infallibility for themselves, nor for their labors. The work assigned them was strictly a revision of the Bishops' Bible, which itself had grown up out of all the preceding versions. But they every where took the original Scriptures as their basis, diligently comparing likewise all the former translations. In this way they certainly succeeded in making 'one principal good translation, not justly to be excepted against.' Yet notwithstanding all their care and diligence, their own first edition exhibits some grave errors of the press, most of which were speedily corrected in subsequent editions.

"Such was the origin of this venerable and truly national work; which immediately became the standard English Bible, and superseded all the other versions. Confined at first to the limited territory of the British Islands, and intended only for a population of a few millions, it had the effect at once to develop and fix the structure and character of the English language; and with that language it has since been borne abroad even to the ends of the earth. And now, during the lapse of almost two and a half centuries, it has gladdened the hearts, and still gladdens the hearts, of millions upon millions, not only in Great Britain, but throughout North America and India, in portions of Africa, and in Australia. At the present day, the English is probably the vernacular tongue of more millions than any other one language under heaven; and the English Bible has brought and still brings home the knowledge of God's revealed truth to myriads more of minds than ever received it through the original tongues.

"The translators little foresaw the vast results and immeasurable influence of what they had thus done, both for time and for eternity. Venerated men! their very names are now hardly known to more than a few persons; yet, in the providence of God, the fruit of their labors have spread to far-distant lands, have laid broad and deep the foundations of mighty empires; have afforded to a language strength to endure universally, wide as

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, February 14.

nist the temptations of prosperity; and only the revelations of the judgment day can disclose how many millions and millions, thro' the instrumentality of their labors, have been made wise unto salvation.

"The English Bible, as left by the translators, has come down to us unaltered in respect to its text; except in the changes of orthography which the whole English language has undergone, to which the version has naturally and properly been conformed; and excepting, also, the slight variations and discrepancies which in so long an interval must necessarily arise, by reason of human imperfection, in the preparation and printing of so many millions of copies.

"The exposure to variations from this latter source is naturally greater, wherever the printing of the Bible is at the option of every one who chooses to undertake it, without restriction and without supervision, as in this country since the revolution. In Great Britain, where the printing has been done only under royal authority, by the universities of Cambridge and Oxford, and the king's printers in London and Edinburgh, the like exposure does not exist in the same degree, although even there slight variations are continually manifesting themselves between the copies bearing these different imprints. This will appear more fully in the sequel.

"In respect to the accessories of the text, comprehending the contents of the chapters, the running heads of the columns, the marginal readings and references, and the chronology, the Bibles of the present day are much less conformed to the original edition. The translators, as we have seen, were to append 'no marginal notes at all, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek words;' and also 'fit references of one Scripture to another.' To this requirement the early editions were entirely conformed; and the marginal references were very few. In the lapse of time, however, extensive changes and additions have been made in most of the above particulars. The contents of the chapters only have been preserved in the editions of larger size, without very great variation; while in copies of a smaller form these likewise have been frequently and variously altered and abbreviated."

THE PASSIONS OF ANIMALS.—An interesting book on the passions of animals shows us that there is more scope in the life and sensations of birds and beasts than is commonly supposed, and that all the fun in this world is not human.

"Small birds chase each other about in play, but perhaps the conduct of the crane and the trumpeter is the most extraordinary. The latter stands on one leg, hops about in the most eccentric manner, and throws somersets. The Americans call it the mad bird, on account of these singularities. The crane expands its wings, runs round in circles, leaps, and, throwing little stones and pieces of wood in the air, endeavors to catch them again, and pretends to avoid them, as if afraid. Water-birds, such as ducks and geese, dive after each other, and clear the surface of the water with outstretched beak and flapping wings, throwing an abundant spray around. Deer often engage in a sham battle, or a trial of strength, by twisting their horns together, and pushing for the mastery. All animals that pretend violence in their play, stop short of exercising it; the dog takes the greatest precaution not to injure by his bite; and the ourang outang, in wrestling with his keeper, attempts to throw him, and makes feint of biting him. Some animals carry out in their play the semblance of catching their prey; young cats, for instance, leap after every small and moving object, even to the leaves strewed by the autumn wind; they crouch and steal forward, ready for the spring, the body quivering, and the tail vibrating with emotion, they bound on the moving leaf, and again spring forward at another. Keogger saw young jaguars and cougars playing with round substances like kittens. Young lambs collect together on the little hillocks and eminences in their pastures, racing and sporting with each other in the most interesting manner. Birds of the pie kind are the analogues of monkeys, full of mischief, play and mimicry. There is a story told of a tame magpie, which was seen busily employed in a garden, gathering pebbles, and with much solemnity and a studied air, dropped them in a hole about eighteen inches deep, made to receive a post. After dropping each stone, it cried 'currack!' triumphantly, and set off for another. On examining the spot, a poor toad was found in this hole, which the magpie was stoning for his amusement."

ENGLISH LUXURIOUSNESS.—Few of us have any definite idea of the amount of wealth and splendor that surrounds many of the English nobles in their princely residences. An intelligent American writing from England, describes some of these things.

The Earl of Spencer's homestead, about sixty miles from London, comprises ten thousand acres, tastefully divided into parks, meadows, pastures, woods and gardens. His library, called the finest private library in the world, contains fifty thousand volumes. Extensive and elegant stables, green houses and conservatories, game keepers' house, dog kennels, porter's lodge, and farm houses without number, go to complete the establishment. Hundreds of sheep and cattle graze in the parks about the house.

The Duke of Richmond's home farm, at Goodwood, fifty miles from London, consists of twenty-three thousand acres, or over thirty-five square miles. And this is in crowded England, which has a population of 16,000,000, and an area of only 50,000 square miles, just 32,000,000 acres, giving, were the land divided, but two acres to each inhabitant. The residence of the Duke is a complete palace. One extensive hall is covered with yellow silk and pictures in the richest and most costly tapestry. The dishes and plates upon the tables are all of porcelain, silver and gold. Twenty-five race horses stand in the stable, each being assigned to the care of a special groom. A grotto near the house, the ladies spent six years in adorning. An aviary is supplied with almost every variety of rare and elegant birds. Large herds of cattle, sheep and deer, are spread over the immense lawns.

The Duke of Devonshire's place at Chatsworth, is said to excel in magnificence, any other in the kingdom. The income of the Duke is one million of dollars a year, and he is said to spend it all. In the grounds about his house are kept four hundred head of cattle, and fourteen hundred deer. The kitchen garden contains twelve acres, and is filled with almost every species of fruit and vegetable. A vast nursery connected with the establishment, is designed to contain a sample of every tree that grows. There is also a glass conservatory 387 feet in length, 112 in breadth, 67 in height, covered by 76,000 square feet of glass and warmed by seven miles of pipe conveying hot water. One plant was obtained from India by a special messenger, and is valued at $10,000. One of the fountains near the house plays 276 feet high, said to be the highest jet in the world. Chatsworth contains 3500 acres, but the Duke owns 96,000 acres in the county of Derbyshire. Within, the entrie is a vast scene of paintings, sculpture, mosaic work, carved wainscoting, and all the elegances and luxuries within the reach of almost boundless wealth and highly refined taste.

ENGLAND AND THE IONIAN ISLANDS.—Sir H. Ward, the Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, has become a second Haynau. Mr. Hume, M. P., in a letter to the Daily News, states that a system of terror exists in the Ionian Islands, and that the acts of Sir H. Ward, in suppressing the press, in banishing editors without trial, and in various arbitrary acts against the Ionian people, approximate as nearly to those acts committed in Hungary and in France, both in atrocity and in violation of constitutional rights, as to render his conduct as representative of her Majesty, derogatory, and disgraceful to the character of England." Shame upon the English Government. This man, when in England, was an exile. Why, and the proprietor of a London radical paper of violent principles.

Good Feelings a Part of Good Religion.

Last week, for a sufficient purpose, the remarks of Professor Park, in a sermon on the death of the late Moses Stuart, were given in our columns, in which the dying Christian and theologian is represented as saying—"I have long since learned, that feelings in religious experience are deceptive. I look mainly to my life for my evidence."

Not without pain and surprise did we quote this testimony from such a source, by which feelings, even the best, were cashiered in the matter of religion. The Presbyterian thus discourses upon it:

"We hope that this report is not verbally correct. It presents religion in too dry a light. A man may be deceived as to his principles, his feelings, and the motives of his conduct; but that is surely no reason why the evidence of grace, arising either from principles, feelings or conduct, should be discarded. With our views of religion, we should be exceedingly sorry that it should become a prevalent notion, that the affections have not a large share in religious experience. We of course have no opinion of the religion of one who will boast of his dry orthodoxy, or of his elevated feelings, when these are not accompanied by a consistent and holy life. On the contrary, we associate in our view of true religion a sound and discriminating faith, a pure warmth of feeling, and a holy conduct. To separate them mars the beautiful symmetry of that blessed gift of God, true piety. Faith, love and practice are a blessed trinity. I believe in God, I love God, and I obey God—this is what every Christian should be able to say, and from all united he should derive his evidence of a healthful state of piety. If he relies on one to the disparagement of the others, he destructs his own comfort and dishonors God. We live in an age when dry speculation is too apt to be predominant. We want more of the well-regulated fervors of piety. We want more feeling—more sensible and delightful converse with God—more intimate sympathy with our fellow men. Religion may have an outward form, but it will have no animating soul, without feeling. Christians should cultivate the gracious affections. Let the tree be well rooted; let it stretch forth its limbs in beautiful symmetry; but let it have also its fragrant blossoms and its luscious fruits."

American Bible Society.

Owing to the postal restrictions upon this Society's periodical circulation, (alluded to in the report of Committee on Bible of the Alabama Conference) and being persuaded of the importance of keeping all Christians informed of what this noble institution is doing, we shall hereafter make extracts from the monthly record of its proceedings. The January issue is before us. From it we learn that the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Society's House, New York, on Thursday, January 1. Being New Year's day, the meeting was at 9 A. M., instead of 4½ P. M., the usual hour. The Hon. Luther Bradish presided.

Six new societies were recognized, two of which are in Missouri, two in Illinois, one in Iowa, and one among the Welsh in Cincinnati.

Communications were laid before the Board by the Secretaries.

One from Rev. Dr. Breckenridge, Superintendent of Public Instruction in Kentucky, saying that at a Convention of the friends of general education, at which Judge Underwood, Senator in Congress from Kentucky, presided, the following resolution passed:

"That the Bible ought to be introduced and used in all the schools."

A letter was presented from Rev. John G. Nicholson, of Santa Fe, stating that the books sent to his care had been mostly distributed, and asking a fresh supply.

A communication, dated Nov. 25, was read from La Societe Biblique Francaise et Etrangere, gratefully acknowledging the receipt of appropriations from this Board, giving an encouraging view of the facilities for the circulation of the Bible in France, and asking the continued sympathy and aid of the friends of the cause in this country.

Grants were made of Scriptures in Spanish for Santa Fe, in Portuguese and French for Brazil, in Danish, German and English for the West Indies, with several others, including portions of the Bible in raised letters for the blind.

The receipts of the last month were $24,340,95; the number of Bibles and Testaments issued 36,565.

HOW IT IS.—One or two exchanges have inquired, on reading the statistics of the Louisiana Conference, with commendable anxiety for the prosperity of missions to the colored people, how is it that the number of blacks reported in membership is less than last year, by a few hundreds. The Secretary of the Conference Missionary Society informs us that the apparent falling off arises from destitution of pastors. Missions, amounting to half a thousand members in aggregate, or more, were left unsupplied at the Conference before the last, and were not reported at the last. A sad state of things truly, but in no wise reflecting upon the zeal and effectiveness of those occupying the ground.

CORRESPONDENTS.—Brethren acting as our agents, in sending the names of subscribers, will please always state whether they are new or old subscribers and for what volume they pay.

California Mission.

ABERDEEN, Miss., Feb. 1, 1852.

REV. H. N. McTYEIRE—DEAR BROTHER—Since my return home I have received a letter from Dr. Boring, requesting me to send him a Missionary to the Germans and another to the French in California. Where can I find them? Or where find one who can preach in both languages? I should like to comply with his wishes, and send him the "twenty" he calls for by the 15th April. Can you help me? I have only thirteen as yet, unless Florida sends one, which I hope it will do, and am at a loss for the rest. These thirteen, with the three previously there, will make sixteen members of the Pacific Conference to be held at San Francisco on the 15th April. I wish I could send two Missionaries to preach to the foreigners, and five more to make out the complement. Several have offered to go, but their families are either too large, or they are too far advanced in life, or "they cannot be spared at home." The Tennessee, Memphis, and Missouri Conferences ought to supply one each, and any other Conference which has the right men and can spare them, ought to give me the rest.

But the special object of this note is to inquire about the German and French Missionaries, and I have thought your position affords a good opportunity of finding them.

Yours truly, R. PAINE.

☞ Will the Church papers copy.

Minutes of the Alabama Conference.

The committee to whom the publication of the minutes was committed, have discharged it with creditable dispatch. The pamphlet, neat and substantial, and well laid out, fills up to twenty pages, and besides the minutes, includes the constitutions and officers of the several benevolent Societies connected with the Conference. It ought, and doubtless will soon be, in the hands of the Church members and friends—old and young, preachers and people. The knowledge of these details will quicken the interest of all concerned. These minutes, in the hands of all, will not only disseminate correct information, but give unanimity to sentiment and action throughout the Conference bounds. This plan will soon prevail throughout all the Conferences. The Missionary Treasurer's report is fully detailed, and is a fair receipt and acknowledgment to every one who has contributed for the cause.

We copy the act of incorporation of the Conference, passed January 12, 1852:

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Alabama in General Assembly convened, That the Itinerant Preachers of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and their successors, be, and the same are hereby declared a body corporate, by the name and style of the Annual Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and as such may sue and be sued, and have perpetual succession.

"Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That at each Annual Conference of the Preachers of said Church, there shall be elected for the government of said corporation, by the members thereof, three Trustees, a Treasurer and Secretary, who may, under the direction of said Conference, make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the laws of this State, as they think necessary.

"Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That the said corporation may receive and hold real and personal property, to the value of fifty thousand dollars: to be employed under the direction of the said Trustees, for the advancement of the interest of religion and education, and for charitable purposes.

"Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That the said Trustees shall cause a record to be made, in a book kept for that purpose, of all the funds of the corporation, and the disposition made thereof, which shall be accessible at all times to any Itinerant Preacher of the Alabama Conference.

"Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That no gift, devise or bequest made to the said corporation, shall fail because of any mistake in the name or description thereof, if the intention of the donor, grantor or devisor, can be ascertained by intrinsic proof."

MAPS.—Mr. Sanford has shown us a large and brilliantly colored series of maps, by Rev. O. B. Hidwell, of New York, showing generally the main geographical outlines of the world, and specially by name the location and extent of foreign missionary stations. At a time such as this, when the Church is much alive on Foreign Missions, they must meet with a heavy demand. The interest felt in this subject always largely depends upon a knowledge of details. These maps should be hung around the walls of every Sabbath School room in the land."

REV. A. M. BOX.—Brother Box requests his friends in corresponding with him, to direct letters, etc., to Bastrop, Texas—his work for the present year lying in the Austin and Bastrop Circuit. The Alabama Conference parts with, and the Texas receives in him, a devoted and efficient minister of the Gospel. Be it remembered that it was under this Brother's charge that the DeKalb Circuit moved, last year, from the figure of $50 to $1475—missionary collection. A speaking fact.

INTERESTING MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.—At the monthly meeting of the Board of Missions held in New York on the 2d inst address was delivered by the Rev Mr Bushnell, who recently arrived from the mouth of Gaboon river Western coast of Africa. His statements relative to the progress of the missions on the coast, was regarded as highly encouraging. Mr B says that the slave trade, which for the last three centuries has proved so desolating, is well nigh extinguished, and will soon be suppressed along the entire extent of the coast. Large numbers of the Iaangwe tribe are emigrating from the interior and settling on the upper tributaries of the Gaboon. This tribe is supposed to occupy a large part of Central Ethiopia, and it is anticipated that much valuable information will be obtained from them.

Mr. Goodell, lately returned from Constantinople where he has been laboring many years, gave an account of the remarkable religious movement now in progress in the Turkish Empire. He had received a letter from Mr Van Lennep, of Constantinople, which city now contains about fifteen hundred Armenians speaking of a most wonderful change going on there. A celebrated preacher who is a good friend of the missionaries has been directed by the Patriarch to instruct the young men in Constantinople expecting to become priests. He succeeded in securing the audience of sixty or seventy persons daily, of whom seven or eight were candidates for the priesthood. To these he taught the Gospel, directing such as desired further information to the Missionaries.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

Conference convened Wednesday, 28th ult., at 9 o'clock A. M., in the Senate chamber of the Capitol. Bishop Andrew not having arrived, the Conference elected William W. Grillin, P. E. of the Newnansville District, President pro tem., and P. P. Smith Secretary.

The preachers were generally present, and in good health, but a death having occurred among them during the year past. How pleasant, after a year of toil and hardships, to meet each other in health, as brethren beloved, to speak freely and fully of the scenes of the past; and in contemplating these things, one is reminded of that Heaven where all the good shall meet, and go no more out forever.

Dr. Wightman, editor of the S. C. Advocate, and Brother Asa, of the Philadelphia Conference, were introduced to the Conference.

After appointing the usual business committees, and receiving sundry communications in regard to books and periodicals, the Conference took up the first regular question. Who are admitted on trial? when Samuel A. McCook, Peter B. Bedford and William K. Turner were admitted. John W. Mills was readmitted.

The second question was taken up. Who remain on trial? William Edwards continued. David R. Kellogg discontinued.

During the morning, a communication from the Newnansville District, to locate a High School at Micanopy, East Florida, was presented. This is praiseworthy. Communication referred to Committee on Education.

SECOND DAY.

Conference met—Brother Grillin in the Chair. No certain news of the Bishop. R. H. Luckey, Treasurer of "Fund of Special Relief," reported $138 from that fund to be distributed to necessitous cases.

The Committee on the Bible Cause made their report, and the Rev. E. L. T. Blake, agent for the Bible Cause in Florida Conference, addressed the Conference on this great subject.

The Conference Stewards made their call, and found the deficiency to be large, to meet which, from all sources, they had only half enough. This is lamentable, and we hope soon to apply a remedy for this state of things.

Took up fourth question. Who are the Deacons? O. H. Standly, J. H. McGardner, J. M. Hendry and J. M. Valentine. Brother Valentine is permitted to rest on account of feeble health.

Took up fifth question. Who are elected to Elder's orders? Wm. M. Kennedy, R. S. Tucker, J. P. Richardson, R. McK. Tydings.

P. P. Smith, Treasurer of "Preachers' Aid Society," reported from this fund, for the benefit of the Conference, $104.

THIRD DAY.

Conference met as per adjournment. P. P. Smith, Treasurer of Florida Conference, reported the proceeds of the funds, $31 69, which has been applied to the education of poor children.

The Committee on Finance made their report, a copy of which is hereby forwarded.

The certificate of the Rev. Thomas Gardner, an Elder in the Methodist Protestant Church, of Florida Conference, was received, and in accordance with the Discipline, he was received as a member of this Conference.

Dr. Wightman presented the report of the Publishing Committee of the S. C. Advocate, showing it to be in a healthy and prosperous condition.

William C. Braddy and Aaron W. Harris were received into full connection, and elected to Deacon's orders.

John W. Carlton, at his own request, was continued on trial, and permitted to rest, on account of ill health.

SATURDAY.

Conference met according to adjournment. Bishop Andrew having arrived took the Chair, and stated to the Conference that his detention had been caused by personal affliction: but he had so far improved as to be with us, and do the work assigned him.

A communication from Dr. Summers, editor of the S. S. Visitor, was read and referred to the Committee on Sunday Schools.

G. W. Fagg was readmitted as a member of this Conference.

On a proposition made by Brother Luckey, $170 was subscribed by the preachers in the Conference Room, to pay the board and tuition of Sister Wooddy's daughter, at school this year.

Isham Turner, G. C. S. Johnson, G. Sweet, George M. McDonald, C. Summerset and E. J. Knight, local preachers, were elected to deacon's orders.

The Board of Trustees of Fletcher Institute made their annual report, showing this young Institution to be in a prosperous condition, and requested the Bishop to reappoint Rev. R. H. Luckey as Principal of Female Department. During the last year the Institution had one hundred and sixty-one students.

The Stewards made their report, showing the lamentable fact that they were able only to pay the claimants on the Conference fund 43 60-100 on the dollar. We hope entirely to remedy this state of things the next year, by our new plan of finance.

The remainder of the session was taken up in the examination of elders.

7 O'CLOCK P. M.

The Missionary Society of the Florida Annual Conference held its seventh anniversary in the M. E. Church. The Treasurer's report showed a handsome increase in collections from circuits and stations over last year.

The report of the Board of Managers was read by S. Woodberry, and showed the missions in our Conference bounds to be in a healthy and prosperous condition.

Rev. T. N. Gardner advocated the adoption of the report, in a short and forcible speech. He was followed by Rev. E. G. Asa, of the Philadelphia Conference, in a few spirited and pithy remarks, much to the point: and last, though not least, Dr. Wightman, being called for, arose in his usual happy style, and made a few remarks that stirred the whole congregation. All the speakers urged the importance of raising funds for the California mission; and it was announced that the Bishop had selected a man to send to California, from our Conference upon the strength of which the Treasurer soon found upon his table the handsome sum of $555. This was doing well for Tallahassee, as $150 had been collected in the congregation the night before, for the Bible Cause. More than half the missionary money, however, was given by the preachers. They always do well in this matter. From the collections now in hand, we shall be able to sustain all our own missions the present year, and have some four hundred dollars for the California mission; and as soon as the Bishop shall appoint the missionary from our Conference, we propose to make a sudden and simultaneous effort to raise one thousand dollars to send along with him. Our collections this year will exceed three thousand dollars.

Sunday, Feb. 1, at 11 o'clock A. M., Bishop Andrew preached his one of his plain, practical, spiritual sermons, altogether appropriate to the occasion; after which seven preachers were ordained deacons.

At 3 o'clock P. M., Dr. Wightman, as usual, gave us an excellent sermon, and five deacons were ordained elders. At night Brother Asa, of Philadelphia Conference, preached a good sermon. Throughout the day, a gracious influence seemed to rest upon the large congregations, and we trust great good will be the result of this days labor in this town.

MONDAY.

Conference met, and opened as usual.

A communication from Dr. E. W. Sehon, Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, was read.

The Committee on Education made their report, accepting a proposition from the citizens of Micanopy, East Florida, for the location of a High School at that place, under the direction of this Conference. Trustees were appointed for the same. The cause of education is advancing among us.

The pastoral address was then read by F. Stewart.

The Conference proceeded, by ballot, to nominate a member of this Conference for the California mission. On counting the ballots, Simon P. Richardson and Alexander Graham had an equal number of votes.

STATISTICS.

The statistics were called for. White members 5129, colored 3485, local preachers 85; decrease in whites 669; increase of colored 323; Sunday Schools 47; superintendents 52; teachers 210; scholars 1262; volumes in library 3413; money raised for S. Schools $215; S. S. Visitors taken 155.

After a short and solemn talk from the Bishop, he proceeded to read the following appointments for the preachers of 1852:

Appointments.

TALLAHASSEE DIST.—S. P. Richardson, P. E.
Tallahassee..To be supplied.
Wakulla..John Slade.
Leon..S. Woodberry.
Quincy..J. P. Richardson.
Gadsden..G. W. Fagg.
South Gadsden..J. Penny.
Bainbridge..W. Choice.
Blakely..L. L. Potter.
Albany..A. Peeler.
Baker Mission..W. Edwards.
Spring Creek Mission..S. G. Childs.
Agent F. Institute..P. P. Smith.
Principal F. Institute..R. H. Luckey.

MADISON DIST.—R. H. Howren, P. E.
Madison..T. N. Gardner.
Trompville..O. B. Standley.
Hamilton—J. J. Sealy.
Thomasville..J. L. Jerry.
Monticello..W. W. Griffin.
Columbia..V. C. Kennedy.
Newnansville..T. W. Cooper.
Suwannee Mission—P. B. Bedford.
Suwanee Mission—To be supplied.
Burnett's Creek—To be supplied.
Amilla Creek—To be supplied.
Alachua Creek and Agent for E. Florida Institute..J. M. Hendry.

TAMPA DISTRICT—F. Stewart, P. E.
Ocala..Thomas Gardner.
Marion Mission..J. M. N. Lowe.
Levy Mission..R. S. Tucker.
Hernando Mission..E. A. Johnson.
Hillsboro' Mission..W. K. Turner.
Manatee..To be supplied.
Key West..J. W. Mills.

ST. MARY'S DIST.—G. W. Pratt, P. E.
St. Mary's..R. McK. Tydings.
Jacksonville..J. C. Ley.
Brunswick..J. Fuler, S. A. McCook.
St. Illa Mission..J. J. Richards.
Holmesville..T. Taylor.
Irwin..W. C. Braddy.
Waresboro'..A. W. Harris.
Black Creek..J. H. M. Gardner.
Agent for A. B. Society, Fla. Conf..E. L. T. Blake.

Alexander Graham, Missionary to California; G. C. Clarke, transferred to Georgia Conference; J. M. Valentine and J. W. Carlton, left without appointment on account of ill health. Next Conference to be held in Quincy. P. P. SMITH.

Tallahassee, Feb. 2, 1852.

PROSPECT FOR AN APPEAL.—We are frequently asked whether an appeal will be taken from the decision of the United States Circuit Court of the Southern claim. To this inquiry we would answer, that we now have no connection with the case, as, in the decree of the Court, the Commissioners are not included with the Book Agents in the requirement for the partition of the property. We were charged in the Plaintiffs' bill with having refused to execute a commission with which we were entrusted by the General Conference—but the Court has let us off. Of course, whatever the Agents may have to complain of, "the Commissioners"—those naughty men who have "robbed" the Church South—are fully, though silently, released by the Court; consequently, we have no longer any formal connection with the case, and have no right to say what shall be done with, regard to the appeal, nor to obtrude our opinions or advice upon the subject. So far as we can understand the question, and those now more immediately concerned have treated us with their accustomed frankness and known courtesy in their conversation upon the subject, an appeal will be taken when the proper time arrives. The time will be after the interlocutory decree, already issued, shall be republished to and the facts presented by the Clerk to the Court, and the issuing of the final decree that will be some weeks, perhaps some months hence. The General Conference, which sits next May, will probably consider and determine the question whether the appeal shall finally be prosecuted. This is all the light we have upon the subject of the appeal.—[Ch. Ad. and Journal, Jan. 22.

QUADRATURE OF THE CIRCLE.—The New York Post says, that Senor DeJaTorre, a Cuban mathematician, now in that city has actually discovered the square of the circle, and is about to proceed to England to claim the reward offered for it. He has with him a sphere, which is divided into several parts, and which may be taken apart and arranged in the form of a perfect square.

METHODIST PRESS.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.—The St. Louis Advocate presents some excellent thoughts on this subject. In honor of the work of a Sunday School teacher, it is said that Chief Justice Marshall, his head frosted by seventy winters, was proud to walk at the head of a Sabbath School procession in the city of Richmond. The Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen was a Sunday School teacher while holding the office of Attorney General of New Jersey, and afterwards while Senator in Congress. Hon. B. F. Butler was a Sunday School teacher while holding the office of Attorney General of the United States. Gov. Ellsworth, of Connecticut, taught a Bible class from Sabbath to Sabbath while Governor of the State. The lamented Harrison taught for years in an humble Sabbath School on the banks of the Ohio, and when at Washington his gardener advised him to keep a dog to protect his fruit, he replied, "better set a Sunday School teacher to catch the boys."

The disposition of parents to transfer their duty to this good institution, and to think they have discharged there duty when they have got their children off to a Sunday School, is thus dealt with:

"But they (Sunday Schools) may be, and often are, abused. Because of them parents may excuse themselves from imparting to their children the proper instruction at home. Forgetting that the first school for the child is in the nursery, and the most proper teachers its own parents, they may seek to transfer to the Sabbath School teacher duties which belong to themselves alone. No institution, however excellent in itself, should be so used as to lessen the sense of responsibility on the part of the parent. Parental responsibility and parental duties can never be transferred. The duty of bringing up the child "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," belongs to the parent. He may lawfully and properly call in the aid of the Minister and Sabbath School teacher, or whatever other auxiliary in his judgment may be proper, but the duty is his—the responsibility is his—untransferred and untransferable."

CHEAP BOOKS.—Both editors of the Nashville and Louisville Advocate give us articles on books. Dr. P. affirms, and well, that our religious book trade represents in no small degree, the spiritual as well as the temporal wealth of the connection. "It is a good sign of piety when persons purchase religious books. This may be seen in the fact that revivals of religion generally bring large orders for books, and those preachers prosper best who sell the most of our standard works."

Dr. McF. thinks the hints and suggestions that have been thrown out about cheapening our publications, have naturally operated to curtail materially the sale of them. He presents Methodist book-selling in a manner not so much to our liking as his worthy associate. Dr. McF. says:

"The argument against a profit on books, and the application of that profit to superannuates, widows, orphans, etc., looks very well on paper, but when reduced to practical operation, will not be found to operate so well. The number of superannuates, supernumeraries, widows, and orphans, is continually increasing; but do the means of meeting their demands increase in the same ratio? Let the Stewards' reports at our various Conferences answer."

TRACT FOR THE TIMES.—The correspondent of the Memphis Advocate bring prominently to view a tract by Rev. J. L. Chapman, examining the claims of succession and high church Episcopacy—the tract to be had at the Memphis Depository. It must be a stirring document.

HON. REVERDY JOHNSON, Esq., AND REV. T. E. BOND, M. D.—The ex-editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal is out, three and a half columns, in a letter addressed to the lawyer, taking him to task about certain "Episodical remarks" used in his argument on the Church suit.

MOVEMENT AMONG THE JEWS.—The London Watchman states that a remarkable conflict is going on at present among the Jews in London, between the opposite principles of superstition and infidelity, between rabbinism and rationalism—the traditions of men and the philosophy of men. Some are endeavoring to adapt the old maxims of Judaism to the standard of modern civilization. Many are diligently studying the Old Testament Scriptures, with a view to the connection of their religious system, and the improvement of their synagogue worship. Their religious teachers seem alive to the importance of imparting a more spiritual character to their public services, and seek to base their instructions upon the written word of God; and to build up their Jewish hearers in their ancient faith by a continual reference to the Old Testament Scriptures. They are, moreover, publishing the Scriptures with an English translation of their own, which professes to rectify the errors of our authorized version.

POPULAR RELIGION.—He that breaks off the yoke of obedience, and unties the bands of discipline, and preaches a cheap religion, and presents heaven in the midst of flowers, and strews carpets softer than the Asian luxury in the way, and sets the songs of Zion to the tunes of the Persian and lighter airs, and offers great liberty of living, and reconciles eternity with present enjoyment, he shall have his schools filled with disciples; but he that preaches the Cross, and the severities of Christianity, and the strictness of a holy life, shall have the lot of his blessed Lord—he shall be thought ill of, and deserted.—[Jeremy Taylor.

ADHERING TO CHRIST.—A Christian friend visiting a good man under great distress and afflicting dispensations, which he bore with such patient and composed resignation as to make his friends wonder and admire it, inquired how he was enabled so to comfort himself. The good man said, "The distress I am under is indeed severe; but I find it lightens the stroke very much to creep near to him who handles the rod;" adding, "Him where else, save in the religion of Christ, could such a sufferer find such a support!"

LITERARY NOTICES.

WESLEY AND METHODISM: by Isaac Taylor. New York: 1852. Harper & Bros. 12mo. pp. 328.

In many respects it is gratifying to us, and must be to all true Wesleyans, to see so discriminating, original and religious a writer as Isaac Taylor undertake a critical estimate of Methodism. As a religious movement it belongs to the world, and has already taken its place in the history of Christianity. Taylor assigns it a high place. He claims Methodism, though open to some incidental exceptions, to have been a genuine development of the principal elements of Christianity—"A more marked utterance of the Gospel has occurred only once [Reformation] in the lapse of eighteen centuries." Again, "In perfect analogy with the events of the Reformation were those attending the rise and progress of Methodism." In calculating the influence of this movement, not only upon the Established Church, but upon other communions, the author says: "By the new life it diffused on all sides of itself, it has preserved from extinction, and has reanimated the languishing nonconformity of the last century, which, just at the time of the Methodistic revival, was rapidly in course to be found no where but in books." The beginning of Methodism dates the commencement of the religious epoch now current, and the "Methodistic dispensation" is actually spoken of.

This volume will be the end of that heartless, and in most instances mindless class of scribblers, who are wont to treat Methodism with frigid flippancy and bantering levity, who cannot account for its origin in the urgent moral demands of the age, but only in the tact and ambitious plotting of its presumptuous leader; to whom its phenomena are inexplicable, because as destitute of piety as philosophy, they are staggering in front of facts which "no sympathy in their own bosoms enables them to comprehend," and they make a short matter of it by crying out "enthusiasm."

What philosophers! We are glad to see one good pike in the pond, ridding us at once and forever of this small fry. Now that the Methodism past comes to be appreciated, its better friends than Mr. Taylor will have something to say about its future permanence. Southey lacked religious experience, and this was unfit for writing about Wesley. Mr. Taylor is not disqualified in this respect, but he is in a less one, and that is, he is a Calvinist. Therefore he insists, with all Calvinists, in altering the perspective of Methodism, by thrusting Whitfield in front of Wesley.

It is not to be disguised that Mr. Taylor comes to bury as well as to praise Methodism. He thinks the system limited in its duration—already abated in its force—about served its mission out, and all that. Damage may be attempted to be done by his book notwithstanding all the good things said. The quotations from it already appearing in other denominational papers are ominous of this. We hope some able hand will review the book in our Methodist Quarterly, and thus forestall any invidious use or abuse of it. It is destined to be much read, and the reputation of the writer, together with its own high intrinsic merits as a literary production, will give it much influence.

For sale by E. Ball.

THE VARIATIONS OF POPERY: by S. Edgar, D. D. New York: 1852. Carter & Bros.

A well named book, 8vo., of 600 pages large, plain print, but very indifferent in paper and binding, and ought to sell cheap. Dr. Edgar gives the literature of the Popish and Reformed controversy, showing the substantial harmony of Reformed Confessions of Faith, and the Antiquity of Protestantism. Popery is confronted with itself. Its highest authorities are quoted: theologian is confuted by theologian: Bishop opposes Bishop, and Pope Pope. Councils flatly contradict one another, and schisms and violent parties are seen to have existed and wrangled from of old in the bosom of Mother Church. Bells lock horns frequently, and the Kilkenny cats fight. Popish foolery (self-flagellation, festival of the ass, etc.) is as well shown up as the dignity of the work admits, and a long history of variations concludes with a horrid picture of sacerdotal profligacy.

THE RAINBOW IN THE NORTH: by S. Tucker. New York: 1852. Carter & Bros.

This is an account of the first establishment of Christianity in the regions of Hudson's Bay, by the Church Missionary Society. The narrative, as duly bound, presents many picturesque views of missionary life—the Indians, their manners and dress, sledge riding, birch-rind canoes, solitary wigwams on the margin of frozen streams, etc. The influence of moral culture in elevating the social state and changing the desolate scenes of sin and ignorance, is strikingly displayed. The extracts from the journals of the missionaries possess the usual interest. There are numerous and becoming embellishments. The interest felt in the great missionary work must very much depend on a knowledge of its details.

WISDOM IN MINIATURE: compiled by Rev. D. Sandford. 24mo. New York: Lane & Scott. 1851.

An array of many wise apothegms—religious Lacon.

SOUTHERN METHODIST PULPIT: Professor Dew, Editor.

The February number is promptly here. Contents: Sermon, a finished production by President Collins, of Emory and Henry College, Va.; and editor's valuable miscellany.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.

The present issue, February, is unusually brilliant.

THE SOUTHERN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

This new monthly is the product of Mobile literary enterprise, edited by W. G. C. Clark, terms one dollar. With pleasure we enter it on our list of exchanges.

JAMIE GORDON, or the Orphan Boy. Carter & Brother. New York. 1852.

The subject of this neat little volume—the career of a sprightly orphan boy, who starts the world with nothing and comes to something—is interesting to all. Jamie has this additional interest—he was born in a garrison, and had rough quarters with a regiment in the East Indies.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.—Mr. Walter, the architect has submitted plans for the reconstruction of the library of Congress Room. A prominent feature is the use of iron to keep of wood in the interior, the design being to guard against the occurrence of a conflagration. This is to be artistically paneled and ornamented—dome, the light to be admitted through stained glass. It is proposed to have the room completed by the first of July. In the mean time, temporary provision for a library in one of the passages and several adjacent rooms.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Amounts Received

By Missionaries of the Alabama Conference, in their respective fields of labor.

...ne Creek, (old) mission, by Rev. ... Rew	$305 00
...ssionary circuit, for missionary ...work done in its bounds, by Rev. ... Brown	140 00
...ile Water mission to whites, by ... Rev J W Beauseau	84 22
...ma colored mission, by Rev H ... Hunter	75 00
...mbia mission to whites, by Rev ... W McCaun	223 50
...ff mission to whites, by Rev T ... Gallagh	176 00
...mouth colored mission, by Rev ... Schrader	200 00
...ola (old) mission, by Rev W M ... Shockley	225 00
...tahoochee (old) mission, by Rev W B Adams	350 00
...bee mission to whites, by Rev ... S Dolin	56 50
...ker mission (to whites, by Rev ... Stokes	54 00
...ville mission to whites, by Rev ... O'Sullivan	46 85
...rrior mission to whites, by Rev James Tarrant	54 00
...t Mountain mission to whites, by Rev W Rhodes	no report.
...ee colored mission, by Rev W C ... Robinson	200 00
...loosa colored mission, by Rev L P ... Green	300 00
...swamp colored mission, by Rev ... Allerlong	130 50
...delphia mission to whites, by Rev O Saxton	500 00
...ver colored mission, by ... Locust Creek mission to whites, by Rev J Foust	127 25 200 00
Total amount reported	$3441 25

...other McTyeire.

...did not send my report to you, as I ex... ...ed to do, as I had, under direction of the ...ference, to furnish a copy to the Secretary for the minutes, and it was too long to ... I send you the report of amounts re... ...d on missions, as I did not report this ...n aggregate, believing that it was pu... ...ed in the report of the Secretary of the ...ionary Society, in detail, as has hereto... ...been done. As it is by him omitted, I ...sh it to you for publication, not as prop... ...rtaining, to my office, but as an item ...intelligence deserving publication.

Yours etc., T. J. KOGER, Treas.

...ssionary Report—Mississippi Conference

...ceived in the Months of January and February, 1852.

...Conference room, Clinton, La.	$68 75
...Brandon, Miss.	1 00
...Clinton, "	20 00
...Raymond, "	4 00
...Sharon, "	60 00
...Canton, "	40 00
...Jackson, "	90 00
...Vicksburg, "	62 50
...H. H. Montgomery, by H. N. McTyeire	30 00
Total	$376 15

...traveling expenses to be deducted from the ...

...expected the full amount, making up the ...00, to be in New Orleans when I reached, ...suppose the inclement weather has for... ...collections and remittances in the interior ...the Conference. Will brethren send funds ...that I may leave as early as possible?

Respectfully,

J. MARINER JONES.

New Orleans, February 11.

...First Round of Quarterly Meetings

...On Monticello District, Alabama Conference.

...son Circuit, at Bristers, Pove's	March 6 and 7
...son Circuit, at Bethlehem	March 13 and 14
...Mount Olive Mission, at Pine Grove	March 20 and 21
...ville, at Sardis	March 27 and 28
...versville, at Harpersville	April 3 and 4
...ower, Miss., at Holly Springs	April 10 and 11
...ower, Miss., Jasper	April 17 and 18
...ville Miss., at Centre	May 1 and 2

L. B. McDONALD, P. E.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

On the Tuscaloosa District, Alabama Conference.

...ersboro'	Jan 31 and Feb. 1
...ton	February 7 and 8
...Berne and Oak Grove, at New ...berne	February 14 and 15
...Prospect, at Wesley Chapel	February 21 and 22
...Sterrett, at Mount Hermon	February 28 and 29
...Sterrett, at Malone's	March 6 and 7
...ver's Valley, at Jonesboro'	March 13 and 14
...New Lexington, at New Lexington	March 20 and 21
...Jackson	March 27 and 28
...Sandy, at Mount Pleasant or Wil... ...ingham's	April 3 and 4

THOMAS J. KOGER, P. E

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

On the Demopolis District, Alabama Conference.

...Demopolis	February 14 and 15
...Rock Colored Mission
...son Town	February 21 and 22
...ola and Gravelle	February 28 and 29
...Town Circuit, at Asbury	March 6 and 7
...Peach Tree, at Mount Hillet	March 13 and 14
...Warsaw Circuit, at Linden	March 20 and 21
...Magnolia Colored Mission
...Carmel	March 27 and 28
...ston Colored Mission
...Jerusalem Circuit, at Mount Carmel	April 3 and 4
...ver Circuit, at Bear Creek	April 10 and 11
...son Circuit, at Coke's Chapel	April 17 and 18

JOSHUA T. HEADD, P. E.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

For the Montgomery District, Alabama Conference.

...gomery Station	February 14 and 15
...gomery Circuit, at Mount Meigs	February 21 and 22
...ia at Pine Creek	February 28 and 29
...ville Circuit, at Haynesville	March 20 and 21
...berger	March 27 and 28
...berger Circuit, at Asbury	April 3 and 4
...ooked Circuit, at Salem	April 10 and 11
...ville at Bethlehem	April 17 and 18

H. HARRELL, P. E

New Orleans District.

APPOINTMENTS FOR FIRST QUARTER OF 1852.

...Trinity Street...Quarterly Conference, 30th Jan., 7 P M; Love Feast 9th Feb., 7 P M.

...New Orleans Circuit, Q. Conf., 5th Feby., Algiers, 4 P M; Love Feast Feb. 8, Algiers.

...Charge...Q. Conf. Feb. 10, 7 P M; Love Feast Feb 16, 7 P M.

...Circuit...Q. Conf.-Feb. 19, 7 P M; L. Feast Feb. 23, 7 P M.

...Wesley, Soule and Winans' Chapels...Quar. Conf. Feb. 11, 7 P M; Love Feast Feb. 15, 7 P M.

...Canal Mission, 1st, 2d and 3d...Q. Conf. Bellecrite st. Feb. 27, 7½ P M; Sacrament Trinity st. Feb. 29, 11 A M, and L. F. 3 P M.

...Carrollton...Q. Meeting March 6 and 7; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

...Algiers and Bayou Black...Q. Meeting March 13 and 14; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P M, and Love Feast 4 P M.

...Lafourche and Lafourche Col'd Mission... Q. Meeting March 20 and 21; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P M, and L. F. 4 P M.

...Thibodeauville and Preston's Col'd Mission... Q. Meeting April 3 and 4; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

...Terrebonne...Q. Meeting April 10 and 11; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

...FIRE AT BRANDON.—Thirty-five houses embracing ...ebbish of the business part of the town, were consumed by the recent fire at Brandon, Miss. The total loss ...business is estimated at $50,000 on which there was ...aggregate insurance of $11,000. The loss in merchan... ...is estimated at $100,000 on which there was an in... ...ance of $35,000.

General Intelligence.

CONSOLIDATION.—By the telegraph of yesterday the news is brought that the consolidation of the three Municipalities of New Orleans and Lafayette has been consummated.—Henceforth, one Mayor one Board, of Aldermen. The measure seems to give general satisfaction to the press and people.

MARCH 30TH TUESDAY.—The news of the liberation of Mr Thrasher has caused universal joy throughout the country. The efforts of this gentleman in behalf the unfortunate men who were prisoners in Havana has endeared him to the American people.

MOBILE ILLUSTRATED.—The Mobile Tribune says: We learn from a letter from our member in Congress, Judge Bragg, that the chief difficulty in the way to the work on the Mobile Custom-house (the title for which we removed. The Southern Bank refused to give a warranty title, and the Secretary refused to accept any other. The opinion which induced that decision has been revised, and the Government now serves to accept a quit claim merely.

Judge Bragg thinks also, that the appropriation will be increased from $100,000 (the first grant) to $175,000 or $200,000. The Secretary, he says, has consented to recommend the addition.

SURVIVOR OF THE POLE IN NEWBURYPORT.—A dispatch was received from Washington yesterday, stating that 194 Wm Christs had been unanimously confirmed by the Senate as Sexagyar of His Port.

ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia "Inquirer" states that letters from Rome render it probable that the Rev John Neponmucene Neumann, rector of St. Alphonsus, Baltimore, will be the next Roman Catholic Bishop of Philadelphia. The reverend gentleman is spoken of by those who know him well as complimentary for piety and other high qualities desirable in a Catholic.

THE OHIO STATE HOUSE, which was burned on Sunday, was an old building. A new and magnificent capitol is in progress of erection. It will be, next to the capitol of Washington, the largest in the Union. It is 304 by 184 feet, and covers 55,936 square feet. Last year $80,384 were expended on it, and this year an additional appropriation of from $250,000 to $300,000 is asked for.

SHIP CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA.—The Legislature of Alabama has passed a set of resolutions setting forth the advantages to the commercial interests of the South, of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Florida, and directing its Senators and Representatives to place the matter before Congress.

HOAX OF PRUSSIC ACID.—A letter from Bayreuth in the Observateur Toulouse, states that the Ottoman Government has ordered every Mussulman to pray for rain on account of the great drought, and gives the following description of the ceremony. "Every good Mahometan procures a vine branch with forty leaves upon it. On them he writes a verse of the Koran over each leaf. The vine branch is then rolled up, secured to a pack-thread, and cast into the sea to be drawn out when it shall have rained sufficiently.

STEAM HOAX.—The oil Francis' patent metallic Life boats to be stationed on Charleston, has arrived at that port, and has attracted considerable attention.

IMMIGRATION IN JANUARY.—The total number of immigrants arrived at New York during the month of January was 12,709. The number of immigrants during the same month, in 1851, was 18,212, and in 1850, 13,957. Perhaps the decrease may be attributed to the severity of the weather. Of the 12,709 arrivals, 8,257 were from various ports in Great Britain and Ireland, 1,963 from Havre, 747 from Antwerp, 393 from Hamburg, and the remainder from several other places.

THE DAGUERREOTYPES of Boston are taking daguerreotype likenesses very successfully by the Drummond light. It is said that they can measure the effect of the light more nicely than they can when taken by the sunlight.

THE ATLANTIC MAIL SERVICE.—It is stated that the Committee of Naval Affairs in both Houses of Congress have determined to report a bill granting to the Collins line of Atlantic mail steamships the $250,000 additional compensation asked for.

OLE BULL IN WASHINGTON.—It is stated that Ole Bull, the great Norwegian artist, has gone to Washington to confer with the proper persons there as to a scheme of emigration to this country entertained by several of his countrymen in their far northern home.

PERMITTING ALIENS TO VOTE IN MASSACHUSETTS.—On the 27th ult., in the Senate of Massachusetts, a bill permitting aliens resident in that Commonwealth to hold real estate, was passed to a third reading, and appended that they should only do so upon declaring their intention to become citizens was struck out. A similar law has been adopted in several other States.

GREAT LOSS OF SPECIE.—On Saturday evening, the 31st ult., a keg, containing five thousand Mexican dollars, burst while being hoisted on board the Hatre packet Ship Sophia Walden, at New York, and the whole contents fell into the dock and sunk to the bottom, a depth of twenty-six feet. Divers, clothed in India rubber, have only succeeded in this to recover the lost treasure. A mud machine is to be tried as a last resort.

THE ATTORNEY GENERALSHIP OF MARYLAND.—The report of Attorney General Brent of Maryland presents in rather an unfavorable light, the action of the Judge and others, in reference to the Christiana treason cases. There is now no prospect that any of the persons concerned in the murder of Mr Gorsuch will ever be brought to justice. Mr. Brent argues at length, in opposition to the ruling of the Judge as to what constitutes treason, and he shows that two of the witnesses for the prosecution were designedly permitted to escape, whilst a third (a negro) was permitted to perjure himself. It appears that Mr. Roberts, the Marshal, not only summoned confirmed abolitionists as jurors, but dined with the accused parties on Thanksgiving day. We make the following extract from the report.

Again, the counsel for the defence applied to the Court for an order to bring out some twenty-four of the negroes to see which of them could be identified as participants in the treason, by Henry H. Kline, a material witness for the prosecution. At the opening of the Court on the next day, these negroes were seen sitting in a row, supported on each side by white females, who, to the disgust of all respectable citizens, gave them open sympathy and room enough. Much of the negroes appeared with new coats, forts around their necks—their hair evidently parted, and their clothing in every respect alike, so as to present an uniform appearance to the eye, as far as possible—all showing, doubtless, for the double purpose of giving a nice and comfortable and perplexing appearance to a witness as Kline in respect to their identity. And this was manifestly done with the privity, connivance and consent of the officers having charge of the prisoners, and passed unrebuked.

JOSHUA T. HEADD, P. E.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings

For the Montgomery District, Alabama Conference.

...gomery Station	February 14 and 15
...gomery Circuit, at Mount Meigs	February 21 and 22
...ia at Pine Creek	February 28 and 29
...ville Circuit, at Haynesville	March 20 and 21
...berger	March 27 and 28
...berger Circuit, at Asbury	April 3 and 4
...ooked Circuit, at Salem	April 10 and 11
...ville at Bethlehem	April 17 and 18

H. HARRELL, P. E

New Orleans District.

APPOINTMENTS FOR FIRST QUARTER OF 1852.

...Trinity Street...Quarterly Conference, 30th Jan., 7 P M; Love Feast 9th Feb., 7 P M.

...New Orleans Circuit, Q. Conf., 5th Feby., Algiers, 4 P M; Love Feast Feb. 8, Algiers.

...Charge...Q. Conf. Feb. 10, 7 P M; Love Feast Feb 16, 7 P M.

...Circuit...Q. Conf.-Feb. 19, 7 P M; L. Feast Feb. 23, 7 P M.

...Wesley, Soule and Winans' Chapels...Quar. Conf. Feb. 11, 7 P M; Love Feast Feb. 15, 7 P M.

...Canal Mission, 1st, 2d and 3d...Q. Conf. Bellecrite st. Feb. 27, 7½ P M; Sacrament Trinity st. Feb. 29, 11 A M, and L. F. 3 P M.

...Carrollton...Q. Meeting March 6 and 7; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

...Algiers and Bayou Black...Q. Meeting March 13 and 14; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P M, and Love Feast 4 P M.

...Lafourche and Lafourche Col'd Mission... Q. Meeting March 20 and 21; Q. Conf. Saturday, 2 P M, and L. F. 4 P M.

...Thibodeauville and Preston's Col'd Mission... Q. Meeting April 3 and 4; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

...Terrebonne...Q. Meeting April 10 and 11; Q. Conf. Saturday, 3 P M, and L. F. 7 P M.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

CONSOLIDATION DISCOMFITED.—It has been discovered that a lithographic and steel plate printer named Robert Neil, at Mount Carmel, fourteen miles from Cincinnati, has been engaged in making counterfeit bank notes for several years past. The discovery was made by an engraver of Cincinnati, who having a fine piece of work on hand, took up his article bodily and all, at Neil's establishment. One day during Neil's absence he discovered the impression of a bank note on one of the press boards in the printing room. He got into a conversation with an intelligent German, who had been in the employ of Neil for three years, and learning that he got but $45 per month he told him he could get him a situation in the city at a salary of $15 per week; but added the gentleman "you can not print bank notes can you?" "Oh yes" says the German "but you must not tell Neil so, I am sworn to say nothing about it by Mr Neil who says he prints for the State." He was then told that he had been making counterfeit money and was liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary. The German becoming alarmed hurried off to Neil, and refused to work any more, and informed him what he had been told. The gentleman immediately came to the city with the German, and the information was imparted to the officers. U. S. Deputy Marshal Sayre immediately repaired to the house, and immediately proceeded to Neil's residence but the bird had not only fled but destroyed every thing which could be brought against him as evidence.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that counterfeit money to the amount of $40,000 in counterfeit money had been made by Neil during the past two years. The notes were 50's, 20's 10's, and 5's upon the State Bank of Ohio; 20's, 10's and 5's upon the State Bank of Indiana and 20's 10's and 5's upon the Northern Bank of Kentucky.

Mr Hastings followed him to New York but losing all trace of him there, it is supposed that he has fled to Europe.

PANORAMA OF NIAGARA FALLS.—The Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat says: That Thurlow Weed, Esq., who is now in Paris, has discovered a painting of the Genesee Falls, executed in 1795, by a brother of Louis Philippe, while they were passing through the country to Niagara Falls. The owner has consented, at the solicitation of Mr. Weed, that this ancient painting shall be copied, and made of the Falls shall be presented to the City of Rochester. Mr. Weed writes, that the view was taken from the other side of the river, almost opposite the old site of Medt's factory. The artist made the sketch while his companion, Louis Philippe, and two other exiles, prepared their dinner, spread upon a blanket under a tree.

JAPAN AND THE NORTH PACIFIC.—The Washington correspondent of the Charleston Courier has the following in relation to the proposed surveying expedition to the North Pacific.

The Committee on Commerce of the Senate, have reported a bill providing for sending some small vessels of the Navy, with competent officers and crews, to explore the North Pacific and prepare charts of the sounds, currents, and shoals and islands, etc., which are in the track of our commerce and navigation. As trade with China will receive a stimulus from the settlement of California and Oregon, it is very important that the ocean routes should be explored. The number of ships now in the North Pacific is stated to be very great. It is also mentioned that in the trade to Japan, large islands have been discovered, hitherto unknown to navigation. It is supposed to be very fertile, and to contain a dense population. It has not been colonized as yet, and its extent known. It is suggested in the report that this island may contain good harbors and a hospitable people, and, if so, it will be of vast advantage to our commerce and whaling ships. It is said that Captain Ringgold, of the Navy, is to command the expedition, now proposed.

The vessels of the expedition now fitting out for Japan are kept secret. It is believed, however, that the object is to make such a show of force as will cause the Emperor to re port our position of peace and commerce, and our demand that American seamen, cast on the shores of his empire, shall be kindly treated and restored. The fleet may show him that they can bombard and burn his imperial city of Yeddo, though it is fifty miles in circumference.

THE DECLINING PRESIDENT.—The Rev Tyler Thatcher is said to have discovered a new and superior method of determining latitude and longitude. The San Francisco Pacific, the journal which announces this invention, says:

"His method of determining the latitude, by a single observation of any heavenly body, seen by night or by day, either on the meridian or at any angle with the meridian, is perfectly geometrical and obvious, and certain in its results, as any case whatever in spherical trigonometry.

"He employs the same observations also to fix the longitude. The method by which this is done is partly geometrical and partly arithmetical; but as plain and certain as any demonstration in Euclid's "Elements," or any sum in the Rule of Three."

SUPERIORITY OF FRENCH RIFLES.—Sir Charles Shaw, in a letter published in the London Times, calls attention to the great superiority of the rifles used with such terrible effect by the Tirailleurs de Vincennes in the recent Algerian war, and suggests that weapons of the same description should be used by the British troops against the Kaffirs. The invention has, since 1846, been considerably improved, and is destined of now being effective at 600 yards, merely by the use of a hollow cylindro-conoidic ball, engrafted upon M Delvigne's invention by Captain Minie, as presenting can be done at 1,500 yards. At the distance of 700 yards the rifle would, to a certainty, knock down a Hottentot's man in spite of his curiosity, and a troop of men at 1,000 yards. By the adoption of this destructive missile, Sir Charles argues that the Kaffirs may be shot far more effectually and far more economically, than they possibly can be by the present muskets.

FROM VENEZUELA.—The New York Tribune has received the Courrier de Caracas of Dec 13. The Republic is tranquil. There is no news of importance. President Monagas has named Mr Thomas J. Rae Consul at Philadelphia. Messrs Juan Angel Bermudez and Antonio Maria Salazar, political exiles, had returned to the country, but the Government had sent them away again.

It is said that Mr. Guzman will in all probability receive the mission he has asked for to Peru, to receive a gift of a million of dollars promised to Bolivia by that Government.

The gold mines during the past year Carripano had late to surpass anything of the kind in his or any other country. I was told by one interested largely in them that their first dividend was shares of twenty-five dollars would yield nearly one thousand. The stockholders ship the ore in its crude state to New York so that you will soon have to report the rather remarkable arrival from the country of gold ore, by the shipload. The shares are trivial, the mines are not far from the seacoast, and a good wagon road leads to it.

The interest of the Government stock is rising gradually paid on demand at the Treasury, and it continues to be paid. It will soon establish confidence in the good faith of Venezuela.

Everything is going on quietly. Preparations are making for the Christmas festivities, which, this being a Catholic country are celebrated with no little degree of splendor.

A heavy shock of an earthquake was felt here during last week—preceded as usual by a low rumbling sound and then followed by the shock, which made the city tremble. I have not heard of any bad effects having followed it.

VIRGINIA SENATOR.—The Legislature has re-elected the Hon. R. M. T. Hunter United States Senator for six years from the 4th of March, 1853. The vote stood—for Hunter, 120; scattering, 64.

VIRGINIA.—A bill has been reported in the Virginia Legislature authorizing a loan of $1 000,000 of State bonds to enable Andrew Thompson to establish a line of steamers between Richmond and Europe.

The resolutions introduced in the Legislature against the intervention of this country in the affairs of Europe have been laid on the table, on the ground that it would be inexpedient to touch upon the subject.

ARAB'S, KADER AND HORSES.—In compliance with the request of a French General, Abdel Kader has written an account of the Arab horses of the desert, in which he describes the number of days they can march without fatigue, their power of enduring hunger and thirst, etc. The use of horses for heavy work is condemned by the veteran Arab. "My own father, may God have pity on him, was never known to say, 'There has been no blessing on our land since we have made our horses beasts of burden and of the plough.' God never did make the horse for the course, the ox for the plough, and the camel to carry burdens. There is nothing to be gained in changing the ways of God."

THE OLDEST TREES.—The oldest trees in the world are in central Africa—the Boabubs, which are ninety feet in circumference and contain the rings which mark the annual growth of trees to the number of nine thousand, the date of their age at that length of years.

AN OLD PRINTER.—There is a man living in Louisville who has worked nearly sixty-three years at the printing business.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—A bill to abolish capital punishment, substituting life-imprisonment therefor, has been regularly reported to the Senate of Rhode Island and hopes are entertained of its passage.

The Milwaukee Daily Advertiser thus sums up on the hanging question:

"After a careful consideration of all the arguments for and against capital punishment we have come to the conclusion that the debt of nature should never be paid till it can't be collected without an execution.

FRENCH FURNACES IN CHINA.—The Journal du Havre says: It was are rightly informed, our Minister of Commerce is at this moment preparing the establishment of a French factory in China, of the nature of those which the Dutch, the English, and other nations have long had there. The factors will be placed under the superintendence of M Montigny, our Consul at Shanghai and is expected to exercise the most beneficial influence on our intercourse with the Celestial Empire.

EXECUTION OF TWO INDIANS.—The Panama Star states that a man named James Linn, while hunting on the Oregon Road, grew tired and laid down to sleep under a tree. On waking he found his limbs and body swelling, and death soon ensued. The Star says that a tree grows on the Isthmus under which cattle avoid eating or ruminating.

We are inclined to think there is considerable romance about this.

PENNSYLVANIA AND THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—An immense meeting was held in Philadelphia on Monday evening, the 2d instant, to urge the adoption of a law similar to the one in Maine, against selling intoxicating drinks. We notice that Judge Allison, in his charge to the Grand Jury of the Court of Quarter Sessions of that city on Monday, also strongly urged the adoption of some such law in the State of Pennsylvania.

LATER FOREIGN NEWS.

By the Humboldt's Mails

Europe.

The U. S. steamer Humboldt arrived at her wharf New York, on the morning of the 5th. We make the following extract from a summary of the news received by her prepared by the New York Tribune:

FRANCE.

RESIGNATION OF EXTRA TRAIN BEFORE ASSEMBLY.—Paris, Saturday evening. The Moniteur of this morning will contain a speech of the Duke of Bassano, Minister of the 24th of December. It contains three distinct passages, that while fully engages in sympathy with the most terrible but splendid vindictive decrees of any era of political revolution ancient or modern. The alternate establishment of the blood thirsty parties of Marius and Sylla in the olden days of the Roman Republic, the mobs of enlarged empires marked down for exile and beggary by Octavius Cæsar and Mark Antony by the opening of their tablets (triumvirate); the deeds of the Comite de Salut Public in the Reign of Terror, alone can challenge competition with the acts which are announced to us by the decree of the morning.

Many hell-hounds, without trial or warrant, but a stroke of the pen, by representatives chosen by the nation to legislate for their country men, including talents of the first order in a variety of departments, by one recruit of the dictator's pen are expatriated from France and not only this, but are pinched from the frontier, with all the incredible menace that, if they resenter their country, they will subject themselves to transportation. A second list of seventy representatives, including the most illustrious French statesmen and generals of the day are also proscribed. The Government appears to be ready and ripe to make public the results with which these edicts have been threatened in case of their peopling the French territory. But the most daring violation of all rights remains to be told. Five representatives are transported to Cayenne. The name which heads this list is that of Marc Dufraisse, his crime apparently is a speech which he made in the Assembly, attributing the decapitation of Louis XVI., a measure voted by the statesman who stood the eight hundredth in succession, the constitution proposed by Louis Napoleon to the French people. The condemnation of these five representatives of the Mountain to the fate of felons in a pestilential penal colony is certainly the most atrocious feature in these infamous decrees. How proceed to give the decrees as they appear in the Moniteur.

The Telegraph gives the decrees of proscription and a list of the names. The President drops the patronymic designation of his family and signs himself in true royal style Louis Napoleon. The decrees are countersigned by M De Morny, Minister of the Interior.

The non-official part of the Moniteur, begins with the following statement relative to the lists of proscription:

The Government, firmly determined to prevent any cause of troubles has taken measures against certain persons whose presence in France might impede the re-establishment of tranquility. Such measures are applied to three categories. "In the first are the individuals convicted of having taken part in the recent insurrections; they will be transported to French Guiana or to Algeria, according to the degree of guilt. In the second are the recognized chiefs of secret societies, their residence in France would be likely to lead to civil war; they will be expelled from the territory of the Republic and will be transported should they return to it. In the third category, are included the political men who have made themselves remarked by their violent hostility to the Government and whose presence would be a cause of agitation; they will be temporarily expelled from France. Under existing circumstances the duty of the Government is obvious, and it will show how it can exercise its repressive measures with just limits. The different decrees which precede only regard the ex-representatives Marc-Dufraisse, Greppo, Mott, Mathe and Richardet will be transported to French Guiana."

Five hundred and seventy-five prisoners, arrested for being concerned in the resistance manifested to the coup d'état were conveyed last night from Paris to Havre in order to be transported to Cayenne. 250 of these were confined in the fort of Ribeche, and of the remaining 325 came from Rouen, in the department of the Seine Inferieure, and Rouelles, in the department of the Nievre. They were escorted by a detachment of lancers.

Among the few eminent members of the Mountain who have escaped proscription may be mentioned MM Michel (de Bourges) and Cremieux. The latter pleaded on Thursday before the Civil Tribunal of Chinmont, department of the Haute-Marne, as advocate of the town of Chaumont-sur-Marne, in an action between it and the Orleans family.

Out of the 418 taken from the forts-d'ivry and Bicetre, there are not more than 20 or 30 reports de justice—that is, persons who have already been in the hands of justice. All the others are persons who, without having been actually condemned for affiliation in the secret societies, have nevertheless complied to several years a prominent position in the ranks of the Red Democracy. The Military Commission has declined itself competent to decide as to their culpability. And to apply to them the decree on transportation to French Guiana.

In the manner of the prisoners who left Havre by the steam-frigate Canada, are to be found about fifty members of the famous Democratic Socialists (electoral) Committee of the Seine. Several members of that Committee have been ordered for transportation to Cayenne. One of the Secretaries of the Bureau, M Vasbender, an operative painter, formerly director of the People and then of the Voix du Peuple, and intimate and bosom friend of M. Proudhon, (who, by the way, still at St. Pelagie,) is among the number.

M. Demosthenes Ollivier, formerly member of the Constituent Assembly, and whose younger son, Aristides Ollivier, was killed in a duel at Montpellier six months ago, is also among the banished.

M. Malapert, an advocate of the Court of Appeal in Paris, known for his perseverance since 1848 in defending political offenders belonging to the socialist party, when on trial before the High Court of Justice, and the ex-representative Bac, who had formerly attempted to get a large immigration of men who have figured in the political and social life of France. To call it a penal settlement would be an outrage on the former inhabitants of France, for most of them would have dared to have found a penal settlement in a climate notoriously destructive to European life. It is a bagne for liberal opinions transported within the tropics, and filled with political and politicians, and by the courts-martial, and by the authority of the police. All that we have heard before with dread and disgust of the military colonies of Russia, of Siberian exile, of the prisons of Naples or the carcere duro of the Spielberg, sinks into nothing compared with the wholesale confinement of such a class of men in such a part of the globe as Sinamari or Cayenne.

The Pays (Paris) says:

We are informed that a second detachment, consisting of 614 persons, arrested after the events of the 2d December, left Paris yesterday morning for Brest, where a vessel is waiting to convey them to Cayenne. We are assured that among the number is M Xavier Durrieu formerly principal editor of the journal the Revolution, and M. Lachambaudie author of "Fables Populaires."

The Independance, of Brussels, has the following account of the release of the political prisoners at Ham:

On Thursday morning the six prisoners, Gen Changarnier, Gen Lamoriciere, Gen Bedeau, Gen LeFlo, Col Charras and M Bazoy, were told that the doors of the fortress of Ham were about to be opened to them, but on the condition that they would go to England. Some of them protested against the designation of a country to which they were to go. It appears, however, that the orders were not so rigorous that they could not be refused. Gen LeFlo was chosen by the escaping agents, not only to speak but even to drive. The other prisoners obtaining permission to go as far as the gates of the Department. All wish to come to Belgium but the desire was not acceded to, and only two Gen Changarnier and Col Charras, were allowed to come here. M Baze and Gen de Lamoriciere had to promise to go the former to Aix-la-Chapelle the second to Cologne on Thursday, then Gen Changarnier, Col Charras and M Baze each escorted by two police agents in plain clothes, were taken to the railway. There the agents took their places in a train about to leave. They arrived on the morning of the 9th at the frontier and the agents accompanied them to Brussels. M Baze only remained in our town until the time of departure of the railway train for Germany. He took his place in the train, escorted by two police agents, who accompanied him to Aix-la-Chapelle. M. Changarnier and Mr Charras remained at Brussels up to Friday morning, when the former went to Liege and the latter to Louvain. Actu Gen de Lamoriciere, he only left Ham by a morning train on Thursday. He was accompanied to Brussels by two police agents, who took up their quarters in the same hotel. Being fit Cologne on Friday morning, Gen Bedeau then left the prisoners of Ham arrived on Friday morning at the goods train. He was accompanied, it was said also, a domestic and a lady. We have in England that he was attended by any police agent. To complete this account, we must add that some of the prisoners of Ham on arriving in Belgium, made any complaint to the Belgian Government.

The Emancipation, of Brussels, says that M. Thiers is about to leave for London.

The correspondent of the Daily News writes as follows:

Among the Representatives included in the second decree of proscription you will have observed the name of Etienne de Girardin. Reports have prevailed since the 2d of December that the talented editor of the Presse who had been latterly writing in favor of the Elysee was privy to the coup d'état and consulted as to the measures which followed it. I have the best reasons to believe that these reports are calumnious. Twenty-two and about to the rumor that Girardin solicited his own exile. On Monday the office of the Presse when he first became known of the step through the Boulevards, and was quite stunned by it. Being of his own intimacy with M. de Morny and that of his wife with the Countess Lellon, Girardin was full of self-confidence that he was safe. He immediately sought an interview with the Minister of the Interior, to know the meaning of this extraordinary proscription, inflicted on one who had rendered such immense services to Louis Napoleon. M. de Morny is said to have replied, "I can do nothing for you, the only course in the Cabinet raised in favor of your case, was the only one in the Cabinet opposed to yours." The only resource which the Minister could see for him was to grant him a few days' respite, a favor which he (Count de Morny), M. Chamboran and Duke of Lastevrie, who were consulted without help to the Presidency.

SPAIN.

The election of Louis Napoleon was celebrated at Madrid by a Te Deum in the Church of St. Louis of France. The Spanish ministry also, it is said, intimated their intention to remove several general officers, who have given umbrage to the government.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

The Berlin Zeitung of the 4th contains a statement on authority, that the negotiations between the Danish envoy M. von Bille, and the Prince Schwarzenberg had produced an agreement that rendered it highly probable the intervention of the Diet in the duchy of Holstein would terminate in a few weeks.

When the Austrian troops quit Holstein supposing the agreement to receive the necessary ratification, the troops from the frontier of Denmark will be established on the Eyder, and Rendsburg will be garrisoned by the troops of the sovereign, without regard to nationality. The elections for the general diets of both duchies will be taken according to the law of 1854.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The mail from India and China had arrived in London with Bombay dates to the 17th Dec.

The Burmese Court had thirty-five days allowed them to consider the demands made upon them, when, if not acceded to, it was supposed that Com. Lambert would proceed up the Irrawaddy and pronounce hostilities at Ragoon.

Letters from Hong Kong of the 29th November mention that the Mandarins are purchasing arms and warlike stores of all kinds. The rebels are said to be near Canton. The Yellow River has burst its banks, and trade in the North is interrupted.

From Liberia.

BOSTON, Thursday, Feb 5, 1852

Liberia papers to the 12th December have been received by the Boston Traveller. The distressing condition of affairs at Grand Bassa was the engrossing subject of interest.

In the attack upon Fishtown Grando, the insurgents were joined by Prince Boyer, of Trade Town. They had marshaled forces from all quarters with the intention of entirely destroying the settlement of Grand Bassa.

Under native chief and seven foreign traders, are implicated in the affair. The attack upon Fishtown was made November 5. The village was sacked and burned, and nine of the inhabitants murdered.

Grando commanded in person, having about 300 troops. The garrison was taken by surprise. Among the murdered were two women and four children. The bodies were mutilated in a horrible manner.

It soon appeared that almost the entire Bassa Country and Trade Town had joined Grando's rebellion, and that Mr. Lawrence, an English trader, was stimulating and aiding them.

On the 11th December a general attack was made on Bassa Cove at midnight, but was successfully repulsed. Several of the assailants having been killed. On the next day the Governor, Hoffman, and Beale and Benedict with "Nobo," a fry of path, the gannon of the Liberians having been well charged with slugs and grape-shot. Scouting parties from Bassa Cove subsequently attacked and broke up the enemy's flanks.

On the 14th they made another and more desperate attack on the Cove, in great numbers, but were repulsed with the loss of from three to four hundred. Several of the principal chiefs were among their chief warriors. After this repulse Grando wanted to leave the country, but Hoffman would not let him. He will probably soon be captured.

The Legislature met December 1. President Roberts was inaugurated and delivered his message.

Later from Chili and Peru.

The New York Tribune has received advices from Valparaiso to Dec. 26, and from Lima to Jan 5. The Valparaiso papers contain a full detail of the suppression of the insurrection in Chili, whose progress we have noticed from time to time.

In the electoral contest of 25th June last, a candidate prevailed in Coquimbo and Concepcion different from the one who succeeded in the other ten provinces of the Republic.

The people, not content that a majority of ten should two should determine the choice of President, raised the banner of insurrection, to accomplish by force what they could not effect by the ballot-box.

The revolution of Coquimbo and that of Concepcion (both) occurred on the 20th and 13th of September, the battalion of Quillota and squadron of Cazadores, Peru having remained loyal, under the brisk demand that has prevailed during the three last years, stays, and the quotations are now as follows: Fair Orleans 9½, Middling Orleans 9, Fair Uplands 8, and Middling uplands 8¼c per lb. Flour has been in good demand, but without any material change in prices. The quotations are for Western Canal 22 @ 23 reals for Ohio 23 @ 24 per bbl. Corn has sold at 28c. 1st. for yellow, and 32c. 1st. for white per quarter last steady, at 16 per cent. Cassels, 16½.

MAIL TO CHILI.—Valdo. Feb 13.—The Eastern mail this morning brings dates from New York and Philadelphia of the 9th, from Baltimore and Washington of the 7th, and from Charleston of the 5th inst.—all mail dates due. [Eve Delta.

DIVISION OF THE CANADAS.—Montreal, Feb 12.—We learn from Washington today that the Supreme Court of the United States has declined against Mrs Gaines in the case which has for some time been pending.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.—Baton Rouge, Feb 13.—The Lafayette nomination bill came up at half past 11 o'clock in the House. The majority of the committee on the bill composed of the delegation from Orleans, reported in favor, signed by Hunter, Story, Simpson, Lathrop, Hawthorne, Price, Lewis, Waterman, Campbell, Shannon, Curry, Langlois

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ADVANCE!.... By D. F. McCARTHY.

God bade the Sun with golden steps sublime,
Advance!
He whispered in the listening ear of Time,
Advance!
He bade the guiding spirits of the stars,
With lightning speed, in silver shining cars,
Along the bright floor of his azure hall.
Advance!
Sun, Stars, and Time obey the voice, and all
Advance!

The River as its bubbling fountain cries,
Advance!
The Clouds proclaim, like heralds, through the skies,
Advance!
Throughout the world the mighty Master's laws
Allow not one brief moment's idle pause;
The Earth is full of life, the swelling seeds
Advance!
And Summer hours, like Slavery harrowed steeds,
Advance!

To Man's most wondrous hand the same voice cried;
Advance!
Go clear the woods, and o'er the bounding tide
Advance!
Go draw the marble from its scarce bed,
And make the cedar bend its giant head;
Let domes and columns through the wondering air
Advance!
The World, O Man! is thine. But wouldst thou share—
Advance!

Unto the soul of man the same voice spoke,
Advance!
From out the clouds, thunder-like it broke,
Advance!
Go track the comet in its wheeling race,
And drag the lightning from its hiding-place;
From out the night of ignorance and fears,
Advance!
For Love and Hope, borne by the coming years,
Advance!

All heard, and some obeyed the great command,
Advance!
It passed along from listening land to land,
Advance!
The strong grew stronger, and the weak grew strong,
As passed the war-cry of the World along—
Awake, ye nations, know your powers and rights—
Advance!
Through Hope and Work to Freedom's new delights—
Advance!

Knowledge came down and waved her steady torch,
Advance!
Eager purchased from many a mantle porch,
Advance!
As rapid lightning leaps from peak to peak,
The Gaul, the Goth, the Roman, and the Greek
The painted Briton, caught the winged word,
Advance!
And earth grew young, and carolled as a bird,
Advance!

A BROKEN HOME.

BY H. MARVEL.

It is Nelly's own fair hand, yet sadly blotted; blotted with her tears and blotted with yours.

——"It is all over, dear, dear Clarence! Oh, how I wish you were here to mourn with us! I can hardly now believe that our poor mother is indeed dead."

Dead! It is a terrible word! You repeat it with a fresh burst of grief. The letter is crumpled in your hand. Unfold it again, sobbing, and read on.

"For a week she had been failing every day; but on Saturday we thought her much better. I told her I felt sure she would live to see you again.

"'I shall never see him again, Nelly,' said she, bursting into tears."

Ah! Clarence, where is your youthful pride and strength now, with only that frail paper to annoy you, crushed in your grasp?

"She sent for father, and taking his hand in hers, told him she was dying. I am glad you did not see his grief. I was kneeling beside her, and she put her hand upon my head and let it rest there for a moment, while her lips moved, as if she were praying.

"'Kiss me, Nelly,' said she, growing fainter; 'kiss me again for Clarence.'

"A little while after, she died."

For a long time you remain with only that letter and your thoughts for company. You pace up and down your chamber; again you seat yourself, and lean your head upon the table, embedded by the very grief that you cherish still. The whole day passes thus; you excuse yourself from all companionship; you have not the heart to tell the story of your troubles to Dalton, least of all to Miss Dalton. How is this? Is sorrow too selfish or too holy?

Toward night-fall there is a calmer and stronger feeling. The voice of the present world comes to your ear again. But you move away from it unobserved to that stronger voice of God, in the Cataract. Great masses of angry cloud hang over the West; but beneath them the red harvest sun shines over the long reach of Canadian shore, and bathes the whirling rapids in splendor. You stroll alone over the quaking bridge, and under the giant trees of the Island, to the edge of the British Fall. You go out to the little shattered tower, and gaze down with sensations that will last till death, upon the deep emerald of those awful masses of water.

It is not the place for a bad man to ponder; it is not the atmosphere for foul thoughts or weak ones. A man is never better than when he has the humbled sense of himself; he is never so unlike the spirit of evil, as when his pride is utterly vanished. You linger looking upon the stream of fading sunlight that plays across the rapids, and down into the shadows of the depths below, lit up with their clouds of spray; yet farther down, your sight swims upon the black eddying masses, with white ribands streaming across their glassy surface; and your dizzy eye fastens upon the frail cockle-shells—their stout oarsmen dwindled to pigmies—that dance like atoms upon the vast chasm—or like your own weak resolves upon the whirl of Time.

Your thought, growing broad in the view, seems to cover the whole area of life; you set up your affections and your duties; you build hopes with fairy scenery, and away they all go, tossing like the relentless waters to the deep gulf, that gapes a hideous welcome! You sigh at your weakness of heart, or of endeavor, and your sighs float out into the breeze that rises ever from the shock of the waves, and whirl, empty-handed, to Heaven. You avow high purposes, and clench them with round utterance; and your voice like a sparrow's, is caught up in the roar of the fall, and thrown at you from the cliffs, and dies away in the solemn thunders of nature. Great thoughts of life come over you—of its work and destiny—of its affections and duties, and roll down swift—like the river—into the deep whirl of doubt and danger. Other thoughts grander and stronger, like the continuing rush of waters, come over you, and knit your purposes together with their weight, and crush you to exultant tears, and then leap, shattered and broken, from the very edge of your intent—into mists of fear!

The moon comes out, and gleaming through the clouds, braids its light fantastic bow upon the waters. You feel calmer as the night deepens. The darkness softens you; it hangs—like the pall that shrouds your mother's corpse—low and heavily to your heart. It helps your inward grief, with some outward show. It makes the earth a mourner; it makes the flashing water-drops so many attendant mourners. It makes the Great Fall itself a mourner, and its roar—a requiem!

The pleasure of travel is cut short. To one person of the little company of fellow-voyagers, you bid adieu with regret; pride, love, and hope point toward her, while all the gentler affections stray back to the broken home. Her smiles of parting is very gracious, but it is not after all, such smile as your warm heart pines for.

Ten days after, you are walking toward the old homestead, with such feelings as it never called up before. In the days of boyhood, there were triumphant thoughts of the gladness and the pride, with which, when grown to the stature of manhood, you would come back to that little town of your birth. As you have bent with your dreamy resolutions over the tasks of the cloister life, swift thoughts have flocked on you of the proud step, and prouder heart, with which you would one day greet the old acquaintances of boyhood; and you have regaled yourself on the jaunty manner with which you would meet old Dr. Ridlow; and the patronizing air, with which you would address the pretty, blue-eyed Madge.

It is late in the afternoon when you come in sight of the tall sycamores that shade your home; you shudder now lest you may meet any whom you once knew. The first, keen grief of youth seeks little of the sympathy of companions: it lies—with a sensitive man—bounded within the narrowest circles of the heart. They only who holds the key to its innermost recesses can speak consolation. Years will make a change: as the summer grows in fierce heats, the balminess of the violet banks of Spring, is lost in the odors of a thousand flowers; the heart as it gains in age, loses freshness, but wins breadth.

——Throw a pebble into the brook at its source, and the agitation is terrible, and the ripples chafe madly their narrowed banks; throw in a pebble, when the brook has become a river, and you see a few circles widening, and widening, until they are lost in the gentle, every-day murmur of its life!

You draw your hat over your eyes, as you walk toward the familiar door: the yard is silent: the night is falling gloomily; a few raindrops are spying in the trees. The mother's window, where—at such a season as this, it was her custom to sit watching your play, is shut: and the blinds are closed over it. The honeysuckle which grew over the window, and which she loved so much, has flung out its branches carelessly; and the spiders have hung their foul nets upon its tendrils.

And she, who made that home so dear to your boyhood—so real to your after years—standing amid all the flights of your youthful ambition, and your paltry cares (for they seem paltry now) and your doubts, and anxieties, and weakness of heart, like the light of your hope—burning ever there, under the shadow of the sycamores—a holy beacon, by whose guidance you always came to a sweet haven, and to a refuge from all your toils—is gone—gone forever!

The father is there indeed; belaved, respected, esteemed; but the boyish heart, whose old life is now reviving, leans more readily, and more kindly into that void, where once beat the heart of a mother.

Nelly is there;—cherished now with all the added love that is stricken off from her who has left you forever. Nelly meets you at the door.

——"Clarence!"

——"Nelly!"

There are no other words; but you feel her tears, as the kiss of welcome is given. With your hand joined in her's, you walk down the hall, into the old, familiar room—not with the jaunty, college step—not with any presumption on your dawning manhood—oh, no—nothing of this.

Quietly, meekly, feeling your whole heart shattered, and your mind feeble as a boy's, and your purposes nothing, and worse than nothing—with only one proud feeling, you fling your arm around the form of that gentle sister—the pride of a protector—the feeling—"I will care for you now, dear Nelly!" that is all. And even that, proud as it is, brings weakness.

You sit down together on the lounge; Nelly buries her face in her hands, sobbing.

"Dear Nelly," and your arm clasps her more fondly.

There is a cricket in the corner of the room, chirping very londly. It seems as if nothing else were living—only Nelly, Clarence, and noisy cricket. Your eyes fall on the chair where she used to sit; it is drawn up with the same care as ever, beside the fire.

"I am so glad to see you, Clarence," says Nelly, recovering herself; and there is a sweet, sad smile now. And sitting there beside you, she tells you of it all; of the day, and of the hour; and how she looked, and of her last prayer, and how happy she was.

"And did she leave no message for me, Nelly?"

"Not to forgot us, Clarence; but you could not!"

"Thank you, Nelly; and was there nothing else?"

"Yes, Clarence; to meet her, one day?"

You only press her hand.

Presently your father comes in. He greets you with far more than his usual cordiality. He keeps your hand a long time, looking quietly in your face, as if he were reading traces of some resemblance, that had never struck him before.

The father is one of those calm, impassive men, who shows little upon the surface, and whose feelings you have always thought, cold. But now, there is a tremulousness in his tones that you never remember observing before. He seems conscious of it himself, and forbears talking. He goes to his old seat, and after gazing at you a little while with the same steadfastness as at first, leans forward, and buries his face in his hands.

From that very moment, you feel a sympathy, and a love for him, that you have never known till then. And in after years, when suffering or trial came over you, and when your thoughts fly, as to a refuge, to that shattered home, you will recall that stooping image of the father—with his head bowed, and from time to time trembling convulsively with grief—and felt that there remains yet by the household fires, a heart of kindred love, and of kindred sorrow!

Nelly steals away from you gently, and stepping across the room, lays her hand upon his shoulder, with a touch, that says, as plainly as words could say it: "We are here, father!"

And he rouses himself—passes his arm around her—looks in her face fondly—draws her to him, and prints a kiss upon her forehead.

"Nelly, we must love each other now, more than ever."

Nelly's lips trembled, but she cannot answer; a tear or two go stealing down her cheek.

You approach them; and your father takes your hand again, with a firm grasp—looks at you thoughtfully—drops his eyes upon the fire, and for a moment there is a pause; "We are quite alone, now, my boy!"

——It is a broken Home!

THE ARCTIC REGIONS.—Dr. Kane is at present lecturing in Baltimore on this interesting subject. In one of these lectures he gave the following account of the people who inhabit the polar region around Baffin's Bay:

"The race of people who inhabit the country adjoining to Baffin's Bay and its tributaries are so little known that any thing in relation to them is caught up with avidity. This arrival furnishes us with a sight of some of their distinctive characteristics, in dress and otherwise. The dress of a married lady is composed of a pair of short seal skin pants, fur outside, extending nearly to the knee joint, where it meets with the legs of the boots, made of the same material, of of deer skin. The upper part of the person is covered with a 'jumper,' or a kind of sack, with a hood for the head, and sleeves, made whole, with the exception of a place for the head and arms. This also is made of seal skin, or deer skin, and in the warm weather is covered with a fancy colored cotton cloth sack. In the coldest and wet weather, the cloth sack is removed, and a seal skin covering, without fur, placed in its stead. The dress of an unmarried lady is distinguished by a broad band, made of fancy figured webbing, about two and a half inches wide, sewed on each side of the front of their pants, extending nearly the whole length of them.

"A married woman can also be distinguished from an unmarried one by the hair, which in both cases is tied on the top of the head, and the ends of that of the married colored blue, and of the unmarried, red. This enables a gallant to net the amiable, without danger of making advances to some one already married, and getting a stray shot from an injured husband. The boots are made very neatly, slender, and well proportioned. The deer skins are dressed in a beautiful manner, simply by drying and rubbing them on a smooth stone. A pair of slippers completes the wardrobe of a lady in the Esquimaux country; these are made of deer skins, and neatly fringed around the top with white rabbit's fur. The clothing which was shown us was made in a very tasty and strong manner, every thread used being made of the sinews of the deer, and of course very durable. The dresses of the males are very similar to that of the married ladies, with the exception that they are longer and rather heavier. The Danes are scattered around among the Esquimaux, and furnish them with what foreign articles they may want, which are limited to steels for their spears, and some few ornaments for their dresses, and coloring for their hair and ladies' boots. The seal seems to furnish them with almost every thing they seem to require—food, clothing, and even fuel."

CAPTURE OF THE GUERRIERE.—The following sketch of the celebrated action between the Constitution and the Guerriere is copied from the New York Evening Post, to which paper it was furnished by a "valued correspondent":

Having been an American prisoner on board the Guerriere during the famous battle between that frigate and the United States frigate Constitution, I propose giving you an account of that important action, which took place in June, 1812.

About two weeks previous to the engagement I left Boston in an American ship, which was captured by the Guerriere, some five days before she fell in with the Constitution.

It was about ten o'clock in the morning when the Constitution was discovered. The Guerriere hove to, to gumble her to come up. As the Constitution neared us, Captain Dacres handed me his glass, and, asked me what I took her to be. My reply was, "She looks like a frigate." Very soon she came within reach of the long guns of the Guerriere, which were fired, but with no effect, as the sea ran high. The Constitution made no reply, but, as I saw, was maneuvring for a position, during which Captain Dacres said to me, "Do you think she is going to strike without firing?" I replied, "I think not, sir."

At this moment, seeing a severe contest was about commencing, in which I could take no part, being only a prisoner, I raised my hat to Captain Dacres and said to him, "With your permission, sir, I will go below, as I can take no part." "Oh, certainly," said he, "and you had better go into the cock-pit, and should any of our men chance to get wounded, I shall feel obliged if you will assist the surgeons in dressing them." "Certainly, sir," said I, and then descended into the cock-pit. There were the surgeons and surgeons' mates and attendants, sitting around a long table covered with instruments and all necessaries for dressing the wounded, as still as a funeral. Within one moment after my foot left the lower round of the ladder the Constitution gave that double broadside, which threw all in the cock-pit over in a heap on the opposite side of the ship.

For a moment it appeared as if heaven and earth had struck together; a more terrific shock can not be imagined. Before those in the cock-pit had adjusted themselves, the blood ran down from the deck as freely as if a wash-tub full had been turned over, and instantly the dead, wounded and dying were handed down as rapidly as men could pass them, till the cock-pit was filled, with hardly room for the surgeons to work. Midshipmen were handed down with one leg, some with one arm, and others wounded in almost every shape and condition. An officer who was on the table, having his arm amputated, would sing out to a comrade coming down wounded, "Well, shipmate, how goes the battle?" Another would utter some joke that would make even the dying smile, and so constant and freely were the playful remarks from the maimed and even dying, that I almost doubted my own senses. Indeed, all this was crowded into a space of not over fifteen or twenty minutes, before the firing ceased. I then went upon deck, and what a scene was presented, and how changed in so short a time!

The Constitution looked perfectly fresh—and, even at this time, those on board the Guerriere did not know what ship had fought them. On the other hand, the Guerriere was a mere rolling log—almost entirely at the mercy of the sea. Her colors all shot away, her main-mast and mizen-mast both gone by the board, and her foremast standing by the mere honey-comb the shot had made. Capt. Dacres stood, with his officers, surveying the scene—all, all in the most perfect astonishment. At this moment a boat was seen putting off from the hostile ship for the Guerriere. As soon as within speaking distance, a young gentleman (Midshipman Read, now Commodore Read, hailed and said, "I wish to see the officer in command of this ship."

At this, Captain Dacres stepped forward and answered. Midshipman Read then said: "Commodore Hull's compliments, and wishes to know if you have struck your flag?"

At this Captain Dacres appeared amazed, but, recovering himself, and looking up and down, he deliberately replied: "Well, I don't know; our mizen-mast is gone, our main-mast is gone; and upon the whole, you may say we have struck our flag!"

"Commodore Hull's compliments, and wishes to know if you need the assistance of a surgeon or surgeon's mate?"

Captain Dacres replied: "Well, I should suppose you had on board your own ship business enough for all your medical officers."

Midshipman Read replied: "Oh, no; we have only seven wounded, and they were dressed half an hour ago."

Captain Dacres then turned to me, deeply affected, and said: "How have our situations been suddenly reversed! You are now free, and I a prisoner!"

All the boats of both ships were now put in requisition to remove the wounded on board the Constitution. So dreadful was the condition of many of them, that two days were nearly consumed in the removal; after which the Guerriere was burned, with all her stores, armament, etc. The Constitution having recently come out of port, had no room to take scarcely an article.

Who can imagine the joy I experienced in finding myself again under American colors, or the pride I felt, at finding, from Commodore Hull down to the most humble man on board, an entire absence of everything like a boastful or even a triumphant look, at their wonderful victory. Captain Dacres kept his state-room till we arrived in port. About two hundred of his men were necessarily ironed, as the ship was so crowded. Charles Morris, (now Commodore,) the first officer of the Constitution, had a ball through his body, and for several days his recovery was doubtful; during which he sent for me to come to his room, and I well remember his perfect uneoneern for himself, although the surgeon had apprised him of his danger. Every courtesy and kindness was by Captain Hull and his officers extended to their prisoners.

On Sunday, about noon, the Constitution arrived in Boston harbor. I was sent on shore in the boat. The harbor between the ship and wharves was now covered with boats to learn the news. To the first boat that we neared, we hailed, 'The Constitution has captured the Guerriere.' Instantly the two men in the boat took off their hats and violently struck them on the side of the boat, and, rising, gave cheer upon cheer. They hailed other boats, and thus the air was rent with cheers, and the victory passed along till it reached the wharf, and then spread like wild-fire all over the city and country.

It is now nearly forty years since the transaction of that day proved to the Americans that British frigates were not invincible. Who can remember that day, without feeling a glow of pride, that so early in the war, and in a manner so unprecending, a victory so perfect should have been achieved! I write this statement without notes, but believe it to be, in the main, accurate.

In justice to Captain Dacres, I add, that there was none of the boasting on his part during the action, which has to him been attributed, as he did not know the ship, till Midshipman Read announced her name and commander.

THE LITERARY CAREER OF LOUIS NAPOLEON.—The notorious usurper, as is generally known, has figured somewhat largely as an author. He is a man of books, as well as acts. We will notice some of his exploits in the field of letters, before mounting his high political horse, at the head of the army. His first publication was entitled "Political Reveries." It appeared in 1832. At that time, Constitution-making was all the rage, and Louis Napoleon could not resist the fancy of trying his hand. His programme consisted of Universal Suffrage, Two Chambers, an Emperor as head of the Executive, and Hereditary Transmission, sanctioned by the people. "Such a Government," he maintained, "would be strong without despotism, free without anarchy, and independent without conquest." This work was afterwards regarded by the author as an exaggerated, youthful effusion.

His next production, entitled "Political and Military Considerations on Switzerland," appeared in 1833. The Swiss Government gave him the freedom of a citizen in token of acknowledgment.

In the year 1834 Louis Napoleon was appointed Captain of Artillery, with the exercises of which he had always been quite familiar. The next year he published "A Manual of Artillery," describing the details of the science in all its branches.

"Napoleonic Ideas" was published in 1839, subsequent to the affair of Strasburg, his voyage to America, his return to Europe, the debates relating to him between Switzerland and France, and his residence in England. This gave a greater publicity to that work than to either of the preceding. The "Ideas" compose a kind of disquisition on Imperial Government, maintaing its compatibility with freedom and peace.

"Historical Fragments" was the first work written during his imprisonment. This appeared in 1841. Its subject is a comparison between the French Revolution of 1830 and the English Revolution of 1688.

In 1842 he published "Analysis of the Sugar Question," a copy of which was sent to each member of both Chambers.

The same year was published "Extinction of Pauperism," in which he maintains the policy of establishing agricultural colonies in all regions yet uncultivated. In reply to an address of thanks from an old working man, Louis Napoleon says: "An expression of sympathy on the part of the people is a thousand times more valuable to me than all the official flatteries which are lavished on those in power by the parties of every Government. I shall always labor in the interest of the masses of the people, which, although the source of all rights and of all wealth, is without political rights as well as without a secure position."

"The Past and the Future of Artillery" was published in 1848. This treats of the effect of artillery on military operations since the invention of gunpowder, and on the technical details of the science.

Besides these, there is a multitude of his legislative productions; Letters on Politics, History, etc. Translations from the German, especially from Schiller, and various articles in periodicals. It is hardly time, we fear, for him to become a fugitive production himself. [New York Tribune.

WHAT MAY BE DONE WITH OLD RAGS.—There is a church actually existing, near Bergen, which can contain nearly one thousand persons. It is circular within, octagonal without. The relieves outside, and the statues within, the roof, the ceiling, the Corinthian capitals, are all of papier mache, rendered water-proof by saturation in vitriol, lime water, whey and white of eggs. We have not yet reached this pitch of audacity in our use of paper; but it should hardly surprise us, inasmuch as we employ the same material in private houses, in steamboats, and in some public buildings, instead of carved decorations and plaster cornices. When Frederick the Second, of Prussia, set up a limited papier mache manufactory at Berlin, in 1765, he little thought that paper cathedrals might, within a century, spring out, of his snuff-boxes, by the slight-of-hand of advancing art. At present, we old-fashioned English, who haunt cathedrals and build churches, like stone better. But there is no saying what we may come to. It is not very long since it would have seemed as impossible to cover eighteen acres of ground with glass, as to erect a pagoda of soap bubbles; yet the thing is done. When we think of a psalm sung by one thousand voices pealing through an edifice made of old rags, and the universal element bound down to carry our messages with the speed of light, it would be presumptuous to say what can and what cannot be achieved by science and art under the training of steady old Time. [Dickens's Household Words.

CHAPEAUX.—We commend to the attention of our military friends the following extract from a recent publication, entitled "The Old Guard of Napoleon":

"One day, after a review of the troops, Napoleon, standing in the Hall of the Marshals, surrounded by the chiefs of the separate corps, broke out into one of those biting sarcasms which so often made those whose who heard them. He began with hats. 'Decidedly, gentlemen,' said he, 'I do not wish to see my troops any more wear chapeaux. It is always placed on the head in such a manner as to make a gutter of one corner. It is as disagreeable to the sight as injurious to the health of the soldier. It is ridiculous in a day of rain or great heat, or as to-day, when we have had both together, to see a soldier covered with a narrow hat, badly shaped, which protects the face from neither sun nor rain. One only needed to see them in Italy and Egypt; poor fellows! I suffered for them."

LAZIEST YET.—During the summer of 1846, corn being scarce in the upper country, and one of the citizens being hard pressed for bread, having worn threadbare the hospitality of his generous neighbors by his extreme laziness, they thought it an act of charity to bury him. Accordingly he was carried towards the place of interment, and being met by one of the citizens, the following conversation took place:

"Hallo! what have you there?"

"Poor old Mr. S."

"What are you going to do with him?"

"Bury him."

"What! is he dead? I hadn't heard of his death."

"No, he is not dead; but he might as well be, for he has no corn and is too lazy to work for any."

"That is too cruel for civilized people; I'll give him two bushels of corn myself, rather than see him buried alive."

Mr. S. raised the cover and asked, in his usual dragging tone, "Is it s-h-e-l-l-e-d?"

"No, but you can soon shell it."

"D-r-i-v-e on, h-o-y-s."

WHAT WHALERS CAN DO.—The Polynesian of Dec. 6, under the above caption, says: By the following extract from the log of the American whale-ship Saratoga, Capt. E. Harding, it will be seen, says the Polynesian, that he attained a higher northern latitude than had previously been explored. Captain Beechy in the Blossom, in 1826, reached the latitude of 70 deg. 30 minutes, in his ship, and explored with his boats to the 71st deg. 25 minutes. Captain Harding has therefore been ten miles further north than Captain Beechy, or any other navigator of whom we have now a recollection.

"September 1, 1851, lat. 71 deg. 50 minutes north, long. 159 deg. 40 minutes west, 271 deg. north, the depth of water was six fathoms. Proceeding to the northward and eastward, the depth of the water gradually increased to 30 fathoms. Experienced here severe gales, with a heat of 15 miles between packed ice, to the northward and westward, and land to the southward and eastward. In the bite, saw whales in great numbers, gradually working north. The Saratoga on her return passed Behring's Straits on the first of October; navigating with much difficulty through ice, with heavy gales."

Most of the oil procured in 1850, was taken in from lat. 68 deg. to 70 deg. north, long. 165 deg. west. The observation of Captain Harding, of large numbers of whales in lat. 71 deg., and that they were still pushing on north, will indicate where these "delicate monsters" are to be looked for another season. All the whales taken by the Saratoga, were in these high latitudes.

CANAL THROUGH FLORIDA.—Resolutions favorable to the construction of a Ship Canal through Florida, and calling upon Congress to undertake the work, have passed the lower branch of the Alabama Legislature. The subject is worthy of the consideration of our own Legislature.

DR. NOTT.—The 98th anniversary of the birth of this celebrated divine, was recently celebrated by himself and numerous friends at his house in Franklin.

TOM PAINE'S BIRTHDAY.—An omnium gatherum of all sorts of people, and, as it appears, of both sexes, met in New York, on the evening of the 29th ult., to celebrate the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of Paine's birth-day by a ball and supper in the City Assembly Rooms. Such proceedings and speeches as were promulgated on the occasion are not likely to promote Paine's posthumous popularity. Among other toasts was the following:

Woman—Through her influence man partook of the tree of knowledge. Though driven from the garden where it grew, she gained knowledge enough to make an Eden where ever she may be.

To this toast a Mrs. Rose, a Polish lady, responded—and gallantry for the sex forbids any other remark than the bare announcement.

NEW BANK.—A bill to charter a new bank at Huntsville, has passed the Alabama Legislature.

PAID.—The Messrs. Brown, of Brown's Hotel, Washington, have received $4500 for entertaining Kossuth and suite during their visit to the Capital.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—The contributions to the Washington Monument during the month of January amount to $1,045 13. Blocks have been received from the State of Mississippi and from the city of New Bedford.

SALEM RAILROAD.—Seven miles of this Railroad is now traversed by a locomotive, and the laying of the track onward is progressing rapidly.

THE QUEEN OF SPAIN.—It is stated that Queen Isabella is so delighted at becoming a mother, that she has announced her intention of increasing her family, and has forbidden her subjects to take the customary oath of allegiance to the first princess, as she "hopes to present that nation with a son very shortly."

THE CUBAN PRISONERS.—The bill appropriating ten thousand dollars for the relief and passage home from Spain of the pardoned Lopez prisoners—provided that nothing in the act should be construed into an approbation of any interference in the domestic affairs of Cuba by any of the citizens of the United States—passed the House of Representatives on 29th January, by a vote of 91 to 71.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.—Rev. T. L. Skinner, a venerable old man, 84 years of age, died suddenly on the evening of the 29th ult., while attending a lecture by the Rev. Mr. Eggleston, at Mr. Beecher's Church, Brooklyn. His daughter observed him lean forward, to take off his rubbers, as she supposed, and not stirring for some time, she shook him, when it was discovered that he was dead. The deceased was a native of Connecticut, but was pastor of a church for many years, in Frostburg, Maryland, whence he removed to Brooklyn about a year ago.

STEAMERS TO IRELAND.—The New York and Galway Steamship Company, whose proposals were brought to the attention of the United States Senate the other day by Mr. Stockton, are to consist of four first-class ocean steamships, of not less than 2000 tons measurement, of the approved American clipper model, with all the modern improvements for speed, safety, and comfort to passengers, to run from Jersey City and New York to Galway, stopping at St. John's, Newfoundland, on the completion of the telegraph to that port, from whence European news could be sent to New Orleans in six days after leaving London, as Galway is only 1647 miles, or five and a half days running time from St. John's.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.—Mr. Whitney, of Pacific Railroad celebrity, has recently announced, through the New York Journal of Commerce, that it is his intention to accept the proposition of England to construct the proposed road across the British portion of North America, unless our present Congress should encourage him in his original design.

William Channcey Langdon, who has lately become attached to the United State Patent Office at Washington, is now (though occupying the part of a scientific officer under the government, barely twenty years of age—he first became interested in astronomy at the age of twelve years, which at fourteen, by the count of 1846, and the lectures of Dr. Lardner, which made their appearance there simultaneously.

From the Portland Transcript.

OUR KATY.... By EMILY B. PAUL.

There's a pattering of light footsteps
Across the sanded floor,
And a face like the laughing sunshine
Peeps in at the half-shut door;
'Tis a vision of dream-like beauty,
With tresses of pale gold,
And eyes like the violet blossoms
That first to the Spring unfold.

With a brow like the first pure snow-flake
That floats to the frozen earth,
And lips all dimpled, and parting
With a smile of bewitching mirth;
Half hid by the trembling shadow
That robes her mystical grace,
I've seen through the opening portal
The light of her beautiful face.

One look of endearing welcoming
And I fold in my sheltering arms
And hide on my thrilling bosom
The wealth of her glowing charms;
One moment she lends her sweet presence,
One moment she lingers and smiles,
And the light of her loving spirit
The gloom of my heart beguiles.

Then away, with a fawn-like footstep,
She glides o'er the sanded floor,
And the voice of her silvery laughter
Floats back through the open door.
She is gone, like a gush of music
Breathed out in the pathless air,
Like a rainbow, that archeth the heavens
To bend but a moment there.

Yet there dwells in my lonesome spirit
The light which her gladness brought,
And my soul with a thousand bright visions
And a thousand sweet fancies is fraught.

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURE.—But few of our readers are prepared for the declaration that the annual manufacture of shoes and boots in Massachusetts, for the Southern market, exceeds twenty millions of dollars! Yet such is said to be the fact; and it is one which should rouse our capitalists to the necessity of making an effort, to secure a portion at least of this very profitable business to our city. [N. Y. Courier.

Well, why should it not "rouse" our Southern "capitalists to the necessity of making an effort" to make the whole "business" a strictly home trade!

THE FORREST DIVORCE CASE.—The argument on the motion to enter judgment of divorce, and to allow, as to defendant, the making of a case, or to enter a bill of exceptions, resulted in an order of the Court granting a judgment of divorce and allowance to Mrs. Forrest of $3000 a year from the commencement of the suit. (payment on the voluntary allowance of $1500 a year to be credited from that time.) Mrs. Forrest is to resign her right in dower, and Mr. F. is at liberty, if he can do so, to give satisfactory security for the $3000 a year, instead of its being a lien upon his real estate.

FLORIDA RAILROAD.—We learn from the Tallahassee Floridian that about $120,000 of the stock in the Florida Central Railroad have already been taken. This, with $80,000 guaranteed by the State, brings the amount up to $200,000. The Floridian believes that this is not half the stock that can and will be taken, as soon as it is known that the work will be certainly carried out. The commissioners have issued a call for a meeting of the stockholders, on the 11th inst., for the purpose of choosing directors.

A NEW POSTAGE BILL.—The following is the substance of a bill introduced into the House of Representatives, by Dr. Olds, to amend the postage law:

The bill abolishes the complex tariff on newspapers existing in the Post-office department, and substitutes a rate of one cent on all printed matter, whether newspapers or any thing else, weighing over two ounces and a half, and one cent for each additional ounce, or fraction of an ounce. This is for distances less than two thousand miles; beyond that distance twice this rate is to be charged. Newspapers sent to regular subscribers from the office of publication, which weigh less than half an ounce are to be charged at half these rates. The postage is to be paid in advance, either at the place where the printed matter is mailed, or at the office where it is delivered. The postage on occasional newspapers, etc., is to be considered as unpaid, unless it be paid in advance, at the place where they are mailed. Books not weighing over four pounds may be sent by mail. Publishers of newspapers may send a single copy of their publications to each other, and forward bills and receipts free with the newspapers to their subscribers.

MISSING EMIGRANT VESSELS.—Three vessels with nearly one thousand emigrants, which left the port of Dublin for New York early in October last, have not since been heard of, and very serious apprehensions prevail for their safety.

We learn from a late English paper, that the ship Senator, with upwards of 300 famigrants on board, which sailed from Liverpool on the 5th of November for New York, had arrived at Foyal on the 10th ult., in distress, having been dismasted in a violent gale, which she encountered 10 or 12 days after leaving the British channel. She had been baffled about on the ocean for nearly a month, and no doubt there was immense suffering on board.

J. G. BRADLEY'S FACTS OF COLONIZATION.—The Cincinnati papers state that a letter has been addressed by James G. Birney, to a colored convention at that place, declaring in favor of the emigration of the blacks in this country to Africa, as a refuge from their inferior condition here, and as presenting the best promise of their future elevation and happiness. A change has recently taken place in Mr. B.'s mind on this subject, and the fact is both significant and important.

A GOOD HIT.—The Boston Transcript says that Gov Everett, in his admirable lecture before the Mercantile Library Association in that city, related the following incident, which occurred during his residence in London as American Minister:

He received official notice from the authorities of one of the inland counties of England that an American was confined in one of their public institutions. He was represented as a sailor, half pauper and half rogue, who would be released from confinement upon condition that he would be taken in charge, and provided for by Mr. Everett. A reply was sent to the local authorities to send along the destitute American, though he would be of little use in either of his capacities of pauper or rogue; still he could be aided and sent home by the American Consul, as a distressed seaman.

It was found, said Mr. Everett, to be the medium of relieving the British Empire of the burden of supporting one of my countrymen, and I could but add in my letter—in answer to their local authorities—that, were the English Minister resident at Washington, to take charge of all the British subjects who were in the public institutions in the United States, as rogues and paupers, he would have an increase of his official duties."

DISCOVERY.—The Roman papers say that a prophecy of St. Malachy was last month discovered in the Vatican Library of Rome, which predicts that there are only to be nine Popes after the year 1851.

EDITORIAL CHANGE.—Mr. Blackburn has withdrawn from the Minden (La.) Herald.

TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION.—The temperance people of the State of New York, recently had a monster procession at Albany. A petition to the Legislature to abolish the rum traffic, containing between two and three hundred thousand names is to be presented. A women's temperance convention was held at Albany on the 28th ult.

BIBLES.... BIBLES,

JOHN BALL,

No, 56 Gravier street,

Has just received one of the LARGEST and BEST assortments of Bibles and Prayer Books ever brought to this city.

FAMILY BIBLES, at from $1 50 to $50 per copy.
OCTAVO BIBLES, at from $1 to $10, in various styles of binding.
SMALL BIBLES, with and without references, of velvet bindings, gold bands and clasps. Turkey morocco, antique, clasps and bands.
CHEAP SCHOOL BIBLES AND TESTAMENTS...oct 4 tf

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

The old and favorite stand, corner of Camp, Duplantier and Peytonia Streets, is now well furnished with a stock of Shoes and Boots of every variety.

Customers and strangers faithfully served with good bargains and a good fit, from Monday morning until Saturday night.

N. B.—Please remember that I do not open on Sunday. Therefore call during the week.

fe 6 JOSEPH SCHILLING.

E. C. ESTES.

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

New York.

Purchases every description of MERCHANDISE on orders from merchants, planters and others, either for cash or on credit, embracing Dry Goods, Clothing, Hardware, Pianos, Carriages, Furniture, Machinery, Planters' Utensils, and indeed every thing the market affords.

Consignments of any Produce, promptly and faithfully attended to.

——REFERS TO——

Messrs. Wightman & Summers, Editors Southern Christian Advocate, Charleston.
Rev. John B. McFerrin, Editor Nashville Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.
Editor New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Messrs. J. O. Nelson & Co., New Orleans.
Messrs. Cherry, Henderson & Co., New Orleans.
Messrs. Lowe, Pattison & Co., New Orleans.
Mr. Wm. Eckford, Mobile, Ala.
Messrs. Weaver, Mullin & Co., Mobile, Ala.
Col. James E. Saunders, Mobile, Ala.
A. O. Harris, Esq., Memphis, Tenn.
W. B. Cooke, Elysian Fields, Texas.
W. B. Johnston & Bro., Centreville, Texas.
G. W. Prince, Liberty, Texas. jy23

MADAME DE REIGNE'S

SELECT SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES.

No. 5 Pontalba Buildings.

TERMS.

For instruction in the English and French Languages, Elocution, Ancient and Modern History, Geography, the use of the Globes, Mathematics, Writing, etc., pupils under twelve years of age, per month.....$10 00
Over twelve years of age.....12 00
Ancient and Modern Languages, each.....4 00
Music on the Piano Forte.....12 00
Other accomplishments at the usual charges.
New Orleans, January, 1852. ja17

BREWSTER & CO.,

CARRIAGE WAREHOUSE,

No. 11 Gravier street, rear St. Charles Hotel, and 105 St. Charles street.

SOLICIT the attention of purchasers to their extensive and varied assortment of

CARRIAGES AND HARNESS

Which they offer at the very lowest prices for cash or approved paper. They are constantly receiving from their New York house, No. 336 Broadway, (the oldest Carriage Repository in the United States,) a variety of

NEW YORK CITY MADE CARRIAGES,

Some of which are of entirely new and original designs. Also, plainer, but equally substantial vehicles, from the same reputable Eastern manufacturers.

Particular attention will be given to the covering and shipment of Carriages, to insure prompt and safe delivery fe 6-6m

A Great Work for the People.

EIGHTH EDITION.

HUNGARY AND KOSSUTH.

By H. F. TEFFT, D. D., President of Tennessee College, New York, in one volume, 12 mo., with portrait. Price, ONE DOLLAR per copy. JOHN BALL, 56 Gravier st.

☞ Active Canvassers, on application, can find employment for the sale of this popular and timely publication.

☞ Any newspaper giving the above a few insertions, shall receive a copy of the work, free of postage. fe 6

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DR. L. PIERCE, of Columbus, Georgia, respectfully calls the attention of Physicians, Druggists and dealers in Medicine to

EPPING'S EXTRACT OF BUCHU.

This excellent remedy for all

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KENDIG, W. E. DUTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLME II. NUMBER 3. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 55.

Divin Revelation.

IWPER.

All truth is from thscmpiternal sonrce
Of light Divine. It Egypt, Greece and Rome
Drew from the strcm below. More tavorst we Drink, when we chose it, at the fountain head.
To them it flowed much mingled and defiled.
With hurtful error, rejudice and dreams.
Illusive of philosophy so-called,
But falsely. Sages after sages strove
In vain to filter off a mystal draught
Pure from the lees, which often much enhanced
The thirst that slaked it, and not seldom bred
Infatuation and diliraim wild.
In vain they pushed inquiry to the birth
And spring time of the world; asked Whence is man?
Why formed at all? and wherefore as he is?
Where must he end? Is soul his Maker? with what rites
Adore him? Will he hear, accept, and bless?
Or does he sit regardless of his works?
Has man within him an immortal seed?
Or does the tomb take all? If he survive
His ashes, where? and in what weal or woe
Knots worthy of solution, which alone
A Deity could solve. Their answers vague
And all at random, fabulous and dark,
Left them as dark themselves. Their rules of life
Defective and unsanctioned, proved too weak
To bind the roving appetite, and lead
Blind nature to a God not yet revealed.
'Tis Revelation satisfies all doubts,
Explains all mysteries, except her own,
And so illuminates the path of life,
That fools discover it and stray no more.
Who tell me, dignified and sapient sir,
My man of morals, nurtured in the shades
Of Academus—is this fable or true?
Is Christ the nbler teacher, or the schools?
If Christ, then why resort at every turn
To Athens, or to Rome, for wisdom short
Of man's occasions, when in Him reside
Peace, Knowledge, Comfort—an infathomable store?
Or oft when Paul has served us with a text,
Has Epictetus, Plato, Tully preached?
Men, at if now alive, would sit content
And learn of fallible learners of a Saviour's worth, Preach who might Such was their love of trut.

Their thir of knowledge; and their candor too!

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

LONDON, JANUARY 8, 1852.

Since my last letter to you, the European plot has thickened.

Never did a minister, and certainly at no period of his long ministerial career, did Lord Palmerston seem to be more firmly established in office than this very moment, when the public was astounded at the announcement, in the Times of the resignation

Ag[ain] As to all matters of this nature the leading journal, however (counts by its information, is, when positive, almost infallible. Otherwise the announcement would have been at once rejected as incredible. Incredible as it might have appeared, it was, notwithstanding, precisely true. It consequence of internal disagreements, the Cabinet had found it necessary for Lord Palmerston to resign.

That Palmerston, was a great favorite at home there can be no doubt: personally he was incomparably the most popular of all the ministers, and even in his official character, he possessed the confidence of the great bulk of the nation, whilst those do did not trust him could not help admiring and liking him. The aristocrats he charmed by his elegance, suavity, and esprit, as wells conciliated by the conservative moderation of his views on points of home politics; the more advanced liberals, on the other hand, aplauded his manifestos against foreign despotism, his remonstrances with Austria and Naples, his jealous watchfulness of the Russian Autocrat, his friendly behavior towards Kosuth. Whilst all classes could not but admire the frank kindliness and never-failing gentlemanly courtesy of his manners, his patriotism—for whatever may have been his faults or his errors, he was always true, to his character as an Englishman and as a British Minister—and his eminent tact and ability as a Parliamentary debater and orator. With all his popularity, however, and notwithstanding his rare and undeniable ministorial acquirements and abilities, Lord Palmerston has been compelled to quit office.

The necessity has not arisen from public opinion at home; it must therefore have originated either from the condition and requirements of our foreign politics, or from some internal cabinet difficulties, or from both of these causes in conjunction.

That Lord Palmerston, much as he has been and is admired at home, is viewed with very different feelings almost universally abroad, is no secret to any one. But it is impossible to suppose that his general foreign policy can have been displeasing to his colleagues, who, indeed, (Lord John Russell especially and most emphatically,) have at various times, and on one signal occasion within the last two years, expressed their full approbation of it. Besides, a semi-official announcement has, since his retirement, appeared in a ministerial journal, most distinctly declaring that the same line of policy will be followed by the Earl Granville, Lord Palmerston's accomplished successor, as by Lord Palmerston himself. It is, however, very possible that in a number of minor transactions, and in some particulars of tone, time and manner, relating to transactions of principal importance, Lord Palmerston's dispatches and diplomacy may not have been such as to command the approval of his colleagues. It appears, too, that he has acted very much apart from the other members of the cabinet, although they have shared with him the public responsibility of his proceedings, and that even the Prime Minister himself has found him a troublesome independent colleague. For some time past there has been a coolness and distance between these great personages; the Foreign Minister has found himself, moreover, excluded from the confidence and hospitalities of his Royal Mistress. The Parisian coup d'etat brought matters to a crisis. The Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary took quite different views of this event, the latter giving to it, as it is said, his unqualified approval, and, apart from each other, the two great men were holding with Paris communications of a contrary tenor. They and their respective agents in Paris were thus playing a game of cross purposes, and Lord Normanby, our Ambassador there, who seems to have directly or indirectly received advices from both parties, was placed between them in a situation of unenviable perplexity

This was a state of things which, of course, could not be suffered to continue. A cabinet meeting was suddenly summoned, and Lord Palmerston retired.

What we know more than the above reference to this business is confined to negatives. It was not, we are most positively assured by the Times, either the influence of the Grays (as unpopular throughout the British empire as Palmerston was popular,) or the power of Austria or both united which compelled the Foreign Secretary to resign. Britain is thankful to be assured of this, for it would never be endured that Palmerston should be a sacrifice either to the private animosity of the much disliked Grey-clan, or to the political animosity of the hated Austrian despotism.

Earl Granville, who succeeds Lord Palmerston, has no high a reputation, not only in Britain, but throughout Europe, that the fall of the latter noblemen is less felt and deplored than otherwise it would be. Still the retirement of Lord Palmerston (and with him of his Under-Secretary,) has given such a shock to the Cabinet as to dislocate its parts and perplexed its relations, that many look for the eventual resignation of the Whig ministry. By the bye, talking of ministerial appointments, Earl Granville held several appointments, now of course vacant, and how to fill up these, and the Under-Secretaryship, is now the problem. Lord John, it is thought, will look to the Peelites.

I noticed in your journal for Nov. 29, a paragraph so curiously incorrect, that I take this opportunity of supplying authentic information. Frederick Peel, the second son (I believe,) of the late Sir Robert Peel, is a young man of great ability and promise. He is not yet twenty-eight years of age, neither is he member for Tamworth. The eldest son, the present Sir R. Peel, is now, I believe, twenty-nine years of age, and is member for Tamworth, in his father's place. He has been a gay, and is still a hot-headed and rather coarse young man, but is by no means destitute of ability. He is a fluent and rather effective speaker. Frederic Peel, the recently appointed Under Secretary, is not and never has been a Radical, but both before and since his father's death has sat and voted of the Conservatives—the Free-Trade Conservatives, otherwise called the Peelites, including such distinguished men as Sir James Graham, Mr Gladstone, the (late) Earl of Lincoln (now in the upper house as Duke of Newcastle,) Mr. Cardwell, the (late,) Lord Francis Egerton (now in the upper house as Earl of Ellesmere,) &c. So nearly, however, does the political creed of the Peelite party approximate to that of the moderate Whigs, who constitute our present government, that it must be rather personal feelings, habits, and recollections, that keep them still apart, than any important difference of political opinion.

Kossuth's late colleagues in office, Prince Esterhazy and Count Louis Batthyany, have during the last few weeks addressed the public on the affairs of Hungary and the merits of Kossuth. Both agree that Kossuth's mobility of character, and the extremes to which he pushed his views and purposes, were the occasion of his country's ruin. On these matters Batthyany has a paramount claim to be heard. He and his brother have for years, par noble fratrum, been the noblest names amongst Hungarian patriots and statesmen. They have been throughout dignified, consistent, disinterested. They have never stooped to court the incense of popular adulation. They have adhered to their country's cause with a constant bravery and unwavering loftiness superior to the bearing of Kossuth. They know nothing of the arts of demagogues, though possessing the eloquence which might have served such occupation; but they possess their nations unaltered veneration and love. The lustre of their fame shines with "purest ray serene." What then says Batthyany of Kossuth? I quote a part of his judgment, be it remembered, not of a despot's minion, but of a noble Hungarian patriot:

"And in asserting that, with the exception of a contemptible faction, it was at the commencement the loyal intention of every one in Hungary, to maintain the union with Austria, I do not—whatever may have been done since—exclude Kossuth himself.

"The very versatility of his mind and temper, which makes him embrace every novelty with so much ardour and such sanguine expectations, is the best proof that, although stamped by nature for an agitator, he was honest and sincere in this respect, and would have remained so had Austria kept her side of the bargain. Besides, what could have induced any man of common sense in Hungary at that period to overstep the bounds of constitutional legality, the attainment of which had been the constant aim of so many Diets, and which was for the first time fully sanctioned and supported by guarantees which it was fondly hoped would render such a desirable state permanent—at a time, too, when he who had provoked a struggle would have been left alone, because the country had every thing to lose and nothing to gain by it? Yes, I repeat, Kossuth himself was sincerely desirous of keeping up the connection with Austria on the terms that had been agreed to. But when the underhand practices that had been carried on could no longer be concealed; when unexpected Blows were dealt in the dark with the intention of wearing Hungary out and exhausting her strength and patience in fruitless struggles, then it was that Kossuth's impetuous and restless temper and inherent weakness of his character and laxity of principle predominated over his better feelings. Ambition and a hankering after notoriety, and the suppleness with which he always yielded to the most pressing and least scrupulous, placed him first in contradiction with himself, and then involved him—and it may be said, also, the other Ministers in an inconsistent policy, and finally led him to the self-willed and arbitrary measures which accelerated the Fall of the Batthyany Ministry. It is unnecessary to charge a man with more failings and follies than he has been guilty of. Kossuth has already enough to answer for before the tribunal of public opinion respecting his political conduct, what was unquestionably the main cause of the ruin and downfall of his country.

"Deficient in the knowledge of men and things, in the steadfast bearing, cool judgment, and comprehensive mind of a statesman, and without the firm hand of a ruler; setting at naught all sound calculation while he played a game of chance and staked the fate of the nation on the cast of a die; encountering danger with hair-brained temerity when distant, but shrinking from it when near; elated and overbearing in prosperity, but utterly prostrate in adversity; wanting the strength and intrepidity of character that alone commands homage and obedience from others, while he suffered himself to be made the tool of every intriguer he came in connection with; mistaking his manifold accomplishments and natural genius for an aptitude to govern a country in times of trouble; and setting, in the flights of fancy, no bounds to the scope of his ambition, Kossuth hurried away the nation into a course of the most impolitic measures, and grasped the highest power in the realm by dubious means; but when, scarcely in possession of it suffered it to be wrested from his hands by the man whom he had himself most injudiciously raised to high station, and against whom, although he had received repeated warnings as well as proofs of his treachery and worthlessness, he never dared openly and boldly to proceed—by the man whom he had hoped to ensnare while he crouched beneath him in abject fear, but by whom he was finally outwitted.

* * * * * * *

"He would have acted more wisely and rendered a more essential service to his country, if, after his liberation from the thraldom of detention, he had appeared before the world in the simple character of a private individual. The conspicuous part which he took in the affairs of his country, and his subsequent misfortunes, would have secured general respect, while the modesty of his demeanor, by effacing from the minds of his countrymen the recollection of the faults and errors he committed, and through which Hungary has been brought to her present state of a precedence by courtesy among his companions in exile, and placed him in a position to receive that useful advice and assistance which they would have gladly offered him for the purpose of hereafter repairing by a course of sound and moral policy the injuries inflicted on the land of his birth. But instead of acting in this manner, he has set himself up as the Dictator of his countrymen. It is, therefore, the sacred duty of those who, although far from wishing to fetter his activity, are not disposed to admit his claims, publicly to protest against his proceedings. Without dwelling any longer on the weighty motives for caution which may be deduced from his past career, I will merely observe that his pretensions to be still regarded as Governor is more barefaced from the circumstances attending his resignation. The circumstances are these: He was summoned by Georgi and three members of the ministry to resign. He instantly complied, and resigned the Governorship without convening the Council of State, that he was bound by law to consult on every important occasion. He resigned without intimating his intention of doing so to the other three ministers, (of whom I was one) and who were, consequently, quite unaware of the fact. He did not resign his authority into the hands of the ministers, as under such circumstances he was bound to do, but into the hands of Georgi. He even invested Georgi with a power and authority, with which he had not invested himself—viz: the dictatorship. He delegated a power which he only held himself personally, and, in fact provisionally, by a direct mandate of the Diet. He resigned in the name of the ministry, which he had no right whatever to do.

"Although it may be safely affirmed that he was in a state of moral and physical coercion when he gave in his resignation, it must be borne in mind that he voluntarily confirmed this act when he was free from all restraint, and could never be persuaded to resume his abandoned power, neither at Lugos, in the midst of General Bem's army, nor subsequently at Mehadia, when Bem earnestly requested him to do so, and try the last chance that remained of success; to which request he again returned a negative answer in writing. By thus acting, he abandoned Hungary to her fate, and exposed all those who had taken part in the war to the vengeance of Austria. He confirmed his avowed intention of retiring into private life, by crossing the frontier and entering the Turkish dominions before the capitulation of Vialgos could possibly be known to him, and while there were still fortresses and armies in Hungary, by which the national cause could have been sustained. In his letter of refusal to General Bem, he in fact, suggested the expediency of calling together some eminent men in order to form a provisional government. On his arrival at Widdin, he again publicly declared (in a letter since published) his resolution of retiring into private life—a resolution which for a short time he acted upon."

The communication from which these extracts are taken is dated from Paris, addressed to the editor of the Times, and signed "Count Ladislaus Batthyany." You will not fail to notice the admirable idiomatic English in which it is written. Verily, these Hungarian patriot leaders seem to possess the gift of tongues. None of Kossuth's many accomplishments is more remarkable that the rapidity and ease with which he has made himself absolute master, for all purposes, of the English language.

As to French affairs, what is to be said? Louis Napoleon, or Napoleon Louis, as for some years he has been accustomed to sign himself in virtue of his being the eldest scion of his uncle's family, has been installed at Notre Dame as what? President is certainly not the right name by which to express his dignity, but as yet no other has been invented. The ceremony on New Year's day wanted nothing but the crown to make it a more than royal, an imperial coronation. The Autocrat, having been installed where the rulers of France have ever been crowned, proceeded to take up his residence at the Tuileries, the splendid seat of French royalty. And soon he is about to issue a new coinage bearing his own effigy. What are these but royal doings? Meantime he exercises a power far more absolute than has ever been wielded by any former ruler of France, his uncle not excepted. Naples limits its own tyranny far outdone, and the Neapolitan despot, and hitherto without a compeer on his "bad eminence," as said to have smiled a smile of ineffable satisfaction, when he obtained information of the doings of the Parisian President. The most illustrious men imprisoned without charge, and released (some of them) without explanation or apology; hundreds of meaner victims seized and deported at the mere will of the Autocrat, without warning given, or amount rendered to any; thousands of unoffending citizens and strangers shot down, to strike a panic into the heart of all opposition: these are the deeds by which Louis Napoleon has outdone Austrian cold-blooded and unscrupulous tyranny and eclipsed Neapolitan infamy. Meanwhile, the congratulations of Austria: an autograph letter (as it is said,) of approval and thanks from the Czar, whose minister in Paris is reported to have been the President's friend and counsellor in the coup de main, and certainly hastened, at the very earliest hour possible, to tender his official thanks and countenance to the usurper: the blessing of the Pope, who has signified his entire fatherly approval and satisfaction in beholding the deeds of his dutiful son; and the fraternal smile and embrace of his Majesty of Naples, must and will atone to the Sultan or Shuh who now rules the French for the cool neutrality of England and the dignified reserve of the American Minister, who has behaved in a manner worthy of the true Republic that he represents.

It is clear that the powers to which I have referred have joined in fact, whether or not in form, in a common league of despotism, a league which seriously threatens the cause of liberty throughout the world, the peace of Europe, and the progress of humanity. In Piedmont and the Low Countries only on the city still find a home. And how long it will be before Piedmont is subverged amidst the ocean of despotic power and principles which surround her on every side, it is impossible to say. What remains then, but that, on behalf of the liberty and progress of the World, Britain and America draw closer the bonds of alliance and amity?

Louis Napoleon has decreed the outline of a Constitution.—There will be a Council of State and Senate, both the one and the other composed of his own creatures, and entirely dependent upon himself for continuance in office, and a Chamber of Representatives, elected for five years, which he may dissolve at pleasure, and for twelve months following carry on government without the interference or existence of any such body—the Senate voting, in that case, whatever supplies may be needed. The public are not to be admitted to the legislative discussions, and all political writing to be absolutely interdicted to the general press. The Moniteur alone will utter that which the President directs or decrees.

And for this the Parisian populace shouts applause to Louis Napoleon. Yet we cannot wonder. Since 1790, how many constitutions have been rapturously accepted by the French people, and never, from the commencement of the great Revolution till the inauguration of the Emperor in 1804, was there, notwithstanding the univeral suffrage, a minority of 50,000 votes. It is then, now, matter for surprise that, mangre all that Jesuit influence, military intimidation, police espionage and terrorism, official trickery and finangement could do, there has been found a minority of nearly 700,000 votes, and that in Paris a third of the suffrages were given against Napoleon. Besides, if he were refused, what was to be done?

My next will give some account of our Continental Committee.

X. Y.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Existence.

How mysteriously sublime a fact is human existence! and to the unbeliever, an enigma past all his powers of solution. "What is my existence?" his wondering thoughts demand: "is it a dream, mingled with variegated scenes of joy and sorrow, that will soon dissolve in thin air, and leave not a wreck behind to tell that once it was? Or is it a substantial reality? and if so, from whence did it come? His anxious thoughts sweep back over the waste of departed years—to some dim and broken recollection in the early twilight of memory—and beyond that all is mystery, and utter darkness beclouds the morn of his being. "When did I begin to be? or am I eternal? and have I just awoke to conscious life? Was I made for the present and circumstances alone? Shall I exist forever, or like many on whom I have looked and loved, and whose fate I now deplore, shall I lay me down and die? And die! and oh! what is it to die? Does death extinguish forever this vital flame? or may it be an entrance into some future state and scene? and if so, what, what must be my condition there—one of joy or sorrow? How dark, oh! how utterly dark to me is all that men call futurity! And yet, if there be no future—if I, and all the countless millions of my sorrowing race, exist only through the anxious moments of life's brief day—a day spent in the fruitless search for joy—and then we sleep never more to wake, then my existence is a mystery, a mockery and a curse.

"Ah! if, this be so, why did the great Unknown cause an existence only to give consciousness of wo? why implant within me desires so ardent and so great, only that they may be terminated in the bitterness of disappointment?"

Such are some of the troubled and bewildered meditations of the mind without faith in God, or trust in the Revelations which He has given to man. But, though faithless, he is not hopeless, nor fearless; he cannot extinguish these deep and universal instincts of humanity: his soul cannot be confined to the limits of its clayey tabernacle, for even to earth—but it will spring away and out into unknown, ethereal fields. The soul, although embarrassed by imperfection, and surrounded by dissolution, projects plans that will occupy the ages of eternity to accomplish, and longs for an existence paralleled with that of its unoriginated Author, and desires a bliss which nothing less than the fruition of heavenly rapture can bestow.

Surely no man can believe, without doubt or questioning, that an agent of such lofty aspirations and vast capabilities as is the human soul, was only made to live and hope a feverish hour, and then sink into the shades of eternal annihilation. It can not be, that

"'tis all of death to die"

Surely the soul is as immortal as its Sire, and shall never die. This life is too brief and transitory a scene to accomplish our ends, or fill up the measure of our hopes. The soul, the brightest of all the creations of Divinity, if not a spark of Divinity itself, was doubtless made for a more exalted destiny that the poverty of earth or the brevity of life can fulfill.

The body dies and returns to dust; but Revelation teaches that death only ushers the soul into a world of grand and eternal realities, where it shall mingle with the winged sons of immortality, and enjoy God in the fullness of its largest and brightest hopes forever.

Such is the splendid and God-like destiny that awaits regenerated man; and so long as truth and bliss shall evolve from the mysteries of eternity, so long shall his purified and immortal nature bask in the unclouded smile of God, which, like the dawn of vernal day, shall dispense light and blessedness over all the high and flowery plains of heaven.

J. B. WALKER.

New Orleans, La., 1852.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Tobacco-Savings.

Mr. EDITOR:—Observing in your paper some remarks in relation to the Missionary Cause, especially under the control of the M. E. Church, as to the most successful mode of increasing its pecuniary resources with a view to increased efficiency and usefulness, several thoughts have presented themselves whilst reading the question, "Will not abstinence from tobacco in every shape and form, enable the Ministers to furnish ample means to prosecute the work of evangelization with greater vigor, and more extensively respond to the call, 'Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty!'" The writer of this answers in a significant, yet, practical form, by the enclosed five dollars, designed by him for the payment of two years' subscription to your paper, (having previously paid over to the Missionary Society a similar amount, making in all ten dollars), being an amount saved annually by abstinence from tobacco; and as often appropriated to benevolent objects and purposes, (Providence permitting,) as to continue so doing.

Having thus alluded to the subject of abstinence from tobacco, and its benefits in a pecuniary sense, it may not be unprofitable to look for a moment at another view of the subject.

As to its effects upon the body, it was said by a celebrated Physician, that tobacco was neither food nor medicine: therefore, it could not be designed for the use of man, unless in the form of a medical prescription in some severe case.

What, then, is the conclusion? The writer answers, that more than twelve years since his weight of body was 140 lbs.—now 180: then, nervous, irritable, dyspeptic, &c.; now, of uniform temperament, and natural relish for food, capable of performing two-fold the labor, with more accuracy and promptness, and with less fatigue of body, and above all, a constant indwelling peace of mind.

If the foregoing should be found worthy of notice, sufficient to justify its publication, the subject may be resumed with reference to its effects in some other points of view, by

ANTI-TOBACCO.

February, 1852.

SITTING DURING PUBLIC PRAYER.—We learn, says the Presbyterian, that this lazy and irreverent habit is stealthily increasing in the the Presbyterian Church. It is not a mark of bodily infirmity, which would constitute a just apology, but the evidence of a heart not interested in the service. Why is it that a man who can not stand ten minutes during a prayer, can stand hours gazing at a show, or in some pursuit of business? Does not interested attention make the difference? The following is worth reading:

"Some times the people sit during prayer and praise. The pastor stands, and stands, too, while he preaches. Why is this? Ah! I see how it is. I found the explanation on Monday morning. I looked in at the store, and saw my friend standing. I looked in again at mid-day, found him busy as a bee, and still standing; and on calling in the evening at six, I found him brisk as ever, but still standing. Dear brother, do not any longer be dull and lazy in church, and all life and activity in the store."

Do not the above remarks, in a measure, apply to some other than the Presbyterian Church?—ED. W. C. A.

Discerning Time.

A reason-heart discerneth [illegible] Eccles. viii. 5.

How little are we impressed with the revolution of the seasons and the rapid flight of time! Our years are so many stages in the journey of life. Each stage should be a time of solemn reflection. Observe in these words

THE CHARACTER OF A WISE MAN.

Who is he? Not the man who grasps at a shadow instead of seizing the substance. Not the worldling, the covetous, the sensualist, but the Christian who is in possession of true wisdom.

"Who counts the trifles of a day,
And lays that counted fast away
In figures, as they onward move
Point to eternity."

Its source.—It is derived, not from the learning of the schools, but from Him who is the fountain of wisdom. James i. 5. It is obtained instrumentally from God's word, and efficiently from his Spirit.

Its excellence, namely, in its object and effect. Look at its tendency in life, in sorrow, in death, and in the final consummation of all things.

THE DISCRIMINATION possessed. The wise man's heart is enlightened by the Spirit, renewed by grace, and made a temple for Jehovah. It discerns

The swiftness of time. How rapid its motion. Our life is compared to a vapor, a swift ship, a watch in the night, a hand-breadth, and is as nothing before God.

The ravages of time. The face of nature changes. What changes in kingdoms, churches, families, and individuals! Many show the ravages of time in their silvery locks and furrowed cheeks.

The uncertainty of time. How many are hurried into eternity. Some are reminded by the inroads of disease; but death does not always warn before it strikes.

The value of time. See its value from its connection with futurity, and the end for which it was given. On the thread of human life our destinies for immortality are suspended. Let me then redeem the time, and employ it to the best of purposes in making provision for eternity.

"The clock of time, how loud it strikes,
Its wheels how swift they fly!
Its fingers, as they onward move
Point to eternity."

Proclamation of Louis Napoleon,

President of the Republic to the French People, Promulgating the Constitution of the 24 December, 1851.

FELLOW-CITIZENS!—In my proclamation of the 2d of December, when I loyally explained to you what, according to my ideas, were the vital conditions of Government in France, I had not the pretension, so common in these days, of substituting a personal theory for the experience of centuries. On the contrary, I sought in the past for examples that resulted from them.

I have thought it reasonable to prefer the precepts of genius to the specious doctrines of men of abstract ideas. I have taken as models the political institutions which already, at the commencement of this century, under analogous circumstances, have strengthened tottering society and raised France to a lofty degree of prosperity and grandeur.

I have taken as models the institutions which, instead of being destroyed by the first breath of popular agitation, were only overturned by the might of all Europe confessed against them.

In one word, I said to myself, since France has made progress during the last fifty years, in virtue alone of the administrative, military, judicial, religious, and financial organization of the Consulate and the empire, why should not we adopt the political institutions of that epoch?

Created by the same thought, they must bear the same character of nationality and practical utility.

In fact, as I recalled to mind in my proclamation, it is essential to demonstrate that our present state of society is nought else than France regenerate by the revolution of '89, and organized by the Emperor. Nothing remains of the old regime, but great souvenirs and great benefits: all that was organized under it was destroyed by the revolution, and all that has been organized since the revolution, and that still exists, has been the work of Napoleon.

We no longer possess provinces, or states, or parliaments, or intendants, or farmers-general, or feudal rights, or privileged classes holding exclusive possession of civil and military employments, or different religious jurisdictions.

To all such things, so incompatible with its spirit, the revolution applied a thorough reform, but it founded nothing definitive. The First Consul alone, re-established unity, hierarchy, and the true principles of Government. They are still in vigor.

Thus, the administration of France was entrusted to prefects, sub-prefects, and mayors, who substituted unity in the place of directing commissions. The magistracy was rendered firm, and justice more easy, by the clear definition of attributes from those of the justice of the peace, up to those of the Court of Cassation. All this remains.

In the same manner our admirable financial system, the Bank of France, the establishment of the budget, the court of accounts, the organization of the police and our military statutes, date from the above mentioned epoch.

For the last fifty years it is the Code Napoleon that has adjusted the reciprocal interests of citizens; it is still the concordat that regulates the relations of the State with the Church.

Lastly, the greater portion of the measures which concern the progress of industry, of commerce, of literature, of science and of the arts, from the statues of the Theatre Francais to those of the Institute of France—from the institution of "prud'hommes" to the creation of the Legion of Honor, have been fixed by the decrees of that time.

It may be affirmed that the frame of our social edifice is the work of the Emperor—which has stood firm, resisting the fall and the shocks of three revolutions.

Wherefore, since they have the same origin, should not his political institutions have the same chance of duration?

My own conviction has been formed for a long time, and therefore it was that I submitted to your judgment the principal bases of a Constitution borrowed from that of the year VIII. Approved of by you, they are to become the foundation of our political constitution.

Let us now examine its spirit.

In our country—for the last 800 years monarchical—the central power has always existed. Royalty destroyed the great vassals. The revolutions themselves caused to disappear the obstacles which opposed the rapid and uniform exercise of authority. In this country of centralization, public opinion has invariably attributed every thing, good and evil, to the chief of the Government; so that, to write at the head of a charter that the chief is irresponsible, is to lie (mentir) to public feeling. It is to endeavor to establish a fiction which has three times disappeared at the sound of revolution.

The present Constitution, on the contrary, proclaims that the chief whom you have elected is responsible to you—that he has the right of appeal to your sovereign judgment, in order that in grave (solennelles) circumstances you may always be able to continue your confidence in him, or to withdraw it.

Being responsible, his actions must be free and without hindrance. Hence arises the obligation of his having ministers who may be the honored and powerful auxiliaries of his ideas, but who no long[er] form a responsible council, composed of [illegible] irremovable members (membres inamovibles), a daily obstacle to the special influence of the chief of the State, a Council, the expression of [illegible] emanating from the Chambers, and for that very reason exposed to frequent change [illegible] which render impossible a continuous [illegible] (suite), or the application of a [illegible].

Nevertheless, [illegible] attention to the loftiness of position in which a man is placed, and in proportion to his independence [illegible] to the confidence that the people place [illegible], is his need of enlightened and conscientious counsel. Hence the creation of a Council of State, for the future the real (veritable) [illegible] of the government, the most wheelwork of [illegible] organization—a reunion, of practical [illegible] forming projects of law in special committees, then discussing them with closed doors and without oratorical ostentation, in general [illegible] next presenting them to the acceptation of the legislative body.

Thus the government (pouvoir) will be free in its movements, and enlightened in its progress.

Now, what will be the control exercised over the Assemblies?

A chamber which bears the title of "The Legislative Body," votes the laws and the taxes. It is elected by "universal suffrage without the ballot, (sans scrutin de liste). The people choosing each candidate singly, can the more easily appreciate his merit.

The chamber is composed of about 260 members—a first guarantee of the calmness of its deliberations, for too often it has been seen that in assemblies, the mobility and ardor of passions increase in proportion to the number of members.

The account of the deliberations which is to inform the nation of its affairs is no longer, as formerly, abandoned to the party spirit of each journal. An official publication, drawn up under the surveillance of the President of the chamber, will alone be authorized.

The legislative body freely discusses the laws—adopts or rejects them—but does not introduce those unforeseen amendments which often derange the whole economy of a system, and the ensemble of the primitive project; and for still stronger reasons, it does not possess that parliamentary initiative which was the source of such grave abuse, and which permitted every deputy to substitute himself at every turn, in place of the government, and to present projects, however unstudied or shallow.

The Chamber, being no longer in presence of the ministers, and projects of laws being advocated by the orators of the Council of State, the time will not be lost in vain interpellations, in frivolous accusations, and in passionate struggles, whose sole object was to upset ministries in order to replace them.

Thus, then, the deliberations of the legislative body will be independent, but the causes of sterile agitations will have been suppressed, and salutary delays introduced into any modifications of the law. The deputies (mandataires) of the nation will maturely accomplish things of importance.

Another Assembly will bear the name of Senate. It will be composed of those elements which in every country creates a legitimate influence: such as an illustrious name, wealth, talent, and services rendered to the country.

The Senate is not—what the Chamber of Peers was—a pale reflection of the Chamber of Deputies, repeating, at a few days interval, the same dissension in another tone. It is the depository (dépositaire), conservative (conservateur), and of the public it is solely with regard to the great principles on which our society is based that it examines all laws, and that it proposes new ones to the executive power. It intervenes either to resolve any grave difficulty which might arise during the absence of the Legislative body, or to explain the text of the constitution, and to secure whatever may be necessary to its operation. It has the right to annul any illegal or arbitrary act, and thus enjoying the consideration which attaches to a body exclusively occupied with the examination of great interests, or the application of great principles, it fills in the State the independent, salutary and conservative office of the ancient parliaments.

The Senate will not be, like the Chamber of Peers, transformed into a court of justice. It will preserve its character of supreme moderator; for disrepute always falls on political bodies, when the sanctuary of legislation becomes a criminal tribunal. The impartiality of the judge is too often questioned, and it loses all prestige with public opinion, which sometimes goes so far as to accuse it of being the instrument of passion or of hatred.

A High Court of Justice, chosen from among the high magistracy, and having, as jury, members of the Councils General of all France, will alone repress all attempts against the Chief of the State and the public safety.

The Emperor said to the Council of State: "A constitution is the work of time. It is impossible to leave in it too large a margin for ameliorations." Accordingly, the present constitution has only settled that which it was impossible to leave uncertain. It has shut up, within insurmountable barriers, the destinies of a great people. It has left for change a margin sufficiently large to allow in great crises of other means of safety than the disastrous expedient of revolution.

The Senate can, in concert with the Government, modify all that is not fundamental in the constitution, but as to any modifications of the fundamental bases sanctioned by your suffrages, they can only become definite after having received your ratification.

Thus the people remain master of its destiny. Nothing fundamental is effected without its will.

Such are the ideas, such the principles that you have authorized me to apply. May this constitution give to our country calm and prosperous days, may it prevent the return of those intestine struggles in which victory, however legitimate, is always dearly bought—may the sanction which you have given to my efforts be blessed by Heaven! Then—peace will be assured at home and abroad, my ardent hopes will be fulfilled (mes voeux seront combles), my mission will be accomplished.

LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Palace of the Tuileries, Jan. 14, 1852.

ECCLESIASTICAL INCOME.—The Church of England is supposed to have an annual revenue of fifty millions of dollars—a tax bearing with insupportable weight upon the people. A large portion of this is for the clergy. The cost to the country of the parochial clergy, in tithes alone, amounts to about thirty millions of dollars—making an average of twenty-five hundred dollars a year, to the ten thousand seven hundred and eighteen beneficed. This is all monopolized, however, by some seven thousand incumbents.

THE RELIGION OF PAYING DEBTS.—One of our religious exchanges has the following strong remarks on this subject:

"Men may sophisticate as they please.—They can never make it right, and all the bankrupt laws in the universe can not make it right, for them not to pay their debts.—There is a sin in this neglect, as clear and as deserving Church discipline, as in stealing or false swearing. He who violates his promise to pay, or withholds the payment of a debt when it is in his power to meet his engagement, ought to be made to feel that, in the sight of all honest men, he is a swindler. Religion may be a very comfortable cloak under which to hide; but if religion does not make a man deal justly, it is not worth having."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, February 21.

QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR 1852.

The January number of the 6th volume of the Quarterly Review has been sent off in due time, and some may have been sent out that should have been discontinued; in this we have done the best we could, with the lights before us. In their direction we may not have made all the changes desired: and especially in those sent to ministers whose residence we are not advised of; and we give this notice to request all who have changed their postoffice to advise us of the change, and request their former Postmaster to forward the number to their present address. And last, but not least, to request all subscribers who have not paid in advance, to look at our terms on the cover, and send us the funds for the present volume, and all arrearages; and in all cases where funds are reported to have been paid, to tell to whom they were paid, that we may give the proper credits and make the necessary charges.

JOHN EARLY.

Richmond, Jan. 9, 1852.

THE WHOLE OF RELIGION.

Within the compass of a religious profession may be found Universallists and Partialists. There are who, if not respectors of persons, are respectors of commandments,—exalting some to high places—not too high, but with the exclusion and contempt of others having equal claims and of the same Divine family. And there are who "have respect unto ALL thy commandments."

'Tis said Paganini could play a complete tune on one string of his violin. He was a genius, and Religion has no geniuses. The Christian harp is a complicate thing. It is such as David used to praise God on, "An instrument of ten strings." The quaint commentator may be allowed his opinion about it when he said, "These ten strings mean the ten commandments." The whole ten—the first table and the second table. The practice of nothing less will give genuine, wholesome development to religious experience, and present to the world the full-orbed light of Christian character in all its rays complete.

The man who is poor in virtues will make the most of his stock, and is as apt as any to fall into the gratulations and complaisance of self-righteousness. It is astonishing, how he protests against the sins he does not practice. In his neighbor they are monstrous. In these matters he can not be too thankful that he is not like other men, nor does he miss an opportunity of alluding to this difference, both before his Creator and his fellow-creatures.

[illegible] that wine-bibbing brother, and counts him an intolerable scandal upon the Church. The wine-bibbing professor thinks it singular any man can pretend to heart-felt religion who is so close with his money; thinks there ought to be a law for getting rid of such members, if they can not be brought up to their duty. Each—

> Compounds for sins he is inclined to,
> By damning those he has no mind to.

It would take more than two such partialists to make out a sound case, a complete universal Christian. They are both right in their judgment of each other, and wrong in their judgment of themselves. Few hearts are so depraved, but one or two gaps in the Whole Duty of Man will be a sufficient outlet for their depravity. The indulgence of a secret sin or two permitted, they will be ascetics as regards others. Some hard duties struck off the list, and they will undertake to outdo the rest of mankind in those which remain. They make a good bargain for the flesh. This is the smallest price that any one ought to think of paying for peace of conscience.

Men may gain professional eminence by narrowing the path of pursuit. They are profound lawyers, skillful doctors, by attending exclusively to a particular line of study, observation, or practice. Christian eminence does not lie in this direction. A man of great faith—Does this imply that he is famous for strong and unwavering faith in God's word and nothing else? Has he not also faith's increase—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance? And do not these all keep pace, in their growth and manifestation, with the development of the great principle through which they are derived to the soul? St. Paul's Gospel knew nothing of that concentration of effort by which a man could throw all the strength of soul and body and mind into the cultivation of one grace, one fruit of the Spirit, around which as a giant the others stood as dwarfish, pining things, hardly up to the knees in stature, or perhaps not at all recognised. Christian graces flourish together, and they are a goodly number. Those isolated tempers and emotions challenging admiration and the world's gaze, it may be, are of nature's best sort, but still of the earth, earthy. Alas! for the man who stays his hopes here. Hast thou great faith? Where is thy great love?—thy great humility?—thy great temperance?—thy great meekness? They keep company. Where one is, there are the others. The Holy Spirit is not divided. And the law of God is exceeding broad.

St. Peter's gospel, like St. Paul's, knew nothing of a partial religion. His directions sweep through the whole wide compass of the matter. "Add to your faith virtue," nor stop there, but "to virtue knowledge and to knowledge temperance and to temperance patience and to patience godliness and to godliness brotherly kindness and to brotherly kindness charity." The soul obeying this will not be the subject of a morbid experience or a partial cultivation. It will not run to seed, in a single, boasted, spurious virtue. Nor will the eyes of men be attracted by the ostentatious display of one religious trait to be scandalized by the absence of all others.

As religious duty so devotion and comfort range a wide field. There are lengths and depths and breadths and heights inviting out the soul. He is not shut in to a single fountain that may dry up, but the righteous is "like a tree planted by rivers of water." His resources of refreshment and joy are multiplied as well as profound. He is not confined to one theme or privilege for pleasing contemplation. God's full world is before him. As one has happily expressed it in the case of the Psalmist. He sometimes in a single piece takes a magnificent sweep of the great master-keys of creation—the foundations of the steadfast earth—the course of the fluid waters—the revolution of the sun and moon—the vicissitude of the seasons—the habits and instincts of the lower animals—the earthquake and the volcano.

CLASHING.—Our foreign correspondents take up much room this week. Our readers will gladly allow it them? By the way, we shall not interfere in their disagreement either. Perhaps our brother Englishman had better confine himself hereafter to his side of the channel, where he is so much at home in facts and so excellent in his way of telling and discussing them.

American Tract Society.

For some time past a most interesting discussion has been going on among Calvinistic papers as to the merits of this mammoth Society. The discussion makes an era in that Society's hitherto unparralleled operations. It has developed not simply indifference, but a strong opposition—an antipathy to it that has been secretly growing this good while—in the bosom of the Presbyterian Church. Others object to it, because its issues are too Presbyterian. Many Presbyterians are objectors, because it is not enough so: neither cold nor hot. The Philadelphia Organ accuses the Society of a tone rather lofty—assuming to do the work of the Church—counting the Church rather a failure—aiming at universal absorption, etc. The latest number received thus remarks, after alluding to the Watchman's (Richmond, Va.) advocacy of the A. T. Society:

"If any portion of the Presbyterian Church, or any of the Presbyteryan journals differ with us in the opinions we have formed, it may be a matter of regret, but certainly not of quarrel. The Church may not yet see the danger which threatens it from this quarter, but it will ultimately see it. It is contrary within its pale six hundred agents of a Society outside of its limits, and utterly beyond its control, to furnish young and old with a religious literature from which is carefully excluded every thing distinctively Presbyterian, without ultimately seeing a generation arise without attachment to the doctrines or polity of the Church. We are curious to see the developments which are yet to be made in proof of the mischief which this Society has already done in cathing out the life of Presbytarianism in some places and in some individuals. This is its mission, so far as it persists in forcing its way into our Church, and this will be its effects so far as it shall be countenanced. If it succeeds, we wash our hands of all guilt in the matter. We hope better things, however. It is not yet too late for our pastors to examine this subject thoroughly, and to guard their flocks."

The Family Altar.

"Family prayers," says Cecil, "may be made a vast engine of power to the whole domestic circle. It says there is a God, and inspires a reverence for his character. It proclaims a life to come, and points to the spirit land. It fixes the idea of responsibility in the mind, while it diffuses sympathy through the soul. It furnishes the judicious parent with an opportunity of glancing at faults where direct admonition might be inexpedient. It greatly conduces to the maintenance of family government and order, while its spiritual advantages are invaluable."

METHODIST PAPERS.—It is no wonder that the religious papers of our Methodist brethren are successful; for so highly is their influence esteemed, that to promote their circulation becomes a great professional duty with their clergy. We lately saw a statement to the effect that a Methodist minister in Iowa had preached and labored on the subject, till the number of religious papers and periodicals circulated, amounted to one for every one of the people of his charge.—Who doubts that this is a flourishing and intelligent church? There is no religious influence, aside from the pulpit, so useful, or cheap, or easily attainable, as that of the religious paper; and if pastors were generally accustomed to reflect upon the subject, and to act upon their reflections, there would be an problem as to the efficiency or success of this mode of doing good. [N.-Y. Evangelist.

RELAXING.—How liberal the successor of St. Peter is where liberality is of little consequence! He goes largely into cooking, and gives the "faithful" the following permit:

"The Pope has granted the permission of using 'fat' in culinary operations on fast days during the year 1852. The time of Lent is excepted."

This is an item to his credit!

A reading room and a course of lectures, for the benefit of the young ladies and gentlemen connected with the Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati, have recently been established. A handsome collection of books has already been made. Among the lecturers is the name of Rev. Dr. Aydelotte, formerly minister of the Trinity (Episcopal) Church of that city, but now a member of the New School Presbyterian Church.

METHODIST PRESS.

REV. THEODORE PARKER.—The following touches at this notorious politico-ecclesiastic-infidel-abolitionist-progressive-gentleman are, to say the least, racy. Much of the sketch—hinting the oratorical finish—reminds us of Prof. Gliddon. It seems Mr. Parker was called on to deliver the first lecture in the new hall of the Young Men's Association, Buffalo. His subject: The progressive History of Woman, considered according to the Savage, the Barbarian, the Hebrew, the Classic, the Ascetic, the Ecclesiastic and the Philosophic idea. The editor of the Buffalo Ch. Advocate remarks that he had probably more than once delivered the same lecture before a Woman's Rights Convention. A correspondent of that paper, who was an auditor, thus writes:

"It was an outrage on the moral sense of the audience, most of whom, we have reason to believe, experienced a mingled sensation of shame and indignation. Mr. Parker is an Eastern clergyman of the Unitarian denomination, and very widely known as a radical reformer. Possessing a winning address, a melodious and well-modulated voice, a very clear and polished elocution, some rhetorical skill, a facile flow of words, many sparks of genius, a superficial acquaintance with all sorts of learning, a small portion of mother wit, a large portion of self-conceit, several thousand 'Boston notions,' and sufficient boldness to avow openly his rank infidelity—possessing all those diverse traits and talents, Mr. Parker is able to exert a wide and baneful influence. His whole discourse on this occasion was one of the most incongruous medleys ever compounded in the mortar of a classical apothecary. Ranging through all that immeasurable space included between the creation and the millenium, the learned gentleman made several hundred allusions, antediluvian, scripturnal, historical, poetical, classical, mythological and anthropological. He then took occasion to review and explode, in a summary manner, the various doctrines of morality which have prevailed since the time of Adam. This war of annihilation was interspersed with several witty points and not a few truculent sarcasms, one of which, the trenchant of all, was double-edged, inflicting a very ghastly wound on the lecturer himself. Three different times he made the climax of an impious jest by remarking with ironical emphasis, "I am not responsible for facts!" This eminently just observation there was evidently no disposition to contradict. He was responsible for little else than wicked perversions of Scripture and gross violations of historic truth. There are not many public men who would have dared to assail, as he did, the Bible itself, and so indirectly all vital truths of Christianity, heaping ridicls and obloquy on both. We do not believe that Mr. Parker succeeded in accomplishing his object to any considerable extent. It was, nevertheless, humiliating to hear his blasphemous ridicule of one of the ten commandments received with applause by several hearers the lecture room of the Young Men's Association is again polluted by such a presence!"

REV. J. CAUGHEY.—A correspondent of the Christian Guardian, published in Toronto, Canada, a Wesleyan organ, gives information of the labors of, this Revivalist:

"Rev. J. Caughey preached his first sermon at Toronto, Nov. 23. Several persons were graciously converted at this first sermon, and from that time till January 10 the result was as follows: Those who received the forgiveness of their sins or justification 284, sanctification 137, backsliders restored 66; making in all up to that date 488, and since then 46 more have been added, making the total up to this date 534. The above numbers, with the dates,' says he, 'have been carefully taken from the Secretary's books. While we esteem every man engaged in God's work, in love for his work's sake, the praise and glory is due and must be given to Father, Son and Holy Ghost, who worketh all and in all."

CHEERING NEWS.—The editor of the W. C. Advocate says:

"Thus far, this winter, there have been near or quite three hundred accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church in this city, [Cinn.] We feel like thanking God. Never, while he deigns to pour out his Holy Spirit upon the sons of men, should we, as Christians, become despondent or discouraged."

EDITORIAL OPINION.—A correspondent (who did not deserve so full an answer—as he paid not his postage) puts a case to the editor of the Holston Ch. Advocate:

"Our preacher—a man well thought of so far, generally, among the people—saw fit to change the class leader, which insulted him so highly that he erased his name from the class book, and influenced as many as he could to do the same. Accordingly, some ten to fourteen submitted to his influence. This was all done before he gave up the book."

We quote the substance of Dr. Patton's reply. Some expounders will differ from him:

"The Discipline, when defining the duties of those who have the charge of circuits, says: 'To appoint all the leaders, and change them when he sees it necessary.' This is the law in the case. The class leader had no authority to erase either his own name, or the name of any other member from the book. If he was aggrieved, and wished to withdraw from the fellowship of the Church, it was his right to ask and receive admission, and the preacher had no right or authority to prevent him, unless he was under censure at the time; and it has been a mooted question, whether a member under censure has not a right to withdraw from the Church (of course without a certificate of acceptability.) We incline to the opinion that the right to withdraw should be accorded, even to persons under censure, unless the case involves the characters of others, justice to whom requires an investigation."

PROFESSORS, EDITORS, AND PREACHERS.—Rev. G. W. Langhorne continues his well-argued articles in the R. C. Advocate, in reply to Prof. Deems. No. IX of the series concludes:

"As to our editors I know not what to say. That they are rendering the church much valuable support is a fact which I rejoice to proclaim, and consequently they cannot be too highly esteemed. Able, vigilant, faithful, they battle manfully for the faith. They scatter far and wide the seed of piety, while they hurl in the face of opposing powers the irresistable weapons of the gospel:

> An advance guard, they watch with sleepless eye,
> Each wrench that leads to Zion's wall;
> Observe all signs of war, and promptly cry—
> To arms, and on the gath'ring legions fall.

"I bless them in their work, yet nevertheless regret that they are 'deployed' from the more blessed employment of preaching 'Christ crucified.'

METHODIST PROTESTANT.—Dr. Bond in his last letter to Hon. Reverdy Johnson thus sums up the history of the much boasted lay Methodism:

"In the year 1828 a considerable number of Methodists—ministers and laymen—after more than seven years' discussion, seceded from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and instituted a government, in which the lay representative element was infused into every department and ramification of the system. They had sagacity enough to foresee that in such a system, a general itinerant superintendency was impracticable, and therefore they renounced Episcopacy; yet they solemnly declared a firm adherence to itinerancy. The appointments of the preachers were to be absolute as heretofore; but to be made in such a mode as the annual conferences should direct or provide. And hence the 'charity' of the conferences not only begun at home but left off where it began. They could not supply each other's deficiency of preachers, as the power of appointment in each was restricted to its own boundaries. The result has been, as their own statements show, that in the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church in 1840, which met in Cincinnati, on the first Tuesday in May, the delegations from twenty-four conferences, covering the whole United States, was composed of representatives, who, in fact, represented but a small portion of the connexion. From the Maine, Boston, New York, Champlain, Pennsylvania, New-Jersey, South Carolina, Alabama, and Arkansas Annual Conferences, there were no delegates—lay or ministerial—in attendance. From several others there was only one from each, and that one a minister; and from others a very inadequate representation—the conferences being chiefly composed of delegates from a few of the more adjacent annual conferences—the Maryland, Muskingum, Ohio, and Pittsburg, Conferences being largely represented; and, of course, the president, and two secretaries, were taken from these conferences. Yet in this conference, one of the most important questions arose which has ever arisen under the new organization. The Maryland Annual Conference, it seems, had so construed the constitution, as to allow the St. John's station, in Baltimore, decidedly the richest in the connexion, to evade the rule in respect to the change of preachers, by declaring itself a 'mission station,' and consequently to have a preacher appointed it for any indefinite term.

"The General Conference declared this action unconstitutional; and the station, determined on supporting its pretensions, began Church, as to call its own ministers, and retain them as long as it pleases. This is downright Congregationalism and independency, and the example has been followed in all the principal cities of the Union—Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Albany, and Boston, and possibly by other Churches. The inevitable tendency of the system is apparent. Congregationalism is the inevitable result of the experiment; and if we may judge of it by what has happened in some places, absolute independency, and final extinction of itineracy and the whole missionary character of the new concern, are near at hand."

California Mission—Mississippi Conference.

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE: DEAR BRO:—You will be so good as to place to the credit of Warren Circuit—Rev. H. J. Harris, P. C.—$25 for California mission, and oblige

J. M. JONES.

February 21, 1852.

BRITISH WESLEYAN MATTERS.—On the 3d of February, the Imperial Parliament will assemble for the dispatch of business. On the same day the Committee of Ministers appointed by the Wesleyan Conference in Newcastle, will assemble, to consider the memorials, etc., which were then referred, or have since, by the President, been submitted to them. From the Queen's Prime Minister the country confidently expects the proposed of a new reform bill: what may the Methodist community expect from the above named committee? [Wes. Times, Jan. 19.

ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN.—Young men, attend to the voice of one who has possessed a certain degree of fame in the world, and who will shortly appear before his Maker: Read the Bible every day of your life.—[DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON.

The First Baptist Church of San Francisco have sent an invitation to Rev. E. L. Magoon, New York, to become their pastor, and also one to Rev. R. Fuller, D. D. Baltimore, in case Mr. Magoon should decline. Their object is to have one of these men immediately.

JONAH IN THE WHALE'S BELLY.—In the cavity of the whale, a safe and practicable asylum is afforded—not indeed in the stomach but in another cavity of the whale: the throat is large, and is provided with a bay or intestines, so considerable in size, that the whales frequently take into it two of their young ones when weak, especially during a tempest. In this vessel are two vents, which serve for inspiration and respiration; and here, in all probability, Jonah was preserved not, indeed without a miracle, but with that economy of miracle so frequently exemplified in Scripture. [Plymouth Memorial.

NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH.—The church recently occupied by Dr. Hawks, in Astor Place, New York, near the Opera House, has been purchased by Archbishop Hughes, and will be consecrated in May next as a Catholic church by the name of St. Ann. Dr. Forbes to be the pastor. This makes the twenty-second Roman Catholic church in New York City.

Milton has preserved for us, in solemn verse, his school-life:

> "When I was yet a child, no childish play
> To me was pleasing; all my mind was set
> Serious to learn and know, and thence to do
> What might be public good; myself I thought
> Born to that end, born to promote all truth
> All righteous things."

Professor Gliddon's Ninth Lecture.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather and the numerous attractions at other places of public resort, the Lyceum Hall was well filled.

The subject of the lecture was "the ethnology of the different races."

The Professor proceeded to say that knowledge and the arts were derived from the Egyptians. A certain class of antiquaries had contended that, as Egypt was the mother of the arts, and the inhabitants of that country were of the Ethiopean race, the present day owed all its triumphs of mind to the negroes. This he denied, and contended that the banks of the Nile were peopled by the Caucasians, intermixed with the Germanic, Pelasgian and Scythian tribes. The Copts who inhabited that country were a hybrid generation, who proceeded from a mingling of the negroes and Caucasians; a living example of which peculiar people exists at present among ourselves. He displayed drawings of heads of the ancient Egyptians, which showed that they were Caucasians. This he proved by the further testimony of straight hair worn by the mummies on exhibition—barring the probability that in those days it may have been fashionable to wear wigs! There were as many varieties (?) of the human race four thousand years ago as at the present day. Father Time had not succeeded in white-washing the negro, nor is adding one tinge of darkness to the visage of the white man. The types of man-kind, he said, were then the same as now; although by his allusion to the instruments of printing we did not understand him to infer that that art was familiar to the inhabitants of that day and generation. Negroes in the days of Cheops were the same in physical conformation as at present. They had flat noses and crooked knees. They were slaves then as they are slaves now. They had their sports, as shown by ancient drawings, wherein Sambo danced to the inspirating tones of the banjo, and "whooled about and turned about and jumped Jim Crow!"

The Professor proceeded to elucidate the fact that the bondsmen of these days carried upon their heads bricks, and that the latter day fashion of carrying them in the hat, is not without precedent.

He also showed the portrait of a very curious animal which was seen by the Israelites in their day of bondage, and known as the "Elephant"

> The "Giraffe" too, 'a wonderful bestial'
> "That stoops to hear the morning lark!"

was among his portraits.

The lecturer, in the progress of his discourse, illuminated largely on the subject of the different races of men. The Caucasians were the fast race, famous for quick time and proverbially ahead of the age. The Lybians were a slow race, as might be seen in the pictures by the extreme brevity of their lower limbs. He drew a comparison between all the different races that have run their courses in the great Olympiad of life. As to who won the prize, or what was the best time made by the various human races, he did not say, but concluded that the Caucasians had the lead, and were likely to keep it.

The lecture was attentively listened to by an appreciative audience. The lecturer disavows any intention of running a tilt against the Bible. But he is not responsible for facts! It is, at least, a comfort to learn that we have discovered the last variety of the genus homo!!

Mormon Affairs.

[illegible] the mormon country; and, among others, the announcement that Judge Snow had determined to open court and proceed with business. It will be recollected that the colleagues of Judge S. left Salt Lake City and returned to the States some time since. A correspondent of the National Intelligencer has the following in reference to the character of this legal or illegal functionary:

"A few words in relation to Judge Z. Snow. Judge S. joined the Mormon church about twenty years ago, but has not resided in the Mormon community, or been in full communion with the church, since they left Kirtland, Ohio, some fifteen years ago. He doubtless went to the Territory with the determination to discharge his official duties faithfully, uninfluenced and uncontrolled by his religious associations. When the difficulties commenced which led to the withdrawal of a portion of the officers, Judge Snow sympathized entirely with his colleagues, and when finally, in consequence of accumulated insults, outrages, and lawless transactions, they deemed it their duty to withdraw from the Territory, Judge Snow concurred with them in this determination, and commenced preparations to return to the States with his family. When this came to the ears of Brigham Young, he promptly brought the church influence and authority to bear, and in a few days after Judge Snow was taken down to the River Jordan and re-baptized into the Mormon church. From that moment his views and feelings experienced a complete revolution, as is evinced by the letter from which you have quoted. But enough of him.

"The location of the seat of Government of the Territory, contrary to all previous arrangements, in Pauvan Valley, 150 miles from any white settlement, and inhabited solely by roving bands of hostile Indians, is a very significant fact, but susceptible of a simple explanation. When the returned United States officers left Salt Lake City, for the reasons set forth in their report to the President, Brigham Young and his Mormon associates were well satisfied that, upon a fair and just representation of the facts to the Government at Washington, the civil authority of the Territory would be promptly withdrawn from their hands and control. Under this conviction, and with their usual cunning, they have located the capital in one of the most out-of-the-way, inconvenient and unsafe districts to be found within the limits of the Territory, with the view not only to expose the officers who might be sent there to Indian hostilities, but to remove them so far from Salt Lake City as to prevent their taking cognizance of crimes and offences there, over which the church claims to exercise exclusive jurisdiction.

"Recent letters received from Salt Lake City announce these as the reasons for the act. The names assigned to the new city and county may be regarded as a characteristic specimen of Mormon diplomacy."

INTERESTING FACT.—The Rev. J. R. Tyler, Principal of the Deaf Mute Department of the Virginia Institution states in his last interesting report that our own country is the only one in which the question whether the children of deaf-mutes are themselves apt to be deaf has approached solution. Two hundred educated deaf mutes assembled in Hartford, Connecticut, September 25, 1850. Of these, 103 were married, some quite recently. Seventy-two were parents, the parents of 302 children, ninety-eight of whom can hear and speak. Instances are given of parents, both deaf from birth, having children able to hear and speak. "An instance," says Mr. Tyler, (who, by the way, we regret to say, has recently deceased) "exists in our institution, in the case of an instructor and his amiable wife, both deaf from birth, but their two bright little boys have all their senses in perfection. So that the apprehension in question," continues the Principal "is not sufficient ground for denying to deaf mutes the chief earthly happiness the school and exercise of virtue—the state which preserves nations, and fills cities and churches, and heaven itself."

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—This society has paid $100,000 for a lot at the corner of Astor Place and Fourth Avenue, New York, on which they propose to erect a magnificent building.

RHODE ISLAND.—The Maine liquor law which was defeated in the House of Representatives of this State on the 30th ult., has passed the Senate, with a proviso submitting the question to the people.

NEW STATE-HOUSE.—A new State-house has been commenced at Columbia, S. C.

DISCONTINUED.—The post-office at Albemarle, Assumption Parish, La., has been discontinued.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The publishers, Wm. H. Moore & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, have forwarded us, through J. Ball, the following books, whose tasteful and substantial, "getting up" speak well for their house:

SERVICE AFLOAT AND ASHORE—during the Mexican war. By Lieut. Raphael Semmes, U. S. N. 8vo. pp. 378.

The writer was attached to the Home Squadron at the breaking out of the late war with Mexico. After seeing service afloat till the fall of Vera Cruz, he was dispatched on government service ashore to the City of Mexico. His opportunities for making large and correct observations, at all important points, upon the state of the country, immediately as it was opened by invasion, before its social and political type had been changed, were highly favorable. The style of the book does credit to the literature of our Navy. While professing to give his countrymen only a coup d'œil of the campaign and country, the author has produced the most satisfactory book which has yet appeared on both those subjects. He does not confine himself to battle scenes, but enters freely into the present and past history of this troubled region, and connects events that have not heretofore been brought within historical neighborhood. The social and political element formed by the clergy is well brought out. There is an unflagging interest in the perusal. The writer deals plainly, if not fairly, with the Chiefs of the Camp. Gen. Scott's vanity gets a succession of very hard rubs. One would be tempted to suspect a political and partizan intent in the appearance of such a volume just now, did not these personal animadversions form too inconsiderable a portion of it. Numerous engravings embellish the work. For sale by J. Ball.

THE COURSE OF CREATION; by J. Anderson, D. D. 12mo.: pp. 384.

A reprint of an able work by a Scotch divine. The specific tests do not lie, in this country, but the general principles of geology are presented with conciseness and perspicuity, and the moral relations of this science are discussed. The general reader will realize much advantage in the glossary of scientific terms, at the end of the book.

For sale by J. Ball.

A CONCISE HISTORY OF ENGLAND—from the first Invasion by the Romans to the accession of Queen Victoria; by W. Clark. 12mo.: pp. 344.

A reprint of an English work, with additions, by an American editor. The arrangement is distinctly chronological: the summary, including all the leading features of English history, does not exclude a good deal of narrative interest. It is a book for youth—not dishearteningly by its length or offending by its dryness. Those who would classify the results of their reading and [illegible] without ranging through large space, the date and place of great events, eras, epochs, kings, reigns, etc., lying in the sweep of this vast and important history, will find this volume very convenient.

For sale by J. Ball.

SCENES AND LEGENDS OF THE NORTH OF SCOTLAND; by Hugh Miller. 8vo.: pp. 436.

An elegant reprint, from the second London edition. Hugh Miller is confessed a genius. When writing on a dull subject, he is sprightly. On the various themes of this book, and with the license of every dealer in legends he has fair opportunity to work his rich vein of humor and poetry. It is a more suitable field for his temper than even the "Old Red Sandstone," and he has made out a volume that will be more read than even that clever one. For sale by J. Ball.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST, etc. Louisville, Ky.

We are in receipt of this little volume, by the kind attention of the assistant book agent.

SAINTAIN'S UNION MAGAZINE—

The March number is on our table, with its usual elegancies.

SALAMDER AND THE DRAGON; by Rev. F. W. Shelton, A. M. Published by J. Taylor: New York. 18mo.

This highly popular little volume, in the allegorical style, was received by mail some weeks ago, and would have been noticed sooner, but has been read and loaned around from the first day till now. It will administer a quietus to SLANDER, (Salander) or make his conscience unquiet who lets out or passes round the defaming word.

LIFE IN THE ARCTIC SEAS.—There is no abatement of interest in England, as regards the fate of Sir J. Franklin. Mr. C. R. Weld, in a letter to the London Times, makes the following statement, with the object of showing that life may be sustained for a long time in the Arctic regions, and that Sir John Franklin and his companions may still survive:

In the year 1743, four Russian sailors, forming part of a crew of fourteen men, went in a small vessel to fish for whales on the east coast of Spitzbergen. By some unfortunate accident the ship sailed away, leaving the above four men on that dreary island. Their entire stock, at the time of this disaster, consisted of a small bag of meal, a musket, a powder horn, twelve charges of ammunition, an axe, a knife, a small kettle, a stove, a piece of touchwood, a tobacco-box and four pipes. The men were not overwhelmed by their calamity, but instantly set to work to provide for their future wants.

The wreck of a ship which they found on the shore supplied them with fuel, and the twelve charges of powder and ball procured them as many reinder, which were numerous on the island. With nails extracted from a piece of ship timber, they made three lances, wherewith they killed a bear, and with the strong tendons of the bear they strung and strengthened a piece of crooked drift wood, which they converted into a bow. With this and the arrows which they easily made, they killed during their stay of six years on the island, 250 reindeers, 10 bears, and a vast quantity of foxes; and when they were at length relieved by a vessel which touched unexpectedly on the island, they were able to pay for their passage home with 2000 lbs. of deer fat, and many hides of the animals they had slain. One of their number, a very indolent man, who, from the beginning, had eschewed almost every kind of exertion, died from scurvy, while the other three found health in their daily active employments.

REPUBLICATION OF BRITISH PERIODICALS.—The publishers of the British Reviews have succeeded in interposing an obstacle to the republication of these reviews in this country without their consent, by employing American contributors, who take out a copyright for their articles in this country.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY—STATE RELIGION—THREATENED PERSECUTION—SABBATH-CONSOCIETY IN PARIS—YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION—A POET'S GIFT.

PARIS, January 15th, 1852.

France is now given upo the hands of the President, who has carte blanche to do as he pleases. In every part of France, he had an overwhelming majority, in some parts of Algeria alone, where the duke d'Aumale has been some time, Goverac the ayes [illegible] the minority. Still, he had 7,440,000 votes in his favor, and only 6,000 against him. On New Year's day, he was solemnly installed as President of the Free Republic for ten years, in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, by the Arch Bishop of Paris: and in order to strengthen his power, he has been actively legislating ever since. Amongst his doings of the last week, I may give the following:

1. Nearly all the members of the late Assembly who might be obnoxious to him, have been banished, some for a time only, such as Generals Changarnier, le Flo, de Lamoriciere, Bedeau: and Messrs. Thiers, Duvergier de Hauranne, Baze, Thiers Chambolle, Emile de Cirardin, &c. Others are banished forever, such as Lavoye, Noel Parfait, Esquiros, de Flotte, La Grange, Victor Hugo, &c. A few belonging to the Socialist part of the Assembly, who are supposed to have been connected with the insurrection, have even been transported to the penal settlement of Cayenne. It is remarkable that of all the noble members of the Assembly who were imprisoned on the second of December, General Changarnier is the only one who has not been banished. His marriage took place a few days ago with Miss Odier, the daughter of a very rich Protestant banker.

2. Numerous restrictions have been put on the liberty of the press. Nothing can now be printed without having first been read and approved of by the "Bureau de la Presse," which exercises its censorship with great severity. Thus the Journal des Debats, one of the most moderate papers, has had six of its leaders refused for six successive days. Many more papers have been altogether suspended. The National, the Republique, the Messager de l'Assemblee, the Revolution, the Progres de Bien Etre Universal, the Democratic Republique, the Avenment du Peuple, and others have not appeared since the coup d'etat. The Opinion Publique was altogether suspended a few days ago, for having left a blank column in one of its pages. A new law on the press is being prepared, which, according to a Belgian paper, will be excessively severe. The stamp duty will be raised from one to two; but it will not be required [illegible] that every article should have the signature of its author appended to it.

3. The National Guard has been dissolved, on the assumed ground that they were a guarantee not against disorder and insurrection, but rather against government, and that the government must be as strong as possible in order to maintain order and so encourage labor. It is not that they have been reorganized, but only in some places, and in such a manner as to destroy all their political importance. The officers are to be named, not as formerly, by the ballot of the men, but by the President of the Republic, on the proposition of the prefects of the different departments.

4. The trees of liberty have all been cut down. There were about 1200 of them in Paris and the neighborhood. The inscriptions, "Liberty, Fraility, Fraternity," which covered all the public buildings and churches since the revolution of '48, have also been effaced, by order of the Prefect of the Seine. The streets and buildings whose names have been changed during the last three years, will take their former appellation.

The Constitution is to be promulgated this evening. According to the Constitutionnel of yesterday, a semi-official paper, the President will have the right of proroguing the Assembly and of dissolving it. The representatives of the people will no longer be salaried after next May.

As a consequence of the press not being free, the strangest reports are in circulation. It has been asserted in various places that a decree will soon be issued, forbidding the wearing of a beard, unless they have been a marrying sign for the Socialists. Some persons have announced that the President is about to shut up all places of worship except those of the State Churches. The Wesleyans would then be persecuted, as well as the Independants, the Baptists, and the Plymouth Brethren, who have many converts in the South of France. But this is only a report, and should I judge from appearances, and from the liberty we actualy enjoy, it seems very improbable that such a decision will be taken for the present. It would be highly impolitic, and would set many against Napoleon. But none can tell what will be done later. Many Christians are afraid, and have sad forebodings excited by the harmony that exists between Louis Napoleon and the Pope.

Another consequence of the press not being free, is to be seen in the strange exaggerations of the English press. Were it not that the matter is a very serious one, one would be highly amused at the flow of indignation which is to be found even in some religious periodicals, the Watchman, for instance, against some tyrannical act of the President, related at great length in their columns, but which act in reality has never taken place. It has thus been asserted, that there never was any real insurrection in Paris, but only a plot invented by the President: that it was impossible for one to vote freely (yet there were 80,000 men in Paris alone;) that the President dared not go out, for fear of being shot; that he had gone to reside at the Tuileries; that he is Emperor, &c. These assertions and many others have not the least foundation of truth in them. Most extraordinary false statements have been published about the Constitution, which will soon be promulgated, and which, according to the papers, will be subversive of all that is right, and subservient only to the will of an ambitious despot. Why such a hue-and-cry should be raised against a man who has saved France from anarchy, it is difficult to conceive.

But enough of politics. As Christians we take more interest in matters that relate to the spiritual kingdom: and thank God, notwithstanding the late commotions, I have good news to tell. Two new religious societies have been established in Paris within the last four weeks. One is a "Young Men's Christian Association." It is composed of young men, belonging principally to the schools of medicine and law, who meet once a week to spend an hour in the reading of the word

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

...d, and in prayer. They have just begun to form a library of religious books, and to receive some religious periodicals. The number of members is only about fifteen; still, for Paris, this is an excellent beginning. The London Young Men's Christian Association, which is so active and useful, began in the city five years ago. It now reckons nine thousand members, and has been the means of the conversion of hundreds of young men, chiefly engaged in commerce. May the Paris association do the same good.

The other society which has just been established is a "Sunday School Society." The readers of the N. O. Christian Advocate will perhaps be very much astonished when I say that this is the first society of the kind established in France. Still, it is a fact. Sunday Schools are very little known here. Paris, with its million and a half of inhabitants, has only twelve. When I had, some months ago, to prepare for the Fifth conference of the Evangelical Alliance in London, statistical details on the Sunday Schools in France, I could only find out in all the Protestant churches, 122 containing about 7,500 children. Of these 122 schools probably not more than forty would be considered in America as real Sabbath Schools, as the others had no stated Sabbath services, and were simply a separate service for children, generally held by the minister for children, generally on the Sunday, but some times also on Thursday afternoon.

A Sunday School Committee was formed in Paris in 1826, but found so little support that it was dispersed the following year.

January, 1851, a Sunday School Magazine was started in Paris, edited by a Wesleyan methodist, just sent to Paris, in order to establish Catechumen classes. This magazine had so well as to find 550 subscribers the first year, and it is in consequence of three articles published in it on Sunday School Unions that a Sunday School Society was formed on the 6th of this month. Its aim is to propagate evangelical truths by means of Sunday School. It will encourage, their formation, and seek to make them more perfect in their organization, without interfering in any way with their private concerns. It will publish useful books for teachers and scholars. All lovers and teachers of Sunday Schools, who are in writing to the constitution of the society and subscribe to its funds, will be members of the Society. The business of the Society will be transacted by a committee of six persons, named by ballot by the members, so as to represent the various Christian churches (National Reformed, Wesleyan, Independent and Lutheran.) Such are the principal articles of its constitution, now going through the press, together with an address, in the name of the meeting, to the officers and teachers of Sunday schools in France, at the beginning of February, the members of the Society will be convened to name a committee. The committee will probably begin its duties by publishing a map of Palestine, some attendance, and good behavior tickets, and a list of reward books already used in France, which the Society will sell at reduced prices, after having made an arrangement with the editors.

J. P. C.

P. S. I have just received a copy of the Constitution, published in a supplement to one of the daily papers. It is rather short, containing only 58 articles, divided into 8 chapters. It is far more liberal than was expected by many; takes for its basis the principles proclaimed in 1789, and ensures liberty of worship to all, whilst no mention is made of the Romish Church as being the Church of the majority of the French. The Government of the French Republic is entrusted for ten years to Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, who governs by means of ministers, a council of state, a Senate and a legislative body. He is always responsible to the people, to whom he can always appeal. The Senate will be composed of the cardinals, admirals and marshals, to whom will be added such citizens as the President will name. Their number can not be more than 80 the first year, and 150 afterwards. They are life members. Peti-tions to be addressed to them. Their functions as well as that of the members of the legislative body are gratuitous. The legislative body, named by universal suffrage for six years, discusses and votes on the proposed laws and on taxes. It is composed of about 260 members. Their sittings are public, and five members wish the contrary. They cannot put the ministers in accusation, nor receive any petitions. The press will be allowed to publish the minutes only of the sittings, such as will be prepared by the President. The President of the Republic convenes, prorogues and dissolves the legislative body.

The Council of State is composed of 40 or 50 members, named by the President of the Republic. It is presided over by the President of the Republic. The Senate is to oppose all laws contrary to the Constitution, to religion, to morals, to liberty of worship, to individual liberty, to the equality of citizens before the law, to the inviolability of property, and to the principle of the inamovability of the magistracy.

J. P. C.

Hymeneal.

MARRIED—On the 5th inst., by the Rev. H. J. Hunter, Mr. JOHN L. ROBISON of Wilcox co., Ala., to Miss MARY E. W., daughter of Rev. Wm. W. and Rhoda G. Christian of Carlowille, Dallas co., Ala.

Obituary Notice.

Departed this life 20th January, 1852, at the residence of her brother-in law, D. F. Sanford, in the Fork, Greene co., Ala., in the 25th year of her age, Mrs. JANE AMANDA, consort of the Rev. L. B. McDonald of the Alabama Conference.

She was the third daughter of Mr. William and Nancy Hassee, and was born in Stafford co., Va., April 15th, 1827. The family settled in Greene co. in 1835. Amanda received her education (which was very creditable,) at the schools of Clinton and Eutaw. She was converted to God and joined the M. E. Church at a Protracted Meeting, in 1845. In the fall of 1843, she was married to the Rev. L. B. McDonald. For a number of years the writer of this was a personal and intimate acquaintance with the deceased; and while he would avoid all seeming extravagance, it is difficult to speak in merited terms of her many and surpassing virtues.

As a Christian, she was enlightened, consistent, devoted. As a Methodist, she had studied the system, and well knew and heartily approved its demands. She loved Methodism for its sake, and conformed to it from principle. She regarded it the most scriptural and unobjectionable embodiment of Christian doctrine duty and privilege in the world. As a wife, she was all a good husband should ask, and very much of a model of a traveling preacher's wife—a great help, and never a hinderance in the sacrifices of itineracy. Few have so generally endeared themselves to the people where their lot has been cast. As a mother, she was patient, kind, and discreet. As a friend, sincere, obliging and hospitable. During her last illness she was frequently conversed with on the subject of her prospects. She desired to live for the benefit of her little children, but was resigned to the will of God, without fear and full of hope immortal.

At the sudden exit of one so young and useful, humanity may well weep; but we sorrow not as others who have no hope. Farewell, Sister! friend of my family! Quiet be thy slumber, and triumphant thy resurrection.

W. McNAIR.

Pickensville, Ala., Feb. 12th, 1852.

☞ Nashville, Louisville and Richmond C. Advocates please copy.

Advocate Office, February 21.

Rev Wm Littlejohn, Lafourche, La	$2 50
(N. s.) Jane Kelsey, N. O.	2 50
By Rev. W. B. Bowen: (n. s.) J. Ferguson, Shady Grove, La. Less $2 50
By Rev. Wm Threadgill, Chunnenuggee, Ala	5 00
By Rev Wm Moore: (n. s.) Jno Meadow, Mt. Moriah, Ark., Less $2 50
(N. s.) Rev. John Boone, Stump Bridge, Miss	2 50
(N. s.) Wm M. Stewart, Stump Bridge, Miss	2 50
By Rev. R. Abbey: (n. s.) James C. Coleman, Vazoo City, Miss., Less $2 50
By Rev. B. Drinnon: (n. s.) E. Hagan, (n. s.) Dr. W. Weeli, Linden, Ala., Less $5 00
By Rev. R. Trippett: (n. s.) Rev J. R. Edding, De-Glaize, La; (n. s.) Capt. Knox (n. s.) J. S. Wiseman, Prairie Mer Rouge, La.; (n. s.) W. W. Owen Pt. Jefferson La: (n. s.) L. C. Moore, L. K. W. Ross, Bastrop La., Less $15 00.
By Rev. S. W. Speer: Jno Carter, Kirk's Ferry, La. Less $2 50.
Wm Hodgin, N. O.	2 50
R. Collins, Mobile	2 50
By Rev. R. Alexander: (n. s.) A. Mann, Chappel Hill, Texas	2 50
By Rev. C. N. McLeod: (n. s.) J. A. Thompson, New Prospect, Ala: (n. s.) W. P. Brown, Hollow Square Ala: (n. s.) S. A. E. Farrell, E. Wynne, Hollow Square, Ala., Less $10.
N. s.) N. C. R. — Baltimore, Md., Feb. 1854	5 00
By Rev. G. G. Nash: (n. s.) Robt. S. Atkisson, Brownsville Miss., Less $2 50
By D. Williams, P. M: (n. s.) Rev. T. J. Linton, Monticello, Fla	2 50
By Rev. J. T. Campbell, (n. s.) D. Collins, Rutter, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. W. E. Doty: (n. s.) J. M. Ford, Shreveport, La., Less $2 50.
By Rev. A. Hunter: (n. s.) Mark E. Moore, Equality, Ark., Less $2 50.
By Rev. R. S. Watkins: (n. s.) J. G. Fullalove, Blossom Hill, La.; (n. s.) D. W. Davis, Shreveport, La., Less $5
By Rev L. Parker: (n. s.) Wm. E. Pastetur, Shreveport, La., Less $2 50.
By Rev W. Murrah: James Chalmers, Pickensville, Ala., Less $2 50
C. H. Allman, N. O.	2 50
By Rev. A. M. Wells: (n. s.) Geo Spencer, (n. s.) Ed. Tarrant, (n. s.) Rev. Jno Meggs, (n. s.) S. E. Self., Less $10.
By Rev D. C. Wells: (n. s.) Rev A. J. Edgerton, Grenada, Mi., Less $2 50.
By Rev. D. Duncan: (n. s.) Ben. Adams; (n. s.) D. H. Smith, Linden, Ala., Less $5.
Mrs M. A. Chapman, Medina, O., Less 50c	2 00
(N. s.) Mrs A. P. Pipkin, Two Bayou, Ark	2 50
By Rev. R. A. Kemp: (n. s.) R. G. Dardeu, Thibodaux, La., Less $2 50.
(N. s.) Mrs. E. W. Raiford, Chinn Grove, Miss	2 50

First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

On Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference.

Baton Rouge	March 20 and 21
Point Coupee Circuit	March 27 and 28
Comerding Circuit	April 3 and 4
Waterproof	April 10 and 11
St. Joseph	April 17 and 18
Richmond and Madison	April 24 and 25
Monticello	May 8 and 9
Providence	May 15 and 16

W. E. Bott.

First Round of Quarterly Meetings.

On Bloomingdale District, Alabama Conference.

Bloqui Circuit at Bristers Cove	March 6 and 7
Lebanon Circuit, at Lebanon	March 13 and 14
Sand Mountain Mission, at Pine Grove	March 20 and 21
Ashville, at Scales	March 27, and 28
Harpersville, at Harpersville	April 3 and 4
Warrior, Miss., at Holly Springs	April 10 and 11
Walker, Miss., Jasper	April 17 and 18
Pikeville, Miss., at Centre	May 1 and 2

L. B. McDonald, P. E.

General Intelligence.

THE EMPIRE CITY.—The steamship Empire City arrived about seven o'clock last evening, and in consequence of the strong wind which was prevailing at the time and the darkness, she did not attempt to come up to her landing.

MOBILE AND THE TWO PER CENT TAX.—An election was held in Mobile on Saturday last to ascertain whether the real estate owners of the city would pay an annual tax of two per cent on their real property for five years, for the benefit of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The proceeds of the tax to be estimated as so much subscription to stock in the road. This scheme was denounced by some, who called it a forced loan, but it appears that it was responded to cheerfully. The vote stood 830 in favor of the tax and 7 against it.

LOW WATER IN THE LAKES.—The water in the Lakes is again very low. The mail steamer California from New Orleans for Mobile on Sunday last, was detained six hours at Grant's Pass, and the Eastern mail consequently failed to connect at Mobile. We understand that a large quantity of freight has accumulated at the Lake terminus of the Pontchartrain Railroad.

DEFENCE OF LIBERIA.—The American Colonization Society, it is said, has voted the sum of $10,000, should it be required, to aid in the defence of Liberia against the attacks of the savage tribes. The Society has also adopted measures to obtain additional arms and warlike resources. President Roberts is determined to punish the authors of the late outrage as the surest way to secure peace for the future. The names of the nine massacred at the attack on Fishtown on the 5th of November, were Asbury Hasland, Talbott Majors, Mrs. Maby and her three children, Mrs. Briggs and her infant, and a lad named Charles, aged 16 years.

NEW STEAMER.—A new steamer, built in New York for the Newfoundland and Texas trade, and which was to be called the Texas, has, in consequence of the rush of Californian passengers, been purchased for the New York and San Juan line, and will sail in a few days for the latter port. Her name has been changed to the "Sierra Nevada."

NEW ENGLISH MINISTER TO THE UNITED STATES.—The London Gazette of the 23d ult. announces, officially, the appointment of John Tiennes Crampton, (now the English representative at Washington,) as Her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, and Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer as Minister to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

FREE MEDICAL EDUCATION.—The Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati has declared its course of lectures free from all charge for Professors' tickets, retaining only the small incidental fees for matriculating and dissecting, to defray the expenses of the college. This is making it virtually a free school. The next session of the Institute commences on the 1st of March and lasts four months.

RECOGNITION OF INDEPENDENCE.—President Roberts has received from the Prussian Minister at the Court of St. James a dispatch, containing a formal recognition of the independence of Liberia by his Government.

SECURING THE OHIO RIVER WITH WATER.—A resolution is before the Pennsylvania Legislature requesting the members of Congress from that State to obtain such Congressional action as will promote the adoption of the plan which has been submitted to Congress by Chas. Eliet, Jr., for supplying the Ohio river with water during periods of drought, by means of reservoirs, to be constructed upon the tributaries thereof.

THE COLLINS STEAMERS.—A writer in the Washington Union furnishes a statement of the financial condition of the Collins line of steamers, as certified under oath. The cash cost of the steamers, ready for sea, was $2,044,142 71. The actual average cost of each voyage to England and back, has been $69 215 64, while the average receipts have been only $48 280 85, leaving a deficiency on twenty voyages of $338,574 40. The Company has sunk altogether about $350,000, and no dividends have been paid to stockholders.

THE HERRING FISHERY.—Advices from St. John's to January 29, state that the extreme cold weather had in a great measure, destroyed the herring fishery.

THE FIRE ANNIHILATOR.—Some further experiments with Phillips's Fire Annihilator have been made in Sussex, but the results are not very flattering. The Experiments, it appears, only demonstrated that the annihilator would put out a small fire in an early stage, but it is of little use when a large building is enveloped in flame. The [illegible] says the annihilators were set off [illegible] the movement of the company. We place a ...ttle in the vapor, and drew it back wet and dirty. Again we inserted it, shielded by a wooden glove and the exposed part of the glove has since changed its color. We noticed also that when the mixtures were inclined from the perpendicular a good deal of muddy water was thrown out with the vapor. These things show that properly may be damaged by the annihilators, as well as by Croton water; and we suppose that the vapor would be very injurious to the stock of a cutlery store, and probably to many descriptions of dry goods.

SNOW IN SCOTLAND.—The north of Scotland has just been visited by one of the severest storms that has happened there for many years. It commenced by a slight fall of snow on Thursday week, and on Friday the wind veered to north and northeast, blowing a gale. On the sea-coast the storm raged with unprecedented fury and has done a great deal of damage to property along the sea-coast. For miles along the coast there was nothing to be seen at the different fishing stations but wreck and desolation. The snow lay for three days in some places ten feet deep, and so completely were the roads blocked up, that one day there were over 180 mail bags overdue at Edinburgh.

QUARANTINE.—When the propeller New York was about to sail for Chagres, on Saturday, the 7th inst., the number of passengers was so great that it was found to be inhumanly dangerous, if not impossible, for her to proceed. They were scarcely able to find standing room on her decks, and it is said two-thirds of the number were unprovided with berths. Capt. Baxter declined leaving port until one hundred and fifty of the passengers were reported, and much dissatisfaction was exhibited by the passengers, who held a meeting with a view to vindicate their rights. On Saturday afternoon a number of officials finding it impossible to proceed by the New York, engaged passage by other steamers.

DISTRESS.—The 12th instant being the anniversary of the Georgia Historical Society, Dr. James P. Screven, of Savannah, availed himself of the occasion to cancel a mortgage of $200 which he held against the hall belonging to the society and the lot on which it stands.

TOO COLD FOR THE FISHES.—The New Bedford Mercury says: "We learn from Captain Stubbs, the vigilant keeper of the light-house on Curtyhunk, that during the severe cold weather of the last few weeks, shoals of tautog, or black fish, were actually driven out of their haunts around the rocky ledges of that island, and came ashore in large numbers. At Nonamisha Light, Gay Head, they were gathered up along the beach in cart loads and sent to the New York markets. Such an occurrence has not been known since the winter of 1816, when Buzzard's Bay was entirely closed over, and persons passed and repassed on the ice, during several days, the whole distance between Elizabeth Islands and the main land."

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—Advices have been received at Boston from Buenos Ayres to the 20th of December, bringing the important announcement that Rosas has signed a decree allowing vessels at Montevideo to proceed to Buenos Ayres to load.

PEACHES.—The Western papers speak of the fruit trees in that part of the country being injured by the late severe cold. All quarters of the country give the same report, so that the lovers of these summer luxuries will be scarcely able to gratify their tastes next season.

THE TOWN OF THE TOM.—The New York Mirror states that Messrs. Jacob Little & Co., the well-known Wall street operators, have realized some $250,000 by the rise in stocks, and other lucky changes, within the last three months. Delaware and Hudson, of which Messrs. Little & Co. held an enormous amount, has recently advanced twenty-five per cent. The same paper states that Simeon Draper, Esq., made the handsome sum of $20,000 by his recent purchase and sale of the lots in Astor Place.

PREPARED FLAX.—Clauson's method of preparing flax is extending itself rapidly in this country. In eight of the States the right of using it has been purchased by various parties, and this has given great impulse to the growth of flax. Mr. Ellsworth, formerly of the Patent Office in Washington, and now resident in the Wabash Valley of Indiana, has sown five hundred acres with flax seed; and Col. Baker, of Illinois, is largely engaged both in the cultivation and preparation of the plant.

VALUE OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.—One of the London papers estimates the loss by the burning of the Congressional Library at Washington at $40,000,000!

PROPULSION BY STEAM.—A new invention has been recently made for ploughing the soil by steam power. We wonder that this application of steam has not been made years before.

COMPLIMENTARY.—The members of the New York bar are to present Charles O'Conor, Esq., a handsome service of plate, as a token of admiration for the ability with which he defended Mrs. Forrest.

SALE OF THE STEAMSHIP ARABIA.—Letters from Europe announce the sale of the Cunard steamer Arabia to the West India Mail Steamship Company, to supply the place of the ill-fated Amazon. It is likely that the Asia will also be sold.

FROM UTAH.—The Washington Republic of the 12th says: We have received the Deseret News of the 15th and 29th of November. From an eight-by-ten sheet, this paper has grown into imperial size. On the 29th of October the site for the seat of Government was determined. The new city is called Fillmore, and is in a county called Millard. Judge Snow had organized the court of the Second Judicial District at the City of Manti, in the county of San Pete.

Judge Snow's opinion in regard to the legality of the proceedings of the Governor and Legislature in the absence of the officers who withdrew from the Territory, appears at length. He justifies the course of the former, and says that, finding their proceedings legal, he believes it the right of the President, as well as of the United States and the people of that Territory, that he should take his seat and hold his first court, as required by the act of the Legislative Assembly of Utah, and so believing, he does not hesitate to enter on his duties.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.—On the 10th inst., while Captain Benj. W. Bracken was adjusting the lightning rod of Harvey & Hollingsworth, at Wilmington, Del., a portion, of several feet, gave way and struck, nearly in a direct line, the cheek bone of Mr. B., passed alongside of the lower jaw bone, came out through the neck, and fell against the collar bone with such force as to fracture it near the shoulder.

THE SPEECH OF GEN. CASS.—On the 10th inst. General Cass made a lengthy and forcible speech in the United States Senate, in support of his substitute for the resolutions of Mr. Clarke. The General maintained that, although this coalitry is not prepared to forcibly uphold the doctrine of non-intervention in Europe, it is nevertheless our duty, as a republican government, to express our solemn disapproval of all interference by one nation with the internal affairs of another.

THE STEAM LINE TO GALWAY.—It is stated that the Post-office Committee of the House of Representatives is prepared to report unanimously in favor of Mr. Tibbett's project for a line of steamers from this country to Galway, in Ireland. The plan contemplates carrying the mails once a fortnight, (alternately with the Collins line) for a much less sum than is now paid the Collins line, the work not to be paid for till it is executed, and ample security to be given for its faithful performance.

A MOWING MACHINE.—The Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Eagle says that a machine for mowing, manufactured in the western part of that State, has recently been introduced into Dutchess county, which will probably prove of great advantage to farmers. It is warranted to cut an acre an hour of any kind of grass, with a pair of horses, on all lands free from obstructions, and do it as well as it can be done with a scythe by the best of mowers. The machine is simple in its construction, and can be managed by any boy capable of driving a pair of horses. It is highly recommended by a large number of farmers who have used them with success in the western and central part of the State.

TO BE PARDONED.—Ion, of the Baltimore sun, writing from Washington, says: "I am glad to learn that, at this time, when the Spanish Government has exhibited so much moderation, Gov. Hunt, of New York, has been induced to exert the Executive clemency in behalf of a Spanish subject, Jose Antonio Lopez, who was convicted of murder in that State, and under sentence. The Spanish Minister interposed in his behalf, and visited Gov. Hunt personally on the subject. The jury, or some of them also recommended him to mercy, and I learn that Gov. Hunt has determined to pardon him.

THE NEW ENGLISH MINISTER.—The National Intelligencer, speaking of the recent appointment of John T. Crampton, Esq., as Minister of Great Britain to the United States, says: "Mr. Crampton has for several years been connected with the British Legation to this country, and a good part of the time as Charge d'Affaires. Though Sir Henry and Lady Bulwer will certainly be missed in the society of Washington, it is yet a subject of congratulation, since they do not return, that we are to have here as the Representative of the Government of Great Britain a gentleman of the character and experience, and thorough fitness for his high trust, of Mr Crampton, who is already so familiar with the institutions and principles of our Government as to need no probation."

SANTA ANNA.—A correspondent of the New York Times writes from the City of Mexico, under date of December 28, as follows:

Santa Anna, the prime of Mexican conspirators, you know, has never relinquished his hopes of again usurping the dictatorship of his unhappy country. His banishment and absence supply solid him secure opportunities to mature his plans. It is well known that he is even now contemplating another revolutionary attempt at an early day, but with more than his usual adroitness, he has succeeded in keeping from the Government the particular of his movements. It is very probable that he will make his descent upon Mexico at Acapulco—a point farthest from the suspicions of his enemies. I know that such was his intention, although circumstances may lead him to change his plans. A house has been built there and furnished for him by one of his friends and many things useful for a campaign are landing there daily. On the day I left I saw 150 or 200 cases of bottles going into the warehouses of the leading Santanist there, and many bales of blankets and clothing. You need not be surprised if you hear stirring news from that quarter soon.

All the officials in that State (Guerrero) are Santa Anna's friends. Don Alvarez the ex-Governor, is almost an infant in arms. General Alvarado, the great conspirator, and a bitter enemy of President Arista. He has plenty of arms and can call into the field 15,000 Indians at any moment.

The Government is almost powerless against him as the soldiers from the more northerly part of Mexico have come in with the dysentery as soon as they got into Alvarez's mountains. All the military officers of the different states in the State are appointed by his influence and all the civil officers, and, of course Santa Annists. I suppose Santa Anna's rallying cry will be ignorant will be war to the North Americans."

NEW ENGLAND ENGINE.—Messrs. Collier & Candee of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., have constructed an engine by electricity. It is the invention of Mr. Gaston, of New Jersey. The Poughkeepsie Eagle says: "During the building of the machine we have watched its progress, and its different parts have been explained to us. When Mr. Gaston came to Poughkeepsie, he brought a small battery with him, which he thought was not sufficiently powerful to move the machine when finished. But on its completion the battery was applied and the engine instantly moved and ran with great regularity and with some power. The result much more than exceeded the expectations of the inventor, that all doubts in his mind were expelled. The machine is the model for a powerful engine. It can be run with a far less expense than a steam engine; its power will be more uniform, less room will be required, no boilers will burst; and it will not affect insurance. We are confident that the thing sought for power has now been practically applied. In a few days a larger battery will be procured, and the engine applied to machinery to test its power, after which, we will say more about it."

HAMILTON AND THE FAREWELL ADDRESS.—Alexander Hamilton is out in another letter claiming for his father the authorship of the farewell address of Washington. No. 1 recalls his pretensions jocularly, which they approach nearly. Mr. Hamilton certainly displays a love of notoriety, vanity, and disgusting egotism which should be frowned upon by the whole country. The New York Express thus concludes an article on the subject:

"Alas, for the modesty of the son who would in this day put upon even Hamilton as "the master influence which has guided the destinies of the United States." And a double expression of sorrow, or some other feeling, all will say, for the act of writing deliberately or coolly, that it was on father who wrote the farewell address as well as most of Washington's important papers. Arrogance, unhealthy, and brazen-faceliness, we must say, could hardly go beyond this. No one will envy the writer the laurels he may win, or the glory he may acquire in this new effort to detract from the world-wide fame of Washington. If he could prove his case, the act would be regarded as a mighty one, and as it now stands it adds to the act its meanness something bordering on crime.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—The New York Express gives the following synopsis of the liquor law which has been introduced in the Legislature of that State:

As we read the act now, no dealer in liquor is to be exempt from the penalties, whether an importer, a wholesale or a retail dealer—though the former class are to be allowed to keep, if they are not suspected of an intent to sell them, provided always they are in the original unpacked packages. If not, or if the owner prove that first, without records as soon as they get into Alvarez's mountains. All the military officers of the different states in the State are appointed by his influence and all the civil officers, and, of course Santa Annists. I suppose Santa Anna's rallying cry will be ignorant will be war to the North Americans."

NEW ENGLAND ENGINE.—Messrs. Collier & Candee of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., have constructed an engine by electricity. It is the invention of Mr. Gaston, of New Jersey. The Poughkeepsie Eagle says: "During the building of the machine we have watched its progress, and its different parts have been explained to us. When Mr. Gaston came to Poughkeepsie, he brought a small battery with him, which he thought was not sufficiently powerful to move the machine when finished. But on its completion the battery was applied and the engine instantly moved and ran with great regularity and with some power. The result much more than exceeded the expectations of the inventor, that all doubts in his mind were expelled. The machine is the model for a powerful engine. It can be run with a far less expense than a steam engine; its power will be more uniform, less room will be required, no boilers will burst; and it will not affect insurance. We are confident that the thing sought for power has now been practically applied. In a few days a larger battery will be procured, and the engine applied to machinery to test its power, after which, we will say more about it."

HAMILTON AND THE FAREWELL ADDRESS.—Alexander Hamilton is out in another letter claiming for his father the authorship of the farewell address of Washington. No. 1 recalls his pretensions jocularly, which they approach nearly. Mr. Hamilton certainly displays a love of notoriety, vanity, and disgusting egotism which should be frowned upon by the whole country. The New York Express thus concludes an article on the subject:

"Alas, for the modesty of the son who would in this day put upon even Hamilton as "the master influence which has guided the destinies of the United States." And a double expression of sorrow, or some other feeling, all will say, for the act of writing deliberately or coolly, that it was on father who wrote the farewell address as well as most of Washington's important papers. Arrogance, unhealthy, and brazen-faceliness, we must say, could hardly go beyond this. No one will envy the writer the laurels he may win, or the glory he may acquire in this new effort to detract from the world-wide fame of Washington. If he could prove his case, the act would be regarded as a mighty one, and as it now stands it adds to the act its meanness something bordering on crime.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—The New York Express gives the following synopsis of the liquor law which has been introduced in the Legislature of that State:

As we read the act now, no dealer in liquor is to be exempt from the penalties, whether an importer, a wholesale or a retail dealer—though the former class are to be allowed to keep, if they are not suspected of an intent to sell them, provided always they are in the original unpacked packages. If not, or if the owner prove that first, without records as soon as they get into Alvarez's mountains. All the military officers of the different states in the State are appointed by his influence and all the civil officers, and, of course Santa Annists. I suppose Santa Anna's rallying cry will be ignorant will be war to the North Americans."

THE ROYAL FAMILIES OF EUROPE.—The following interesting details respecting the royal families of Europe appear in a Leipsic journal:

There are forty-six sovereigns upon the Continent, including the Emperor of Brazil, who belongs to a European house. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz is the oldest, having passed his 75d year. There is but one other who has entered his 70th year—the King of Wurtemburg. The sovereign who has reigned the longest is the Prince of Schaumburg-Lippe—55 years in all, or 40 years since his majority. Eighteen have come to the throne in the last ten years, and two, the Prince of Lippe and the King of Hanover, succeeded to power in 1851.

Seven out of the forty-six have never been married, namely: the Pope, the Emperor of Austria, the Duke of Brunswick, the Princes of Reuss-Schleitz, of Waldeck, and of Lippe, and the Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg. Among the remaining thirty-nine, three are widowers—the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, for the third time, the King of the Belgians for the second time, and the Duke of Anhalt Dessau for the first time. Two, the King of Denmark and the Elector Hesse, are married morganatically; and one, the Sultan, has five polygamous.

Ten out of the thirty-nine sovereigns who were married, or who have been so, have no children. Twenty-six have sons who are heirs presumptive. Two Thrones that of Brazil and that of Spain will descend to daughters, as the Emperor of Brazil and the Queen of Spain have no sons.

Of the twenty-six hereditary Princes, several are married. The oldest is 31 years of age, and the youngest—the hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin—is nine months old. The Princess expectant of Spain is younger still, however, having been born on the 20th of December last.

Eighteen of the forty-six sovereigns have no descendants who can succeed them. Between will be succeeded by their brothers; two—the King of Denmark and the Duke of Modena—by their uncles, and one—the Elector of Hesse—by his cousin. Four—the Pope of Rome, the Dukes of Brunswick and of Anhalt-Bernburg, and the Landgrave of Hesse Homburg—have no descendants or collaterals who can succeed them.

AUSTRIA AND THE UNITED STATES.—It has been briefly stated that the Charge of the United States at Vienna was not invited to a grand ball recently given by the Prime Minister of Austria—an omission which was thought to be significant. A Vienna letter of January 11, published in an English paper, says:

"Considerable sensation has been caused in the diplomatic circles of Vienna by the absence of three representatives of foreign powers at the grand ball given a week ago by the First Minister of the Crown, Prince Schwartzberg. It was found on inquiry that the individuals in question, viz: the Charge d'Affaires of the United States, the Turkish Embassador and the Swiss Envoy, had not been invited; and this slight is looked upon as a demonstration receiving peculiar significance from the present political state of Europe.

"It has been stated, in many quarters, that the Austrian Government would immediately recall its Embassador from Washington, in case the reception given to Kossuth assumed an official character. Special instructions of a peremptory nature have been dispatched from Vienna to the representatives of Austria and Russia, resident in the States. These gentlemen have been told to demand their passports, in case assistance, pecuniary or otherwise, should be given to the Hungarians by the American Government, in consequence of resolutions passed in Congress for carrying out Kossuth's non-intervention system.

"Considerable curiosity is felt in political circles as to the contents of the next post from the United States. The Austrian conservative party positively affirm that a rupture between the two governments is at hand, and they predict with confidence the return of the imperial envoy to Vienna. It must be evident to every one who reflects at all, that the enemies of Austria would rejoice at a breach between America and the great despotic powers of Europe—this being the chief object of Kossuth's ambition, and the burden of his song. The news, therefore, of the recall from Washington of the Russian and Austrian representatives would be regarded by Kossuth and his party as the best reward he his fatigues in crossing the Atlantic, and his subsequent efforts on the platform."

Telegraphic Items.

NEW YORK, (Wednesday) Feb. 18.

The Cunard steamer Canada has arrived with dates from Liverpool to the 31st ult.—one week later than the accounts by the Europa. The following is a brief summary of her news:

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 31.

There has been an active demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the last steamer, especially from the trade, and being freely met by holders the sales of the week embrace fully 60,000 bales, of which 9000 have been taken for export and 10,000 on speculation. The sales of yesterday (30th) were 10,000, and of Friday 8000 bales. Taken for speculation yesterday, 2000 bales. The later sales have been at full prices, and the market closes with rough firmness. There is, however, no change in the official quotations, which are as follows: Fair Orleans, 5¾; Middling Orleans, 5¼; Fair Uplands, 5; and Middling Uplands 4¾d.

Flour has been in fair demand and holders firm. The quotations are, for Western Canal 24s., and for Ohio 28s. Barrel Corn has been in good request at 29s 6d. for Yellow, and 32s per quarter for Whites.

Further exports of grain from Russian ports are now prohibited by the Government.

NEW YORK, Feb 18.

The Canada brings advices of much excitement in England with regard to French relations, and of continued preparations for an invasion.

A meeting was held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne on the 30th January with the object of taking measures for the formation of Volunteer Corps, to repel invasion. The Woolwich Artillery have been mustered under unusual inspection, ready to enter upon field duty. The Garrison at Portsmouth has been ordered to send out additional exercising parties, and guns of larger calibre are to be mounted on the forts.

Late advices from the Cape of Good Hope report no important change in the condition of affairs there.

Dispatches from Paris under date of the 30th January, state that Louis Napoleon had given a grand dinner to the British minister, on the previous day, at which he expressed great regret that the latter should prevail in England that he entertained warlike intentions towards that country.

The Minister of the Interior of France had issued an order on the 30th directing the liberation of such political prisoners as could be liberated without danger to the public peace.

The country is much agitated on account of the decrees against the Orleanists. It is said in some quarters that the President has promised indemnities to the Orleans family. The executors of Louis Phillippe's estate declare the late decrees to be illegal.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.

The Canada's accounts state that the Constitution is placed under censorship. The Financial Exposé of M. Fould, shows a deficit in the French Treasury of twenty millions of francs. He refuses to retain office, unless the decree relative to the Orleans family be modified. M. Dupin has already resigned his office.

Jerome Bonaparte has been nominated President of the Senate, and M. Maynard, as Vice-President.

The express train on the Erie Railroad was thrown off the track into the Delaware river this morning. Four lives were lost and several persons injured.

The Cunard steamer Europa sailed to-day, from Boston, with $205,000 in specie.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 19.

In the Senate to-day, the Temperance Bill passed almost unanimously. This Bill gives exclusive power to parishes in the country, and to the aldermen of towns or cities, to grant licenses, subject to the vote of the people.

In the House, the Homestead Exemption Bill was discussed at great length, and referred to a select committee.

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 19.

In the Legislature, to-day, A. S. Adams, (Union democrat) of Monroe county, was elected U. S. Senator from this State, to serve the unexpired term of Jefferson Davis. Mr. Adams was elected on the first ballot.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19—Evening.

There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market to-day, and 2500 bales have been sold at firm prices. Strict Middling is quoted at 8¾@8¾ for Orleans, and 8¾@8¾c. for Uplands.

Flour has been in fair request, at $5@5 12½ ₱ barrel. Corn is firm at 70c. per bushel for Southern Yellow. Mess Pork has sold at $15 50@$15 75 ₱ bbl. Lard 9@9½c.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, February 19.

In the Senate to-day the bill regulating the mileage of delegates from Oregon has been under discussion, with the Iowa land bill. Nothing of public importance was done in the House.

Charleston Cotton Market.

CHARLESTON, February 20.

There has been an active demand in the Cotton market throughout the week, and the sales reach 14,000 bales. Strict middling is worth 7¼c. ₱ lb. Freights are unchanged. The receipts of Cotton have been heavy, and a comparison with last year's business shows an increase of 3000 bales, against a decrease for the previous week, of 10,000 bales.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 17, 1852.

SENATE.—Passed an act to create an additional Justice of the Peace in the Parish of Jefferson.

Mr. Gardere gave notice of a bill to provide for a change of the parish seat in the Parish of Jefferson.

Passed House bill conferring on Justices of Peace power to issue writs of injunction.

Also an act to establish the Parish of Winn.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 18.

SENATE.—General Planche, President, in the Chair—Twenty-five Senators present.

Joint resolutions from the House providing for celebrating the 22d of February, taken up and adopted.

Mr. Gardere moved to take up the Convention Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Dennoy.—A Joint Committee to appoint a Joint Committee to examine the purchases made by the Medical Department of the State Institution, and report upon the same.

Mr. Wickliffe from the Committee to whom was referred the Governor's Message and accompanying documents, reported a resolution complimentary to the Attorney-General for his course in regard to the McDonogh estate. Also, an act concerning the estate donated to the State by John McDonogh.

A communication was received from the Auditor of Public Accounts, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, showing the aggregate salaries and fees of State officers to be annually $163,280.

Mr. Martin offered a joint resolution for the appointment of a Joint Committee to re-district the State judicially.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.—An act for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, which passed without amendment—Adjourned.

Passed—An act appropriating ten thousand dollars to Jackson Monument and five thousand for erection of memento on Battle Ground of 8th January, 1815.

Passed—An act to provide for taking the sense of the people upon amendments to Constitution passed 1850 and '52—Adjourned.

The Promethus Affair.

The Washington papers of the 13th contain the correspondence between the United States Government and that of Great Britain relative to the attack on the Prometheus. We give the last letter of Lord Granville to Mr. Lawrence:

FOREIGN OFFICE, Jan. 10, 1852.

The undersigned, her Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE WORTH OF WOMAN.

FROM THE GERMAN OF SCHILLER.

Honored be woman! she beams on the sight,
Graceful and fair, like a being of light;
Brothers around her where'er she strays,
Roses of bliss on our thorn-covered ways
Roses of Paradise, sent from above
To be gathered and twined in a garland of Love

Man, on passion's stormy ocean
Tossed by surges mountain high,
Courts the hurricane's commotion.
Spurns at reason's feeble cry
Lead the tempest roars around him,
Louder still it roars within.
Flashing lights of hope confound him,
Stuns with life's lees assault din

Woman invites him with bliss in her smile.
To come from his toil and be happy awhile;
Whispering sweetly—come to my bower—
Go not in search of the phantom of power—
Honor and wealth are illusory—come!
Happiness dwells in the temper of home

Man, with fury stern and savage
Persecutes his brother man.
Reckless if he bless or ravage.
Action, action—still he plan
Now creating—now destroying
Ceaseless wishes tear his breast;
Ever seeking—ne'er enjoying;
Still to be; but never blest.

Woman, contented in silent repose,
Enjoys in its beauty life's flower as it blows.
And waters and tends it with innocent heart.
Far richer than man with his treasures of art;
And wiser by far in the circles confined,
Than he with his science and lights of the mind

Coldly to himself suffering,
Man disdains the gentler arts.
Knoweth not the bliss arising
From the interchange of hearts.
Slowly through his bosom stealing.
Flows the genial current on.
Till by age's frost congealing.
It is hardened into stone

She like the harp, that instinctively rings,
As the night breathing zephyr soft sighs on the strings,
Responds to each impulse with steady reply.
Whether sorrow or pleasure her sympathy try;
And tear drops and smiles on her countenance play,
Like sunshine and showers of a morning in May.

Through the range of man's dominion
Terror is the ruling word—
And the standard of opinion
Is the temper of the sword.
Strife ensues, and pity bleeding
Flees the scene departing flies,
Where to battle madly rushing,
Brother upon brother dies.

Woman commands with a milder control—
She rules by enchantment the realms of the soul.
As she glances around in the light of her smile.
The war of the passions is hushed for awhile;
And discord, content from his fury to cease,
Reposes entranced on the pillows of peace.

The Serfs of Russia.

The Russian correspondent of the London Chronicle communicates the following interesting account of the serfs of Russia:

Into the inherent character of the serf system in Russia, it would be foreign to my purpose to go. This monster institution (I cannot be said to misuse the name when I remember that out of 54,000,000 of whom the Russian population is understood to be composed, 42,000,000 are serfs, and but 12,000,000 free—about one in five) has been for years the great object upon which the pens of European philosophers have been exercised. Its vices are known to the world; nor have those interested in preserving it failed to set forth its alleged alleviations. The opinions, too, which the respective rulers of Russia have entertained upon it, are also on record. It is even no secret that the earlier convictions of the present Emperor of Russia (whose political education was confided to abler hands than usually direct the studies of continental royalty,) were in favor of modifying the system, and eleveting, if not of enfranchising, the millions. Nor is it concealed, among the few who dare speak at all, that the Czar's feelings on the subject of serfdom did not exhaust themselves in mere words, and that his majesty actually assumed the initiative in a course which would have led to serf-emancipation. It is considered, in certain circles, the reverse of a matter for regret, that resolute and implacable opposition, manifested not in overt act, but in dogged and dead-weight inaction, succeeded in causing the discomfiture and abandonment of the attempts in question. Nor is it probable that such attempts will be renewed from the same quarter.

The Emperor's chief occupation at present is the civil and military education of myriads of plumed and glittering serfs of his own. A taste for military detail and display has succeeded at St. Petersburg to any effort from the establishment of graver questions, and for the present serfdom in Russia must remain what it is. The difficulty of any interference with it, is still further enhanced by the example to which its defenders have been enabled to point, through the unparalleled ferocity and barbarity of certain serfs, who (it was said under some misconception of the pleasure of the Emperor himself,) set to work to emancipate themselves. The atrocities they committed—which caused them to be hunted down like wild beasts—are pointed to us as warnings how you entrust with liberty men who are not suited for it. Murders, violations, mutilations, of the most horrible kind, were among the first sacrifices of these men at the altar of freedom, and are a powerful, if not altogether silencing, argument in the mouths of those who would keep barred the gates of the temple.

Very far indeed is it from my intention to indulge in any apologies for the system. An Englishman can have but one feeling as to the position of a man whom he finds on a level with the horse he flogs. But it is not so very long since a similar state of things existed in our own colonies; and let us, therefore, quietly examine the working of the system, leaving the reader to institute his own comparisons and deduce his own conclusions.

I have spoken of a certain species of serfs as an exile, and I propose to glance at his position before referring to that of his resident brothers in bondage. It is this: The serf of a proprietor who resides, perhaps, several hundred miles from a certain large town, conceives that he shall "better himself" by leaving his native soil and trying his fortune in the town in question. He is a carpenter, or mason, or has a knowledge of some trade, though he may be engaged in agricultural pursuits. He proposes to his lord to let him go. Possibly his lord refuses, and there is an end of the matter; for the special case of the serf's taking leave without permission—in other words, escaping—is not now very frequent.

Some time since, when Government was desirous that the population of certain districts should be increased, the system of running away, on the part of the serfs, and hiding in those districts (where ultimately they became "inscribed") was winked at; but I believe the case is now different, and that unless the serf is almost miraculously lucky in evading all the network of the police system, he is unceremoniously seized, packed off to the military depot, made a soldier, and "accounted for" to his owner, when the latter has to pay his next instalment of serfage to the military authorities. But if the serf have a humane and liberal owner, (and I am informed that there are hundreds of such,) who can afford to part with him, the adventurer departs. He previously makes his bargain with his owner as to how much of his earnings shall be remitted to the latter, and the necessary passports from his proprietor are furnished to the police of the district in which he proposes to settle.

The police system is so diffused, and has such manifold ramifications, that it is almost impossible to evade it long, and hence the owner has a safe hold upon the traveling serf, even at the distance of five, six, or seven hundred miles; for nobody is allowed to live in Russia without leave—that is, without a billet de sejour, which has to be renewed every year; but in the case of the serf, and indeed of others, as the police may see fit, at the expiration of a much shorter period. In the serf's case, I believe, six months is usually the time. If the man has his lawful billet, which is strictly local, it is evidence that he has not run away; if he has it not, he is liable to be instantly seized. I am supposing, however, that he proposes to keep faith. He obtains his police billet, and he then seeks for what work he can get. Often, indeed most frequently, does he not leave his native place, except in company with a "gang" of companions similarly situated, who engage themselves en masse, under an arrangement to which all must be parties, and who have a leader, who conducts the business for them, and receives and divides their earnings. In this case they usually live together, and you meet them returning at night, in a body, to the large room in which they sleep, and in which they always indulge the Russian habit of eternal singing, to the no small dissatisfaction of involuntary audiences of neighbors.

The serf rentless and works. His rate of wages of course varies with his trade and with his skill. A carpenter's wages will, for instance, vary from two rubles copper (about 1s. 10d) to one ruble silver a day (5s. 4d), or he may be so excellent a workman as to be hired by contract for forty-five rubles per month. He has to pay his lodging, and he has to remit his payment to his lord. And, if he has left behind a wife, and his inclination be to assist her efforts at self-support, he has the same means of remitting to her, namely, by the post-office, a very important department of which is appropriated to this kind of business. The rest of his earnings he may apply as he pleases.

The bare necessaries of life are remarkably cheap in Russia. The workman's living costs him the merest trifle.

A WONDERFUL PRESERVATION.—The following very interesting story is taken from a Devonshire England) paper:—

"Dudleigh Salterton has been the scene of a most thrilling incident. Six little children, on Wednesday morning, got into a boat on the beach, and a mischievous boy shoved it off. The boat drifted away to sea before the children were missed. Terrible was the agony of the mothers when they knew it. A number of men went off in all directions; every boat was on the lookout until far into the night. Day-light returned and still nothing was heard about them—they were lost either in the expanse of the wide ocean, or buried within its insatiable depths. A Plymouth fisherman fishing early in the morning, saw something floating in the distance; he bore down to it, and discovered it to be a boat—and in the bottom the six children, all cuddled in like a nest of birds, fast asleep, God having mercifully granted them that solace after a day of error and despair. He took them aboard, feasted them with bread and cheese, and gladdened their despairing hearts with a promise to take them home. Between three and four in the afternoon, the fisherman was seen in the offing with the boat astern. All eyes were turned towards him; the best spy-glass in the town was rubbed again and again, and at last they fairly made out that it was the identical boat. The news flew through the town—the mothers came frantic to the beach, for there were no children discovered in the boat; none to be seen in the sloop. Intense was the agony of suspense, and all alike shared it with the parents. At last the boat came in, and the word went round. "They are all safe," and many stout-hearted men burst into tears, women shrieked with joy, and became almost frantic with their insupportable happiness. It was, indeed, a memorable day; and, a prayer, eloquent for its rough sincerity, was offered up to Almighty God, who, in his infinite mercy, had spared these innocent children from the perils and terrors of the sea during that fearful night. Five of these children were under five years of age; the sixth is but nine years old."

Further by the Europa.

The Baltimore Sun has the following summary of the news brought by the steamer Europa:

The mails of the steamer Europa reached this city yesterday evening. We have received our correspondence and papers from Liverpool to the 24th ult., from London to the 23d, and Paris to the 22d. We have various items of interest to add to our telegraphic accounts, previously published.

The Dublin Evening Mail confirms the statement we had yesterday by telegraph, that John T. Crampton, Esq., eldest son of the Surgeon-General, has been appointed her Majesty's Minister and Plenipotentiary to the Government of the United States, in the place of Sir Henry Lytton Bulwer, who goes as Envoy to Florence, to take the place vacated by the death of Mr. Richard Lalor Shiel. It is added that this information was communicated by Lord Clarendon at the city banquet. The Mail says that Mr. Lawrence, during his tour in Ireland, expressed his wish that the appointment of Mr. Crampton might be made.

An Irish Industrial Exhibition, after the style of the World's Fair in London, is to take place at Cork in the middle of next June.

Lord Brougham has gone to Paris for the purpose, it is suggested, of advising the President.

The Paris Patrie says: "It appears from the books of the offices of the steamships of Liverpool and Southampton, that several ex-representatives have just embarked for America. Three of them proceed to the United States and two to Mexico, where they intend to engage in trade or manufactures."

The French refugees upon the Swiss frontiers have received passports for America.

One of the Naples letters, of the 7th ult., says: "The United States frigate Independence was ordered home some days since; but, owing to the news from France, Commodore Morgan has thought proper not to leave the Mediterranean without a ship of war."

A very long and very able letter from H. Sacemere appears in the Times in reply to that of Prince Esterhazy, in which he vindicates the Hungarian cause from the criticisms of the Prince. He expresses decided disapprobation of Kossuth's policy, but concludes with the remark that "the harms which Hungary now suffers will one day be repaired." A similar letter from Count Teleki is published.

The funeral procession of Eugene Sue, the celebrated Mme. George Sand has just been arrested in the department of the Indre-et-Loire, where she had taken up her residence.

AUSTRIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

The Vienna correspondent of the [illegible] writing under date of the 13th ult., says:

"There appears to be a very hostile feeling growing up between Austria and America; and there is a report about certain dispatches of a very curious nature having been recently sent from the Government of the United States to Vienna. This feeling is worth mentioning, because it has only arisen lately. But a few months ago very friendly relations were existing, and one of the Austrian Archdukes actually set out on a voyage to New York, and was only delayed by a violent fever, which seized him at Trieste."

The foregoing cannot have reference to the late reception of Kossuth in Washington, nor to the interview between Chevalier Hulsemann and the President, for intelligence of these events could not have reached Vienna. We recollect noticing, lately, in a Vienna letter, that a special bearer of dispatches had arrived in that city from Washington.

FRANCE.

The Constitution is not to go into operation until the Senate is formed, and the legislative corps elected. The President meets with difficulty in procuring men of position and character to enter his Senate. Montalembert has consented.

Terrorism in France.—While it is announced in the Paris papers that the inauguration fetes will occupy eight days, and great pains will be taken to amuse the Parisians, we also see that long lists of new arrests are given in the provincial papers, threat numbers, however, of these arrested on suspicion have been examined and released, yet courts martial are now in session at many different points of the country.

Strange to say, the decree of banishment produced a great sensation, though every body knew that the decree only sanctioned what had been already done. It is stated, however, that it would be a great mistake to suppose that the decree spoken of comprises the fiftieth part of the persons banished, or even all of the representatives subjected to that measure. General Cavaignac's name is not found in it, nor Eugene Sue's, nor Pierre Leroux's, nor Michel, (de Bourges) nor de Lamennais', nor those of a dozen others of less note. Yet all these have received private orders to quit France, or have escaped after learning that warrants had been issued for arresting them.

Great numbers of persons, not representatives, have been privately ordered to leave the country. Some of these belong to the Paris bar and faculty. Twelve of the principal citizens of Orleans have been banished in the same way. Very few of the names in this category are published in the newspapers.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The Minister of the Interior has directed a committee to make a draught of new laws for Hungary, on the basis of the ordinances of the 31st of December. The President of the committee is Baron Gehringer. The gentlemen composing the committee are ultra-conservatives and employes.

The London Daily News has been prohibited at Vienna.

The Vienna Gazette of the 15th contained an Imperial Patent, dated Jan. 17, abolishing trial by jury throughout the Empire. Proposals are in active preparation for a new Austrian loan, to be effected in the foreign market.

SWITZERLAND.

The Bale Gazette says: "The Ruel announces that a refugee in Switzerland had sought to revolutionize Alsace by orders of Mazzini, and it is pretended that letters of a compromising character had been found among his papers. We will observe on this subject, that the person in question is not a refugee, and that he did not reside in Switzerland. He resided in the Duchy of Baden, near Bale. He was employed in a commercial house at Bale, and no one was aware that he was at all connected with politics. His papers were seized at Bale and at his residence. He was arrested, expelled, and has since gone to America. One single refugee was compromised with him, and he has also been expelled by the Federal Council."

MOVEMENTS IN RUSSIA.

The Stockholm paper Aftonbladet, for January 2, contains the following important, although sorrowful, political intelligence: "It has been remarked that the letters which have lately arrived here from Finland have been more than usually cautious—almost mysterious. This has given rise to fears that the Russian serf-ruler had some new violence in store against the weak remains of their former Swedish liberties, which our unhappy brethren of the north-eastern shores of the Baltic still possess. Of late these fears have assumed the shape of the most distressing rumors. A private letter, which has fortunately evaded the control of the Post-office, states that the provincial governors have been declared by an imperial ukase to be independent of the Finnish Senate, and for the future answerable to the General Governor alone, who resides in St. Petersburg. Another report asserts that the Senate has been altogether dissolved. It is not yet known how far these statements are to be believed, and we anxiously await further intelligence."

The Journal of St. Petersburg of the 5th has accounts from the Caucasus, which state that though, since the closing of the summer campaign, there had been no general rising, engagements had taken place between the Russian troops and the mountaineers of Naton Khale, on the Sounja, and at other places, all of which had terminated favorably to the Russians, and been followed by the submission of some of the chiefs and their bands.

The Post Gazette, of Frankfort of the 15th ultimo, says: "The Constitutionnel was right in saying that the Emperor of Russia had approved of the act of the 2d December. But it was not by an autograph letter that he expressed his satisfaction; it was by a confidential letter of Count de Nesselrode to the Russian Charge d'Affaires at Paris, who caused Prince Baladini to make known its contents to Count Turgot, Minister of Foreign Affairs. No copy was, however, presented to the Minister, the Prince confining himself to a perusal of it. The letter congratulated the President on having saved European civilization from the dangers of 1852."

ITALY.

Rome, January 14.—The Advocate Geunarelli has been banished from Rome subsequently to the search made in his house. He was the last remaining deputy of the republican constituent assembly, and it was always a matter of surprise that he should have been allowed to remain so long unmolested in the capital. Forty-eight hours were allowed for his departure.

Extensive preparations are begun in the Colosseum and it is the intention of the municipality to throw down all those shabby houses which now encumber the base of the Pantheon, so as to separate that glorious monument of ancient architecture completely from surrounding objects, and allow its proportions to come out without modern obstructions.

AGITATION OF STRIKE IN ENGLAND.—A dispute, which has been for some time existing between the operative engineers and their employers in England, has come to a crisis on the 12th of January, a great proportion of the principal engineering manufactories in London, Manchester, Oldham etc., closed their works, and ten thousand operatives, at least were thrown out of employment. Thus the apprehended strike of the men, has resulted in an absolute strike of the masters—the latter having refused to accede to the demands of the former, that systematic piece-work and over-time should be abolished. The importance of this dispute cannot be over-estimated. The Liverpool Mercury thus glowingly depicts its consequences:

"Several thousands of men, whose continued labor is absolutely necessary to keep scores of thousands of other working-men in employment, have been plunged into involuntary idleness; the productiveness of the country has received a check; our power of making wealth has been materially circumscribed, and it is feared that we shall give an impetus to the engineering trade of our rivals on the continent, which may be permanently disadvantageous to England. Perhaps we should not be going too far if we said this unfortunate dispute involves, not only the present prosperity and social happiness of every class of the community, but the continued preeminence in England in those branches of native industry which have contributed so largely to her elevated position in the industrial world."

Neither party, at present, seems inclined to submit to the other. The masters maintain their conditions, and the workmen refuse to withdraw their demands. Of the latter, the greater part will seek work in other towns. A number went off, and numbers more will follow them.

The men in London have, many of them, organized themselves into companies, and rented premises, offering to execute orders for machinery upon fair and reasonable terms; and, if they can raise sufficient capital, no doubt they can do so. The Manchester firms, which have closed their doors in that place, have taken offices in London, in order that they be in close correspondence with the London masters, and every thing at present indicates most determined resistance.

ENGLAND PREPARING FOR DEFENCE.—It was stated briefly in late foreign advices that the greatest activity prevailed at the Admiralty and in all the English dockyards, and that England was about to defend the whole coast in a most efficient manner. The reason given for this movement was that the government intended to be fully prepared for any event, but especially for any demonstration of Louis Napoleon. The quasi-ministerial journals now deny that any unusual orders for the coast defences have been given, or that any military camps are about to be formed around London. The public, however, are satisfied that at Woolwich and other dock-yards the workmen have not been so fully employed for several years. The Times and Naval Gazette, published at Portsmouth, is so well informed upon naval and other matters, that it is frequently quoted by the London journals; and that paper states that a battery of 100 guns of heavy metal is ordered to be constructed at the Nab Light, near Spithead, as well as a battery for 100 guns on the Portsmouth shore off Spithead, with the least possible delay. A new fort at Browndown, on the Gosport shore, is being constructed by Royal Sappers and Miners, and the works are ordered to be completed in two months. The rapid manner in which these and other similar government works are now carried on, shows that some fresh orders have been issued by the Admiralty. The Shipping Gazette, generally well-informed, states that the Admiralty intend to increase the naval force almost immediately, but their great difficulty will be in procuring seamen. It is also announced that a government order has been received at Birmingham for the immediate delivery of 23,000 rifles. These and similar orders plainly show that the government are preparing for any event.

BRITISH MAIL CONTRACT.—The New York Express has the following:

The British Government has made a new mail contract, for a monthly mail line of steamers to and from England and the West Coast of Africa. It is for nine years, at an average payment of £21,000 per annum. The places touched at will be Madeira, Teneriffe, Goree, River Gambia, Sierra Leone, Liberia, Cape Coast Castle, Acora, Whydah, Badagry, Lagos, Bonny, Calebar, Cameroons, and Fernando Po, making the total distance out and home 9000 miles, which, including stoppages, will be performed in from 58 to 60 days. The speed of the vessels is to average eight knots, and their size will be about 700 tons. They are to be constructed of iron. The new line of steamers is expected to commence in October next. Three boats will be required for the service, and it is understood that the port of departure will be either Southampton or Liverpool.

The commercial prospects of this trade are extremely flattering. In 1827, the export of British goods to the West Coast of Africa was £165,759, and the quantity of palm oil imported was 4700 tons. The trade doubled in ten years, and subsequently the increase has been no less remarkable. The exports of British goods in 1846 reached £620,201, while the quantity of palm oil received was 22,708 tons, of the value of £712,500. In the same year 166 vessels, measuring 48,079 tons, connected with the trade, were entered inwards, and the clearances outwards were 185 vessels, measuring 51,577 tons, making a total of 96,606 tons of exclusively British shipping. To us, as to most Britain, the growth of Africa promises to be promoted by the establishment of regular communications, and in return it will supply new articles of production. At present, the value of the important trade north of Cape St. Paul's to England, consisting of palm oil, ground nuts, dye-woods, beeswax, ivory, gold dust, ginger, rice, etc., is [illegible] and the clearances outwards from the Equator is supposed to be £1,000,000. Of this line one of our English contemporaries says:

"Politically, the formation of the line will confer the great advantage of hastening the suppression of the slave trade, and the diminution or withdrawal of the squadron engaged in that service."

There is an effort making in Congress, growing out of propositions made at the last session of that body, and urged at the present session, for the establishment of a line of steamers between the United States and Africa. Under an existing treaty with England, and at great expense to the Government, a fleet of Government vessels are kept up on the Coast of Africa. The establishment of the steam line communication, it is thought, would enable the Government to withdraw this fleet. The steam line, to the amount of aid required from the Government, would cost much less than the expense now incurred.

We think, also, that some inducement should be found for a public interest in this subject, in the fact of what the British Government has just done to establish a line of communication between England and Africa. This country must not allow its commercial marine to be eclipsed by its great commercial rival, especially when the double purpose of defence and utility are served by the establishment of mail steamers.

OUTRAGEOUS FRAUD.—An outrageous fraud upon the British Government has recently been detected by the officers of the Admiralty. We learn from our English files that it was perpetrated by parties who had entered into contract to supply the Navy with patent preserved-meats, packed in sealed tin canisters, and warranted to keep fresh for five years. Suspicion was excited as to the quality of these supplies, and an examination was instituted, which resulted in the most heart-sickening disclosures. Out of 7000 canisters, it was found that only 189 contained any thing fit to be eaten. The contents exposed were chiefly loose putrid matter, now and then varied with a few stones. centrails with the excrement in them, kidneys green with decomposition, lumps of heart, and, in many cases, whole hearts festering with putridity, congulated blood in great abundance, tallow, lumps of tendons, grease and offal. In short, garbage and putridity in a horrible state, the stench arising from which was most sickening, and the sight revolting. The examining board and party were compelled to use profusely of Burnett's disinfecting fluid to keep off, or in the hope of keeping off pestilence. This stuff was supplied to the Admiralty, and delivered into store at the Clarence-yard, last November twelve-month. It is said to have come from Galata, in Moldavia. The British Government has already paid the sum of £200,000 to the contractors who perpetrated this base fraud. It is not known, of course, how long this swindling operation has been going on. Sir John Franklin's ships were provisioned with this preserved meat, and from the fact that at Beechy Island, where the last traces of him were discovered, the ground was covered with heaps of empty canisters, there is reason to fear that his stores were of this character.

MEAN ABOUT THE AMAZON.—An express had arrived at London, bringing intelligence, that eleven more of the passengers and crew of the steamer Amazon had been picked up by a Dutch vessel in the Bay of Biscay. They escaped in the port life-boat, and were in a most melancholy condition when discovered. They were landed at Plymouth on the 16th ult.

WORTH KNOWING.—A young lady of this city says the Philadelphia Evening Post, while in the country, some years ago, stepped on a rusty nail, which ran through her foot. The inflammation and pain was of course very great, and lockjaw apprehended. A friend of the family, however, recommended the application of a beet, taken fresh from the garden and pounded fine to the wound. It was done, and the effect was very beneficial. Soon the inflammation began to subside and by keeping on the crushed beet, changing it for a fresh one as its virtue seemed to become impaired, a speedy cure was effected. Simple but effectual remedies like this should be known to every one.

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY IN VIRGINIA.—A letter in the Richmond Times states that a few days since, while several men were engaged in blasting out limestone near Buchanan, Botetourt county, they discovered a cave, with an entrance of some six or eight feet in height, and upwards of one hundred long, with two apartments, in the first they found some earthen ware and a large stone cross. On the cross there was some carving, but it was so much defaced by the hand of time that it was scarcely discernible. A number of citizens, with a lantern, subsequently entered the second apartment, where they found a skeleton seated on a huge iron chest, with its back resting against the wall. On opening this chest they found it to contain gold coin, perfectly smooth on one side and a cross with some characters on it on the other. The gold in the chest by weight is worth seven hundred and eighty-three dollars.

REVOLUTIONARY CONGRESS.—The German Revolutionary Congress assembled in Philadelphia on the 5th. Quite a number of delegates were present, representing the various Revolutionary Unions of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Newark, Lancaster, Richmond, and Bridesburg. Messrs. Fichler and Gregg appeared as delegates from the London Agitation Society.

APPOINTMENT.—Gov. Foote has appointed J. L. Jullionie Esq. Adjutant General of the State Mississippi.

MR. BANCROFT.—George Bancroft, Esq., late U. S. Minister to the Court of St. James, is about to publish in England the first volume of a history of America.

Further Foreign News by the Europa and Niagara.

ENGLAND.

In the political world there has been a great lull, and all parties were gleaning prospectively at the trial of strength, that must take place between Lord John Russell and his Parliament.

The most important of the meeting of Parliament had given an impetus to the demand for a new Reform Bill. Meetings had been held in Manchester, Leeds and other towns, to sustain Lord John Russell in his efforts to improve the political franchise; the demonstrations, however, did not appear to be very remarkable for their spirit. The Manchester meeting on Wednesday, the 21st, was the most important electoral demonstration held in connection with the subject.

The London Times complains that the metropolis is in as absurd and anomalous a state as the county of Lancaster with regard to the representation. London with a population of two millions and a half, only sends 22 members to the House of Commons, including those from the Metropolitan boroughs. For the counties of Middlesex and the Eastern division of Surrey, ten times the score of rateable property, the disproportion is still greater.

The London journals are in a state of perturbation respecting the national defences, and are suggesting various measures and modes of defence in case of invasion. The London Chronicle is surprised that the nation should have so long been blind to the necessity which exists of availing itself of the measures of protection. Another journal argues the propriety of recalling the ships and steamers on service abroad.

FRANCE.

M. M. DeMorney and Fould had left the Ministry, and were replaced by Depersigney and Abbatucela.

A new ministerial office has been created, namely, the Ministry of State, and M. Cassablanca has been appointed to it.

The Duchess of Orleans dowery of 300,000 francs is maintained.

The decrees are countersigned by the new Minister of State, Cassabianca.

The Minister of War has acceded to the Cavaignac's demand to be placed on the retired list of the army.

The Ex-Representatives not comprised in the decrees of banishment have just been authorized to return to their homes.

The great bodies of the State are to wear particular dresses. Those of the Council of State, the Senate and the Legislature, will be rich, and resemble what was worn under the Empire.

It is said that a second, if not a third attempt on the President's life had been made; an officer is reported to have snapped his pistol at him as his carriage was coming out of the Carousal. A rumor was also rife in Paris, with all its details, that the wife of an Ex-1 refect had tried to poignard him.

SPAIN.

MILITARY MUTINY AND EXECUTIONS.—On the evening of January 7, Madrid was not a little alarmed at finding the palace and all the military posts doubly guarded, and the body of the garrison confined to their barracks. It appears that imprudent promises of royal largesse had been made to the soldiers—largesse that, on account of the state of the public treasury, cannot for the present be granted. Added to this, it appears that some of the officers of one of the crack regiments have been punished for having struck several refractory, or more than usually dull, recruits at exercise. In any army like the Spanish, in which discipline can only obtain through a mixture of tact and severity, a very little matter suffices to make the seeds of disorder germinate. When, therefore, on the morning of the 7th, the Gazette informed the army that all the senior officers, from senior lieutenant to senior brigadier, were to be promoted, and the soldiers to have a year's service taken off, their disappointment broke out so much the more violent, that they had been expecting a dollar a man to indulge themselves with. In every regiment there was more or less excitement fanned. It is said, by emissaries. "In the San Francisco barracks some soldiers seized their arms, and, to the terror of the neighborhood, some shots were exchanged, and a tremendous uproar took place among the military, some of whom shouted Viva la Republica, and others broke their arms. Vigorous measures were taken, the mutineers seized, and tried by court-martial. Of the number condemned three were sentenced to be shot, and the order was carried out on the 9th. The execution restored discipline.

Stringent measures are likewise resorted to destroy the little liberty of the press which the people of Spain enjoy.

By advices from Madrid of the 17th instant, it appears, by a law just passed, that a grandee of Spain must, in future, possess landed property as government securities, transferable, with an income of three thousands pounds sterling. A Count, Marquis or Baron must also possess three thousand pounds.

SWIZERLAND.

The Radicals of Berne have demanded the dismissal of the President. As the Radicals are now in a majority, their demand is not contrary to law. The Government has served two out of four years for which it was elected.

The Dutch shareholders in the Bank of the United States have held a meeting at Amsterddm, within the last few days, at which it was resolved to nominate a committee of five members to press upon the American management the expediency of the winding up of that institution.

PRUSSIA.

Efforts had been made by the Court party in Prussia to abrogate the Constitution, although a proposal to effect the restoring of the high monarchial principles had failed, by a vote of 147 to 123.

The result of the late debate is regarded as rather encouraging than otherwise, and new projects of revision are proposed daily.

AUSTRIA.

By the new Prussian Gazette of the 16th of January, we learn the Prince Schwartzenberg had been indisposed for some days—he was struck with apoplexy on the 14th, and serious consequences were apprehended.

Prince Metternich has appeared in public at one of the balls given by the Arch Duchess Sophia, mother of the Emperor.

Congress is actively pursuing its labors on the Customs question.

A penal colony has been established in Hungary, in spite of the unavailing remonstrances and resentment of the Hungarians.

Proposals are in active preparation for a new Austrian Loan, to be effected in the Foreign market. The urgent necessity of this measure to carry on the machinery of government, is stated to have been the real cause of the retirement of Baron Krauss from his late post as Minister of Finance.

The second note of the President of the French Republic to Prince Schwartzenburg, and the re-appointment of M. de Fishault as Minister of France to the Austrian Court, which is a good deal talked of, and seems to imply the best possible feelings between the two powers.

A FAITHFUL DOG.—The Washington Telegraph relates the following anecdote of a dog in that city:

A little girl, the daughter of a gentleman with whom we are acquainted, was sent a few days since to a neighboring house for a garment that had been left there by her mother. The two houses were within view of each other, a common intervening. On entering the garden of the house to which she had been sent, she was attacked by three dogs, and thrown down; her clothes were torn, and one of the animals seized her by the foot. At her own house there was a big, good natured dog, who had never before manifested any other positive qualities than a good appetite. But he seemed to have apprehended the danger the child was approaching; his eyes had followed her, and, with the first intimation of the attack, he bounded forward, reached the scene of action in time to rescue the child, and sent her assailants howling. As she entered the house, he forced his way in beside her; and when the lady attempted to hand her the article for which she had been sent, he sprang between them, and in no other way could the child procure it than by taking it up from where it had been laid after the family had left the room. When she departed, the dog took his position between her and all possible assailants; and as she emerged from the premises, he took his place behind her, and followed slowly, and with a defiant air, until she had regained her own home, when he threw himself down at the threshold, with his face toward the theatre of his late exploit, and relapsed into his accustomed reverie.

THE FAMILY CABINET.—There are fifteen Ministers in the present English Cabinet, of whom nine are related, namely: Lord John Russell, Lord Minto, Lord Granville, Lord Grey, Sir Charles Wood, Earl of Carlisle, Mr. Labouchere, and Sir Francis Baring. The Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Truro, Lord Broughton, Mr. Fox Maule, Lord Seymour, and the Marquis of Cianricarde, are not in the family alliances. The prime Minister is supported by his father-in-law, the Earl of Minto, and his cousin Lord Granville, who is cousin to the Earl of Carlisle. Earl Grey has with him his brother-in-law, Sir C. Wood, his cousin. Sir G. Grey, who is the brother-in-law of Sir F. Baring, who is cousin and brother-in-law of Mr. Labouchere.

JENNY LIND'S MARRIAGE.—This affair is a fixed fact. The "Nightingale" was stated in the marriage as being thirty-one, and the "Goldschmidt of Hamburg," as being twenty-four years of age on the day of the ceremony. The pair are at present the guests of T. W. Ward, of Boston, but the New York Post says:

It is said that Jenny Lind, now Mrs. Goldschmidt, will reside with her husband three months at Northampton, Massachusetts, where a house has been taken for them, and after the expiration of that time they will sail for Europe.

Dr. Walwright had baptized Mr. Goldschmidt, who is of a Jewish family, residing at Hamburg and who, it is said, had been long inclined to the Christian faith. Mr. Goldschmidt is a pianist by profession, and is said to be an accomplished composer.

THE CONUNDRUM CONTEST.—The two following are the conundrums which bore off the prizes recently offered by Professor Anderson, in New York. The first prize—a fine silver tea-set of five pieces, worth $400, was unanimously awarded to Miss Maria C. Fenn, of No. 180 Varick street, an interesting girl of about 15 years. Her contribution was No. 76 in the book, and read thus:

Why is the writer of this conundrum like a domestic servant out of employment?

Ans. Because she wants to get a service, and is willing to carry off the tea things.

The second prize was awarded, by a large majority, but not unanimously, to the writer of conundrum No. 201 of the gentlemen's list, which read as follows:

Why ought the officers of the United States Army, in the late war with Mexico, to keep a clothing store?

Ans. Because they might Bragg of having the best Taylor and the best Wool; their goods May be sold for what they are Worth, and after counting their Gaines they could lay their heads on their Pillow in perfect Bliss, and rest satisfied that "no could swindle them and go Scott free, while they had a good Walker to catch him and Shield them from loss.

LOVE, ROBBERY AND SUICIDE.—A lady of property, some time ago, left Paris on a visit to the country, leaving her house in the care of a female servant, an Alsatian, to whom she was greatly attached. On Friday she arrived in Paris by railway, and on passing the Hotel de Ville, saw to her surprise, the servant enter the house of an agent for military remplacement, with a bag of money in her hand. She called to her. The girl was so astonished at hearing the voice of her mistress, that she fainted. When she recovered, the lady conveyed her home. The servant then threw herself at her feet, and confessed that she had taken 600 francs from her secretary, in order to purchase the release of her lover, a soldier in a regiment in Africa, who had written to say that he was dying of love for her. The lady, who was much affected at the girl's sorrow, said that she might keep the 600 francs, but that she could not retain her in her service. On Saturday she received a letter from the girl, stating that she had paid for a replacant for her lover, but was so affected at having committed robbery, that she intended to commit suicide. The lady caused inquiries to be made, and learned that she had put an end to her existence by means of the fumes of charcoal in a public house at Agny. (Galignani

Epithalamium.....To Mrs. JENNY LIND GOLDSCHMIDT.

BY PETER PINDAR, JR.

Well Mrs. Goldschmidt dear I wish you joy
The opera-world for ever to employ.
That double happiness will on you alloy
That Hymen's votaries talk of every day.
You're bent on trying, and taking
For your new motto,
Have given your hand to Titto!

Fortunate Otto, (your dear title of three.)
When he first learned the piano,
Never dreamed he'd be the man to
Such wondrous luck as this day's news discloses
Made to a Nightingale!
And that no common, indigged bird,
But one who has made her paros heard.
And entering now her thirty-second spring.
Vows that she will no longer sing
The stupid lode of celibacy.
But join him in a duo that can't fail
To suit the popular gale.
And close in a cadenza that shall be
The climax of their joint felicity

Was ever known such transformation?
A bullet to a goldfinch—no, goldsmith—
It passes Ovid's wildest transmigration
And yet the change was all accomplished with
A few words from the Prayer Book: as
The plumage from the warbler dropp'd;
The soaring bird her warblings stopp'd.
And then nibbled to a wife—
An unpardonable fowl, I know.
But pleasant, when it brings a nest for life.
Well Hued, as this one, with a golden fleece
Such as no Argonauts had dream'd of, even in Greece

So Otto has returned to his vocation;
Jenny has set him up
And opened his new Goldsmith shop.
Where gold is to be wrought from all creation
All Alchimy is put to blush.
Since Midas, in his most metallic mood,
Never made gold with such a rush.
As Jenny can do or as Jenny could.
For, by the mint machinery of her throat,
Otto may coin from every bullbul note
A full fledged Golden Eagle, at
To circulate where lesser coin than it
Would be uncurrent, or would meet
A heavy discount in the street.

But still, I wish you joy, dear Mrs. G.;
I am resigned, or strive to be;
I'll even forget the fifteen dollars sent
That I was fleeced of in the Barnum days;
I'll even strive to lay the unwilling ghosts
Of scores of sacrificed while kids that meet
My tear-illumed eyes whene'er I gaze
Into the drawer where lie the hosts
Of sad memorials of my youthful folly—
Most insipid, most melancholy.

And when in future years,
Around the Goldschmidt hearth appears
A "darling" brood that "must be singing"
Each in its own domestic song.
And with no Barnum all equipped for bringing
It out before a castle'd garden throng—
Perhaps, dear Mrs. G.,
You'll give a thought to me.
Who, in the height of Barnum's glorious row,
Thus first inflated him
That seemed to fill the nation.
Invested three V's in the fund that now
Sets up your Otto in his old vocation:
Philadelphia, Feb. 6, 1852.

NEWSPAPER NOTICES.—The Charleston Mercury has the following, which we commend to the attention of those whom it may concern:

We have recently received some sixty numbers of periodicals for notice. We take this opportunity to state that on no occasion can we give any attention to any serial work unless the first number be received, and we are certain that the remaining portions of the work will be forwarded in due course. If a notice be worth anything it is surely worth this much. Odd numbers of periodicals are perfectly useless, and when received should be disregarded by the Editorial fraternity, as in the practice of sending them is clearly an attempt to obtain publicity for them through the medium of the press without giving a fair equivalent therefor—an advantage accorded no other class of the commercial community, and which it is unreasonable to expect.

PROTECTIVE LETTERS.—Many thousand of letters sent to the post-office are returned as dead letters, the persons to whom they are addressed not being found. These are destroyed unless they contain enclosures of some kind; and often information of value to the persons addressed, or their friends, is destroyed with them. In a new edition to the regulations

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. E. DOTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DOHERTY, W. MURRAY, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 4. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 56.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SELMA, Ala., Feb. 20, 1852.

MR. EDITOR: The following stanzas seem to me to contain true poetical excellence, and to express a high degree of religious experience. They have been published and republished, and, I think, are entitled to still greater notoriety, being not only calculated to please but to encourage, faith, edify in patience, and comfort under affliction.

Present Experience.

Lord! I am still:
I have no prayer to offer unto thee,
Save that my heart doth say unceasingly
"Do thou thy will!"

Thou know'st I could
Not ask exemption from the ills of life.
For have found that "all," with sweetest
"Work for my good." [strife,

I had been led
To mourn o'er what thy providence disclosed;
The adverse fate that daily toil imposed
For daily bread.

The keener smart
Of seperation from a lawful good, [could
A cherished gift) which seemed as though it
But break this heart.

I can recall
When I was restless, wearied with the state
Of those who seem only to "stand and wait,"
Yet hear no call!

But now I find
I can retain no more this view of things,
For each development of time still brings
God to my mind.

To human sight
The fires still blaze beneath me, and around;
But I have proved they have no power to
The heart that's right. [wound

Either God's will
The innate fury of the fire destroys,
Making the flames innocuous by that voice
That governs still—

Or he impart
The famed asbestos' charm to foil its power,
And makes my weakness in the trying hour
Proof 'gainst its dart;—

Or else to shore
The suffering my much loved Master knew,
He nerves with martyr-fifth one of his few
All pain to bear.

Heart, then be still!
'Tis God who works in each or either case:
He only asks of thee this prayer to raise,
"Do thou thy will!"

NOTES FROM ABROAD.

FOREST OF FONTAINBLEAU.—A FRENCH CAMP MEETING—VANITY FAIR—THRONE AND TOMB OF NAPOLEON—LOUIS PHILIPPE A GREAT PRINCE.

I came down here (Fontainbleau,) last night. To-day (Sabbath,) has been a great parade day—a large number of troops were reviewed; but I determined that I would not partake with the barbarians in their Sabbath-breaking ways, and so saw nothing of it. I spent the greater part of the day in the Forest of Fontainbleau away off from the sight and sound of them. The trees of this famous wood were just like our own larches and oaks; it was not difficult to imagine myself in Alabama. This forest, which attracts so much attention in Europe, where trees of primitive growth are rarely found, would be, with us a piece of any ordinary roadside timbered land.

There was no service in the town but the Romish Mass, so that I must needs be content to worship alone. The day has been a profitable one to me, I trust. I thought, how strange that I am here in France! How good is the Lord! Life is passing, and this is a part of one of its most important chapters! And I did as I had often done before, dedicated myself to the service of a good Lord, and besought him to make me spiritually minded. The more I see of others and the further I travel, the more ready I am to compare my own happiness with that of princes. Millions of money can buy only so much, and, may be, that much hundreds can do. In the grand palace of Versailles is a range of small rooms ordinarily furnished, without pictures or damask, the favorite chambers of Marie Antoinette; and the more private places I have noticed of crowned heads, spots to which they have fled for rest and enjoyment, usually are such as men live in who are neither poor nor rich, great nor mean, but who yet sigh and labor to attain a higher place and a fuller condition. My very soul yearns over these around to see what they lack, to see how unhappy they are, and to know how happy they might be. As I walked out this afternoon, I saw thousands engaged in mere child's play, gaping at puppets, listening to the empty noises, to the coarsest thrumming and blowing. Some were inviting to pasteboard sights; some shooting at a target in the centre of a Turk-looking figure, which when struck whirled round and exploded a loud cracker; others gambling for gingerbread; some riding hobby-horses in a circuit; others listening to a stout old woman with a masculine manner and voice, giving a most vivid and powerful description of the painting of a coach! which, that is the painting, could be seen for one sous (cent.) Crowds of country people were walking arm in arm, swaying from side to side, or gathering with most serious attention about a boy who was bawling through a speaking trumpet of some terrible thing on hand which was about to be acted just behind the arras; while others were eating bread and drinking claret "common things" at long tables, amid a tempest of jabber. Rows of board tents, which contained goods for sale and the above named wonders, were on each side, and the whole in an unenlightened, thinly wooded part of the Palace grounds. It was a real French Camp Meeting, Satin presided, and nearly every body seemed to have "joined the church." So place could be mentioned with it in the same world but the Champs Elysees of Paris. There you have the same; blind-fold of women telling fortunes, with a plate of coffee grounds in the centre of a large circle of human beings: a large learned black dog picking out letters and cards in the midst of a crowded circle of the same sort: gilded canopies, with singers and actors of good coarse quality performing to audiences seated at little tables sipping coffee, or sitting on chairs at the gate of a seat for a seat, the whole being an appendage of cafes to bring custom; and so on, all over and up the street. It is not far from Dover to Calais, and Bunyan must have crossed the channel. "Then I saw in my dream, that when they were got out of the wilderness they presently saw a town before them, and the name of that town is Vanity: and at the town there is a fair kept, called Vanity Fair. It is kept all the year long. It beareth the name of Vanity Fair, because the town where it is kept is lighter than vanity. Therefore at this fair are all such merchandise sold as houses, lands, trades, places, honors, preferments, titles, countries, kingdoms, lusts, pleasures. And moreover, at this fair there is at all times to be seen jugglings, cheats, games, plays, fools, apes, knaves, and rogues, and that of every kind. Here are to be seen, too, and that for nothing, thefts, murders, adulteries, false swearers, and that of a blood red colour."

—MONDAY.

To day we strolled all over the beautiful grounds of Fontainbleau: and beautiful they are, more beautiful than those of Versailles. Miles upon miles of shrubbery, of avenues of trees, cut and shaped fantastically or regularly, and walks and expanding lakes, make up this charming pleasure ground of kings. Next we visited the palace. There was the spot at the foot of the horse-shoe stairs at the entrance, where Napoleon bade adieu to the Old Guard upon his going to Elba. A small round table of plain mahogony, covered with a glass case, is strown as the one upon which he signed his abdication. Rooms pretty much as he left them are there, to remind us of the man who experienced as much as any other whatever could inflate with pride or abase with shame. His throne is there, looking as if he had sat upon it this morning. It is of circular shape, no larger than an arm-chair, indeed looking like some that I have seen, covered with purple velvet and ornamented with gold lace and flowers. Over it is a canopy of purple hanging from a circle of gilt work in the shape of a crown, fringed with white ostrich feathers. The room is elaborately carved and gilded. In this house Pius VII. was detained for three years, and here Napoleon tried to wring from him a resignation of all temporal power. Here Louis XIV signed the revocation of the edict of Nantz. This house was long neglected, and has been revived to its pristine splendor by Louis Philippe.

In walking through the Palaces in and about Paris, one sees apartments furnished, and everything ready for comfort, but the halls are without a tenant: the servants are there; but one asks, where is the owner, where is the master of all this? There is a striking emptiness in all their splendor: here verily is seen that very [illegible] of which Solomon said "that this also is vanity."

I saw in Paris the tomb of Napoleon, to which it is not common as yet to admit strangers. It had cost in 1848, 3,311,000 francs; since then, 2,402,324 francs have been voted for it. It is in the Church of the Hotel des Invilides. The tomb takes up the greater part of the church. Immediately in the centre of it, under its lofty dome, a large circular crypt has been dug out; in the centre of the pavement of which the sarcophagus containing his remains is to rest upon a gigantic slab of porphyry weighing 135,000 pounds, (from Lake Onega, at a cost of 140,000 francs,) accessible by three steps of green marble. Around this crypt are twelve square pillars of white marble, going up to the floor of the church. From which the tomb below is seen. In front of each of these pillars is an angel of giant size looking down on the spot where the hero is to lie: these figures represent Arts, War, Legislature, Science, &c.; all twelve look mournfully toward the sarcophagus. They are all noble works of sculpture, and, wonderful to tell, each figure and the large marble pillar before which it stands are one stone. It must have required for the two a plinth of 9 feet broad by 6 thick and 10 feet long. Behind the pillars, on a level with the tomb, and running around it, is a gallery of 5 feet, on the wall of which are represented in marble bas-relief the principal passages in the Emperor's life. Both the inside circle and the outer gallery are to be paved with the richest mosaic. Some of this I saw. It was most brilliant, representing wreaths of bay, an eagle, &c. So much for the circular pit in which is to be the sarcophagus. The approach to the pavement of it is by a passage from the side. The entrance of this passage is at the foot of a double stairway at the end of the nave of the church. Over this entrance is a magnificent altar in black marble, with white veins. Four lofty columns of the same material support the canopy of the altar, which is approached by 10 broad monolith steps of marble of Carrara. The columns are spiral. The canopy is heavy gilt work representing angels, &c.: over the altar and beneath the canopy is a Christ upon the cross. The entrance is flanked by magnificent tombs of Bertrand and Duroc in Carrara marble. The whole was so different from any thing that I had conceived, that I was most wonderfully impressed with the design and execution. Louis Philippe must have the credit for this and many of the great works about Paris: the Obelisk, the Triumphal Arch of the Champs Elysees, the present finish of the Palace of the Louvre and of Versailles, the Fortifications; indeed his greatness and prosperity are stamped as fully upon Paris, as the more brilliant and shorter reign of Napoleon. It required a strong mind to hold the French people still long enough to make a mark upon them; and there could be scarcely a greater achievement than that of Louis Philippe, who reigned in peace over France for 18 years, and at last died in his bed.

K.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Luther.

The Reformation, or the revival of pure and primitive Christianity, in the beginning of the sixteenth century, is one of the brightest epochs that mark the history of the world. It is great not only from the great political and literary changes it developed and carried forward, but its greatness is eminently seen in the fact, that in its results is bound up the spiritual and immortal destiny of countless millions.

The glorious orb of Truth which had arisen upon the world when the Son of God was manifested in the flesh, and which had continued to rise higher in the moral heavens, and to scatter its splendors yet farther upon the benighted nations, during the progress of four centuries, had suffered a partial eclipse for nearly a thousand years. Man for a season usurped the place of God. Human reason and fabulous traditions had taken the place of the inspired teachings of God's Word and the oracles of Eternal Truth. The simple and impressive forms of apostolic and primitive worship had been cast aside to make way for the vain and pompous ceremonies of a false and licentious priesthood.

Nearly all of Christendom was in darkness and spiritual slavery. The sovereign pontiff had placed his proud foot upon the supplant neck of the successor of the imperial Cæsars. Papal Rome uttered its mandates, and the superstitions and enslaved nations trembled and obeyed, as though the voice of the Eternal had thundered from the highest heaven—Rome reached the zenith of her power and glory.

At this juncture, God arose in the greatness of his strength. God raised up a banner, not from the palaces of Rome, or the castles of the empire of the West, but from the lowly dwelling of the humble miner of Eisenach. Thus would God with weak things confound the mighty, and manifest to all men that the excellency of the power is of himself, and not of his creatures. Moses calls from tending sheep, to bear the rod of God and proclaim to them the will of the great I Am. And the apostles came from the fishing boats and nets of the sea of Galilee, to be the instruments in founding a kingdom coextensive in its range with the globe itself, and destined to live until the last sand shall have run from the glass of Time. Luther was nurtured amid scenes of hardship and poverty, that he might be the better prepared for the storms and trials that awaited him as the future hero of the Reformation.

Luther had within the elements of a greatness which the combination of no trails of unpropitious circumstances could stifle or repress. His was a mind that longed for truth and living realities. He could not be satisfied with outward forms and unmeaning ceremonies. He was not content to slake his spiritual and immortal thirst at the muddy streams of superstition and fable; but he urged his way with undaunted and unwearied step to the fountain of Eternal Truth. There he drank long and deep of the living waters. His rejoicing soul felt new life rush through every power, and began to expand with a philanthropy as wide as the world. What should he do? What could he do but cry with a flaming soul and a trumpet tone, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

The sun does not burst upon the world with a sudden and overwhelming brightness, but gradually, from the deepest twilight to the unclouded brightness of perfect day. So the sun of Truth arises upon the human mind. Doctrines and customs, venerable for antiquity and honorable by the faith and observance of the greatest and wisest of mankind, are not hastily to be questioned and shaken off in a day. It requires patient research and the accumulating evidence of years of investigation to abandon boldly old and familiar standards, and to adopt such as are new and untried. Luther did not immediately, on belief of the truth and sanctification of the Spirit, discern all the corruptions of his age: neither does it seem that he at once contemplated a great and general reformation. But his soul was roused by opposition, and in seeking to fortify and defend the truth he insensibly found himself arrayed against the Roman world, and all its multiform and multiplied errors; and thus, through the Providence of God, without design or wish on his own part, he was made the grand and honored instrument of the greatest movement that marks the history of modern times.

How wise in working and wonderful in counsel is the Almighty. The persecution of Luther, wickedly designed of man, was overruled of God, and thus the wrath of man was made to praise God.

God raised up political and spiritual friends who mightily helped Luther in his glorious enterprise of combating error and disseminating light among the nations of the earth.

Luther, having found the Word of God so exceeding precious to his own soul, translated it into the native language of his own countrymen, and thus made the Bible what it ought to be—the book of the people. Luther wrote continually in defiance of the truth, and by pointed and powerful argument, drawn from the Word of God, successfully defended it.

Luther was a brave, bold man—ardent, perhaps impulsive—but always a staunch and unyielding defender of what he conceived to be the truth of God. In a word, Luther lived to glorify God, and died exemplifying the power of grace to save all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Luther's name will ever stand proudly preeminent among the intellectual and religious benefactors of mankind. Although three centuries, fraught with the most stirring and momentous events in human history, have rolled away since he began his glorious career, his fame has suffered no diminution, but continues to roll down the tide of time with increasingly grand and majestic flow. It requires not the gift of prophecy to foretell that his name will be "Forever famed, forever loved."

and that unborn millions and oncoming generations shall, through the history of all coming time, continue to rise up and call him blessed.

J. B. WALKER.

New Orleans, February, 1852.

From the North-western Christian Advocate.

Fashionable Pleasures.

How often we hear professing Christians say, "Surely, there can be no harm in our indulging in the innocent pleasures of the day." Just for a simile, we will look at one of these very harmless pleasures.

One Saturday evening we called on an intimate friend, Mrs. A——. We found her in not a very amiable humor, as she was rating the dressmaker soundly, for not making her little daughter's dress a good fit; declaring it should be altered that night, even though the seamstress should have to sit up until twelve o'clock, to get it right. We remarked: "The dress Sarah has on is pretty, and looks quite good enough for to-morrow, even should you not get the new one fitted to-night."

"O, no!" was her reply; "I would by no means take her to church in so plain a dress. Besides, I have anticipated all the week, having the new dress ready for her, and now to disappoint the dear child would destroy my own pleasure, as well as hers. No, I can not think of it."

We did not reprove our deluded sister at the time, for there was other company present, and, reader, we are not one of those who believe in giving reproof in a harsh, cutting manner, before the multitude, but rather, if we see a brother or a sister in the Church in an error, or as we may think deviating from the path of duty, we would take occasion to remind them of it at a fitting time, and in a spirit of kindness. Solomon says, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The new dress was fitted, and of course worn to church, causing the little girl to look like a spread fan, with the handle inverted; and the way Mrs. A. swung off up the aisle was proof that her "harmless pleasure" was fully gratified. (notwithstanding the dress had to be brought home on Sabbath morning.) When seated, the pious lady was prim and devout, her face somewhat elongated, and during sermon her hand was so often raised to the eyes that one might have supposed that some of the truths to which she was listening were already reproving her conscience, had it not been for the diamonds glittering upon her fingers, among the folds of her lace-edged pocket handkerchief!

Alas! (we will not say "for modern Pharisees," but) for modern Methodists—they have no need of broad phylacteries to designate them. Display, display: nothing else will gratify the vitiated taste! No matter how much envy, jealousy and hate it may create.

"O," says one, "I thought by 'fashionable pleasures' we were going to read a chapter on attending places of fashionable amusements—some celebrated panorama, a Jenny Lind concert, or Shakspearean readings, perhaps." Dear reader, it all amounts to the same thing—the drawing the heart away from the one thing needful by fashionable attractions. Fashion, cruel enchantress! of how much real and substantial pleasure thou art wrongfully depriving thy votaries.

And what think you will be the influence of that Christian mother upon the future character of her darling child? Will she be training her for heaven, while her own heart finds pleasure only in the false hopes of earth? O no! she can not be pointing with uplifted finger to heaven, while she is looking downward herself, grasping at earth's gems. She might as well undertake to teach astronomy by directing the eye to the pebbles upon the beaten highway. Your child had far better be under the care of one who professes no religion, than of one whose life is a bundle of contradictions.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Reflections in Solitude.

MR. EDITOR: While in a solitary place, pondering various things in my mind, my thoughts rest upon the great truth that man being "bought with a price," is not his own. St. Paul, in his letter to the Corinthians (sixth chapter), declares this to be the case. And, in presenting to our minds the fact that man belongs to God, he presents no claim arising from creation, but places it alone upon the ground of redemption. This redemption was effected by the matchless price of Jesus' blood; and in this redemption we have a deliverance from the bondage of sin upon earth, as well as "from the wrath to come." This must be obvious to every one who remembers that one of the great objects of man's redemption was that God might have a temple, or dwelling place, upon earth—"your bodies." Man was bought for a temple for the Holy Ghost, a temple for the spirit of eternal truth to dwell in. And it is from this fact that the apostle draws the conclusion that men should glorify God in their "bodies and spirits."

That man may effectually accomplish this great end for which he was redeemed Christ and the apostles have laid down certain principles as the basis of all human action; such as, "he that hath two coats, impart to him that hath none; exact no more than that which is appointed you; do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely;" but "renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth: do to others as you would they should do to you," etc. These are an embodiment of the great leading principles which lie at the foundation of Christianity; and upon which men must act if they would glorify God. And that man or minister professing Christ who can be entirely passive while those under his watch-care wantonly and repeatedly violate all or any of these principles, is unworthy of an office of trust from God. For no intelligent being, let his pretensions be what they may, can be acceptable to God (nor should he be to man) who does not strictly and constantly make these principles the ground-work of all his actions. No, verily, the man who ventures to take upon himself the service of Jesus, and disregards any of these principles, or is fully passive in spirit while those of his charge disregard them, "wrongs his own soul," and is a traitor to his God. And if, while he presents to the world an exterior unsurpassed for sanctity and beauty, he has not these principles embodied as the rich soil out of which his motives grow, he is a blemish in the church, a libel upon Christ—a viper on earth, crawling about the habitations of men, dulling the innocent heart, and poisoning the pure mind with those selfish impulses which lead men to disgrace Christianity; and finally to lose sight of those high principles which so preeminently characterize the Christian. To be a disciple of Christ is to be a good man; to be a good man is to be honest and an honorable man: one who walks in all the ways of righteousness, "looking unto Jesus," not only as "the Christ," but as the embodiment of every ennobling virtue, and soul-exalting characteristic of humanity in heaven or in earth. The man who thus acts, in view of his redeemed relation to God, is the temple of God, and in his body and spirit God is glorified. He acknowledges that he is the purchase of Jesus' blood. He feels that he is not his own, nor does he belong to man; nor is the voice of the people the voice of God to him; because he stands on a combination of principles from God, and any thing that is not according to the substance of that foundation, has no place with him. God dwells in him, and any unholy thing would eject God from his temple—"your body."

Louisiana, 1852. T. J. E.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Another Way to Increase the Missionary Treasury.

There is something that stirs the spirit of every lover of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the reports of several of the Southern Conferences in respect to their missionary collections. It is a cause of profound gratitude that such an impulse is given to our missionary enterprise. God grant to increase it an hundred fold.

I was also pleased to see some excellent suggestions by brother W. H. S. as to measures to increase our missionary collections generally, but especially in the Mississippi Conference. I trust that we will all act on the suggestions of this good brother. But I have another mode to propose that it seems to me is reasonable, and commends itself to the good sense and conscience of every man, especially of every Christian, more especially to every Christian minister.

My plan is, give to the treasury of the Lord what we spend for tobacco.

I said that this plan would commend itself to the conscience of every man. I thus conclude—

1. From the fact that the use of tobacco in any form, by any person, is worse than a useless practice. I can not plead in its justification a single physical, moral or intellectual good. It never did gratify, or in any way subserve, any power or principle that God has made to be a constituent of our nature. It only gratifies an engrafted appetite, unnatural and always deleterious to the healthy exercise of our physical or mental functions.

2. From the fact that in our outlay for tobacco in any of the modes by which it is used, we have no more reference to the glory of God, or the spread of the Gospel of Christ—to the religious, mental or moral good of ourselves, or any body else, than we could have by throwing that amount into the depths of the sea.

3. Because every consideration of humanity demands of us, that we give the bread of life to starving thousands with our means, rather than "waste our Lord's goods" by first conducing and then conserving an appetite so unnatural and injurious, if not so destructive, to every natural function of soul and body.

I have joined in the general and heartfelt joy consequent upon the high and commanding ground our brethren are taking on the subject of missions; but if my suggestion is acted on by all the members and friends of our beloved Zion, at our next general anniversary we will have, instead of some $80,000, at least $1,500,000. Does any call for facts and figures? Let him calculate for himself, and he will see that it is absolutely certain that the members of the M. E. Church, South, spend more than three millions of money, than half that amount for tobacco annually. Let any that choose make the calculation, and he will be surprised at the result—it will very far exceed his highest figures.

I hope my suggestion will receive a serious consideration. I am sure it is made in the spirit of Christian candor and kindness, with an earnest wish that it may be received as it is given, with the fullest purpose to do what God will approve in the premises. If we can glorify God and serve the Church by spending our money for and using tobacco, more than by using it to send bread to the hungry, clothing to the naked, and salvation to the perishing, then let us "spend our money for that which satisfieth not," for that which only creates and subserves that that the author of our being never gave us. If, on the contrary, God has given us this important talent that we might by it ameliorate suffering humanity, and send salvation to the perishing, then let us give to the Lord's treasure what we now give for tobacco.

MELANCTHON.

Clinton, Miss., February, 1852.

How many are ruined for all time by the false theories taught by the unbelievers in Christ and him crucified.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

First Death in the Family.

I arrived at P—— H—— on Saturday, 8th November, about 3 o'clock, and found "Martha," (an interesting child of thirteen,) just closing her earthly career. She recognized me, but could not speak: for two days or more she had been given out by her physicians, and her friends in sorrow stood round to see her die. A more distressed family I have not seen. The father! the sorrows of his heart were inconceivable; he scarcely ate or slept, but restlessly paced the yard, and seemed a wandering maniac: completely absorbed, he had no thought or look for those who passed him. No subject employed his thoughts, no reflection found lodgment in his breast, save such as related to his dying child: it seemed as though the very chords of his heart were breaking—but it were vain to attempt a description of his agony. I speak of him more at length, because he presented the most perfect picture of distress I ever beheld. The father, however, was not the only afflicted one. The faithful, loving mother (sacred be the name!) sat by and watched every breath. In the immediate family the sorrow was great, and but little less among friends and more distant relatives, for all who knew her loved her. My own feelings were deeply stirred—she was a favorite of mine, not only on account of her lovely disposition and amiable character, but because under my ministry she embraced that religion which enabled her to bear so patiently her painful illness.

But these were the feelings experienced while watching her breathe, and every moment looking for the last—fast the hour approached—the doctor was called in, and his opinion given that but few moments she would tarry on earth. See, now, the mother clasp her already cold hand, and in agony exclaim "This sweet hand, will it never press mine again!" Sisters, brothers and other relatives assemble; but where is the father? A messenger is dispatched for him; soon he comes, and with a soul almost bursting with grief, falls upon his knees by the bed-side and clasps the hand of his lovely, dying child. O ye angels of God, record the solemn vows he then made, and God of grace and mercy give him strength to perform them! Her eyes were fixed, her pulse fast waning, and soon it was said by one who watched with us, "She is dead!" Then what shrieks! O God, if there was a murmur at Thy will, forgive it! I then closed her eyes with my own hand, while I tried, by the precious promises of God, to console the bereaved. Soon her cold form was properly disposed, and placed in the center of the room, covered with a snow white cloth, an emblem of the pure spirit which had taken its flight from the body.

Four o'clock of the succeeding day was the hour appointed for the burial; notice was given accordingly, and the pupils of the school of which the deceased was a member were requested to meet at the institute, in order to march in procession to the house and attend the funeral. When the time had nearly arrived, the corpse was placed in the coffin amid the cries and sobs of the family and friends. The solemn tones of the tolling bell were soon heard, and the fellow students of the departed marched with slow pace to the house. The girls were first admitted to the room; they formed a circle around the coffin, the lid was then removed, and a scene presented too overwhelming for the stoutest heart, and too sad for description. To see this company of little immortals weeping over and mourning a departed one, melted every heart and suffused every eye with tears. The boys next entered, and a like scene was presented, save the difference between the tenderness of the female heart and the sternness of the male. The cover was then replaced, and preparations made for repairing to the grave, which was but a short distance from the dwelling. The place was soon reached, and the tolling of the bell ceased, to be succeeded by the voice of the humble minister, who spoke in words of admonition to the unprepared of every age and of consolation to the bereaved. The burial service was then read, the body lowered, and the harsh sepulchral sound echoed back, by the falling clods ceased—and another burst of grief from the afflicted. A mound of earth was raised to mark the place where she lay, and the time had arrived when we must leave her to rest in the tomb. One after another left—still the mother lingered. O what a chord was severed! How could she leave her child to sleep through the night in the cold ground! With a submissive spirit she finally resigned her to the dreary chamber of the dead, and returned to her home.

Since then but a few moments have elapsed, and I have employed them in hastily penning these few lines. O Lord, teach us that "we all do fade as a leaf," and may we prepare for death and a blissful meeting with the sweet angel who waits for us in heaven.

Louisiana, Nov. 9, 1851. G.

ARABIAN IDEAS OF ENGLISH TRAVELERS.—Their general opinion of an English traveler is, that he is either a lunatic or a magician, a lunatic, if, on closely watching his movements, they discover that he pays little attention to any thing around him; a confirmed lunatic, if he goes out sketching, and spends his time in spelling good paper with scratches and hieroglyphics; and a magician, when inquisitive about ruins, and given to picking up stones and shells, gathering sticks and leaves of bushes, or buying up old bits of copper, iron and silver. In these cases, he is supposed, by aid of his magical powers, to convert stones and shells into diamonds of immense price; and the leaves and sticks are charms by looking at which he can bestow comforts upon his friends, and smokes and pestilence upon his luckless enemies. If a traveler pick up a stone and examine it carefully, he will be sure to have at his tail a host of malapert little boys deriding him, though keeping at a very respectable distance, in deference to his magical powers. Should he indeed turn round suddenly and pursue them a few steps, they fly in an agony of fear, the very veins in their naked little legs almost bursting, and they never stop to look back till they have got well among the crowd again, where panting for breath, they recount to their auditors the dreadful look that devil of a Frank gave them, making fire come out of his eyes and adders out of his mouth. (Neale's Eight Years in Syria, Palestine and Asia Minor.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Serious Thoughts.

BY LIZZIE NEWTON.

How we love to tread the familiar paths of other days, to recall past events, and in memory recast them! And it is well, for from such reflections we may learn lessons of weighty import, may learn to avoid breakers which threatened to wreck our frail barks, and more surely find our way into the harbor of peace.

In looking back on the past year, two or three incidents arise like "sacred mountains," hallowed by God's presence and blessed by his love. One was in the bright spring time, when the birds warbled their sweetest songs, the violets peeped up from their lowly beds and "the earth seemed drowned in beauty." Do you remember it? I mean "the revival." Do you recollect when your souls were in deep agonny, when your hearts were broken, when your heads were waters and your eyes fountains of tears, because you had rebelled against one whose goodness and mercy had followed you all the days of your lives? Do you remember when your sins were pardoned and your mouths filled with praises? Oh, yes! it cannot be that those scenes left no impress on your mind. Recall those hours. Look at those Christians and rejoice with them as hallelujahs rise like incense from their lips; bow with those mourners around the altar, hear their earnest pleadings and, oh be exceeding glad, for the Lord hath done great things for us.

That was when the year was new—it has grown old—and passed away, and where are the mourners and converts now? Are they instant in season and out of season; are they found at Sabbath school, church and prayer-meeting; do they love their bibles and communion with their God? Alas! alas! many have forsaken their first love, grown cold in the faith, and some are found in open sin. But bless the Lord, all are not thus unfaithful; some walk worthy the vocation wherewith they are called, and are going on to perfection.

But where do you stand? You, who cried, "O for more of this love, for a richer baught." You who exclaimed, "God is so good, only believe"—say, where are you? Examine your hearts and answer to your God.

Louisiana, February, 1852.

Permanency of Early Impressions.

This truth reveals a power which mothers have, above all others, by which to school the immortal spirit for whatever sphere they choose. No lesson of early life is lost. Though not, perhaps, made visible in its fruits for successive years, yet, from the nature of the mind, no early impression is effaced from the tablet of memory.

I saw a man of middle age, unprincipled, profligate and abandoned; but now arrested in his career of guilt by a sudden chain of reflection. His thoughts were busy upon the past, and anxiety was written on his brow. His mind was absorbed in the most thrilling scene of his childhood. He stood, in imagination, a youth at the bed-side of his dying mother. He looked again upon her pallid brow, on which beamed a heavenly smile. He heard again her voice in words of dying counsel. The faltering accents of her last prayer for the blessing of heaven to rest upon his early years, again thrilled his soul, and I saw the tear of penitence start from his heart. And I said, "That mother's fearful warning lives after the thoughtlessness of twenty years, powerful to alarm, restrain and reform. Surely, childhood hath a power to retain lessons of wisdom and love, which belong not to the experience of age."

So deathless is the influence of the faithful mother over her child. Her impressions upon the heart are like letters cut in brass or granite. God has elected her to a calling more curious and wonderful than the magic art of the sculptor; for her's is not to present a lifeless form of beauty to an admiring world, but one instinct with

"Thoughts that breathe and words that burn," a workmanship which will reveal for ever the touch of its early fashioning. Mother! the tear of your child will be wiped away. Its sorrows are fleeting.

"The tear down childhood's cheek which flows,
Is like the dew-drop on the rose;
When the next summer breeze comes by,
And waves the bush, the flower is dry."

But the impress of your life upon its soul is immortal. [Mother's Assistant.

WAGES.—The wages which sin bargains for with the sinner, are life, pleasure, and profit; but the wages he pays them with are death, torment, and destruction. He that would understand the falsehoods of sin must compare its promises and its payment together. [South.

MORALS OF HAYTI.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, writing from Port-au-Prince, says:

"As you walk through the town, your eye is not infrequently caught by the spectacle of a house in all the dilapidation consequent upon a fire, which had evidently once been much superior in every respect to its neighbors. Melancholy proof is thus afforded of what is said to be prevalent, taste for burning down residences which hold out the hope of plunder. One foreigner has lost three good dwellings in this way in less than that number of years. When the flames are at their work, the populace will gather around and manifest decided symptoms of gratification at the entertainment, and if asked to bring water, or lend any other aid, will inform you that they are not your servants, and that you may help yourself. The whole town, in fact, has more than once been almost entirely destroyed by fire; so there are few remains of the original French buildings, as might easily be inferred from the appearance of the existing edifices. It is strange that this propensity should be so common when robberies on the highways are altogether unknown. You may travel about in all directions with any amount of money, and never be molested in the least; though if a piece of bread or a segar can be pilfered from you, it will inevitably change masters. House breaking, however, is as popular as house burning, not so much for money as for money's worth, in the shape of provisions and clothing."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, February 28.

CHRISTIAN CONVERSATION.

It was a happy occasion for two foot-travelers, as they went on in a sad way toward Emaus, when a stranger joined them. He entered into their conversation—it was such a conversation, begun, carried on and ended, as He might afford to join in. The subject did not require to be changed, and the strain of talk adjusted to propriety at this interruption, nor was the flow of communing souls restrained by His presence. He went into the subject that they were on: took it up where they left off, and beguiled the way by leading them into heavenly truth.

Might it not be asked, in the midst of many lively conversation scenes—How could we bear the interruption of the two disciples on their way to Emaus? Could the Stranger that entered into their conversation take part in ours? Would he lead us on out of our entanglements and ignorance to clear and high conclusions? Could he be a listener, to say nothing of speaker?

Alas for those who, in "letting themselves down," undo all the work and counteract the influence they have wrought while keyed up to their highest pitch of propriety and effort. Who relax by falling into foolish talking and jesting and letting filthy communications proceed out of their mouths. This last offence many seem to think they escape by virtue of quotations. And ie a thought, a word, an obscene phrase less impure, filthy, by passing through the throat of the profane!

Christian conversation—'tie this makes the heart burn. It leaves no ugly stain on other minds, or painful void in our own. It quickens spiritual vitality, warms love, strengthens faith, enlarges charity. Strange indeed it would be, if those who are interested on one subject (religion) on Sunday, could keep their minds and hearts and tongues off of it till Sunday came round again. Christ is present where two or three are thus engaged, be it on the highway, in the parlor, or the church: He is present if not audible: He hears if He does not answer. His Spirit answers back. Christ is there to bless.

Revelling, and Such Like.

A correspondent, writing of the Papists in a certain portion of Louisiana holding a fair for building a church, and winding up with the usual (!) improprieties of raffling, etc., adds:

"I do not think fairs become any religious sect, and although they may repudiate this name, they certainly have many different denominations among them, Dominicans, Jesuits, etc. Well did a lady observe, 'That when a wife gambled—and raffling is gambling—she ought never to object to her husband in this respect.' I am glad to see that our Church is waking up to the necessity of driving out such things from her membership; and the Alabama Annual Conference deserves particular commendation for her bold stand in opposition to the insidious approaches of him who oft assumes the form of an Angel of Light."

Bible Society in Lafourche and Terrebonne, La.

By the Thibodaux Minerva, 7th inst., we received full and very gratifying intelligence of the organization and proceedings of the "Bible Society of Lafourche and Terrebonne Parishes, Louisiana," auxiliary to the South-Western Bible Society, at New Orleans.

On the 18th of January a preliminary meeting was held at the Methodist Church in Thibodaux. Rev. N. P. Chamberlin, Rev. W. C. Crane and Rev. W. J. Ferguson were appointed a committee to draft a constitution for the consideration of an adjourned meeting, to be held on the 1st of February, at 3 o'clock P. M.

Pursuant to adjournment, the meeting convened on the 1st of February, and was organized by the appointment of Rt. Reverend Leonidas Polk, Chairman, and Mr. Walter Bennet, Secretary, pro tem.

Interesting addresses were then delivered by James Saul, Esq., and S. Tenny, Esq. Rev. W. C. Crane then reported a constitution, which was unanimously adopted.

It is well devised for calling into action the Christian benevolence of those engaged, and we look for happy results, in that interesting portion of the State, to our common Protestant Christianity. The names of those engaged in the movement, representing the best influence among Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Methodists, augur well for success. By a thoughtful and happy stroke of policy, the Executive Committee were instructed to appoint a committee of ladies to assist them in promoting the objects of the Society.

The following gentlemen, nominated by the committee, were elected officers of the Society, viz:

Hon. George S. Guion, President.

Joseph Semple and John A. Lane, V. Presidents.

Winchester Hall, Secretary.

Marcus P. Zills, Treasurer.

Messrs. S. Tenny, J. E. Beck, Walter Bennet, F. L. Mead and James M. Hanna were appointed Executive Committee.

The meeting was then addressed by the Rev. Robert J. Harp, after which the following committee were appointed to circulate subscriptions for membership to the Society:

Messrs. G. S. Guion, S. Tenny and F. L. Mead, for Lafourche Interior, and Messrs. J. C. Pugh, J. Semple and W. S. Mayfield, for the Parish of Terrebonne.

All persons contributing any sum to its funds shall be members for one year; those contributing twenty dollars at one payment, or thirty dollars in three payments, members for life; and those contributing fifty dollars at one payment, or seventy-five dollars in three payments, honorary life directors.

All funds not wanted for circulating the Scriptures in the Parishes of Lafourche Interior and Terrebonne, are to be remitted to the Southwestern Bible Society at New Orleans, in aid of the general purposes of that Society.

The Executive Committee is to keep a good supply of Bibles on hand, and to see that collections are made in some way annually in every congregation. It shall be authorized to appoint local distributors, to call public meetings of the Society, and fill vacancies occurring in its own body. Three of its members constitute a quorum.

May this be but a beginning for hundreds of Bible Societies in Louisiana.

Prayer for Colleges.

The officers of the undersigned colleges, in the United States, are convinced from the experience of former years that the observance of the last Thursday in February, as a day of prayer for colleges, has been of great importance, and is worthy of a more extended and earnest observance. They, therefore, respectfully and affectionately invite the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ, of different denominations, in every place, to unite with them on said day, in earnest prayer, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on colleges: University of New York; Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.; Columbia College, D. C.; Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Feb. 9, 1850; Waterville College, Me.; Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.; Hamilton College, Oneida Co., N. Y.; Wake Forest College, N. C.; William's College, Mass.; Amherst College, Mass.; Middlebury College, Vt.; Richmond College, Va.; University of Vermont, at Burlington; Jefferson College, Penn.; Oxford, Emory College, Geo.; Athens, Franklin College, Geo.; Oglethorpe University, Milledgevills, Geo.; Erskine College, Abbeville District, S. C.; Emory and Henry College, Washington Co., Va.; Rector College, Taylor Co., Va.; Hamilton, Madison University, N.Y.; Georgetown College, Georgetown, Ky.; University of Nashville, Tenn.; Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio; Marietta College, Ohio; Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind.; Hamden Sydney College, Va.; Hanover College, South Hanover, Ind.; Howard College, Marion, Ala.; Union University, Tenn.; Knox College, Galesburgh, Ill.; McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill.; LaGrange College, Ala.

Unrolling of the Mummy!!!

Such a crowd as has not often met in the Lyceum Hall, assembled last night to witness Professor Gliddon's long heralded performance of "unrolling the Mummy!"

The members of the Medical Faculty were present, together with the Hon. Theodore H. McCaleb, of the United States District Court, and a crowd of the ecrums too numerous to mention.

Many ladies were among the audience, and the anxiety they exhibited to witness the performance was immense!

At precisely half-past 7 o'clock the Professor mounted the rostrum amidst loud applause! The Mummy was laid in state on a table fronting the audience, and looked very much like an overgrown wasp in a chrysalis state. A large number of carcasses of young alligators were strewn around, much like pickled herrings laid out to dry.

The Professor prefaced by saying that mummyfication antedated the Mummy exhibited many thousand years—that embalming was a religious art, and as essential to the salvation of an Egyptian, as baptism is at the present day to a Christian.

This mummy had been buried two or three thousand years, and after dwelling so long in darkness he would proceed to assist it to see the light. Mummies, he said, were first put in pickle for forty years; then baked, in order to be properly cooked for the feast of death, and wrapped in linen, preparatory to being bituminized and encased in the inner and outer coffin. The outer casings were marked with certain figures and hieroglyphics, whereby it was easy to read the name, age, sex and quality of the individual. The mummy on exhibition came into his possession without the outer casings, and for that reason he would not inform the audience of its sex, as he otherwise might have been enabled to do. This subject had hieroglyphics on the linen swathing, but it was so abraided as to be illegible. The subject was from Thebes, on the Nile, where the custom of embalming had accumulated about five hundred millions of mummies. After much learned disquisition the Professor proceeded to

THE UNROLLING!

About a half dozen of the Medical Faculty now ascended the platform, to play the part of undertakers to the defunct! They commenced by rolling the mummy to a position nearer the audience. The Professor, in the meanwhile, proposed to unroll some animal mummies; and commencing with the Ibis, went through an ornithological list, embracing the hawk, the owl, etc. These specimens of antique poultry elicited no little attention.

After the birds were disposed of, the medical gentlemen proceeded to unroll the human mummy. They commenced by skinning off a great variety of bark, and went through the process much after the manner of pealing a potato! When they had done with the outer coating or epidermis, and otherwise handled it very irreverently, the Professor walked it out, in an upright position, facing the audience. He then said two sets of bandages were yet to be taken off, which he would proceed to do in the tenderest manner possible. In doing this he showed the manner of rolling up the subject, which was exactly the bandaging process used by surgeons of the present day. As much as forty pounds of linen had been taken off one mummy, which, to the poor Egyptians, was a great waste of cloth! While these explanations were making, the Faculty tugged most industriously at the subject, and in a manner which showed that they were old resurrectionists.

After much trial of patience and tribulation of the spirit, the mummy was finally unrolled!

The only thing remarkable about it was, that it had a very lean and dried aspect, and emitted a fragrance much like ancient cow-skin, spoiled in the drying!

This was but the first stage in the unrolling of the mummy! The last will be given on Tuesday next.

The amount given by the King of Prussia to the support of the Protestant Bishopric in Jerusalem is upward of £125,000 (about $618,000) out of which sum the actual Bishop receives his annual salary

METHODIST PRESS.

Our file of the California C. Advocate has been received up to the middle of January. We quote an item and are glad that there exists a religious paper where such things occur to rebuke them:

"A SAD BEGINNING.—A large body of the members of the Legislature left on last Sunday morning for Vallejo. Bro. Taylor, who preaches on the wharf on Sunday morning, for the special benefit of elders too busy to go to church, had an opportunity to serve them, in a few words of caution, which we hope they will heed. What a shame that those who expect their laws to be enforced mainly by moral power and a good conscience, should thus trample on the moral principle."

On the subject of Free Public Schools the Advocate remarks:

"One of the most interesting features of our government is the support given to free public schools. We are greatly deficient in providing 'fellowships' or leisure for learning in its higher departments, by not having certain emoluments open to those who give promise of special devotion and interest in science. But we are laying a noble foundation, alike honorable to government and beneficial to the people, in the free common school system.

"We may lay it down as an axiom, that the State should provide for the education of its children. The tax for it is both proper and right. It costs less to diffuse knowledge than to support ignorance."

DR. BOND UPON THE STAGE AGAIN.—Events, North, seem likely to resurrect the ex-editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal. The present difficulties there are those in which his FORTE lies. Who can tell but he may again be editor of the great official Organ at 200 Mulberry street! The editor (12th inst.) says:

"Our worthy predecessor stepped into our office on Friday last, and is to remain in New York for several weeks. He will immediately put to press his 'Appeal,' and editorial papers published in the Itinerant, during the radical controversy of 1828–31. The whole will constitute a most important volume. It is to be preceded by an introduction, and illustrated by notes."

PRESSING ELDER DIFFICULTY.—The dissatisfaction with this part of itinerant economy, North, seems to be general. The stations don't want them, and don't like to support what they don't want; the sparse regions want them, and can't support what they want. Any way, it is a fifth wheel concern there, and the following opinion, as to putting it on and putting it off, according as it runs well, has met with some favor.

A writer in Zion's Herald, who says he is himself a Presiding Elder, has developed a plan. The general idea of it may be gathered from the following paragraph:

"Let the next General Conference be memorialized to order the limitation of districts to twelve or thirteen charges, wherever practicable, and so to change the order in regard to Presiding Elders, that each district shall determine for itself whether the incumbent shall devote his entire time and labor to the district, as at present; or otherwise attend to such duties only as are strictly official, and as may be performed in connection with a regular pastoral charge, from which he shall derive his support, the expense and extra trouble connected with his district duties excepted."

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD.—The Texas Banner, noticing the organization of this Synod in Houston in November last, observes, quoting from the "Kirchenbots" a paragraph commending the piety of the members:

"It seems to be their intention to keep aloof all Rationalists and Infidels. For a number of years the Germans of Texas were visited with so called 'Lutheran preachers,' who came over from Europe, not being able to make the examination there, put on the gown and preached Rationalism and Infidelity in the name of the venerated Luther. We trust the Texas Synod will not only keep pure the ministry, but enforce a Christian discipline in their membership, that they may be respected as a Christian denomination among American Christians."

ENDOWMENT OF EMORY COLLEGE, GA.—Dr. G. F. Pierce, President, makes the following proposition in the S. C. Advocate:

"Brother Hugh E. Morrow, of Griffin, Ga., proposes to be one of a hundred who will pay $100 cash, at the next session of the Conference, for the endowment of Emory College. Are there not ninety and nine men in Georgia, Methodists and friends of Methodist education, who will respond to this generous offer! Those inclined to co-operate in this important movement may address me at this place, or communicate personally with me as I pass to and fro, on my agency for the College building."

A GOD-SPEED.—Our brother editor of Boston, in quoting the missionary collections of the Alabama Conference, and our remarks upon them, gives his hearty amen, and adds:

"Much as we hate slavery, we say Lord bless the generous-hearted men who do such good deeds."

CONFERENCE ACTION.—The Memphis Advocate presents this week and last several columns, from different writers, censuring the action of the Alabama Conference, at its late session, in the case of one of its members accused of attending the Striker's Ball and heterodoxy.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERTS.—The laxity of morals threatening the West is thus rebuked by the Editor of the Cincinnati Advocate:

"We learn that at the large hall on the corner of C. and W. streets, concerts are held regularly every Sunday evening. A refreshment house occupies a large room on the first floor of the building. A bar is also attached to the hall. Young girls wait on the company with liquor. The admittance fee of ten cents allows each one a glass of brandy, whisky, beer, or any thing he may desire. A large orchestra are engaged for the benefit of those who attend while nigger singing, yelling and hurraing completo the disgusting picture.

"This is the state of society to which Rationalists wish to bring us. The Bible is to be called a fool's book, and to be kicked into the street; and its ministers, in the language of the German daily papers, "are to be hung with their own entrails." We hope that the reign of chaos is not fairly begun.

LITERARY NOTICES.

SELECT MELODIES. By Rev. Wm. Hunter. J. Hall publisher. New Orleans: 1852. 18mo. pp. 384.

The editor well remarks that it is "impossible for all the good hymns in the language to be embraced in one Church hymn book." This is not designed to supersede or compete with such a book: it is intended for the family and religious social circle, rather than the congregation. Mr. Hunter is favorably known to the singing Israel. He caters admirably to the appetite for simple and pathetic melodies. No one can fill his place in Methodist Hymnology. He is a translator and author of merit, as well as compilor. A large portion of this collection bears his initials. Many of the pieces we do not recollect to have seen elsewhere. Our opinion is worth little in such a matter, but we like his paraphrase of the Lord's Prayor as well as Montgomery's.

Here we have the Child's Morning Hymn, by Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D.; Eden is My Home, by Rev. J. N. Maffit; one or more by that Western Songster, of no mean fame, Rev. F. E. Pitts; The Sunbright Clime, and enough more to make up 369 songs. Of course there is no light sprinkling of chorus.

The copy before us is neatly bound in sheep, and may be had wholesale for $30 per hundred. For sale by the publisher.

A SHORT GUIDE for the treatment of Children, in Health and Disease, by Water. C. C. Schieferdecker. M. D. J. W. Moore, publisher. Phila.: 1852. 12mo. pp. 209.

The author has the air of a thorough quack. The men of the drug-school know nothing about the business; he is a king-cure-all, confident, knows every thing. If the reader can stand this empyrical style and make his way into the book, he may find some valuable hints about the Priessnitz system. Here we have an account of its origin, and learn that Pythagoras, Hippocrates, etc., (B. C. 500) went for the cold water cure! The application of the system to children of tender age is specially discussed. We have always been of opinion that a plentiful use of water was one of the most crying wants of that age. For sale by J. Ball.

QUAKERISM, or the Story of My Life. By a Lady. J. W. Moore, Phila: 1852. 12mo. pp. 384.

Some queer revelations upon queer people. This "story," if it be not a lie, proves again that all is not gold that shines. The nurture was for forty years a member of the Society of Friends, and observed them. She professes to have been thoroughly disgusted at their duplicity under the garb of simplicity. The chapter on Paying Tithes is a striking instance. If we are to believe this lady, there is a great deal of wickedness sheltered under those broad-brim hats and bland countenances. The story is well told, abounding in novelties to the outsider, and not deficient in narrative interest.

For sale by J. Ball.

A LEGEND OF THE WALDENSES, and other Tales. By Mary Wardle. J. W. Moore, Phila: 1852. 12mo. pp. 346.

A collection of fictions that have been before well received, through Monthly Magazines; the first, founded on scenes of suffering and heroism in Huguenot history. The publisher, and rightly, has not judged it worthy of being bound. For sale by J. Ball.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK:
GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE:

These brilliant Monthlies present unusual ARTISTIC excellence for March, with the usual literary matter.

SOUTHERN PARLOR MAGAZINE.

Mr. Reagan, proprietor, now issues from Nashville instead of Mobile. His Monthly is much enlarged, and a fine array of original Southern contributors is presented.

DECISION. By Grace Kennedy. Carter & Brothers. New York: 1852. 18mo.

This little volume is designed to impress the young and wavering with the important truth, that "Religion must be all, or is nothing." For sale by J. Ball.

A TRACT FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. J. L. Chapman. Memphis, Tenn: 1852.

An examination and correction of Succession and exclusive Episcopacy—in answer to Dr. Page, Rector of Calvary Church, Memphis, Tenn. Mr. C. has arrayed a host of Fathers, and even of distinguished Episcopalians on his side. It is a short and strong argument against Prelatical pretensions, and unobjectionable in its spirit.

Several copies have been left at this office.

MONROE FEMALE INSTITUTE.

We have received from the President, Rev. A. Lea, the Circular of this Institute, located in the flourishing town of Aberdeen, Miss. A sound course of study is laid down: the ornamental part not forgotten. The Lyceum exercises will doubtless be very entertaining and improving—an important appendage to every such institution.

A DISCOURSE on the Horrors of the Liquor Traffic. Delivered in Wesley Chapel, Indianapolis, Ind: 1851. By Rev. B. R. Crary, A. M.

One of the best we have read of that class of appeals now awakening all good citizens to their duty.

Bonaparte's house, at Longwood, St. Helena, is now a barn; the room he died in, is a stable; and, where the imperial body lay in state, may be found a machine for grinding corn.

Dr. A. H. Wilder, of Springfield, Mass., failed some time since and went to California, leaving his wife and family to earn their daily bread for the time. A few days since, the several creditors of the Bankrupt received the residence of their debtor's wife in compliance with her petition, when each found under his plate the amount of his claim. The husband had taken this method of paying the liabilities still of the first of his earnings on the Pacific.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

What Energy Can Do—A Native Texan.

MR. EDITOR: My object for writing these few lines is to encourage and forward all young men that may chance to read them.

I arrived at H——, Texas, a few days since on a Western tour, and have staid looking on and resting until to-day. One of the curiosities of this place is a native Texan, who is thirty-four years old; a very agreeable man, good manners, and rather of the German. He is now district surveyor and a member of the bar, and carrying on a large mercantile establishment; doing all the principal business himself. He has been entirely raised in this wild, destitute of both schools and churches. He was eighteen years old when he learned to read. He told me that he was twenty-three years old before he heard a sermon preached; was never out of Texas until twenty-nine years old, and then saw his first steamboat; never saw a regular school until he was thirty-one years old; never was in the society of religious men until lately; yet he is a pretty moral man, loves peace, gives largely to churches, and is a trustee to the Fowler Institute, an institution belonging to the Methodist Church. He is a professor of mathematics, is a good lawyer, a good historian; converses well on history, politics, etc., and is, I believe, the best scripturist I ever saw out of the ministry. He is also one of the greatest jesters of his day, and knows all the anecdotes of the age. He also speaks easily about the products of all countries and governments. He has done all these things in twelve years, and supported a family in good style.

I thought of the many prospects that attend the young men who are raised in a civilized country, surrounded by friends, and institutions, and laws, and so few embrace them. Suppose our Texas man had these advantages! He was an orphan, and without all that was necessary to have made him an educated man. I spoke of his success and energy, and he used these words of Solomon: "You may bray a fool in a mortar, yet his foolishness will not depart from him." I look upon him as being one of the greatest human curiosities I ever saw; certainly one of the most extraordinary men in the West.

I write this that you may publish it for the encouragement of young men in the venture for knowledge. His name (B. A. V.) is known in every department of his State, both in the civil and military list. He is the modern Æsop, the great backwoodsman, the polished gentleman, the true man, self-made, self-independent, and not self-important. Let young men, now students in school or college, learn from this what application and energy will do. A PATHON.

Texas, Jan. 30, 1852.

[From the Louisville Journal.

ANGELS.

Thin shadowy forms are hovering
In the air around us spread,
And we feel their hallowed presence,
In the daily paths we tread;
Their soft eyes are kindly gleaming
Down in many a golden beam;
Theirs the hands that gently scatter
Heavenly roses on our dream.

Richest gems of thought they bring us
From their fair and distant home,
Though they often make us sadder
We are better when they come.
And they weave sweet spells of music
O'er our troubled hearts to glide,
And uphold souls almost sinking
Down in life's cold rapid tide.

They sustain, and cheer, and comfort
When our spirits fail and shrink,
Save us from the dark abysses
When we tremble on the brink;
Soft they chide when fiery passions
Would our hasty bosoms stir
Angels sad and deeply sorrow
When our human spirits err.

Low they speak in soothing whispers
When in grief we bend and moan,
And soft they bear us messages
From the sainted loved one's gone,
They that still the fever burning
In our sickened weary hearts—
They unclasp the crystal fountain
Whence the cooling tear-drop starts.

They that braid the costly pleasures
That our deeper spirits know,
And tune the crushed and bruised heart-strings
Thrilling with a secret woe.
Of our better thoughts they waken
All that's pure, and high, and true,
They that prompt the kindly impulse
Of the little good we do.

Oh! they bring us daily visions
Of a world more pure and fair,
While their sweet low voices whisper
"God and love, and home are there."
They that keep a deathless vigil
At the portals of the soul—
They that tread the angry tempest,
When the waves of trouble roll.

Through the vale of gloomy shadows
Safe our fainting souls they bear,
While their tuneful songs of Heaven
Soothe us in our passage there.
Ah, how rich, how high, how precious,
We must be in God's pure sight,
That He sends us guardian angels
From His realms of fadeless light.

IDA.

POLYGAMY AMONG THE MORMONS.—The wife of one of the United States Judges in Utah, an intelligent and pure-minded woman of the Mormon faith, has written a letter to a friend in Canton, Ohio, in which she confirms the statements often made by others, that "polygamy is openly taught and practiced" by the Mormons in that territory. She says it is so interwoven with the threads of society that it is impossible to mix in social life at all without encountering it at every turn."

NEWSPAPER ON SILK.—In Pekin, China, a newspaper of an extraordinary size is published weekly on silk. It is said to have been started more than a thousand years ago—somewhat earlier than the one under the patronage of the "good Queen Bess." An anecdote is related to the effect that in 1727, a public officer caused some false intelligence to be inserted in this newspaper, for which he was put to death. Several numbers of the paper are preserved in the Boys' Library at Paris. They are each ten and a quarter yards long.

HAVANA.—RUMORS OF AN INVASION.—Considerable excitement has again been created in Havana by absurd rumors of an immense expedition fitting out in the Southern States to invade the island. Recent advices from there state that considerable alarm is really felt, which cannot but be injurious to commercial interests. These rumors are attributed to the spies employed by the Cuban authorities in this country who, as they get well paid, deem themselves in duty bound to communicate occasionally some alarming intelligence. Otherwise, their occupation would soon be gone.

THE REV. H. WILBERFORCE.—The Oxford (Eng.) Herald says the ex-vicar of East Farleigh, who acceded to the Church of Rome a married man, can not enter the priesthood of the Church of Rome; but it is said he has received a dispensation from the Pope which will permit him to preach, though not to perform any other of the priest's offices. An order of preachers, to meet the cases of those English clergymen who, being married, can not be admitted into the priesthood is talked of as about to be established by his Holiness.

ORIGIN OF THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—It is stated that this bill passed the Lower House of the Maine Legislature with the confident expectation that it would be defeated in the Senate. As the members of the Senate did not like the idea of assuming the responsibility of defeating the bill, they passed it for the Governor to veto. When it was brought to Governor Hubbard, he expressed his indignation at their folly in passing such a bill, and saying, "If they want the bill, let them have it," he put his official signature to it, and it became the famed Maine law.

NORTHERN CORRESPONDENCE.

PROVIDENCE—WHEN SETTTLED—ROGER WILLIAMS—ORIGIN OF THE BAPTIST CHURCH—METHODISM—PROSPERITY—MR. CAUGHEY—DIFFERENT CHURCHES, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: Providence, R. I., is situated at the head of the tide water of Naragansett Bay, about thirty miles from the Atlantic ocean, and forty miles South-Southwest of Boston. It is the second city in size and commercial importance in New England. It contains nearly fifty thousand inhabitants, and is characterized by great energy and business enterprise. A large amount of cotton is bought and sold here. Rhode Island is a manufacturing State: though small in territory, its manufactories are immense, principally for cotton goods of nearly all kinds. Cotton dealers in Providence supply not only the State, but some portions of Massachusetts and Connecticut with cotton, and some of them have acquired large fortunes in the business. Various kinds of business is carried on with spirit and success. Many of the capitalists are immensely rich, having acquired their wealth within a few years. It has been here as in other places—while many have become rich, others have become poor: though a large proportion of the business men here have been successful.

The settlement of the place commenced as early as 1636, by Roger Williams, who was banished from the jurisdiction of Massachusetts for his opposition to some of the peculiar notions of the Puritans. He regarded his removal to this place as providential, and hence, named it Providence. He, with his associates, adopted the congregational form of church government, and imbibed the notion that immersion was the only valid mode of water baptism. But to carry into practice their views in this matter, was attended with some difficulty. None of them had been immersed, and who could they get to administer the ordinance! "Necessity is the mother of invention." The following plan was adopted, according to Mr. Benedict, in the History of the Baptists. "At length, the candidates for communion nominated Mr. Ezekiel Holliman, a man of gifts and piety, to baptize Mr. Williams, and who, in return, baptized Mr. Holliman and the other ten." Mr. Holliman did not pretend to be either a minister or a baptized believer, but he was appointed to give believer's baptism to Mr. Williams, and then Mr. W. gave baptism to him and the rest. Was Mr. Williams properly baptized! Will those answer it who reject pious Christians from the communion simply because they have not been immersed by an immersed administrator! This was the origin of the Baptist Church in this country.

Methodism was early introduced here by Freeborn Garsettson and Jesse Lee. Bishop Asbury visited the city occasionally, and preached to the people, but Methodism made slow progress here for many years. A society, consisting of five persons, was organized in 1798, and continued small until 1815, when the Spirit of the Lord was poured out, and several added to the Church. A house of worship was much needed. Special efforts were made for the purpose, which proved successful, and in the following year the house was dedicated to the worship of God. The society continued to prosper, until the house was quite too small, and it was found necessary to erect a large edifice. In 1822 a large and commodious house was built on Chestnut street, where the society still continues to worship. Glorious revivals have been experienced here from time to time, from which the Church has reaped much fruit. A great work was experienced here in the winter of 1848–49, under the labors of REV. JAMES CAUGHEY, the great revivalist. Nearly one hundred were added to the church in this revival; most of them continue steadfast unto this day. As we had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Caughey several times during this revival, we shall take opportunity of referring to him as a preacher, and notice his labors both in Great Britain and this country, in some future communication.

The church on Chestnut street, to which we have referred, is undergoing extensive repairs, and is to be fitted up in modern style, at an expense of about $9000—when completed, will be one of the best churches in the city, and will conveniently seat from one thousand to twelve hundred persons.

Four other societies have come from Chestnut street within a few years, and are now worshipping in their respective houses of worship. The first that left now worships on Power street, and is enjoying a good state of prosperity. They have a fine brick church and a good congregation. This is the only Methodist Church which we are acquainted with in New England, but what has adopted the choir singing. This instance we regard as sufficient to test the matter that congregational singing might be sustained in nearly all our churches, if it were adopted. We hope that societies will soon follow, and that the time will not be far distant when singing will be done by the members of the church, and not by a few, composing the choir, whether Christian or not.

The Matthewson street church has recently built a splendid edifice, at a cost of about thirty thousand dollars. It has a marble pulpit—a fine organ, and seated with sofas. The plainness of primitive Methodism is not seen, but still there is a great neatness and convenience in the edifice. The church is enjoying great spiritual prosperity. More or less are converted nearly every week.

The church on Federal street is small, but prospering. The Wesleyans have also a church here, most of which left Chestnut street some years since, because they could not stay in a proslavery church. Their consciences no doubt were greatly relieved, but they have not prospered. They will probably dwindle to nothing. The denominatory spirit possessed by these seceders, is sufficient to kill any church.

We designed to have spoken of the ministers of these churches, but what we have to say of them must be reserved for another epistle.

Our winter has been very severe, but from present appearance, we are led to conclude that the intense cold weather has passed. Our harbors are getting clear of ice, and navigation is again resuming its usual course. More anon. TRAVELLER.

February 11, 1852.

CLOSE OF CANALS ON SUNDAY.—The Pennsylvania Board of Canal Commissioners have adopted a resolution that the locks on the Pennsylvania Canal shall be closed at 12 o'clock on Saturday night and shall remain closed until 12 o'clock Sunday night except for the passage of packet boats.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Arrival of the Cherokee.

The steamship Cherokee, Lieut. H. K. Davenport, commanding, arrived yesterday in six and a half days from Chagres, bringing the California mails with ten days later intelligence. The propeller West Wind sailed from Chagres in company with the Cherokee. The United States sloop-of-war Cyane was at Chagres on the 17th, also the Dutch frigate Prince of Orange. Both vessels sailed for San Juan on the 18th.

The steamer Crescent City sailed from Chagres on the 19th for New York, with $1,500,000 in gold dust on freight, and three hundred passengers.

John B. Weller (democrat) has been elected United States Senator for California.

The Cherokee brought between three and four thousand in gold dust on freight, and upwards of $200,000 came in the hands of passengers.

Mining Intelligence.

The miners are digging up the streets of Placerville, much to the annoyance of the News. The Marysville Herald says:

We learn by a friend lately from a mining district above, that on Frenchman's Bar, heretofore well known for the success of parties working there, operations for the season have been almost wholly suspended from the rise of the Yuba. Parties holding claims upon the bar have united for the purpose of going extensively into fluming in the spring, and are making preparations for a commencement of the work early in March. In the meantime most of the claims are entrusted to the care of some one or two of each company, while the remainder are enjoying a season of rest and pleasure. There are still a few places worked on the bar, from which $8 to $10 per man is daily taken out.

On Condemned Bar the same condition of affairs exists as in the preceding case. At Rumiree Ranch, the one until belonging to Barker, Battersly & Co. is doing a large amount of business. The demand for sawed lumber is great, being required for fluming purposes in that vicinity. The owners of the mill, we understand, are under large contracts, and the manner in which their saws are kept running day and night, proves the extent to which it is designed to push the work of fluming on the Yuba during the coming season.

AT CARSON'S flat considerable difficulty has occurred in consequence of rival claims. It has not yet been settled.

LOUISIANA.—Col. John R. Weller has been elected U. S. Senator, in place of C. C. Clay, for six years from the 4th of March last. He was elected by a vote of 71 to 17. Col. Weller has been a resident of California for three years. The San Francisco Courier says that, except in a political point of view, he cannot be unacceptable to the citizens generally. He will be an earnest supporter of the Compromise.

Gen. Vallejo has sent a communication to the Legislature requesting an amendment of his bond, now that the seat of Government has been removed.

A resolution has been adopted instructing the Representatives of State in Congress to travel themselves to obtain the passage of a law allowing an increase of salary to the United States District Judges.

FROM SAN DIEGO AND LOS ANGELES.—The San Diego Herald, of the 24th, states that Gov. Bean has issued orders for the disbanding of the State troops, there being no longer any occasion for their services. The Herald states that there is not a vacant house in the town, considerable addition to the population having recently taken place.

LOCATION OF A NEW MORMON TEMPLE.—The San Bernardino Herald says:

We have seen and conversed with one of the principal Mormon chiefs, who informs us, that, as soon as he is satisfied of the existence of a permanent encampment of troops on the Gila, it is the intention of his people to form a settlement in that vicinity. It is well known that the land lying between the Colorado and Gila rivers is very rich and arable, and the site chosen by the Mormons for the foundation of a new city, is well adapted to the intended purpose. Situated in a valley, forming large quantities of the finest quality of timber for building, and within easy reach of the mines, and with the facilities for water transportation, which the Colorado and Gila rivers afford, the location of a Mormon city in that region, will, in all probability, be the means of bringing into notice the fertile valleys of the Gila, and will be the harbinger of peace and a long line of settlements that will powerfully conduce to the advantage of the whole South—opening up the best avenue of the land emigration from the States anticipated the coming season.

"In a conversation with two gentlemen of this city, just returned from the North, we learned the following interesting particulars relative to the Mormon settlement at San Bernardino. The settlement is composed of twelve hundred souls, divided into one hundred and fifty families. Over one hundred ploughs are in preparation, designed to break up 1800 acres. The Mormons have erected a fortification against the Indians—a stockade enclosing an area of ten acres in extent. The valley of San Bernardino is represented as well watered by living streams of water and is as productive as could be desired by the most fastidious cultivator. Wood is found in great abundance and the mountain sides are covered with luxuriant growth of pine timber. Saw mills are in process of erection and we confidently anticipate seeing a respectable sized city in this beautiful valley in the course of the next few years. However objectionable in some of our citizens the peculiar tenets of the Mormon religion may be found, we all must admire the patient and untiring energy exhibited by these people, in the prosecution of the vast undertaking they have essayed. We welcome their appearance among us, and bid them God's speed in their efforts to develop the great agricultural resources of our country."

Boundary Commission Items.

The copper mines of Santa Rita del Cobre, New Mexico, where, for a few months, the head-quarters of the Commission were established, were ordered by the Commissioner to be abandoned in August last.

That portion of the Commission which remained at the time Mr. Gray's party left, were detailed for the survey of the Rio Grande, under the command of Col. J. D. Graham, of the Topographical Engineers—since recalled.

The Apaches, whose displeasure was first incurred by the death of one of their warriors shot by a Mexican carrier in the employ of the Commission, and the illegal arrest and detention of two Mexican captive boys, had made four descents upon the rancherias of the Commission, in each of which they were successful in driving off a considerable number of horses and mules. The entire loss, confined in this way amounted to perhaps eight or ten thousand dollars.

A combination of forces was supposed to have existed between the Apaches and Navajoes, with the design of unrestricting hostilities against all Americans and American property falling into their power.

Lieut. Conde's party was stampeded a short time subsequent, among the mountains, and lost four of its animals.

The country between the mouth of the San Pedro river and the junction of the Gila and Colorado, is almost entirely destitute of grass.

The valley of Salt river and the Gila, between the mouth of the former and the Pimo Villages, is admirably adapted to the growth of Sea Island cotton. The Pimo and Maricopa Indians produce an excellent quality of it, in moderate quantities. The adaptation of the soil to this production is principally owing to the extensive deposits of salt, which cover the surface of the ground in snow, like crystalized form, and of virgin whiteness.

The valley of the Gila contains—and perhaps about the Pimo villages—some excellent arable land. The amount is very small, however, in proportion to the whole extent of the river.

The golden anticipations, so far as they relate to the Gila, have received a staggering blow by the explorations of the river. No evidences of the existence of any mineral treasure were discovered, and the river has but few attractions to offer in any other respect.

The Yumas are pronounced among the finest specimens of the Indian kind, in physical proportions, by all the prominent. Although making no overt act of hostility, the lower chief of the various parties of the Boundary Commission, they assembled about the launches in force, chiefly armed with bows and arrows, and strutted about with a lordly swagger, much to the gratification of their own vanity, no doubt, and to the mingled admiration and amusement of the Americans, who neither feared nor gave ground for them in their hypothetical promenades.

The approach to the springs of Ojitas Creek, up a dry bed, after crossing the long and inhospitable Jornada, inspires the liveliest hopes imaginable to be connected. The parched tongue and swollen throat of the famished emigrant, grown painfully insupportable, cry aloud for water. To meet with disappointment were, in many instances, actual death. Mournful evidences are exhibited by the many skeletons in its neighborhood, of the suffering endured by animals, which have toiled over the famished, along the plains and across the Desert to the gushing threshold of waters! The place is literally a "valley of the shadow of death." The carcasses of over 1500 cattle, horses, mules and oxen—these interspersed occasionally with a human skeleton.

Miscellaneous Items.

WHALE SHIP.—The whale ship Nile has been fitted out and cleared at San Francisco for the Sandwich Islands and the Arctic Ocean. The Pioneer thinks whaling will become an important branch of trade from that port.

GOLD COIN.—Messrs. Moffatt & Co., of San Francisco, have issued new ten dollar gold pieces, which proves a great convenience.

BURGLARIES.—The Pioneer states that burglaries are becoming very frequent in San Francisco, and several cases of highway robbery have occurred.

MANUFACTURERS' MEETING.—The mechanics and manufacturers of San Francisco have held a meeting for the purpose of entering their protest against the ordinance imposing a tax on goods manufactured and sold in the city.

Agriculture has begun to engage the attention of farmers in all parts of the State.

THE MORMONS.—The San Francisco Pioneer of the 3d ult. says: "By the mail carrier from the Dalles to Oregon we learn that news had reached that place from the Great Salt Lake of a revolution. It is said the Mormons are arming and fortifying themsel

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Steerage perpetrated by steamship agents at that place, by which the prices on the Golden Hale which sailed on the 11th ult. was first put at $250 for a steerage passage with berth and board, and $200 for a deck passage. Two days before the vessel sailed the tickets for deck passage were put down at $150 thus swindling those who had already purchased at the former rate. The Star publishes a card from steerage passengers on the Eldorado, of Bovignal & Aspinwall's line, in which they state they were treated like brutes. "Seven hundred and fifteen hundred passengers were on the Golden Gate. Every available seat worthy vessel in the port of Panama was up for San Francisco on the 12th, and the means of transportation was not commensurate with the demand. A large number of passengers are at Panama, who have paid their passage through on the steamers, and cannot get away. The company's agents will not refund their money, and they are obliged to wait." It is feared that many deaths will occur on the Golden Gate in consequence of the immense crowd.

Obituary Notices.

DIED—Suddenly, in Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 18th, Mrs. CATHERINE PARKER, wife of Robert Parker, Esq., in the 53d year of her age. She was born in Tyrone county, Ireland, went to England, was converted when 15 years old, and joined the Methodists, and was a member at City Roads Chapel, London. She settled in Montgomery twenty-two years ago. She was one of the original members who united to form a Methodist Church in this place. She lived to see hundreds added to it, and among them her only surviving brother, who cherishes a hope of a happy reunion. The writer can never forget the day of her death. With his family and several other friends, he sat down around her hospitable table. All were joyous and happy. She filled her appropriate place at the table, and with her usual grace and dignity performed the duties of her station. How little did we think that that festive scene would be so soon changed to the stillness of the house of mourning, and that we should that night stand around her body shrouded for the grave! Yet this was so.

In the evening she walked a few squares to visit a sick friend, and while there was attacked with apoplexy and died. We take great comfort in remembering her past life. She was not permitted to speak to us and say that all was well, as she neared the gates of death; but what of that! She lived the life of the righteous, and her last end could not be unlike his. The Sabbath before her death she was in her place in the sanctuary, and at the Lord's table; and a few days before she met her pastor in class, where she spoke, as she had often done, with much feeling of her hopes of Heaven. We are often seen her kneel by penitents at the altar, to encourage and pray for them. On the morning of the day of her death, she joined her husband and family in domestic worship, where she was accustomed sometimes to lead in prayer herself. Not only will her heart-broken husband and daughter, already widowed and afflicted, miss her; but a large circle of neighbors, to whose houses, in time of sickness and affliction, she was ever wont, like an angel of mercy, to find her way. Not only will the minister and his family miss her kind offices. But the whole church will miss a sister, Paul says, "she being dead, yet speaketh."

JOSHUA T. HEARD.

DIED—In Hinds County, Mississippi, February 18, SARAH MARIA, daughter of Martha S. B. and the late Rev. John W. Childs, of the Virginia Conference, aged 8 years and a few days.

This little girl, though she had scarcely arrived at the years of accountability, had her mind deeply impressed with the sentiments and spirit of the religion of Jesus; and this was clearly manifested in her last moments. A few hours before her death, and when none of her friends anticipated so sudden a termination of her disease, she remarked to her mother that she had been praying to God, and that he had heard and answered her prayers, and that she then felt much better; and the joyous expression of sweet smiles about her lovely face confirmed the statement. Then looking at her mother, she said, "I also prayed that God would bless you, and my dear sisters, and my little brothers." A very short time elapsed before the shaft of Death pierced her heart. And, doubtless, feeling her innocent spirit fluttering to be free from its earthly tenement, and that the moment of her departure was at hand, sprang up in bed, and supported by her mother, lifted up her little hands, and directing her eyes to heaven, in a clear and distinct voice reported the Lord's Prayer; and as the "amen" died upon her lips she ceased to breathe.

"Hope looks beyond the lapse of time.
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in fruit, immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

J. T. KENNON.

Raymond, Feb. 20, 1852.

☞ Richmond Ch. Adv. please copy.

CHARGE OF ADDRESS.—Rev. J. T. Heard, P. E. of Demopolis District, wishes his correspondents to address him at Dayton, Ala.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

For Columbus District, Alabama Conference.

Tuskaw	Sat. and Sunday,	February 21 and 22
Fort Island and Pine Grove,	Sat. & Sund.,	28 and 29
Columbus Station,		March 6 and 7
Athens Circuit,	"	13 and 14
Mount Zion Circuit,	"	20 and 21
Columbus Circuit,	"	27 and 28
Hotchatchee Circuit,		April 3 and 4
Jacksonville and Gertusilion,		10 and 11
Greene,		17 and 18

GEO. SHAFFER, P. E.

Advocate Office, February 28.

☞ Persons making remittances will please see that they are acknowledged.

(S. s.) A. Clary-Texana, Texas ..... $ 2 50
(S. s.) H. C. Bartlett: for self, Hamilton, La. 2 50
(S. s.) Horace Bartlett, N. Hill, New York 2 50
(S. s.) Geo. Bartlett, Guilford, Conn. 2 50
(S. s.) M. P. Blue, Montgomery, Ala. 2 50
By Rev. D. Carpichael: (u. s.) John Whitehurst, Lawrenceville, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. A. E. Goodwyn: (u. s.) H. C. Baden, Bayou Pierre, La. 2 50
(S. s.) S. McClain, Plaquemine, La. 2 50
By Rev. T. R. Russell: (S. s.) Thos. S. Holt Oak Bowery, Ala., Less 50c. 2 00
By Rev. H. L. Pattin: (u. s.) Dr. J. H. Markham, New Berne, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. R. Trippett: (u. s.) Dr. J. M. Hilliard, (u. s.) R. H. Johnston, (u. s.) L. R. Worthington, Decatur, La., Less $7 50.
By Rev. T. J. Campbell: (u. s.) C. F. Mullen, Mt. Sterling, Ala., Less $2 50.
(S. s.) Rev. J. N. Mullen, U. Town, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. W. P. Miller: (u. s.) N. Baldwin, P. Springs; (u. s.) Rev. T. Menefee; (u. s.) Thos. Lester, Tuskaloosa; (u. s.) James Key; (u. s.) M. H. Goodlow; W. Stand; (u. s.) T. L. Moore, Lockhart; (u. s.) Mary T. Attaway, Macon co., Ala. Less $2 50. ..... 15 00
James Brown, Biloxi, Miss. 2 50
By Rev. J. L. Cotton: (u. s.) Maj. A. Tipton, Selma; (u. s.) Jas. W. Pritchett, Selma, Mo., Less $5.
By J. P. Thomas, Vernon, Mi. 2 50
By Rev. G. Ryder: (u. s.) P. T. Neal, Carrollton, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. G. Ryder: (u. s.) T. Stirling, Olney Ala., Less $5.
By Rev. J. Kenyon: (u. s.) Mrs. W. Mount, Hayneville, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. M. J. Bergunson: (u. s.) T. H. Rich, Tallassee, Ala., Less $2 50.
By Rev. R. Trippett, on account 10 00
By Rev. H. Rapalje: (u. s.) H. W. Harper, (u. s.) R. Wallis, Pine Ridge, La.: (u. s.) Wm. O. Sowell, (u. s.) Jno. Akin, Acton, Ala., Less $2 50 ..... 20 00

General Intelligence.

LARGE BUSINESS IN COTTON.—It is perceive by our weekly commercial summary that the sales of Cotton for the week just closed, have reached the large amount of FIFTY-THREE THOUSAND BALES. This, we believe is the heaviest week's business ever known in this market.

TEXAS PROPERTIES.—The creditors of Texas recently held a meeting in the Exchange at Philadelphia, at which some steps were taken to press their claims on the attention of the present Congress. The amount of Texas claims held in Philadelphia is said to exceed one million of dollars.

MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE.—The bill to exempt manufacturing companies from taxation has been defeated in the Mississippi Legislature.

MEETING OF THE U. S. BANK STOCKHOLDERS.—A dispatch from Philadelphia, dated the 16th, says a meeting of the Stockholders of the United States Bank was held this morning, when the committee reported it expedient to make a general assignment. The meeting approved the report and appointed another committee to consider the various projects submitted, and to make application to the State Legislature for such powers as were required for the settlement of the affairs of the Bank.

IMPORTANT TO MERCHANTS AND SHIP-MASTERS.—By order of the Spanish Government, foreign vessels are to be placed on the same footing as Spanish bottoms in the Peninsula and adjacent Islands, as respects navigation, harbor, lighthouse, anchorage and other dues, provided foreign governments will grant similar advantages to Spanish vessels in their waters.

THE CALIFORNIA EMIGRATION.—Vessels are in demand at New York for California. On Saturday two ships in ballast were taken up for San Francisco, at $200 for first, and $100 for second cabin passengers. It is stated that such is the increase in the emigration to California, that all the steamers running between New York and Chagres have been engaged for passengers for two months to come.

MINDEN.—The Herald of the 13th says: "Minden continues healthy. We know not of a single case of sickness in town. Notwithstanding the very dullness of the times, Minden is now improving at an encouraging rate, and there seems to be no special depression among our merchants. We have had some rain during the last week but it has cleared off again. No flattering prospects of navigation soon."

IMPROVEMENTS.—The citizens of Union, and of part of Jackson and Claiborne parishes, have petitioned the Legislature for the appropriation of the swamp lands therein-bounts to make Corne and Darbonne navigable, and for other purposes.

MEDICAL REFORM.—A bill has been reported in the New Jersey legislature allowing any one to practice medicine, they being liable only for malpractice.

"DEATH OF A PROMINENT CITIZEN.—Captain George Huggins, an old and prominent citizen of Mobile, died in that city on Sunday last.

ARKANSAS INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer of the 18th says: Our delegates to Little Rock have returned, impressed with the highest confidence that a spirit is aroused in Arkansas, which will early bring forth substantial fruits of Internal Improvement in that State. They have also had their ideas enlarged as to the immense resources of that fertile region. We learn from them that the Convention fixed upon the plan of building the main trunk line with branches, and that Memphis was adopted as the point of terminus on the Mississippi River.

CALIFORNIA GOLD.—The entire yield of California in 1851 is estimated at $75,000,000. The amount of gold by the El Dorado, the last steamer with gold, added to the previous arrivals, makes an aggregate of $7,825,000 since 1st January, and, including the deposits at New Orleans in January, makes an aggregate of $7,705,000. The exports in the mean time have been $5,042,000, leaving a balance in favor of the country of $2,663,000.

THE FLORIDA RAILROAD.—A meeting of the stockholders in the Florida railroad has been held at Tallahassee, and others have been elected. The subscription of $1,300,000 by Buff Green and his associates, has been withdrawn.

TEMPERANCE EXCITEMENT.—The temperance excitement at Albany, New York, is intense. The friends of the Maine liquor law appear determined to push it through.

It has a despotic movement, which they will resist as unconstitutional. The Herald thinks the question will lead to bloodshed.

FEMALE ODD-FELLOWSHIP.—The New York Tribune of the 17th says: The degree of "Rebecca" was conferred on eleven ladies, wives of members of Staten Island Lodge, No 342, on Thursday evening last, at their lodge-room, in Tottenville, Staten Island. They expressed themselves highly pleased with the ceremonies.

THE PARDON OF LOPEZ.—The Washington papers publish the correspondence between Gen. Taylor and Senor de la Barca and others, relative to the pardon of Lopez under sentence of death in New York for conviction. The criminal has been unconditionally pardoned by Gov. Hunt, in consideration of the clemency shown by the Government of Spain towards the Cuban prisoners.

LORD GRANVILLE.—The present British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has, it is said, given another proof of his friendship towards the United States, by the recall of Mr. Chatfield from Central America, where he has done little else for three or four years but foment difficulties between his government and our own.

FROM NOVA SCOTIA.—Halifax papers of the 10th state that the subject of the Halifax and Quebec railroad was still under discussion in the Provincial Legislature. The proposition under consideration is a proposal for a railroad by way of St. John and the valley of the St. John river, of which one quarter part of the cost shall be assumed by Nova Scotia, a third by New Brunswick, and five-twelfths by Canada. This is the proposition of the Canada and New Brunswick delegates. There was a prospect that the proposition would be adopted.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—A letter from Buenos Ayres states that power has been given to Rosas to spend the public money without rendering any account of it. He has had the same power before, but has published a statement of moneys received and paid out. Hereafter he will not do this. All the power now rests in his hands.

TROOPS FOR FLORIDA.—The bark Exact arrived at Savannah on the 21st with fifty-one United States soldiers, under the command of Lieut. Merchant, en route for Florida.

HEALTH OF CITIES.—The following statement comprises the deaths in some of the Atlantic cities for the week ending February 14, and their proportion to the population:

	Deaths.	Population.	Proportion
Boston	61	138,788	1 in 2275
New York	454	517,849	1 in 1193
Philadelphia	207	350,000	1 in 1690
Baltimore	101	140,025	1 in 1673
Charleston	28	43,014	1 in 1536

Of this number, 13 died of old age, and 101 of diseases of the throat and lungs.

PRIVATE ARCHIVE.—A gentleman who has occasion to walk with two ladies under the umbrella, should always go in the middle—that secures a dry seat to himself, and is showing no partiality to either of the ladies.

NEW FLOURING MILL.—The Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald states that a flouring mill has just been put in operation on the Poteau, Choctaw Nation.

CHASE OF AN ELEPHANT.—The town of North Adams, Mass., has been sued for $20,000 by the owners of the elephant, Columbus, which was killed by falling through a bridge near that town last summer.

THE AUGUSTA BRIDGE.—The Charleston Mercury of the 20th says: "We are gratified to learn from a reliable source, that the tolls on the South Carolina side of the Augusta Bridge are discontinued, and that the rates on the Augusta side are reduced to former rates, an amicable arrangement having been made to that effect."

NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH.—A Catholic church is about being erected at Pine Bluff, Ark. Gen. Thomas H. Jones has donated a lot of ground for the purpose.

THE EGYPTIAN RAILROAD.—Mr. Stevenson has surveyed the line of the Cairo Railway. The two branches of the Nile are to be crossed by a pontoon bridge. The Pacha has given orders for 18,000 laborers to be put upon the works.

GOOD REASONING.—Monchonchia, or Yellow Snake, the Omaha Indian, asked if he had not a right to speak to his great Father (President Fillmore) "for, when had he ever ridden a coat or a horse or a blanket from him?"

THE GARDNER FRAUD.—A Washington correspondent says: "The truth respecting the indictments for the Gardner fraud, about which there are so many rumors, is that they were continued to the next term of the Court on motion of the U. S. Attorney, on account of the non-arrival from Mexico of important witnesses for the prosecution. The Government received information respecting this evidence through its diplomatic agents. The precisety of the present secrecy regarding its exact character will be apparent to all, when, at a proper time, it shall be divulged.

INCREASED POSTAGE.—A writer in the Washington Union states that the Atlantic postage in 1851 exceeded that of 1850 by more than two hundred thousand dollars.

SALE OF TAMMANY HALL.—The Tammany Society, in New York, have determined to sell the building on the corner of Frankfort and Nassau streets, to a public auction, and build another hall further up town.

Later Details by the Canada.

The Canada, which arrived at New York on the morning of the 18th, brought dates from London and Paris to the 30th ult:

ENGLAND.

In speaking of the appointment of Lord Cowley as Embassador to France, the London Daily News says:

"The Marquis of Clanricarde was spoken of. But he is of the known opinion of Lord Palmerston. Lord Clarendon was mentioned; but he who is said to have refused the seals of the Foreign office, was not likely to embark in such a troublous sea of diplomacy as Paris. Lord Cowley was spoken of. But his Lordship has identified himself of late years with the foreign politics of the Morning Chronicle, than which nothing could be more illiberal or reactionary. Lord Cowley has been out of the tournament of English and French politics. Though come of a Tory stock, he took a decidedly liberal view of foreign politics. These opinions were fearlessly professed, though not carried out in any way that was intermeddling or offensive. We are glad to see a politician so liberal, at least so little leaned by Tory and aristocratic tradition, appointed to watch over British interests in a country every way so anomalous and new as France has become since the accession of Louis Napoleon to unlimited power.

The News thinks that Lord Normanby, formerly Minister to France was really the cause of Lord Palmerston's resignation or dismissal. It says:

"Lord Palmerston, it is well known, expressed himself in London, to Count Walleske in terms which did not harmonize with Lord Normanby's language in Paris. The President of the French Republic mentioned, and showed proofs of this discrepancy to Lord Normanby, who appealed to the government at home. These circumstances led to Lord Palmerston's withdrawal from Downing street, and to Lord Normanby's retirement from Paris."

The emigration to Australia is increasing, but the ship owners both in Liverpool and London are disinclined to send their vessels to ports where there is every probability of their being deserted by their crews, and left without the means of returning to England.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 31.—The British holders of the State bonds of Texas, are very indignant at the proposal of the Governor of that State to reduce the amount of the debt to the net sum actually paid by the original bondholder; and are contemplating measures for impounding the ten millions due by the Federal Government to the repudiating State by a formal appeal to Congress.

The gold discoveries in Australia have induced serious propositions for the establishment of a mint in that distant colony. As much as a quarter of a million sovereigns have already been transmitted, partly as returns for the gold which has arrived here, and partly for prospective purchases of the metal on advantageous terms. Under these circumstances, the propriety of establishing a mint either at Sidney or Port Philip is deemed indispensable. Anything more wasteful, looking at the risk and loss of interest it involves, than the shipment of the metal backwards and forwards, in the shape of rough gold from one side and coined pieces from the other, can hardly be imagined.

London, Saturday, noon.—Summons were issued on Friday for a Privy Council to be held on Monday, at Buckingham Palace, at which the royal speech will be arranged. The principle of the new reform bill will be neither disfranchisement nor influencelessness as regards localities, but only a general enlargement of existing constituencies.

The various boroughs are to be enlarged by copious annexations. There are to be no new Metropolitan boroughs—no more Representatives for Manchester and Liverpool—none for large towns—none for large towns unrepresented, and no obliteration of names which have brought disgrace upon the bill.

At Manchester on Saturday trade was quite dull with a weaker market.

At London an increased supply of bills on France caused rates to advance.

The first steamer of the Australian Steam Company, of 1,500 tons register, is to leave for Port Phillip early in April.

The demand for freight and passage to Australia had increased in some degree since the recent acts. The parties going out chiefly consist of the laboring classes.

Captain Penny has again volunteered his services for a new Arctic expedition; but the Admiralty do not seem inclined to avail themselves of his services. It is said that Captain Penny will have an expedition fitted out for him by private subscription.

Gen. Sir Lewis Grant is dead.

The prevailing rumor that it was intended to add 35,000 men to the army, is stated by the United Service Gazette to be wholly without foundation, and that the Secretary of War will not propose an increase of even 10,000 men.

FRANCE.

The Journal des Debats, of January 29, announces as certain that the general elections of members of the legislative Body of France will take place on Sunday, the 15th, and Monday, the 16th, of February.

A telegraphic dispatch received at London, dated Paris, January 30, says:

"The Minister of the Interior has addressed a circular to the Prefects of the Departments, authorizing them to release from prison, and restore to their families, such of the insurgents, arrested since the 2d of December, as shall give out to have been merely led astray, and whose liberation offers no danger to society."

The following Americans are mentioned as having been released: Messrs. Bonfils, Bonfils, Jr., Bonfils, Jr., Bonfils, Jr.,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

FIREMEN'S BENEFIT

God bless the Firemen! You, my constant friends
From whose warm hearts the generous prayer ascends
Can give the orison an incense-wing,
As soft and fragrant as the breeze of spring
God bless the Firemen! Let the echoes rise
In truthful breathing through the ambient skies

When, in the "noon of night," the loud alarm
Startles the sleeper, and the voice of harm
Spoken with iron tongues, gives note that, led
By flands of flame, empanoplied with dread,
The Spirit of Destruction is abroad,
Fierce with the fury of a demon-god—
Where then the task to meet the raging foe?
And whose to lay the fell destroyer low?
Needless if were to answer. All can tell,
For all the Fireman's daring know full well.

Still, onward still, destruction's lurid tide
Rolls with the gale, its vassal and its guide;
Raging and surging on, from roof to roof,
As if it claimed, for its own mad behest,
Art's choicest triumphs—while the builder's skill
Is naught compared with its wild, wayward will

Now the proud column and the strong-bound arch
Crumble and fall beneath the onward march
Of the fierce waves of flame, which spirits seem
To realise some hell-engendered dream.

But tired, at length, of inorganic prize,
For nobler sacrifice the Fire-fiend cries;
'Tis life he asks, nor longer will he tread
On things alone inanimate and dead.
Ho! let the triumphs of the loom be brought,
And golden gifts, and treasure-hoards of thought!
He spurns them all, and marks them with his hate
And still he asks for Life! for Life!—too late.
Perchance, will be the Fireman's saving arm,
To free from danger and to shield from harm.

Here, in an attic's flame-encircled height,
A little child, a thing of life and light,
Slumbers, unconscious of the danger near;
Its angel mother never taught it fear.
Twice as ye list, wild wreaths of glaring flame!
Ye can not check the Fireman's noble aim;
He rears the ladder—scales the tott'ring wall—
To save that infant's life he perils all!
And oh, success his saving arm attends!
Heaven will befriend him who that child befriends!

Then, is it strange that Beauty's gentle breast
Dwells with wild heaving on when dream-decked
Whene'er the Fireman's noble deeds are told—
And love is his reward—more prized than gold!
For in that breast 'tis e'er the Fireman's aim
To kindle, not annihilate, a flame;
As in that breast, and in that beauty's worth,
Is meet reward for more than deeds of earth.

ARRIVAL OF THE EMPIRE CITY.

THREE WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

News from South America.

The steamer Empire City, whose arrival below the city we noticed on Saturday morning, brought the California mails, three hundred and twenty passengers, and a large amount of gold dust.

Mr. Duggan, clerk of the steamship Alabama, came passenger in the Empire City from Havana. He reports that the Alabama arrived at San Juan on the 26th ult., having experienced very heavy weather during her whole passage.

THE INDIAN WAR.—Indian troubles in the south of California appear to have been brought to a close. The Los Angeles Star of the 1st ult. says:

Gen. Bean returned to Chino on Friday last, bringing in seven prisoners (Indians), among them Antonio, son of Antonio Garra, and the leader of the Indians at the time of the attack on Warner's rancho; also Edward Hines, the murderer of Domingo Carrigo, and for whose arrest the Governor had offered a reward of $1000. Hines was delivered over to the civil authorities, and will be safely guarded until a trial can be obtained.

On the 23d December Major Heintzleman, U. S. A., commanding in the Southern District, ordered a council of war for the trial of several chieftains, and after a careful investigation they were condemned to be shot. The Star publishes a confession made by Marshall, who was hung at San Diego. He denied to the last that he had been concerned in any murders, and persisted that he only joined the Indians to save his life, intending to leave them as soon as an opportunity offered.

We give the following items of general news from the Alta Californian:

In all parts of the State from which we have intelligence, up to the eve of the departure of the Golden State, the greatest order and quiet prevail. In the South the Indian disturbances are at an end, and throughout the mining region of Northern California uniform peace and good will go hand in hand with prosperity.

The State Legislature is now in session at Sacramento, to which city it adjourned about a week since. This removal of the seat of government was brought about by the failure of the Vallejo contractors to provide suitable accommodations for the State officers and the Legislature. That body convened on the 5th inst. at Vallejo, and proceeded to business of opening the session.

The message of Gov McDougal was transmitted, and followed by the resignation of that officer. Governor Higler having been declared elected, and installed, and his inaugural, with that of Lieut. Gov. Purdy's to the Senate, having been received and read, the Legislature took steps to adjourn. Several propositions were made by the citizens of Benicia, San Jose, Marysville and Sacramento, and finally, after some opposition, the Legislature, by a concurrent resolution, decided to meet at Sacramento, where a fine commodious new court-house had been placed at their service. On Friday last, the 10th instant, both Houses met at the new seat of government, where they have since continued in quiet session, without accomplishing any important business. The State archives had been removed by order of Gov. McDougal, during his administration, to San Jose; and the people of that town, when an attempt was made to remove them, obtained an injunction, and detained the archives for several days.

They have since been removed, however, and the question, "Where is the State capital?" will soon be settled by a decision of the Supreme Court. But little doubt exists that the capital rightfully belongs to San Jose. As we have stated, the proceedings of our Legislature, thus far, are destitute of general interest. There are two or three contested seats to be disposed of before legislation will become brisk. The election of a United States Senator is the first important step to be taken. A number of candidates, the most prominent of whom are Messrs. Weller, King, McLean, Henley and Broderick, are before the Legislature, but at this time it is utterly impossible to determine the prospects and decide upon the chances of either.

In Southern California peace and contentment, likewise prevail. The last act of the Indian insurrection terminated with the death of Antonio Garra, the chief of the most powerful hostile tribe. He was captured by a detachment under command of Gen. Bean, brought into San Diego, and, after a fair trial, was condemned and shot, Jan. 10. The Indian Commissioner, Dr. Wozencraft, afterward went among the disaffected tribes and concluded treaties of peace with the Cahuilla, Pablo, Calientes and San Luis Rey Indians.

The advance guard of the Boundary Survey arrived in San Diego on the 8th ult., and they report the Indians along the Gila as an ugly set, requiring the strong arm of military law to keep them in check and proper position. Mr. Gray, Chief Engineer of the Expedition, made the journey from the junction of the Gila and Colorado to San Diego in six and a half days. The party were destitute of provisions most of the journey. The survey of the Gila was commenced in the latter end of October, and progressed about three hundred and fifty miles. It was abandoned about sixty miles above the confluence of the Gila and Colorado, where the party had no alternative but starvation.

A battle occurred Jan. 4th, between the insurgents and Government forces of Lower California, in which the former, under Negrete, were defeated and dispersed by Lieut. Col. Chavis, commandant of the military colony called La Frontera, in Lower California. The fight occurred at Santa Tomas. The loss on either side was slight.

The most gratifying feature in the progress of our affairs is the great excess of immigration over the passenger departure by the Panama steamers every month. The tide of human beings setting towards our shores gives ample assurance of business prosperity, and from its character, promises stability in the future.

The weather for the past fortnight has been delightful—the skies bright and clear. The miners begin to complain once more of a scarcity of water. Enough rain has already fallen to establish the prospects of the farmers.

A new daily paper, called the Western American, has been started at San Francisco, by Francis E. Pickett, J. B Hall, James W. Young, C. B. Hooker, and Andrew Jumside.

From South America.

Dates from Valparaiso to the 2d December have been received at San Francisco. The Alta California has the following summary of news:

CHILI.

Official intelligence was received at the Intendencia that Cruz being unable to remain longer at Los Guindos, whither he had retired after evacuating Chillan, had passed the Rio de Eable, and was directing his march toward Concepcion, followed by the forces of Bulnes. It is also stated that the loss of Cruz in the partial engagements which have occurred was very severe.

THE NEWS.—At Serena, on the morning of the 25th November, the forces of the Government attacked the insurgents. In order to dislodge a body of them which had entrenched themselves to the house of the late Don Juan Edward, a brisk cannonade was directed against the house, which soon took fire and communicated with the house of Mr. Rose, the British Consul, destroying his archives, furniture, etc.

Don Jose Miguel Carrera, chief of the insurrection of the North, had been arrested by Senor Manriagos, Intendent of Serena. It was said, for having entertained the intention of proclaiming himself President, which the insurrectionists considered as treason against the party.

From the Mercantile Reporter, of November 25, we extract the following:

ECUADOR.

This Republic is now in peace, the revolution having been gradually accepted, and Gen. Urbinez authority recognized and proclaimed throughout the whole territory

PERU.

This Republic is also in peace, and Congress is discussing the budget. A decree has been issued for the protection of the press, stating that its liberty is guaranteed by the Constitution, and that the law of repression can only be enforced in alarming circumstances. Also a law respecting marriages with foreigners, or persons of a different religion, which were prohibited before, but are now permitted and considered legal, on complying with several conditions; one of these is, that both parties be free to follow their own creed, but the children shall be educated in the Catholic religion.

RIO DE LA PLATA.

The most important news is that of the peaceful victory gained by General Urquiza over Oribe, without the assistance of the Brazilian forces, (which were at a considerable distance from the scene of action) and of the general amnesty which was proclaimed by him

The terms of the capitulation of Oribe are as follows: The resistance of the military and citizens to the Anglo-French intervention is recognized as having been, according to their conviction, for the defence of the Republic. The differences of political opinion which have existed are not to be an obstacle to employment, etc.

The debts contracted by Oribe for the public service are recognized by the Government.

The election of Senators and Deputies to be immediately proceeded with in all the departments. The Legislature to name a President. All preceding differences of opinion to be forgotten.

BRAZIL.

In consequence of the successes of Urquiza in the Banda Oriental the Imperial forces are to be withdrawn to the frontiers of the Oriental State in two divisions; one to be posted on the Uruguay and the other on the Yaguaron

The difficulties with England concerning the captured slaves were not yet terminated, but it was expected they would be terminated favorably for the Government of Brazil.

BOLIVIA.

Nothing worth mentioning has taken place respecting the political affairs of this republic. The concordate celebrated with the Pope by General Santa Cruz, will probably be rejected by Congress, as encroaching on the liberties of the church in Bolivia. Opinions were strong against it. Government had given the French minister, Mr. M. Bage, A. Weddel a gold medal as a token of regard on account of his important work on Bolivia.

SAN JUAN DE NICARAGUA.

The largest fire which has ever occurred in San Juan de Nicaragua took place on the night of the 14th inst., burning one-third of the best-populated part of the city. Among the property destroyed was the large and valuable building owned by P. F. Manceros, and known as the United States Hotel, the dwelling and counting house of Mr S Shephard, agent of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company and the dwellings and stores of Hons Francisco Ormine Pedro Pean and Dominguez. A large number of other houses, occupied by natives, and stores owned by merchants of Granada, were also destroyed.

San Juan is not provided with fire engines. Capt Platt, of the Albany, dispatched Lieut Arip trong with a detachment of men and an engine, to the relief of the place. Capt Fade, of the British brig Express, also sent a portion of his men, with ropes, etc. It was through this assistance, mainly, that the progress of the flames was arrested.

San Juan remains healthy, but the market is overstocked with all kinds of merchandise.

The transit route across the Isthmus is in excellent condition, and there are no passengers now at San Juan awaiting a passage for San Francisco.

A DUEL.—Gov. Mellunghi, fought a duel on the 30th of January with Mr. A. G. Russell, one of the editors of the San Francisco Picayune. It was occasioned by an article reflecting on the Ex-Governor. The parties met in Santa Clara county, and fought at the distance of ten paces with pistols. Russell was wounded in the flesh wound on the breast.

The Sacramento Times says:

"A specimen of gold-bearing quartz was shown us on Monday evening—which had been taken from the ridge, near Newtown—of the richest kind. It weighs some six pounds, and is supposed to contain about $2000 worth of gold.

"Some gentlemen connected with the tunnel at Deer Creek, immediately below the celebrated gold tunnel, have exhibited to us some specimens of their lead, which indicate as rich a deposite in that portion of the vein as in that which has obtained such wide reputation.

"The quarts is generally decomposed, strongly impregnated with and discolored by iron, and the specimens exhibited to us were full of gold."

FROM UTAH.

The San Francisco Picayune has the following letter from Carson Valley, dated Dec. 13:

The great Salt Lake mail that was due here on the 25th ult. came in yesterday after experiencing a severe time. The carriers had several engagements with the Indians, and had one of their men badly wounded in the thigh with a ball. The party numbered fourteen. Two of these left the remainder with the mail, when beyond the Big Desert, having with them but seven days' provisions. This was to give the rest an opportunity to bring in the wounded man. Thirteen days have since elapsed, and we have no tidings of the twelve men. Last evening, a party hastened off with provisions for their relief, and I expect to hear from them before closing this letter.

A party of Washoes "made a sweep" into the Carson valley the other day, and shot five horses—one dead on the spot, the arrow passing through his body. Three others have since died. They marauders carried off the one they killed on the spot.

There are a great many Indians in these valleys. Their fires are seen at all times and in every direction. They are afraid of our settlements and will not come in. But they are much in the habit of visiting the miners, appearing to be on the best of terms with them.

There are about 100 miners here at present, who are working with good success. Our settlement is organized into a sort of pueblo, having its laws and rulers—the chief magistrate is called an Alcalde. A competent engineer is now engaged in making a survey of the valley.

We are petitioning Congress for a division of Utah Territory. We ask for "Pinte" Territory, whose name we claim for the new organization: that it shall be bounded on the north by Oregon, on the east by Goose Creek mountains, and on the south and west by California. We have ample territory, and that which is good, together with sufficient mineral resources to form a splendid State.

Reports come to us that a large number of emigrants are wintering in Salt Lake Valley, many of whom are designing to make their homes in Carson Valley. The probability is that the overland emigration next year will be as great as ever before.

Dec. 18.—Those who returned for the wounded man arrived to-day—all as comfortable as the circumstances would allow.

M. Kossuth and Capt. Long.

We give place to the following letter from Capt. Long, as we deem it due to that officer to publish his defence, inasmuch as we have given publicity to the charges against him. A portion of the Northern press, devoted to Kossuth, continue to refer to Capt. Long in terms of censure, and we are glad he has fully explained the supposed difficulty between him and Kossuth at Marseilles. The following letter was addressed by Capt. Long to Hon. W. R. Smith, in reply to a communication from that gentleman, containing an invitation, expressed in terms at once modest and distinct, with a careful effort to shield rather than cast censure upon Kossuth:

EXETER, (N. H.) Feb. 1, 1852.

Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 27th of January, informing me "that you had called for the correspondence relative to the supposed difficulties which occurred on board the Mississippi, under my command, with Kossuth, off Marseilles, for the purpose of vindicating the dignity of the Navy, and to sustain me as commander," etc.

While the circumstances which gave occasion to the honorable intentions mentioned in your letter are to me a matter of deep regret, allow me to express to you my thanks for your readiness to vindicate the dignity of the Navy, as well as to sustain the character of an officer whose ablest efforts, in the discharge of his duty, have met with unmerited reproach.

It should be remembered by the American people that, in the discharge of the delicate duty of removing Kossuth and his companions to this country, I could have been actuated by no motive but to do it in such a manner as would make them happy and myself respectable. To have treated any of them with rudeness or neglect would have been inhospitable, as they were then on board ship under my immediate command. It would have been ridiculous for they were dejected and surrounded by the failure of their exertions to give freedom to their nation. They were exiles without a country, without a home, and had claims upon the compassion as well as the respect of mankind.

The prominent charge against me is rudeness to Kossuth at the time we were off Marseilles. From the first moment I saw him to the hour of our separation I offered no pains to render him and his associates happy. When the first came on board, he and his companions were received by me and the officers under my command with every expression of welcome which language and cheers could afford. On my part their welcome was sincere; my own apartments were resigned to promote their comfort and I employed all the means in my power to divert their attention from the gloom which seemed to have settled on their prospects.

My position at Marseilles was peculiarly perplexing and responsible; but I did not intend to be, and was not, disrespectful to Kossuth, either in my language or manners. My conduct was such that on a review of it I cannot regret it, and would not alter it.

In order to form a just opinion of the propriety of my conduct as an officer at Marseilles, it is important to consider the strictness of my orders, with reference to a compromise of the American flag; that I had been cautioned again and again by Commodore Morgan and others whose opinions were entitled to the highest respect, on the imminent danger of compromising the flag; that the French authorities had refused to allow Kossuth to pass through France to England; that he had once landed at Marseilles, and that orders had been issued by the same authorities that he should not land again, together with the excitement which his presence personally among the people had occasioned at Marseilles.

In the first place, please to observe the strictness of the general orders of Commodore Morgan against the interference with the political affairs of other nations, dated April 9, 1851, from which the following is an extract:

"To the careful preservation of the good faith of our country, as pledged in treaty stipulations, and the delicate subject of strict neutrality, I claim your particular attention. You will remember, therefore, that the ship under your command when lying in the port, or sailing within the jurisdiction of another friendly nation, is a mere guest, and for the time more or less under its protection. Assured that it is the wish of the Government of the United States, it is my wish that the utmost circumspection be observed, particularly by the officers and crews of the vessels composing the squadron under my command, at all times, when in company, or conversation with the people of the nations of Europe, that they enter into no political discussion with them, or with each other about them, or the state of their respective countries; and that they carefully avoid the expression of any opinion which may justify a surmise that their sympathies are enlisted in behalf of, or inclined towards, any particular party or nation. It is the determination of the Government to preserve our neutrality strictly, and thereby to secure the friendship and continued confidence of all. Any deviation from the foregoing order in relation to this subject will hardly, under any circumstances, admit of an excuse."

In addition to the above general orders please to observe the specific orders from Commodore Morgan to me of the 11th September, 1851. In those orders you will find that many doubts are entertained by him whether Kossuth would be allowed to land in France, an expression of regret that Kossuth had determined to land at Marseilles; an apprehension lest I should encounter many vexations and inconveniences, and then enjoins to me "the most exact observance in every particular of the instructions already given to me in the general orders with reference to the careful preservation of strict neutrality, without which the most serious compromise of character of our country is almost inevitable

I next received a letter from the American Consul at Marseilles, John L. Hodge, Esq., bearing date 3d. 1851. In this letter he says that he received an official letter from the "Prefect," requesting him to engage him on business of importance. In compliance with this request he called. The "Prefect" told him that the letter addressed to him as the representative of the United States was published in a paper called "La Peuple," a virulent partisan paper and asked by whom it had been done, as he viewed it a breach of confidence. Mr. Hodge stated that he let Kossuth have the letter, and that it was published by him. The "Prefect" then gave orders that no one land the officers and men of the Mississippi should land, and Mr Hodge wrote to me as follows: "You will in the most positive manner carry out the views of the "Prefect;" prohibit every individual (except your men landing from the United States steamer Mississippi no matter whom) be the person."

The consequence of the publication of that letter, and the comments upon it in the paper "le Peuple" was the supplicament of the editor of the paper and the suspension of all issues from that press. A further consequence was great and very unusual excitement among the people

Had I no reason or to be apprehended, in view of the circumstances, a consequence of our flag? The populace of Marseilles manifested so much excitement while Kossuth and his associates were on shore that the "Prefect" there our Consul informed me that such demonstrations must cease. He also withdrew the permission he granted through the intercession of Consul Hodge for Kossuth and his associates to land at pleasure. He further ordered that no one of them should in Europe be allowed to land who had not passports signed by a French Minister or "visé" by a French Consul

On the afternoon of the same day the ships were surrounded by a multitude of boats filled with people in broadly excited state, chiefly Socialists and Sicilians and other persons, evidently some of them particularly that well-known class of the lazzaroni, who had crowded the Piazetta of St. Mark's, Venice, during the Austrian bombardment of that city. I could see in many of the faces of the people in these boats a fiendish expression, and were still collected in the afternoon and evening. I was informed that the boats were loaded with stones, and were filled with soldiers. I was told that the people would dispute my passage if I hoisted a compromise of the flag. The complaint with this request, but soon returned and said: "I hope I will not be offended, but the people would not allow it." I replied, of course I would not, but that was a different case. He made a short address to the people, and then he and his associates left the deck, and in about half an hour after this period the boats moved off slowly in the dusk of the evening. It was rude to him my rudeness consisted in the above expressions. It is for this that I have been censured "slow, justly, you will judge."

There was strong ground for apprehension on my part, for I had been repeatedly warned of the danger of a compromise of the flag. I had received express orders in no way to interfere with the politics of foreign nations. Now either it to be done by the officers or men under my command. Kossuth, though a foreigner, was under the protection of the American flag, by virtue of a resolve of Congress. He had had permission, through the intercession of Mr. Hodge, the American Consul, to go on shore with his companions. Events had transpired of such a character that the people of Marseilles had become intensely excited. I had received orders not to allow any person, whoever that person might be, to leave the ship but the officers and men of the Mississippi. Should these circumstances and warnings have been disregarded by me, would they be overlooked by any men having the least degree of prudence, when the peace of two nations was in jeopardy? I had no right to suppose that the French Government would prohibit Kossuth from landing at Marseilles on account of the excitement his presence caused among the people, and that at the same time they would be tame enough to allow him to address them in their port under the protection of an American flag, and from the deck of an American frigate.

Suppose there had been in reality no danger of compromising the flag; if I had reason to apprehend danger of a compromise it was not my duty to speak. The life of an officer should not be sealed in silence till the flag is compromised. It is his duty to anticipate and prevent the evil, rather than pause till mischief is complete; then attempt a remedy. Regarding it as my duty to interfere, I knew of no language more subdued and gentle.

At the time I employed the above language Kossuth mentioned that I had charged him with having compromised the flag. I told him at once that he misunderstood me; that I did not say he had compromised the flag, but that there was danger of it. Here I supposed was an end of all dissatisfaction on his part, until I was informed some days afterwards, while on our passage to Gibraltar, that Kossuth was dissatisfied with the remarks I have referred to. I immediately called on him with a view to put a period to all dissatisfaction. The apparent to be excited, still entertaining the impression that I had ordered him from the deck, and charged him with compromising the flag. I disavowed it most explicitly and, after some conversation, read to him from my general morning instructions that part of them which more particularly related to my position when in the ports of foreign nations, and with regard to observing strict neutrality, &c.; to enter into no political discussions, &c.; carefully to avoid any expression of opinion indicating sympathy with any particular party. He expressed his entire satisfaction with my explanation. He then bequested a copy of a part of Consul Hodge's letter which I had read to him some days before, and mentioned that he should like to have the names and sentiments that he had not comprended of the flag while on board the ship; to which I cheerfully assented.

From this period friendly relations existed between us. We visited the Governor of Gibraltar, and American Consul, and partook of their hospitalities together

I respectfully refer you to Kossuth's last letter at Gibraltar, dated 13th October last, in which he says forth his respect for leaving the ship, and expresses in strong language his personal regard for myself and the officers and crew of the ship.

Claiming little skill, sir, in the arrangement and consideration of forts, this is the first time I have attempted a defence of myself though I have been censured when I should have agreed it, and condemned before I have been called to answer to charges against me.

You are the only person who, though personally a stranger to me, has addressed to me a word of encouragement, or who has taught me to hope that my name and character would be defended in Congress. For this encouragement please to accept my warmest thanks. At the very longer for me, but for one who has no ambition but to do his duty, it will ultimately be awarded by a discriminating public.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

J. J. Long, Captain U. S. Navy.

Hon. W. R. Smith, M. C., Washington.

A GREAT HUNT.—The Jackson (Florida) News of the 14th says:

The party of gentlemen from Camden county, Ga., who went up the river on a "hunt," about ten days ago, consisting of Maj. D. Bailey, Wm. Bailey, Dr. Barnard, B. B. Gowen, A. Dufaur, D. L. Clinch and F. Clark, have sent a full account of their glorious success. We make the following extract:

"Having had unusual good luck in our hunt, I take pleasure in communicating to you the glorious result. No party of hunters have ever been so successful as the hunters from this Camden. Our party (composed of eight) encamped on the Alligator creek, and in six days' hunting destroyed forty-eight deer, fifty-seven turkeys, one monster panther, and five wild cattle. Dr. Barnard well deserves the name of the famous Crockett, having killed a bear and captured two others, hazarding his own life in the undertaking. Sergeant Gowen killed three alligators, one measuring eighteen feet four inches; he was a monster. The credit of killing the panther is given to myself. A portion of party returned much sooner than we expected, owing to the measles, which made its appearance in camp. No doubt if we had all remained, we would have killed a much larger number. We had the pleasure of passing our friend, Wm. Bailey, through the ordeal of sprinkling with blood; having killed his first deer. I believe I have given you all the particulars, and in conclusion would say, that if you should ever embark in a hunt of the kind, I would suggest the Haw Creeks, as the best hunting ground, about thirty-five miles from Pilatka, on the east side of the river. Had it not been for the measles, I really believe we would have killed one hundred deer. I never saw the like of game in any country."

THE CASTLE OF HAM.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives the following interesting details of this celebrated French fortress:

The fortress, as it exists to-day, is supposed to have been built by ——, in 1210, upon the ruins of a fortress still more ancient. The architecture of the walls and towers, the disposition of the ramparts and battlements, support this theory. It is often called in history the "Feudal Bastile." It has sustained four sieges; the first in 1411, by Jean Sans-Peur, Duke of Burgundy; the second in 1557, by Philip II, King of Spain; the third in 1595, by the troops of Henry IV; the fourth by an invading force, under Gen. Tchumasi. The following list comprises all the prisoners of celebrity who have been confined in this fortress, from the tenth century to the present day:

1307—Charles the Simple, King of France.

1470—Louis XI, King of France, incarcerated by Louis de Luxembourg.

1472—Louis de Luxembourg, incarcerated by Louis XI.

1560—Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Conde, head of the house of that name.

1760—The Comte de Rhin, lover of the Duchess of Berry.

1738—The Duke de Larochefoucauld, denounced by the Duchess of Chateauroux.

1778—The Marquis of Marbeuf, for grave offences toward Marie Antoinette.

1778—Mirabeau, for his work upon stock-jobbing—(axiotage).

1795—Numerous Representatives of the people to the Convention.

1804-14—Brigade, aid-de-camp of Toussaint L'Ouverture; Charles and Armand de Polignac, etc.

1815—Marshal Moncey, for having refused to take part in the trial of Marshal Ney.

1817—Chaumareix, captain of the Medusa, condemned for his conduct in the wreck of that vessel.

1830—Jules de Polignac, and three other Ministers of Charles X, condemned by the Court of Peers.

1840-46—Louis Napoleon Bonaparte.

1848—Hon Muza, Arab Chief.

1851—Generals Changarnier, Bedeau, Cavaignac, Lamoriciere; Colonel Charras, the Questors Burge and Leflo and Roger (du Nord), all members of the Legislative Assembly.

DISCIPLINE IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.—The United States Senate, with a view to enforce discipline and promote good conduct in the naval service, without the aid of the lash, has passed a bill by a third reading, setting forth in what manner offenders shall be punished. It is as follows:

That the commander of any vessel in the navy, or of any shore station, shall have authority to punish offences committed by officers and persons of inferior rations by any one or more of the following punishments, to wit:

1st. By diminishing their rations; by restricting their diet to bread and water; by imposing extra police and other duties; and in cases of theft, in addition to any of the foregoing punishments, by making good from the wages of the offender, to the owner, the value of the article or articles stolen, and obliging the offender to wear for any term not exceeding ten days, a badge with the word "thief" thereon.

2d. Discharge from the service with bad-conduct discharge.

3d. Solitary confinement in irons, single or double, on bread and water; Provided, no such confinement shall exceed thirty days.

4th. Solitary confinement in irons, single or double, not exceeding thirty days.

5th. Solitary confinement not exceeding thirty days.

6th. Confinement not exceeding two months.

7th. Reduction to next inferior rating.

8th. Ball and chain, but not to be worn at sea.

9th. Deprivation of liberty on shore.

And loss of pay, not to exceed three months, may be added to any of the above-mentioned punishments

Solitary confinement not to take place until a surgeon certifies it can be done without injury to health.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT,

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate

Horace H. Miller, of Mississippi, to be Charge d'Affaires of the United States to the Republic of Bolivia, in the place of A. K. McClung, resigned.

Nathan Sargent, of Pennsylvania, to be Register of the Treasury of the United States, in the place of Townsend Haines, resigned.

CONSULS OF THE UNITED STATES

William Duer, of New York, for the port of Valparaiso in the Republic of Chili, in the place of Z. W. Potter, recalled

Joseph Graham, of Ohio, for the port of Buenos Ayres, in the place of E. A. Saunders, removed.

Nicholas J. Reefe, of New Jersey, for the port of Lagunaya, in the Republic of Venezuela, in the place of Louis Baker, recalled.

Timothy Darling, for the port of Nassau, in the Island of New Providence, in the place of Julius C. Kretschmar, recalled.

Valentine Holmes, of Pennsylvania, for the port of Belfast, in Ireland.

W. L. Sharkey, of Mississippi, at Havana, in the Island of Cuba, in the place of A. F. Owen, resigned.

Samuel J. Tickford, at Tumbez, in Peru

George King Rogers, of Louisiana, for the port of Lyons, in France, in place of James Hembleert, recalled.

William H. Glover, of Kentucky, for the port of Vera Cruz, in Mexico, in the place of W. P. Rogers, resigned

Alfred Wheeler, of California, to be Attorney of the United States for the Southern District of California, in the place of M. Jones appointed Judge

Joseph W. Furbur, of Minnesota, to be Marshal of the United States for the Territory of Minnesota, in the place of H. L. Tilden removed

John F. Smith, to be Register of the Land-office at Milwaukee, Wisconsin

John S. H. Rainey, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Champagnolle, Arkansas.

William M. Lapsley, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Cahawba, Alabama.

James Magee, Illinois, to be Register of the Land-office at St. Stephens, Alabama

Jackson W. Smith, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at St. Stephens, Alabama

Archibald Neely, to be Register of the Land-office at St. Augustine, Florida.

Thomas J. Burke, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Tuscaloosa, Alabama

George W. Wood, to be Register of the Land-office at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

THE MISSISSIPPI BY BASSO.—A dispatch from Havre de Grace dated the 16th instant; "The ice here has not been moved nor even disturbed by the late freshet, and shortly it is calculated in the depth of the river. The crossing is in good order apparently across the cattle, and among the passengers who passed over it to-day were a large number of boats, go yearly to the more northern ones with full knowledge of the poverty of the majority of them. Every possible contrivance I would further by recommend to strangers to their native lands rather than expose them to the dangers that await them among strangers.

Later from Havana.

The Empire City brought Havana papers to the 17th instant. The Diario contains a list of commissioners which have been appointed in various towns on the Island to receive subscriptions to the Spanish Atlantic Steam Company.

The Newfoundland correspondent of the Diario exposes his ignorance in attempting to give an idea of what is going on in our Legislature. He states that a law has been introduced for the prevention of intemperance. This movement, which has no existence save in the imagination of this wise correspondent, he says is much needed in the streets of New Orleans and all places of amusement are infested with drunkards. The writer, also, mentions that the name of Mr Sigur has been spoken of in connection with the Mayoralty of the city, but that none of the decent part of the community will vote for him.

The Diario indulges in considerable sarcasm at the expense of the officer deputed by Gen. Twiggs to salute the Spanish flag on the arrival of Senor Laborde. It says that the squad of artilleists who fired the salute were so ignorant of their business and so unaccustomed to salute the grand Spanish flag that they had now to insist until the Cuban bound them one

From the Rio Grande.

The American Flag, published at Brownsville, of the 11th says:

The Mexican steamer from Vera Cruz, which we reported in our last as having arrived at the Brazos, left on Thursday afternoon, on her return to the former port. It is reported that she took with her five or six filibusters, who had gone on board of her with the intention of taking possession of her and her freight. How true this may be, we will not vouch, but fear it may prove false. We can hardly think these men so fool-hardy as thus to attempt an act of piracy in one of the ports of the United States. She did not land her guns nor ammunition, but returned with it all to Vera Cruz, not deeming it safe, we presume, to attempt their transportation to their place of destination.

The U. S. Court, which had been in session at Brownsville nearly a month, adjourned on the 12th inst. Indictments were found against the following named persons, for infractions of the neutrality laws: Peter Dowd A. J. Mason, R. N. Stansbury, Alfred Norton, J. M. G. Caravajal, Capt. McLane, R. H. Hord, E. R. Hord, J. D. Howell, R. B. Trimble, Capt. Wheat and Jack R. Everitt.

Of the parties, Mr. A. J. Mason, was present and demanded an immediate trial, but this was refused, and all the cases were continued to the next term, in June next.

THE ROYAL FAMILIES OF EUROPE.—The following interesting details respecting the royal families of Europe appear in a Leipsic journal:

There are forty-six sovereigns upon the Continent, including the Emperor of Brazil, who belongs to a European house. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz is the oldest, having passed his 72d year. There is but one other who has entered his 70th year—the King of Wurtemburg. The sovereign who has reigned the longest is the Prince of Schaumburg-Lippe—63 years in all, or 43 years since his majority. Eighteen have come to the throne in the last ten years, and two, the Prince of Lippe and the King of Hanover, succeeded to power in 1851.

Seven out of the forty-six have never been married, namely: the Pope, the Emperor of Austria, the Duke of Brunswick, the Princes of Reuss-Schleitz, of Waldeck, and of Lippe, and the Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg. Among the remaining thirty-nine, three are widowers—the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, for the third time, the King of the Belgians for the second time, and the Duke of Anhalt Dessau for the first time. Two, the King of Denmark and the Elector of Hesse, are married morganatically; and one, the Sultan, lives in polygamy.

Ten out of the thirty-nine sovereigns who were married, or who have been so, have no children. Twenty-six have children or heirs presumptive. Two thrones, that of Brazil and that of Queen Victoria, go to daughters, as the Emperor of Brazil and the Queen of Spain have no sons. Of the twenty-six hereditary Princes, seven are unmarried. The oldest is 34 years of age, and the youngest—the hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin—is nine months old. The Princess expectant of Spain is young—still, however, having been born on the 20th of December last.

Eighteen of the forty-six sovereigns have no descendants who can succeed them. Eleven will be succeeded by their brothers; two—the King of Denmark and the Duke of Modena—by their uncles, and one—the Elector of Hesse—by his cousin. Four—the Pope of Rome, the Dukes of Brunswick and of Anhalt-Bernburg, and the Landgrave of Hesse Homburg—have no descendants or collaterals who can succeed them.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 22

The Cambria arrived at Halifax, after a rough passage of a little over fourteen days from Liverpool. Full telegraphic reports of her news have been received, and confirm the previous accounts.

Cotton is reported to have declined fully 1-16d during the early part of the week, but toward the close business improved, and the rates were firmer. Breadstuffs were drooping, and sales of Flour and Wheat had been made at prices below those of the previous week. Corn was firmer. Provisions active, except Butter, Lard and Cheese, which had declined, and were dull.

Trade in the manufacturing districts was dull, and prices had a downward tendency.

Parliament was opened by the Queen in person on the 8th inst. In her speech the Queen stated that the friendly relations between England and other nations remained undisturbed.

In the House of Commons, Sir Benjamin Hill asked the cause of Lord Palmerston's resignation as Secretary of Foreign Affairs. Lord John Russell replied that Lord Palmerston was refractory, and treated the interrogatories of the Queen with disrespect. He had, moreover, acted independently of his colleagues in important matters, and had unreservedly approved of the coup d'état of Louis Napoleon. The Earl of Dudley has come out in defence of the course of Louis Napoleon.

The movement in favor of the liberation of the Irish exiles is progressing rapidly in the cities of the East and West.

The Abbe Clerdeir (?) and M. Barodier have been ordered to quit the country. Letters from Paris state that the Government send spies to all the social festivals, and the liberty of speech is entirely destroyed. The Electoral law has been published. It declares universal suffrage to be established, giving all male citizens over twenty years of age the right to vote. Citizens over twenty-five years of age are eligible as representatives. Algiers and the colonies are excluded from the right of representation.

An attempt upon the life of Queen Isabella was made on the 24 instant, by shooting. The ball took effect in her shoulder and made a severe, but dangerous, wound. The assassin was arrested.

Some of the Circulars state that the closing rate for Cotton was 5⅛@5¼d. Western Canal Flour was quoted at 23s. 9d. Yellow Corn at 29@30s. and Western at 32@34s. per quarter. Lard had declined 6@7s. per cwt. Fifty vessels were lying in the Mersey at Liverpool, waiting for a fair wind. Half of them were destined for Cotton ports.

BATON ROUGE, February 24

Governor Walker has signed the bill for the Consolidation of the city of New Orleans, that for the annexation of Lafayette, and that calling a Convention for forming a new Constitution.

NEW YORK, Monday Evening, Feb. 23.

The sales of Cotton to-day sum up barely 1800 bales, the quotations being for Middling Uplands 8 and for Middling Orleans 8¼. Flour has been in fair request at unchanged prices. Sales of Corn, 12,000 bushels at 68c. per bushel for Mixed Western. Lard has sold, in barrels, at 9@9½, and in kegs at 10@10¾c. per lb. Hams, 11@12c. Rio Coffee, 8¾@9¼c. per lb. New Orleans Molasses, 30c. per gallon. The steamship Philadelphia has arrived from Chagres and Havana. A passenger, Christopher Ament, died on the passage. He belonged to Nashville, Tennessee.

WASHINGTON, February 23.

The Congressional banquet in honor of Washington's birthday has been a splendid affair. Speeches have been made by General Scott, Justice Wayne, Commodore Stockton, Thomas Ritchie, H. W. Parker Custis, Thomas H. Hayly, Mr. Toombs, John J. Crittenden, and others, all taking ground in favor of non-intervention, and deprecating Kossuth's movements and doctrines as relate to the United States.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.

Niblo's Theatre was crowded last night on the occasion of Mr. Webster's, delivering a lecture before the State Historical Society. His speech is pronounced to be one of the most eloquent ever delivered by him.

LATER FROM LIBERIA.—The Pacific brings dates from Liberia, by way of England, to the 24th of December, being two weeks later than our previous advices. President

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, W. E. DOTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D. / T. W. DOSSMAN, / W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 5. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1852. —WHOLE NUMBER, 57.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

The Altar of Worship.

How few erect an altar where
The social circle daily meet,
At morn—at eve—for holy prayer,
To join in pure devotion sweet;
How few there are who ever seem
To worship aught on earth but self,
Or household gods, which may be seen
In many forms of worldly pelf.

At Fashion's shrine how many bow,
In homage at the tyrant's throne,
To pay the consecrated vow
To things no better than a stone:
Or wooden idols, painted o'er,
Like heathen gods in Pagan land,
Which Superstition bows before,
At blind Idolatry's command.

Some worship Beauty—fading flower,
Whose loveliness soon dies away;
While some adore bright Genius' power—
To it, a ceaseless homage pay.
But ah! how few n beauty see
In bowing to n Saviour's throne,
Whose mercies flow forever free,
From pure benevolence alone.

Some have an idol god of fame
Placed near the altar of the heart—
A hollow sound, an empty name,
Yet from the passion will not part.
Others there are who bow to wealth.
And homage pay to heaps of gold,
Denying talents, time and health,
To grasp at riches yet untold.

Some worship round the sparkling bowl,
Their heads bewildered by its fume,
While clouds of incense round them roll,
Their time, their talents to consume—
For Bacchus holds despotic sway,
And undisputed power obtains,
Till mind itself has past away,
And nothing of the man remains.

There is no altar darker still,
Enthroned in depths of moral night,
Enough the feeling heart to chill
With horror at the gloomy sight—
It is where gamblers meet to bow
Around their desecrated shrine,
With anxious look and frowning brow,
In cards their fortunes to divine.

Poor, feeble man, of life so brief,
That not an hour to call his own—
Subject to sorrow, pain and grief,
Ashamed to bow at Jesus' throne!
Unconscious of immortal worth,
Would fear to bend the knee in prayer,
Or worship round the social hearth,
Or raise to Christ an altar there.

S. B. T.

Louisiana, 1852.

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

BY J. N. MAFFIT.

[By what we are disposed to consider a fortunate occurrence for the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the following LECTURE has fallen into our hands. Its publication will be completed in three numbers—the last two will probably be shorter than the portion now given.

The MS. in hand is without date, but the reader, by the allusions to familiar events, will be able to fix the date of the lecture with considerable accuracy. From the best information we can obtain it was never delivered by the author but once, and then in Little Rock, Ark., where it was written out. It is of unquestionable authenticity: those acquainted with Maffit's style will need no proof of this. It goes into the printer's hands intact. This gem of wit and eloquence has lain for two years or more as rubbish, under a merchant's counter, in this city!

It will appear that the lecturer has sadly miscalculated the benevolence of one man of the "almighty dollar"—Astor. He sleeps not under the elegant epitaph here prepared for him. We have no sympathy with the envious, malignant, popular outcry against well-got and well-used wealth, the reward of diligence, and the sinews of charity; but the love of money—the rage for money—the money-getting mania—the worship of the money-god—the dollar dynasty—let it be stoked.—Ed.]

The wealth of the intellect is knowledge. The wealth of the heart is grace, humility and benevolence. The wealth of the earth is its green fields, its free and dashing waters; but the wealth of avarice is the jewels of "the dark and dirty mine," the silver and the gold. The "Almighty Dollar" is the orbed shield of Mammon. It is worn by every soldier who fights under King Crœsus. It is his passport to the halls of pleasure and his title to a decent burial and an honorable grave. It buys food for his stomach and provender for his horse. It buys panegyric for his character and the wounds of unhealing scandal for his foes. It rocks the cradle of his infancy and builds the cold monument above his wasted ashes when life's fitful dream is over! The ring of this metallic shield is the music used to hush the wailing woes of his infancy; it is the last to tingle joyfully on the dull cold ear of age!

Early in the world's records, and amidst the first pages of inspiration, we find this memorable passage, respecting the worldly condition of Abraham, the "Father of the Faithful," (Genesis, chap. 13, v. 2.) "And Abram was very rich, in cattle, in silver and in gold!" Happy old Jew! many would say, although he knew nothing of the mysteries of modern finance! He could not, by the arts of modern banking, make three almighty dollars out of one "almighty dollar;" nor could he know any thing of the stocks—the value of railroad shares and cotton factory dividends. He understood the rules of simple addition and multiplication. He knew that one piece of gold laid by the side of another piece made two pieces. He was not without artifice and trick in his way, and twice in his life passed off his beautiful, accomplished and queenly wife as his sister—thus making a snare of her beauty to inveigle the affections of wealthy kings and nobles, who, when they discovered that she was Abram's wife as well as half sister, could do no less than come down with their dust to make amends for their presumption. Thus, as well as by the natural increase of his flocks and herds, and the multiplication of his slaves, born in his house and purchased with his money, was laid the foundation of his vast and princely wealth, and the "Father of the Faithful" became as rich as a Jew.

But what were his conduct and feelings under this state of affluence and independence? When the family and substance of his brother Lot were captured and carried off in the sack of Sodom and Gomorrah, Abram hastily armed his servants and retainers and overtaking the predatory kings of Canaan he made a Palo Alto charge upon them at Hobah, on the left hand of Damascus, and recovered together, with his brother Lot's family and effects, all the wealth and spoil taken from the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah. The high-minded Hebrew refused to take any of the spoil pressed upon him by these grateful kings, and made this proud declaration: "I have lifted up my hand unto the Lord, the most high God, the possessor of Heaven and earth, that I will not take from a thread even to a shoe latchet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, lest thou shouldst say, I have made Abram rich." Mamre's holy plains re-echoed back the accents of that kingly voice!

I proceed to the first recorded trade or bargain and sale among the "world's gray fathers," and here find the wealthy Abraham a conspicuous actor. His accomplished and beloved Sarah lay cold in death, a beautiful, but inanimate statue, beneath the silken folds of her queenly tent. She had died the mother of that high ancestry of which a Saviour should be born, a line of throned and crowned men, of poets and prophets and beautiful women of the gazelle step, and the serene eye of resplendent loveliness. And the husband and father had not the ownership of a single foot of soil on God's round earth. The plains were indeed covered with his silken tents and his thousands of camels were grazing around; but the soil they fed upon was not his own. He came out from the tabernacle of death, and left her lily form which should never smile on him more—those lips of snow which should kiss him never again—he left her muffled in the pure and billowy curtains where she had become the bride of death; and while the spiced lamps burned low, and made the air heavy with their Idumean fragrance, Abraham rose from his knees at the couch of death, and came forth. His crooked Damascus scimetar hung not at his side. His proud Chaldean gait was subdued, although stately, and he held on his way to the massive gates and frowning turrets of the sons of Heth. Oh, there is a sacredness in woe, a majesty in those who mourn the dead beloved!

The silent throng stood aside while the great Hebrew passed, and the elders rose and bowed low to the princely, but solemn and sorrow-stricken man! Abraham, now seated amidst the elders, rises and bows low to the people—not one of the stiff, unmeaning and supercilious bows of modern times, but the hearty prostration of oriental days—perhaps even the swinging revolution of his hands and arms over his head, a la Turk! He said he was but a sojourner in their land, and spoke of his dead, and asked a sepulchre. What a generous and noble answer was returned! "Hear us, my lord! Thou art a mighty prince among us: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead!" Still encouraged by these gentlemen of the "olden time" Abram only requested their influence with Ephron for the cave of Machpelah; and hear what this gentleman said: "Nay, my lord, hear me! the field give I thee, and the cave that is therein, I give it thee!" Oppressed with these generous offers, the heart of the sorrowing prince was full. Again he bowed low to the people, and offered money in return. In the most complimentary manner Ephron admitted that the field, the cave and surrounding trees were worth four hundred shekels of silver, but considerately added, "What is that betwixt me and thee! bury thy dead!" But the conscientious and scrupulous Prince Abraham would not pay the sacred rituals of interment to his dead until he had weighed out the four hundred shekels of silver, "current money with the merchant."

This is the first recorded trade among the fathers of mankind; and the gentlemanly bearing of the parties concerned, the mingling of generosity and justice, render this a model business transaction for all succeeding ages! (Genesis, chap. 23.)

The passion of ancient avarice, as in present times, disclosed itself in two ways; in concealment and in show. The true miser, par excellence, is doubtless the one who gloats over the almighty dollar in secret, and worships the golden god of his idolatry at midnight, when no human eye is upon him, and who starves and starves his poor nature rather than diminish the precious heap of treasure.

The showy miser makes a grand display to shew an admiring world how great, how prosperous, powerful and happy above all others of the human kind he is—how the goddess Fortune has been wooed and won by his own matchless intellect and power of combination and calculation.

One instance of the estimation of wealth, taken from ancient history, will be more than enough to illustrate this type of the passion of avarice—it was the magnificent solemnity at the inauguration of one among the latest of the kings of Egypt, Ptolemy Philadelphus, which forms one of the most glittering pages of history. It required a whole day for this procession to pass through the circus of Alexandria. The troops of Silani and Satyrs headed the gorgeous procession, dressed in purple and red, covered with ornaments of gold. Then came the Victories, with golden wings, carrying vases nine feet high, from which rolled up the smoke of incense, spices and burning perfumery. After a double altar, of gold, nine feet in height, came one hundred and twenty youths, in purple vests, each one carrying a golden vase of myrrh and incense. Then, after various emblematical personages, came a chariot, twenty-one feet in length and twelve broad, drawn by one hundred and eighty men, on which was a figure of Bacchus, fifteen feet in height, pouring libations from a golden cup in his hand, while a huge golden vessel containing fifteen measures, stood before him. Then followed the throng of femme Bacchantes, grasping knives and serpents in their hands, no bad emblem of the madness and wrath of wine. On another chariot, thirty-six feet in length and twenty-four in breath, was an immense wine press, filled with the reeking vintage, and sixty satyrs trod the grapes, while the immense multitude drank the wine.

Another similar chariot, drawn by six hundred men, carried an immense wine vat, containing three thousand measures of wine, followed by one hundred and twenty crowned satyrs, carrying pots, flagons and large cups of gold. Then came immense silver vats, and two bowls of the same metal, eighteen feet in diameter and nine feet deep, and ten caldrons and two silver wine presses, and drinking vessels and wine coolers almost innumerable. Then came on a vast chariot, drawn by five hundred men, the representation of an immense cavern, from the deep rocky chasms of which flowed two fountains, one of milk and the other of wine. All the nymphs who stood around wore crowns of gold. Then came the allegorical representation of the descent of Bacchus to India, in which the statue of the god was in a chariot drawn by an elephant with golden trappings. Five hundred young virgins, with golden zones and crowns, followed this chariot; then an immense train of chariots, drawn by elephants, stags, lions, buffalos, wild asses, and ostriches. Then came an immense procession of all the productions of the Indian clime: and then the massive statues of Alexander the Great, the Ptolemys, and the reigning sovereign of Egypt. Then came women glittering with gold, and bearing the names of all the Grecian and Ionian cities, countries and islands, and a chariot containing a golden thyrsus, one hundred and thirty-five feet in length, and a silver lance eighty feet long: then an immense chorus of harpers and musicians, then two thousand bulls, all of the same color, adorned with golden frontlets and crowns. The statues of the great Olympian deities were next drawn in the procession, with heavy altars and dindems of gold, and crowns more than one hundred feet in circumference. A golden cuirass, eighteen feet high, and a silver one of twenty-seven feet, on which was the representation in gold of a thunderbolt, eighteen feet in length; and besides these there were four hundred chariots laden with silver vessels, twenty with vessels of gold, and eight hundred with aromatic spices, guarded by 57,000 foot and 23,000 horse soldiers, all dressed and armed with Barbaric magnificence.

Had the gold borne in this procession been fused and poured at once into the Nile, it would have caused an overflow!

Thus Egypt, but a few years before she became an insignificant province of Rome, showed forth her wealth to the eyes of the world: and all this but a few hundred miles distant from the state of Sparta, where silver and gold had been repudiated by law, and iron made the legal currency in such a bulky proportion that a camel would groan under the weight of the smallest payments!

The exhumation of those abodes of Grecian wealth, luxury and licentiousness, the cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii, has given us more than one lesson of the love of the "almighty dollar," strong even in death. The mountain was connected to the deep bosom of heaven by that awful pillar of flame which was based on the thundering heart of the earthquake, and capped by the crown of the lightning. The pitchy clouds rolled down the rocky steeps, and shut out the light of sun and moon and stars. The air was hot with scorching agony, and the vast upheaving ocean of lava had begun to roll and leap down the mountain precipices in cataracts of flame. What, then, was the last thought of a denizen of the city below! Death has failed to keep one secret—a skeleton revealed it after a sleep of 1800 years! Driven from the upper apartments by the flaming breath of the mountain, the wretched citizens sought their cool, damp cellars; but here the heat of the cinders and the engulphing lava-waves engulf them. The stifling vapors rolled in, and life in a moment became extinct. One skeleton was found with a most eager and insatiable attitude, prone upon the cellar floor; but what do his fleshless fingers grasp! One hand covers a bunch of keys, and the bony skeleton of the other, crooked and intensely grasped, grapples a pile of golden coin! Every bone tells of the last thought and purpose of the once wealthy and dollar-loving Dionede! Far better, then, had that wealthy miser been tossing on the waters of the blue Mediterranean, than watching over his treasure vaults, and grasping, with stilled and hot breath, the coin that burned his fingers to the bone, without unloosing his desperate clutch! Grim Death must have "grinned a ghastly smile" over such a scene.

Both the Grecian and Roman satirists represent the love of the "almighty dollar" as among the rife and uncontrollable vices of their times. Persius, a splendid Roman satirist, of the equestrian rank, allied by blood to the highest nobility of the State, writing in the year of our Lord about 62, thus describes the miser of his times:

> "Go, miser, go! in avarice grow old,
> Raise heaps on heaps, increase thy mass of gold;
> Go, dare the storms and terrors of the main;
> Brave hunger, thirst, and pawn your soul for gain;
> As interest bids, be sure to buy or sell;
> Still as you hoard the mighty heap shall swell—
> Now twice, now thrice the sum it was before,
> Now it is five; now it is ten times more!"

And the accomplished Juvenal, writing about the same time, at the venerable age of eighty years, gives the following as a synopsis of maternal instruction to youth:

> "Buy what shall bring three cent per cent again;
> No kind of merchandise as foul disdain.
> Spices or hides, they'll answer just as well;
> The smell of lucre is a pleasant smell:
> And, boy! forget not thou that noble line,
> Worthy of Jove and all the powers divine:
> Have wealth one soul, but love, none ask or care!
> Oh, apotheosis divine! oh sacrilege rare!
> 'Tis the first rule that boys from grandams get,
> And girls learn long before their alphabet!"

And, again:

> "The wealth alone by toil and peril gained—
> By greater toil and peril is retained.
> With buckets ranged the ready servants stand,
> Alert at midnight at their lord's command;
> Too rich! too rich! his gold and ivory keep—
> His busts and bronze—poor delights from sheep!"

And, after the lapse of eighteen centuries, Dr. Johnson reiterates the same truth of London, the centre of the new age of civilization:

> "This mournful truth is everywhere confessed,
> Slow rises worth by poverty depressed
> But here more slow, where all are slaves to gold;
> Where looks are merchandise, and smiles are sold;
> Where one by bribes by flatteries implored;
> The groom retails the favors of his lord."

An English tourist sagely writes of us poor Americans, that no two of us can meet in the street and converse together two minutes without using the word "dollar." This may be true of business and commercial men of any country, and the word "dollar" is as good to use on such occasions as the words "pounds," "livres," "francs," or "guilders;" quite as frequently in the mouths of our English, French, and Dutch neighbors as "dollar" is in ours.

Does any one ask how the "almighty dollar," so envied, adored, and productive of supposed happiness, can be obtained? by what toils, labors, outlay of surpassing genius and splendid abilities, can be procured, laid up and hoarded in enormous and mountainous piles, higher even than the murky raven of avarice can soar with sooty wing? I will reveal the secret, and place within the reach of every auditor put within his hands the key of wealth! It requires no depth of thought, no splendid outlay of immense talents, to acquire immense riches. The single word ACCUMULATION reveals the secret. To earn, to accumulate, to lay up and hoard each day of one's life something more than the expenses of existence, will as surely carry wealth into a man's coffers as the sun rises and sets upon him as a living man. And if to this he superadds that higher amount of intellectual power to lay out these daily accumulations, so as to make them also cumulative, his tide of wealth soon begins to roar in upon him like the concentrating surges of the Norwegian maelstrom.

Let us sustain the position of the great case of the acquisition of riches by reference to examples in our own country. One large fortune in the East, that of the self-styled "Lord Timothy Dexter," of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, was founded in the result of a joke perpetrated upon his supreme ignorance. Born a coarse, swaggering fool, with scarce education enough to write his name, he came into possession of some paternal estate, and was seized with an ambition to become a navigation merchant, and some wags told him that a shipload of warming-pans sent to one of the warmest West Indin Islands would be a good investment. He accordingly bought up all those comfortable implements in the markets of Salem, Boston, and New York, and sent his ten thousand dollars worth to the wondering West Indians, who finally discovered that the lower part of the warming-pan with its long handle made an excellent dipper, while the perforated cover made an excellent skimmer for the cane syrup on the sugar plantations, and the sale was instantaneous, bringing back a return of one hundred thousand dollars! And so fortunate was Dexter in his future enterprises that his folly and ignorance seemed like molten streams of gold to flow over into his treasury. It was only when he had retired from business, built his palace, surmounted by the gigantic statues of himself and lofty other noblemen, assumed to himself the decorations and titles of a lordship, and wrote his famous book entitled "A Pikel for the Knowing Ones," without a single point or mark of punctuation in the body of the work, but filling some twenty pages at the end wholly with them, and requesting the reader to use them in reading the book just as he thought proper; it was only when all this was seen that all who knew him were fully convinced of the utter impotence of wealth to give its stolid and eccentric possessor either happiness, reputation, intellect, usefulness, or consideration in society.

In the case of the great living "fifteen millionaire" of New York, John Jacob Astor: he is asserted to have declared that the greatest difficulty in the achievement of his immense fortune, and the point where he was most in danger of a perpetual shipwreck, had been in the acquisition of his first thousand dollars. An unaided, unpatronized and unendowed young man, the accumulation of his first disposable and unincumbered means of operation, wasted many of his wearisome days of labor and nights of anxious wakefulness. And if, as is reported, this munificent steward of the largest fortune in America should leave, at his death, the bulk of his wealth as a fund to furnish, through all coming time, to the young and enterprising poor men of good character, that difficult "first thousand" as a loan, without interest, John Jacob Astor will not have lived in vain. His vast accumulation of fortune, like a wide river of music, will flow on in heart-gladdening cadence to the end of time; and on the banks of that ocean-like current of benevolence the songs of many millions of sweet-voice and sunny-eyed youth, the happy and grateful children and maidens of Columbia's educated and golden age shall thrill the ear of centuries to come. Love shall be the sun, in the ascendant, to illuminate that tuneful river, and tens of thousands of the snow-winged barks of easy fortune and competence shall dance over the bosom of those tranquil waves, and the name of Astor shall be the never-ceasing murmur of those gentle waters. The choirs of the vestal angels shall take up the echo from the songs of the low-River of Life. They shall wreath that name with garlands of rainbows, and hold it up amidst the fleecy clouds, as the prize of virtue, to the good and aspiring of all the generations of earth. Sweeter far, and more balmy to the repose of the departed soul such music as this, than the deep-toned organ strains, shaking old cathedral walls and jarring the marble pavements of the tombs of Death below! Brighter, far brighter to light the departed soul through the "valley of the shadow of death," the flash of those millions of happy and grateful eyes, that all the flambeaus of the grave, flashing their broad and lofty taper fires into the dim outlines of vaults that swell up in solemn grandeur, like a mimic heaven, grained from the cold and unwasting rock!

Stephen Girard, the mammoth millionaire of Philadelphia, some years a resident in the ungainful and interest-denying tomb, seems to have acquired his power and control over a vast accumulation of wealth, by his knowledge of human character in the selection of the most able and energetic captains for his trading ships; his letters of instruction to each being masterly models of such composition, providing for each possible contingency with a forecast and reach of reflection which would embellish and enrich the letters of instruction given by thrones and premiers to their plenipotentiaries. The result was that almost all of his homeward bound ships, after a three and four years' voyage, would return complete argosies of wealth. Girard has made Education his heir, and while his poor dust, as poor now and valueless as the putrid corse of a beggar, borne from yonder alms house, moulders away in the grave, the Palladian Temple of Learning, founded by his beneficence, covers one of the great squares of the "City of Penn," and swells up towards Heaven, the proudest palace of intellect on the vast American continent. Nor Athens, nor Seven-hilled Rome ever saw such columned halls and vast walls dedicated to Mind! There stands, and forever shall stand, the Monument of Stephen Girard! The power of the "almighty dollar" survives death and outlives the tomb! The feeble donor passes away like a plucked flower or a morning vapor exhaled by the rosy sunbeam; but the gift remains, working its good or ill while earth's possessions remain stable, while the flinty marble resists the gnawing tooth of Time, or the parchment scroll retains the written charter of Property!

Some possessors of wealth, like Peydras and Millaudon of New Orleans, in death spread the mantle of paternal affection over all the fatherless and motherless children of the realm. Their names are written on the gushing hearts of thousands upon thousands of the sons and daughters of sorrow. The rainbow of their fame is the prismatic blending of the smiles of millions of orphans bursting out from the tempest of their tears! Their memory becomes godlike—an enduring echo breaking from an overarching cloud of love, and remaining on earth sweeter than song, and more deathless than marble. To such a fatherhood, even as unto the Father of All, can the poor dying widow commit her little ones so soon to be motherless! On the bosom of such angel charity she can fearlessly lay her little babe, as her own hands and her own bosom grow cold in death!

[To be continued.]

Payson and the Lawyer.

The following imperfectly described rencontre with a lawyer of Portland, Maine, who ranked high for wealth and talent, will serve to show Mr. Payson's insight into character, and his power to mould it as he pleased.

A lady, who was the common friend of Mrs. Payson and the lawyer's wife, was sojourning in the family of the latter. After the females of the respective families had interchanged several calls, Mrs. —— was desirous of receiving a visit from Mrs. Payson, but, to effect this, Mr. Payson must also be invited. And how to prevail with her husband to tender an invitation, was the great difficulty. He had been accustomed to associate religion with meanness; and, of course, affected great contempt for Mr. Payson—as if it were impossible for a religious man to possess any talents. When he gave his consent, which he did very reluctantly, it was with the positive determination that Mr. Payson should not converse on religious subjects, nor ask a blessing, or offer a prayer in his house. He collected his forces and made his preparations in conformity with this purpose; and when the day arrived, received his guests very pleasantly, and entered at once into animated conversation, determined, by obtruding his own favorite topics, to forestall the divine. It was not long before the latter discovered his object, and summoned together his powers to defeat it. He plied them with that skill and address for which he was remarkable; still for some time victory inclined to neither side, or to both, alternately. The lawyer, not long before, had returned from Washington. Mr. Payson made some inquiries about several persons there, and among others, the chaplain of the House of Representatives. "How did you like him?" "Not at all; he appeared to have more regard to those around him, than he had to his Maker." Mr. Payson was very happy to see him recognize the distinction between praying to God, and praying to be heard of men, and made some observations on prayer which, without taking the form, had all the effect on the lawyer's conscience of a personal application. At length the trying moment which was to turn the scale arrived. The time for the evening repast had come; the master of the feast became unusually eloquent, so as to give no interval for "grace;" just as the distribution was about commencing, Mr. Payson interposed the question, "What writer has said the devil invented the fashion of carrying round tea, to prevent a blessing being asked?" The host felt himself cornered, but promptly replied, "I don't know what writer it is, but if you please, we will foil the devil this time; will you ask a blessing, sir?" and by some well-timed sentiment of his reverend guest, he could not, without rudeness, decline rising him to return thanks. And thus he contested every inch of his ground until the visit terminated. Mr. Payson sustained his character as a minister of religion, and gained his point in every thing; and that, too, in a way so natural and unconstrained, and with such respectful deference to his host, that the latter could not be displeased, except with himself. Mr. Payson not only acknowledged God, on the reception of food, but read the Scriptures, and prayed, before separating, and did it, too, at the request of the master, though this request was made, in every instance, in violation of a fixed purpose. The chagrin of this disappointment, however, became the occasion of his greatest joy. His mind was never entirely at ease, until it found peace in believing. Often did he revert with devout thankfulness to God, to the visit which had occasioned such mortification; became a member of his church; and ever after regarded with more than common veneration and respect, the servant of God whom he had once despised. [Extract from the Life of Edward Payson.

Nutritious Preaching.

"Do you like Dr. S—— as well as ever?" was the question once addressed to a member of the A—— street church. "Oh, yes! his sermons are roast beef and plum pudding to us for a whole week." This was high praise surely, and bespoke a full larder, as well as no small skill in setting out the feast. It gives us at once an idea of the man, and of his sermons, and of the study, too, whence such sermons came. We catch a glimpse of a quiet room, better stocked with standard works than with the literature of Tupper and Gilfillan; of a patient, prayerful man, rising from his knees to adjust his manuscripts for the day, and of an open Bible on the study-table. The hat and cane are laid aside, for he has already paid a visit to the suffering family in the adjoining alley, or to the sick bed of a dying parishioner; and "it is well before preaching to look over the verge." While such a man writes let no one needlessly intrude, for the robbery of his hour is the plundering of a whole congregation. In a minister's study-hours the "talk of the lips teemeth to penury."

Of the discourses of Dr. S——, on which such a savory encomium was pronounced, we had no personal knowledge; but we can easily conjecture some of the qualities which made them so nutritious.

1. They must have had a great deal of Bible in them. Not an occasional scrap, or a dainty passage culled out to beautify a sentence and round off a period, but wholly saturated with the word of God. Hamilton tells us that Dr. Chalmers' discourses "held the solution." The strong meat is found in the Scriptures alone. The preacher who never "wears out," or wears his people out either, is he who delves daily in the gold mines of revelation.

2. Those nutritious discourses must have had a great deal of prayer over them. There are other men besides the staid Quakers who believe that he who preaches aright must preach "as the Spirit moves him." And through Divine aid comes down the invisible ladder by which the prayer of faith ascended to the Heavenly Intercessor. McCheyne never wrote a line without previous petition to God. Holy John Welch rose at night and spent hours in pleading for the celestial baptism. "I am convinced," writes an eminent clergyman, "that even æsthetically considered, one hour of prayer is a better preparation for sermon-writing than a whole day of study."

3. They had a great deal of every-day religion in them. They were practical. There is a painful lack, with many ministers, of knowledge of human nature in its daily notings. They are not ignorant men. They are tolerably familiar with John Owen, and Matthew Poole, and Francis Turretin, know all about the Council of Trent, and may even aspire to an acquaintance with the Magdeburg Conturiators. But to the living, acting, laughing, weeping, tempted, and sinning world around them, they are well nigh strangers. During the week their parishioners have been driving a plow, or hammering a lapstone, or pleading a cause, or have been "up to their eyes" in cotton bales and sugar casks.

When the Sabbath comes, these parishioners bring to the sanctuary their every day wants and trials, as citizens, as men of business, as parents, as husbands, or as children. They want preaching that shall tell them, how to live as well as what to believe. They want plain instruction. They want doctrine, but doctrine made portable and practical. They hunger for truth, but truth simplified, and purged of scholastic technicalities. We once heard a young licentiate of great promise preach a sermon in which he talked about the "governmental theory of the atonement," and garnished his discourse with such words "predicate," and "potential," and "subjective." The whole discourse smelled strongly of the class-room, and had probably been "sat upon" by an inquest of theological students during the author's senior year. We would like to have whispered into the brother's ear, "You will burn that sermon up before you have been in the ministry twelve months."

The Sabbath teachings which are carried into the week are those which treat of every day wants and every day duties—which meet the Christian, and tell him how to grow in grace and holy living—which soothe the afflicted with gospel consolations—which tell the young how to shun daily temptation, and the aged how to prepare for death—which point the anxious inquirer to that cross beneath which he may quiet his aching heart. And the simpler these teachings the better. A discourse which a minister would not be willing to read to his children and domestics, with a good hope that they would understand it, is no doubt a safe sermon to take into the pulpit. "It takes all our learning," said Archbishop Usher, "to make truth simple."

4. Another excellence of the preacher, of whom Fuller writes, probably was that he seldom went beyond his "thirdly." "Neither will we; so we will close with the remark once made to Dr. Green, by a poor woman of his parish. "Mr. Green," said she, "what do you think is the great business of the shepherd?" "To feed the flock, madam!" was his reply. "That is my notion too, sir, and therefore I think he shouldn't hold the hay up so high that the sheep can not reach it." [Presbyterian.

God Immutable, Yet Repenting.

That infinite Being is unchangeable in his perfections, purposes and principles of government. But will not his perfection as immutable admit, will it not demand different conduct in different circumstances? Let us take the case of Nineveh. God proclaimed by Jonah, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." But when the king arose from his throne, and covered himself with sackcloth and sat in ashes, and sent a command through all the city that neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, should taste any thing, and that every man should turn from his evil ways and from the violence in their hands—God saw that they turned from their evil ways and he repented of the evil that he said he would do unto them, and did it not. Here, says an objector, is a case of mutability—here was certainly a change.

But where was the change? There was indeed a change as to God's conduct, his treatment of Nineveh. But was there any change in his perfections, his purpose, or his laws? Not in the least. These all lead him to treat a creature according to his character. If he is sinful, he treats him as being sinful; if holy, he treats him as such; and if penitent, he treats him as a penitent.

This is just what God did in the case of Nineveh. While it was a sinful and impenitent city, he treated it as such, and threatened to destroy it. When it became a penitent city, and the people turned from their evil ways, he treated them as penitents and saved the city.

The whole change then was in the people of Nineveh. There was none in God. His very immutability compelled him to treat Nineveh, when glorying in her sins in one way; and to treat her in another way when clothed in sackcloth and sitting in ashes. And his immutability will always compel him to make a difference between the impenitent and the penitent—between the transgressor who continues in his sins, and the transgressor who confesses and forsakes them.

But it is still urged that God repented. But the difficulty will vanish, if we consider for a moment the manner in which the sacred writers are accustomed to speak of God. They every where apply to the Supreme Being, language which is derived from the nature and passions of men. They speak of him as having eyes, hands, feet, etc., and ascribe to him the various emotions which agitate our hearts; as anger, wrath, grief, etc. But the sacred writers certainly do not mean to imply that God has a human frame, or is subject to human passions. They use this language merely in accommodation to our understandings. They ascribe the conduct of God to that which is the cause of similar conduct in men. When God is said to be angry with the wicked, the language means that he will treat the wicked somehow as the angry man treats the one who offends him; that is, he disapproves of and will punish him; but by no means signifies that God can ever entertain any passion like that which burns in the unholy bosom of an angry man. So when God is said to repent, it does not mean that he has any thing like the regret, that sorrow for his own conduct which is understood when a man is said to repent. It means that the conduct of God is similar to that of a man who repents—his conduct is altered.

The objection to prayer drawn from God's immutability is founded upon a wholly mistaken view of the subject. God is immutable in his perfections, purposes and principles of government. But it is certainly one of his purposes and one of the main and distinguishing principles of his government to answer believing prayer. Unless his purposes and his principles of government alter, believing prayer must be answered, that is to say must be useful. How absurd to say that, because God is immutable prayer is useless, when nothing but the immutability of his promise to hear prayer can encourage us to offer it.

If it were the object of prayer to produce any change in God, then, indeed, his immutability would render it vain. But this is not the object of prayer. Prayer is the means which God has immutably connected with spiritual blessings. And you might just as well say that the object of the farmer when he sows his grain is to produce a change in God as that it is the object of prayer to produce such a change. And the immutability of God renders it just as useless to sow the seed in order to have the harvest, as it does to offer prayer in order to obtain divine favors. [Puritan Recorder.

Russia, in 1852, will celebrate a rejoicing at the vast expense of her empire, the [illegible] of her thousandth year of national existence, which will be kept with all the solemnity due to the importance of the event. The Russian empire was founded in 852; in which year the Russians made their appearance on the banks of the Bosphorus as Warrangians.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, March 6.

Alabama Conference and "Theology."

We observe that some misunderstanding prevails about the action, at its late session, of the Alabama Conference, in the case of Rev. W. H. Milburn. Some of our Church papers allude to it in a manner requiring, in justice to the Conference, that its action be set in a proper light. The matter has also reached the papers of other churches.

In the "Presbyterian" of the 19th ult., a writer, after quoting from the Mobile Advertiser a charge that was preferred against Mr. M., viz., "holding and teaching that the preaching of theology is the bane of the Church and the curse of the pulpit," adds:

"Now, Mr. Editor, whether the report of the speech from which this extract is taken be entirely correct, one who was not present can not certainly know. But on the supposition that it is correct, and that no injustice is done to Mr. Milburn in the manner in which he is placed before the public in the report, let me ask, are we to understand that the Conference of the State, with the venerable Bishop Andrew at their head, did sanction, or do sanction such sentiments as the above? The Advertiser states that Mr. Milburn withdrew after making the speech; and the question was put, "Shall his character pass?" and was decided in the affirmative by a very large majority. Other matters, not pertinent to the object before me, were embraced in this vote. But the correctness and orthodoxy of, the sentiments cited above were involved directly and inevitably. Did the Conference mean to sanction the dogma put forth by Mr. M.? For one, I can not believe it. I must think there is something not yet disclosed to the eye of those without, which will relieve the Conference from the responsibility of endorsing sentiments so long known as the watchwords of Socinianism and Universalism, and recently the theme and burden of almost every address and sermon from the ranks of Transcendentalism and other covert forms of infidelity. It is a small matter what one man holds and preaches, a small matter comparatively, but it is a matter of immense importance what so large and influential a body of ministers as the Alabama Conference may approve.

I discuss not the propriety of the distinction which Mr. M. would make between the teaching of our Lord and that of his inspired apostle, nor of other distinctions made by him in his speech. There is not, in truth, the slightest foundation for them. They are mere fancies, without authority from Scripture, from history, or from reason, but most contrary to all three. The point now is, are such sentiments to go forth into the world with the countersign of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Alabama, speaking through the Annual Conference?"

We were in the Conference room when the action was taken, and regretted to see the report that appeared in the Advertiser—not that it did essential injustice either to the Conference or Br. Wilburn, but because it seemed in contravention of the intention of the Conference in sitting with closed doors. And we regret the publication the more, seeing the misapprehensions it has given rise to.

If we are not mistaken, Br. M. meant by the term "theology"—at least in substance, as shown by his explanation before the Conference—"doctrinal preaching," which, it must be confessed has often been abused. The Gospel is a full treasury, and there may and ought to be variety in its teaching. Still the use of the term theology in such a connection was unfortunate and offensive, and considering Br. M.'s command of language and remarkable elegance and accuracy of definition, we were surprised at it. He did not succeed in convincing the Conference of the propriety of the statement. We feel safe in saying his views did not command their assent—not by any means. The Bishop pointedly disowned the philosophy, in his chair, on the spot: he said that for his part he had always thought preaching "theology" was what they ought to do, and in his simplicity he had been doing it and expected to continue doing it, and so advised the preachers. But as explained Conf. did not consider the error sufficiently serious to call for any action, or formal expression of opinion. It is the custom of Methodism to tolerate a little latitude in a brother's philosophy—when it does no real damage.

Br. Milburn's defence was listened to with marked attention. It displayed a vigorous and disciplined mind, a wide range of reading and profound study, and lacked not the rich graces of oratory; and though the Conference were not prepared to endorse his sentiments, those sentiments seemed rather theoretical than practical, and his character was passed.

To show that thinking men may differ, it has been laid down as an axiom, by a distinguished Wesleyan, that the success of Methodist preaching lies here—THE COMBINATION OF DOCTRINE AND EXPERIENCE. And we believe it.

PRESIDING ELDERS.—A friend intimates that our remarks last week, under the head of Methodist Press, are liable to the construction that we regard the office a fifth wheel, useless, etc. By no means. An efficient Presiding Eldership, such as generally prevails among us, is as essential as a General Superintendency. We can not do without them.

REVIVAL.—An interesting meeting has been for the last week in progress at Moreau st. charge—H. C. Thweatt, pastor. Rev. Mr. Campbell, of the C. P. Church, has given the pastor and people valuable and highly appreciated assistance. About twelve souls have professed conversion, and been added to the Church.

Prof. Gliddon—Mummies—Moses.

On Tuesday night last Prof. Gliddon concluded his 12th lecture in the Lyceum Hall. A full and elite audience attended him through the Course with the most complimentary interest, and he dismissed them handsomely. Prof. G. is au fait at a bow, and some on chronology.

We omitted a few salient points in our hasty notice of the previous lecture and were in error in one statement. The bodies to be embalmed were said to be "put in pickle 40 years;" that was rather strong—forty days was their briny probation for embalment. It was quite observable that the learned Professor was not to be caught in another equivoque about the sex of his mummy subjects. That blunder in Boston, some years ago, about the priestess that turned out to be a boss carpenter (or "chief artificer" as he more classically styled it) was not to be repeated in New Orleans! Prof. G. gave it out in that notable case that it was a woman, and so it turned out—with a slight variation! In this case he ventured no opinion. The delicate affair of gender "remained to be seen." It was neither masculine nor feminine, but neuter while in its swathing bands! Of course he knew, but did'nt care to say. He would let his appreciative audience find that out for themselves.

After the bundle was unrolled—by the facetious as has been before described—the Professor made a venture. The first declaration positively and unequivocally was that it was no negro. This announcement was made with a triumphant air, as it establishes, beyond doubt or fear of reasonable contradiction, the "diversity" theory! The long, straight hair appearing and the anatomic lines becoming distinct, the learned Professor ventured on a little further—it was a female. The hole being picked through the millstone he saw clear through it. No equivoque this time. What a profound thing is Egyptian Archeology! Who can deny its claims to being called a science? Forsooth, the Professor, is not to be blamed for not venturing faster. The reputation of science is not to be risked.

The hieroglyphical inscription was very much abraded! After, the subject, so carefully labelled at embalment, was stripped to the skin—(1) it was not a negro; (2) it was a woman. For this interesting discovery the audience, to be sure, will feel indebted to the correct reading of hieroglyphical characters and not to anatomy. Why should'nt they?

The Professor gave some very striking statistical information on the subject of mummification. The cost of the best kind was circum $1250; next $300; and the lowest $20. The priests, who had the monopoly of undertaker's business, made a fine spec. out of it. Their temples must have been lively workshops. The making these coffins and weaving these millions of yards of linen for wrappages demanded of them some craft: hence priest-craft may mean something, after all. Their theories for another world were laid for levying a tax upon mortals in this; reminding us of a certain SECT heard of in this day.

Mummification ceased about the year A. D. 641. But so fast had mummies accumulated, the Egyptians used them for fuel—thus making light of a grave subject. The present politic government seeing these defunct citizens are more numerous and valuable than the live ones, have prohibited their emigration: hence the scarcity of mummies in this country.

Perhaps nothing more took aback the majority of Prof. G.'s listeners than his crocodile exhibit: The preservation of these animals was remarkable. They seem to have been a favorite meat for embalming; somewhat as cucumbers for pickling. A specimen lay on the table, over 5 feet long, that looked as though it might have been taken at the Ballze a few months ago. And yet, peradventure, this very leviathan defied Job, or roared like the bulls of Bashan, in the ears of David's ancestors, or secuted Moses in the bullrushes! Who can tell? There was a vast receptacle somewhere about the Nile (Prof. G. had been in it himself and perhaps counted them) where these beasts were stowed away by the million, measuring from 6 inches to 18 feet. What latent bellowings are there!

Every one must have his own "theory" about this thing. The lecturer stated that these were divine honors paid by the Egyptians to their gods of the Nile. It might be reasonable to embalm men and women—for this was necessary to their salvation: but how could their gods stand in need of such salvation? These embalmed "slew-bellies" were of all ages and sizes, and for any thing Professor Gliddon ventured to the contrary, of all sexes too. Were they fished up and killed for the honor of embalment, or were they picked up dead—dying a natural death? There is a difficulty, and our theory—if it do not infringe on some other man's, is this:—These Egyptians learned a thing or two of Joseph. He had taught them to lay up corn. A famine of the "flesh-pots" was predicted by some greedy prophet and they began to lay in the things that would keep best—alligators. The famine never came—the stores provided by thoughtful antiquity were never in demand, and now that Prof. Gliddon has called them out, they are too dry to be eat and too hard to be explained.

It is really gratifying to observe the accuracy of dates which this noble science affords. "Felix qui potuit, etc." One dried-up specimen was pointed at by the lecturer's learned looking wand and the audience were assured that "that man was exactly 2957 years old!" Now then: exactly 2957 years! dispute it who can! The lady's age, so recently introduced, was doubtless equally within reach of Egyptological cognition, but as it was not certain she had ever been married the Professor politely forbore telling it.

And here, kind reader, endeth this chapter of revelations. This is the amount of the wonderful and profound science that is to knock the heads of Moses and the prophets together! This is the latest agony! Can Christianity stand up under all this?

From the outset we have not felt it due to this vaunting, shallow, dogmatic, blundering, guessing philosophy to present it in a serious aspect. It is not worthy of respectful treatment. In the matters at issue others may be Champollion's disciples; but we are Moses' disciple. The man that hewed and read the two tables of stone, "written with the finger of God," cannot be thus summarily set aside by him who read the Rosetta stone. The gentlemen of this school must learn their lesson better: they must be able to spell it up and down; to read it backwards and forwards and every way; then may they, with less presumption, seek to discredit a sacred RECORD, so plain "he may run that readeth it."

Prof. G. spoke glibly of 30 centuries B. C., and assumes his "dynasties" to mark time as accurately as the Anno Domini. And yet, to say no more, a gentleman of talents and learning, M. Poole, who was brought upon the banks of the Nile, and has spent many years in the study of the monuments and their hieroglyphic records, has adduced proofs from the monuments themselves, to show that several of the dynasties were really contemporaneous. Thus, e. g., M. Poole shows proof, that the seventeenth dynasty and the fifth were contemporaneous.

We would advise Mr. Gliddon (whose lectures have afforded us great pleasure) to give himself more margin—at least as much as the Nile has. He would do well, in fixing dates, to follow the example of a shrewd student we wot of, who entered himself in a Southern College. It was required of every one on matriculating to give name, residence and age. Our College man was suspected of being older than his advancement indicated. He was touchy on the subject of age and evaded the confession by entering: G. B. T.: Georgia: Born 1st March, in the year of our Lord that the woods were burned.

One hundred dollars per night and all expenses paid—who would not lecture at that rate! This is the age of humbug and mummies. Vive la bagatelle!

Religious Press on the Pacific

In opening our California mail, last week, no small joy or surprise was felt at being greeted by the first numbe of the "San Francisco Christian Advocate"—a veritable Methodist print, with the good name of J. Boring, editor. This, the first number, dates January 31. It is a size smaller than this sheet, and presents a neat and substantial typographical face. Terms, $6 per annum; for six months, $3; for three months, $2 50. Send on your names and cash.

The editor thus opens his columns:

"In offering to the good people of California a third religious newspaper issuing from this city, it will not be inappropriate that our first number shall present briefly, somewhat at least, of the intended character and objects of the publication.

As indicated both by prospectus and name, it is intended to be devoted chiefly to the interests of the Christian religion; which, however, will by no means preclude us from the publication of whatever may be valuable to our readers, whether directly and strictly religious or not. We hold no fellowship with those views of Christianity, the tendency of which is to make it morose and exclusive in its practical influences upon the human heart, and to shut it up from whatever may chance not to proceed directly from it, and bow in servile submission to it.

The religion of Jesus Christ is not only not in conflict with science and literature, with progress and improvement; it is the friend and protector, may, the conductor of these, while by their reflex influences a constant contribution is made to religion in return.

An enlightened, rational and fixed Christianity, fixed upon principle, and productive of "love, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost," is that for which we contend, and on which alone we are willing to throw our trust.

In the prosecution of the foregoing views, it will be our object to present the readers of the Advocate with whatever may seem best calculated to advance the interests of learning, general intelligence and catholicity of spirit in the Church and country. We shall none the less, however, scrupulously and rigidly analyse and oppose whatever we shall think wrong in either principle or practice, or in anywise derogatory to the pure and elevated character of the Christian Church. And here it is well once for all to say, that we are not of those who claim for themselves or church any peculiar excellency, or exclusive descent by which they are incapacitated for seeing and honoring the image of Christ in others who are not called by their name. While we reserve to ourselves the right of preferring the Church which we have chosen, (for reasons which are satisfactory to us) we award to all Christians an equal right, and for the same cause to prefer the church of their choice, and from our heart bid them God-speed in the great work of saving souls. It shall be cause of joy and rejoicing with us to chronicle the triumphs of our common Christianity, wheresoever and by whomsoever they may be achieved.

It will not be deemed incompatible with the principles laid down, to keep our readers fully informed of passing events, both at home and abroad, whether of political, commercial or literary character. We will by no means prostitute the columns of a paper claiming to be religious, to political or party discussions, but leaving "the dead to bury the dead," shall present facts as they occur and may go to make up the history of the times. A politico-religious newspaper, is of all publications the most to be feared and despised. The press is an engine of great power, and when corrupt, and especially religiously corrupt, becomes a blind and infuriated tyrant, dealing out death and destruction to all who may chance to fall under its displeasure. Let those who are called to such a work give themselves thereunto, "but we will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." Acts vi. 4.

We have made arrangements by which our readers will be furnished weekly with the prices current of this and the principal markets of the country, and the general commercial news of the times.

It is also intended to devote a portion of our columns to the subject of agriculture, and to promote, as far as we can, the interests of this great department of human industry.

In conclusion, suffer us to say, that no pains shall be spared to make the San Francisco Christian Advocate a "strictly prime" religious, literary and family newspaper.

THE BIBLE IN SERMONS.—It is said of Dr. Chalmers's discourses that they held the Bible in solution. The lives of the hearers and doers of such sermons could neither have been barren nor unfruitful.

THE NEW MISSION ROUTE.—The Superintendent of the California Mission of the M. E. Church, South, writes: "At this very time Missionaries could be sent any and every week from this port for China, and would generally reach that country in from forty to fifty days, and frequently even in less time. And here I will add, that if the suggestion seem good to Bishop Andrew, and he will send the recently appointed Missionary to China, via San Francisco, we will send him from this port to China free from all expense to the Missionary Society at home."

DEATH.—The Rev. Stephen Asbury Roszel, one of the most distinguished ministers of the Baltimore Conference, and in the prime of life, died at Alexandria on the morning of the 21st February. His sickness was the result of a cold, contracted by riding, some days ago, a few miles in his wet clothes, after preaching a dedicatory sermon, during the delivery of which he had perspired freely. This event will cast a sadness over the session of that approaching Conference, whose accomplished Secretary he had been for many years. [Ch. Adv. and Journal.

METHODIST PRESS.

WELL REBUKED.—A correspondent of the N. and L. Christian Advocate, writing from the Georgia Conference, says, in fulsome adulation of one of its young ministers: "I heard Rev. W. G. C., of Augusta, a young man of fine literary taste, who writes as well as he speaks, who 'out-Herods Herod' in the magnificence of his pulpit powers."

The Holston and Memphis papers have both taken sharp exceptions to this style of criticism. The latter remarks:

"It is this, or the like, that lessens the dignity and influence of our hallowed religion. We would much prefer to hear he was remarkably humble, preached the cross with becoming zeal, hiding himself behind its fadeless glory. Young men are ruined, churches led astray, and the life of Christ in the soul much enfeebled by such unmeaning cant—downright nonsense."

OUR MOTHER AND GRAND-MOTHER.—Our friend of the Banner corrects a correspondent who supposes there is no High Churchism in Texas:

"Br. C. is mistaken in respect to our State. Texas is no more the land of log cabins and Indians. Steamboats are running up and down our rivers; and if we have no railroads yet, we have good and comfortable stages, and the silk-stocking gentry are beginning to come. Already there are nine or ten of the pretended successors of the apostles in the State, and they try to do their best to circulate tracts and books among the people, and particularly among the people called Methodists; they seem to have an old liking to them. They call us their unfaithful children; they like for Methodists to go ahead and prepare the way. We may have the poor, the uneducated, the negro or Indian, who can not read their prayers; but an intelligent man, who can read in the prayer book, ought to be a member of the Church. The good Lord preserve us from our mother, and preserve our mother from our grandmother."

TEMPERANCE.—The W. C. Advocate indicates a strong disposition toward Temperance reform in the West. The number of 18th ult. gives this Kossuth item:

"The Protestant evangelical clergy of this city, to the number of over one hundred, assembled at eleven o'clock in the ladies' parlor of the Burnet House, on Friday, the 13th inst., in order to have an interview with the illustrious Hungarian. Rev. Dr. Fisher addressed the Governor, and the Governor in return addressed the ministers present."

THE FIELD OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH. Dr. Bering, in a late letter to the editor of S. C. Advocate, ably argues the propriety and importance of extending our church operations into freesoil California, or any other freesoil, not marked out of our limits by the plan of agreement with the North. Many seem to think that because the M. E. Church, South, has not cut herself off from preaching the Gospel in the slaveholding States, therefore in them, and them only, her field of operation lies. Such a proposition is not to be for a moment listened to, and we should, by every proper demonstration, prevent others from putting us in this contracted position. Because our mission includes the bond, does it therefore exclude the free? Are the ministry of the M. E. Church, South, nothing more than slavery preachers? So some seem to think who have scruples about our entering the newly acquired freesoil territory of California. But let Dr. B. speak:

"Then let it be asked again, are we bounded in our obligations as a church organization by the slaveholding territory of the United States? Are we cut off from all territory which hereafter may be acquired, (for with the overwhelming preponderance of antislavery influences in the councils of the nation, as well as the church, no addition is to be made to the slaveholding States) and thereby to become so circumscribed as at last to feel ourselves (as we really should be) a branch lopped from the stock, withered and burned? Again, are we denied, divinely denied, all participation in the grand and glorious enterprise of the world's conversion, simply because our lots have, under Providence, fallen to us in a land in which slavery exists? * * * * * *

A church circumscribed within narrow geographical limits, embracing the richest resources of the world, and yet doomed to wear out its existence and bury its treasures for want of sphere sufficient within which to act, and adequate range for healthful and essential expansion, is surely among the most singular and bitter curses with which God himself could fill the cup of any people. That this is the outline of the plan by which we are sought to be overthrown by others, is confessed; but that we should not only suffer judgment to be rendered against us by default in the case, but also proclaim and defend the justice of the verdict, and correctness of the basis upon which it rests, is cause of painful surprise. And yet I declare my incapacity to see more or less in the doubts of the church with regard to the missionary enterprise in this country than an open declaration of the fact that we are shut up, as before stated, within our present limits, and denied all rights of standard-bearers for Christ, in other lands. It is not simply California that is involved, but a great fundamental principle of church economy, by which we claim the right, and may share the honor, of contributing to a world's conversion, or by which these are forever transferred to others.

LAY MOVEMENT.—Our Northern exchanges do not contain much news of it. Things seem at a stand.

The German Protestants in the United States comprise ten distinct sects or denominations, having an aggregate of 5356 congregations, and 358,000 members. The largest bodies are the German Lutheran and German Reformed. Each of these bodies have collegiate institutions, and issue denominational papers. There is also a large German Romanist population in the Union.

MEMOIRS OF MARGARET FULLER.—So great was the demand for this interesting work, that the first edition has already been entirely sold out, without a single volume reaching New Orleans. A second edition, however, will soon be out.

LITERARY NOTICES.

CHAMBER'S PAPERS FOR THE PEOPLE. Philadelphia: 1851.

The publisher, J. W. Moore, has supplied our table with the first four volumes of this work. It is now in course of republication, and will be completed in 8 vols., 12mo., pp. 250; sold at a low price, and very neatly got up. The series is mainly addressed to that large class of minds improved by the popular lectures and publications of the last dozen years, and craving a higher literature than is to be found in cheap periodicals. The Papers embrace History, Biography, Archæology, Science, Arts, Fiction, and the leading topics of Social Economy. Each volume contains distinct subjects. For sale by J. Ball.

ILLUSTRATED TEMPERANCE TALES. By T. S. Arthur. Philadelphia: 1850. J. W. Bradley, publisher: 8vo., pp. 320.

This book on the center table will go far towards counteracting the decanter on the side table. One or the other will have to quit the house. The author's portrait, by Welch, faces the title page, followed by a brief autobiography, which adds this favorite writer to the list of self-made men. The illustrations are spirited and the book handsomely bound. For sale by J. Ball.

LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, for January. American edition. New York: Leonard Scott & Co.

The following is the table of contents for the January number:

1. Memoirs on Russian and German Campaigns.
2. Kew Gardens.
3. Physiognomy.
4. Junius.
5. Highland Destitution and Irish Emigration.
6. Heron's Notes.
7. Farini's History of the Roman States.
8. The French Autocrat.

The present number abounds in powerful discussions of events just now engaging universal attention. The last article will of course find readers in characteristic English view of French matters. The usurper finds no quarter, his late movement no extenuation. Half the world suspect the English of wishing to trent the Nephew like the Uncle was treated—write him down. This suspicion doubtless abates most of the just force of their estimate of their neighbor's affairs. Touching the political merits of Louis Napoleon, the following remarks from an American writer, who occupies a different standpoint from this able London Quarterly reviewer, are not undeserving notice:

"Certainly he is no model, and his character has neither depth nor breadth enough for any warm coloring in eulogy. But the "devil is not as black as he is painted"; and it may be well to apply censure intelligently by first carefully reviewing facts.

When Louis Napoleon entered upon the Presidency of France, he found an excitable and impulsive people, profoundly agitated by recent revolutionary events. The flame of socialistic principles was spreading rapidly. It held control of the mob of Paris, and that mob held strange Communist theories concerning property, held that the landlord was a social abomination, that the state should feed and amuse, not tax nor restrain them; and that it had a prescriptive right to order the destinies of France. For centuries the mob of Paris may be said to have been the law of France—rude, capricious and exacting in its dictation to the provinces. It was to France what the Dragon is in the fables of early chivalry, ravenous, consuming, merciless. At the beginning of Louis Napoleon's Presidency the provinces stood in the utmost dread of it, and almost passively waited upon its caprices. Property was insecure and depreciated in this perpetual dread of revolutions, this sleepless apprehension of a volcanic eruption. There was material, of the most pliable kind, for ambition or discontent to work upon. We believe it is beyond dispute that Louis Napoleon in his coup d'etat merely anticipated a revolution projected by his opponents; and, which, if successful, would have owed all its triumph to the mob of Paris. That mob is notoriously socialistic and communist; and had it again realized a triumph, we might now have strange scenes to describe. That it was utterly at war with the interests and sentiments of the mass of citizens of Paris and of France, seems plain from the singular unanimity with which the people have come forward to support Louis Napoleon—not even a first rate man, and encircled with no halo of past glory. We take it that the people of France are willing to submit to the lesser evil of a somewhat arbitrary power, to escape the greater evils of socialism, communism, and Parisian mob law.

But even in this view, considering Louis Napoleon the useful agent in securing necessary results—we accord him no special merit. Ambition doubtless moved him; but then, he only declared himself President for ten years when he might as easily have proclaimed himself King for life. Nor is the arbitrary and restrictive Constitution he has promulgated without its merits. It introduces a new and valuable feature into the organization of the Government—a third power, standing between the President and the immediate representatives of the people—a Senate which "maintains or annuls all the acts which may be submitted to it by the Government as unconstitutional or denounced for the same cause in petitions from the citizens"; and further, it has the right to propose laws and suggest modifications. The President and the Senate have a mutual veto upon one another. Heretofore, nothing stood between the President and the immediate representatives of the people, and the slightest conflict between them was the signal for a revolution, or, at least, for an emeute. Louis Napoleon, in his Senate has combined the elements of our Supreme Court and Senate. This is an excellent check upon hasty revolutions, and will largely school the people of France to calm deliberation upon political subjects.

The restrictions of the Constitution are manifestly provided with a view to suppress excitable influences upon the mass—to check machinations against the Government—to bar the path to further revolutions. When we reflect upon the confessedly unprepared state of the French people for full enjoyment of such republican power as ours, the dangerous tendency to socialism, the tyrannical sway of the mob of Paris, we have neither praise nor censure for Louis Napoleon, any more than for any other creature forced into a position by the accidents and necessities of the hour. There is no need of eloquent common places on "freedom;" the French people were plainly not prepared intelligently to appreciate it in its native dignity of law; order and moderation; and Louis Napoleon or some one else had to take position as the arbitrary head of a tumultuous people. It is probably not unfortunate that an approaching anarchy has been suddenly transmuted into the herd outlines of what may be anomalously viewed as a Constitutional Despotism—that the revolutionary lava of the present has been suddenly hardened into a substance out of which results may be more durably quarried for the future."

American Bible Society.

The regular monthly (February) meeting of the Board of Managers was held on the 5th inst. The Hon. Luther Bradish in the Chair.

Six new auxiliaries were recognized, of which two were in Kentucky, and in Ohio, Alabama, Illinois and Michigan, one each.

Interesting intelligence was received from different parts of our own country and from foreign lands, in regard to the Bible Cause.

Letters were received from the Rev. Dr. Stiles, who has been laboring in Georgia and Alabama, and elsewhere with encouraging success.

In France, recent events, by deranging business and industrial operations generally, and crippling the resources of the friends of the Cause, have greatly impeded the Bible Work. Hence the necessity for greater exertions than ever by the friends of the Bible in this country in their behalf.

A letter was received from St. Petersburg, Russia, gratefully acknowledging the aid promised by this Board in publishing the Revel Esthonian New Testament and Psalms.

Another from Bishop Boone, at Shanghai, in regard to the Scriptures in China.

Several important additions were made to the Agents of this Society, viz: the Rev. G. J. Pearce in Georgia, Rev. Mr. Bayless in Kentucky, in place of Rev. F. Mitchell, resigned, the Rev. Jonathan Lyon in Tennessee, Rev. Wm. H. Pearne in New York, and Rev. Mr. Blake in Florida.

Important grants were made both of books and money. In particular, it was resolved that, in addition to about $23,000 already pledged for different foreign objects, the following sums be appropriated and paid so soon as the state of the treasury shall permit, viz:

For Northern India, $3000. China $5000, in sums of $1000 to each of the following Missionary Boards: Am. Board of Com. for F. Missions; Board of Missions for Pres. Ch.; Prot. Ep. Board of Missions; Missionary Soc. of Meth. Ep. Ch.; and Missionary Society of Meth. Ep. Ch. South. To Madras Bible Society $2000. To the Miss. Soc. of Meth. Ep. Ch. for Germany $500. This makes in all the sum of about $33,500 now pledged by this Society for the foreign work.

It was stated that of $4500, the balance of the appropriation made to France, $2000, it is hoped, will be paid the present month, and the remainder next month.

The receipts of the last month were $26,736 99; the number of Bibles and Testaments issued 24,989. [Bible Society Rec.

REV. W. WINANS, D. D.—Our readers will be gratified at the intelligence conveyed in the following extract, which we take the liberty to make, in the conclusion of a private letter from Dr. W., dated Feb. 24:

"I have made some little progress in preparing sermons for publication, having prepared two—one on the 'Existence, Nature and Character of God;' the other, on the 'Trinity in Unity in the Divine Nature.' They are both long, perhaps too long. My object is to prepare a series of sermons, embracing all the leading doctrines of Revealed Religion. The first of the series, on the 'Evidences of Revealed Religion,' is already in print. It will serve as an introduction to the rest. The two I have mentioned will follow in the order in which they are named, then one on Creation, one on the Creation of Man, etc. How I shall succeed I am unable to determine with any satisfaction: but I shall try.

"My health, which was greatly improved, has suffered within the last three weeks from, external affection, which, thank God, is now much ameliorated.

"Affectionately, yours,

"WILLIAM WINANS."

An Apt Figure.

An Indian chieftain, during the early settlement of New England, invited a minister to settle as a missionary among his tribe, and to induce him to do so, the Sagamore said, "You shall be to us as one who stands by a running water, filling many vessels."

We have never met out of Holy Writ, a more beautiful figure than this. Indeed it seems to have a resemblance to the simple aptness of the old Hebrew poetry, and to express, by a chaste and delightful comparison, the true nature of the office of an evangelist. It is not his own wisdom that he presents, or his own fullness that he puts forward. He [illegible] which Revelation furnishes, "living water" for all who thirst after righteousness. He himself is but the minister, the servant. He rests not on his own sufficiency, but upon the sufficiency of Christ. He draws not from his own fountain, but from that which has been opened for every transgressor. He speaks not in his own name, but in that of his Divine Master. "Pray for us, that the word of God may have free course and be glorified." [N. Y. Observer.

EVIL THOUGHTS.—Have a care of evil thoughts. O, the mischief they have done in the world! Bad thoughts come first, bad words follow after, and bad deeds bring up the close. Strive against them! Watch against them! Pray against them! They prepare the way for the enemy:

> Bad thought's a thief! He acts his part;
> Creeps through the window of the heart;
> And if he once his way can win,
> He lets a hundred robbers in.

BISHOP BOANE.—Bishop Doane, of the diocese of New Jersey, has issued a pamphlet, from which it appears that charges have been prepared against him by the Bishops of Maine, Virginia and Ohio, and by three laymen. The three Bishops requested Bishop D. to call a special convention of his diocese to inquire into the reports against him, which request he treats with considerable indignation, as an unjustifiable interference in the affairs of his diocese, over which they can have no jurisdiction.

THE JAPAN SQUADRON.—It is said that this squadron will take out, in addition to its regular armament, about twenty beautiful brass guns, fitted for boat or land service, from each of which nine shots can be discharged every minute. This fact, connected with the unusual number of marines, looks as if something more than ordinary naval duty is expected of the squadron.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—The Ohio State Temperance Convention met at Columbus on the 25th ult. The attendance was very large, nearly eight hundred regular delegates being present.

SHREVEPORT CORRESPONDENCE.

MAIL DERANGEMENTS—DEPRESSION—SPRING—SPIRITUAL HUSBANDRY—BIBLE HOUSE—SEED STORE OF MORAL TRUTH—BIBLE CONSERVATISM.

Several weeks have elapsed since the Advocate made us a visit, and we are longing for its appearance "more than they that watch for the morning." The mails between this city and New Orleans are always in a snarl. There are two routes—one by land and one by water—and, as usual, where there are several ways of doing a thing, it is not done at all. Our postmasters, steamboat captains and stage contractors are unceasingly quarreling over the work and falling out about the spoils: whilst the people are made the passive and helpless victims of their neglect and selfishness. Last summer we were thirty days without news, owing to a dispute between your postmaster and the boatmen about the rates of transportation, and at present we are suffering a dearth of news because the postmaster at Alexandria will not send the mail bags around the falls to the boats, and the captains refuse to send for them. Whoever is to be blamed in this matter, it is certain that the postal arrangements should be reformed and these difficulties obviated.

Owing to the continued low water only a few hundred bales of cotton have been shipped, and business of every kind is very much depressed. There are now nearly thirty thousand bales here in store, with scarcely any prospect of its reaching the New Orleans market for months to come. Our town has suffered to its utmost capacity during the past year, and so far the present: and unless Providence shall speedily send us navigation and good crops, commercial disasters innumerable may be looked for.

The weather is dry and balmy, and spring in reality, with her usual heralds of bursting buds and frequent blossoms, is already here. The planters, thrice baffled and disappointed in this section of the State, are preparing the ground and putting in their crops, hoping against hope that Heaven will give the increase. I never can look upon the various and interesting operations of agriculture, without observing the analogies which obtain between natural and spiritual husbandry. The sower going forth to sow with implicit faith in the complicated providences which are to restore his seed, with its increase of thirty, sixty and an hundred fold, illustrates, with much felicity, the duty of those who have a dispensation of the Gospel committed to them. The tares that spring up with the wheat, and the labor of successful culture, find too plain an application in the chequered miscellanies of the pastor's flock, and in his pains-taking and toilsome guardianship of the Church of Christ. The planter rarely, if ever, fails altogether; his expectations may not be fully realized; but he reaps, to some extent, the reward of his exertions. In like manner the faithful preacher never sows the word of God wholly in vain. He may accomplish less than he could wish—less than he could hope—but truth, especially Divine truth, has a tenacity of germination, which the most untoward circumstances can not entirely destroy.

God's husbandry, however, unlike any other, is cosmopolitan, in its character. Probably nature furnishes no parallel in this respect. Her fruits and plants and flowers are of local adaptation. Those which flourish in the temperate zones wither in the tropics, and the peculiar growth of the tropics is scorched in the equatorial latitudes. But the Bible is indigenous to every soil, in the sense that its principles take root in all.

The Southwest has abundant reason to congratulate herself over the prospective erection of a Bible House in your city. It will be a mammoth seed store of moral and religious truth—the alone pure and unmixed variety. It is fortunate for the honest and simple minded mass, that such a variety is somewhere to be obtained, freed from the degenerating fellowship of sectarian comments, and the paralyzing touch of scholastic dogmatism. Leaving out of view the other and valuable objects of this institution, the American Bible Society is undoubtedly the strongest existing bulwark of evangelical orthodoxy. Here the incomparable version of our English forefathers is kept in sacred isolation, whilst it is guarded with jealous care and ceaseless vigilance by the united hosts of the Protestants. So long as this shall be the case, the sincere inquirer after truth, confused and bewildered by the perplexities of polemic divinity, can turn to the law and to the testimonies for relief. However high and contradictory sectarian views may run, the Bible, thus guarded, will always remain an acknowledged standard to which all may appeal. Sects may arise and corrupt and pervert the truth—they may stray so far from the [illegible] of similarity, but the Bible will still be safe—a tower of strength and light to which the erring may return. Let the Bible Society be torn into fragments, as some have aimed to do; let every sect furnish itself with as much of the spoils as suits its purpose; let the Baptist take from thence his water font; the Episcopalian his sacramentarianism and apostolic succession; the Calvinist his predestination and decrees; and the Arminian his free grace, and we betide the cause of our common Christianity! The influence of a Bible, acknowledged by all, is eminently conservative, and tends more than any thing else—to preserve the purity and integrity of the faith.

Regarding the Society in this single aspect, shall we not say, success to the Bible House of New Orleans! Let its foundations be laid amidst the united prayers and songs of the people of God, and let its wall stand for ever.

February 20. WOODMAN.

NORTHERN CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WEATHER—CHANGED PRESIDING ELDER QUARTER—PHILADELPHIA MOVEMENT—STATE OF THE CHURCH—TEMPERANCE.

MR. EDITOR: Since I wrote you last the weather has changed from a severe cold to a chilly, disagreeable state, such as we frequently experience in March. Snow has fallen within a few days, so that at present we have sleighing, but it will not continue long. The Yankees are resolved to improve it while it lasts. The poor steeds will no doubt rejoice when the snow has melted away, for they have been taxed beyond their strength to gratify the vain desires of pleasure takers.

Our rivers and harbors are cleared of ice, and navigation is unobstructed. Business is resuming its wonted energy. New life has been thrown into all departments of enterprise, and now, as we walk the streets of our large towns and cities, all is bustle and apparent confusion. It is characteristic of the Yankees to be driving at something, though their labors may be of little benefit to themselves or others.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Our winter has been highly favorable to the ice trade. Who would have thought, a few years since, that the Yankees would have gone into the ice business! And strange as it may appear, it is now one of the great branches of trade in New England. The first cargo of ice was shipped from Boston in 1802, and was sent to St. Pierre. The business was soon suspended, and not resumed till 1815, from which time, up to 1832, it was almost entirely in the hands of one man; and in the latter year the shipments amount only to about five thousand tons. In 1848, over forty-three thousand tons were shipped to ports in our own country, extending from Philadelphia to New Orleans, and over seventeen thousand tons to foreign ports, of which nearly seven thousand tons were sent to the East Indies. These shipments for 1848 occupied 326 vessels, 115 of which were ships and barks, 70 brigs, and the balance smaller vessels, and the amount paid for freight was nearly one hundred thousand dollars. The total business, including freights and profits, that year, amount to nearly four hundred thousand dollars. Since that time the business has vastly increased, and probably not less than half a million of tons of ice will be cut and housed the present season. The ice trade is carried on most extensively in Charlestown and Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The Californin fever has increased among us recently. Large numbers are on their way, and multitudes are about starting for the gold regions. Many are now taking their families with them, for the purpose of making California their permanent home. These are generally respectable people, and will exert a good influence in that new country. Most that have previously gone to California have done but little in getting gold; a few have done well, and returned. To get gold, labor is required, whether in New England or California.

Several questions have been agitated among us of late touching the government of the Church. Among these is the Presiding Elder question. Some think that this part of our system needs a change, or modification. A variety of views have been presented, some contending that the P. E. should have charge of a circuit or station, and visit his district, which shall consist of three or four charges, as the case may be, occasionally, as circumstances may require. Others think that the Conferences should consist of about two districts, and let the P. E. visit each circuit and station two or three times a year. But a large majority, we believe, are satisfied with the office as it is. All they want is, that suitable men should fill the office—men who will labor for the good of the Church and the salvation of souls. Men who have gifts to superintend and cultivate should not be placed in this responsible position; if they prefer agriculture to saving souls, let them follow the former, but not place them in the most important and responsible offices of the Church, while most of their time is devoted to secular employment. The ministry should be devoted to one work, viz., saving souls, but when it becomes connected with worldly callings, the cause of God suffers, and the people will become dissatisfied. Our opinion is that the next General Conference will leave the office where it now is, but perhaps suggest to the Bishops the importance of putting the right kind of men into it.

The Philadelphia movement is receiving some attention in this section, and with many finds a strong sympathy. The subject has been pretty freely discussed in Zion's Herald, and from all we can learn, does not meet with a general approval. The general opinion is, that our laymen ought to have more to do in the affairs of the Church, especially in its financial department, but they think so to alter the constitution of the Church as to admit of lay delegations into the General and Annual Conferences, would in effect destroy the itineraney. The matter will probably come before the General Conference, and be discussed in some way, but we apprehend it will be a long time before the change asked by our brethren in Philadelphia will be effected. Still the matter should be candidly examined, and the brethren asking for the change should be treated with kindness and respect.

Many glorious revivals are in progress among us; but the Church is too cold and worldly. The consequence is, that the converts, figling their way into a cold Church, soon lose their spiritual enjoyment, or entirely "fall away," which is often the case. The Church needs a resurrection to life and spiritual activity. The Christian Church should be a revival Church. "full of faith and the Holy Ghost." Methodism has done much in New England; it has entered every nook and corner of these States, and infused spiritual life and power into all the evangelical churches; but at present it needs more of its original energy and power. There is danger of its partaking too much of the spirit of other churches: of its seeking the popular favor of the rich and great. The Methodists are making in numbers and influence with the other leading denominations here, and in some instances the Methodists are foremost in wealth, though it is not generally the case. When they were few in number, generally poor, and almost universally persecuted, their success was great. They met their enemies and vanquished them—they were mighty, powerful and successful. Now, with their thousands and wealth and fine churches, it is to be feared they will in a measure lose their original zeal and entire devotedness of the great work of to spreading Scriptural holiness among the people. Signs of this spiritual declension are seen, but we pray God that they may soon disappear before a general out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon the churches.

The temperance cause, to which I referred in my last, is prospering. The Maine law is now all the rage, and will undoubtedly soon be placed on all the statute books of the New England States. But I must close for the present.

TRAVELER.

February 25, 1852.

EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.—The Washington Telegraph says that a Mrs. Hodge, residing between that city and Marlboro', Maryland, on Sunday, received a severe kick from a horse, and the latter husband immediately started for a physician, but got drunk before he had performed the errand and so his poor wife died of her injury without receiving any surgical aid.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: By request, I take my pen to chronicle the death of Brother JOHN N. FARMER, formerly of Union Parish, La., who died in this city on the 2d instant, aged about 32 years.

I have been familiar with him for the past few months, and conversed with him during his illness. I might—were it not that all true Christians live and die well—say much. Bro. Farmer, in delicate health for months, in the latter part of December was attacked with erysipelas, which, assuming a typhoid form, terminated his earthly existence on the 2d inst. When we organized a church here, he presented his letter, and we ever afterward found him a consistent Christian. At the class and prayer-meeting his seat was occupied, and oft would he pray, "O Lord, make us faithful Christians, that whether we die in California, on our way home, or after we get there, we may die at our posts."

A short time before he died he asked him of his prospects. He assured me that he was going to heaven. He then gave us some directions with regard to his temporal affairs; requested me to write to his brother and tell him "to meet him in heaven." After which he lingered but a short time, when the spirit was dismissed to Paradise. His body sleeps on the Sierra Nevada. May Heaven sanctify this dispensation to the good of his afflicted relatives and friends.

J. F. HARTIE.

Nevada City, Cal., 16th Jan., 1852.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

For Columbus District, Alabama Conference.

Eutaw	Sat and Sunday,	February 21 and 22
Eastland and Pine Grove	Sat. & Sund.,	28 and 29
Columbus Station	March	6 and 7
Athens Circuit	"	13 and 14
Mount Zion Circuit	"	20 and 21
Columbus Circuit	"	27 and 28
Bartlett's Circuit	April	3 and 4
Jacksonville and Carrollton	"	10 and 11
Greene	"	17 and 18

GEO. SMYLIE, P. E.

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

On Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference.

Baton Rouge	March 20 and 21
Bayou Sara	March 27 and 28
Concordia Circuit	April 3 and 4
Watertown	April 10 and 11
St. Joseph	April 17 and 18
Richmond and Madison	April 24 and 25
Natchez	May 1 and 2
Providence	May 15 and 16

W. E. DOSS

FIRST ROUND OF QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

On Bloomingdale District, Alabama Conference.

Blount Circuit, at Bristers Cove	March 6 and 7
Lebanon Circuit, at Lebanon	March 13 and 14
Sand Mountain Mission, at Pine Grove	March 20 and 21
Ashville, at Scales	March 27 and 28
Harpersville, at Harpersville	April 3 and 4
Warrior, Miss., at Holly Springs	April 10 and 11
Walkee, Miss., at Jasper	April 17 and 18
Elyerville, Miss., at Centre	May 1 and 2

L. B. MCDONALD, P. E.

California Mission.—(Miss. Conference.)

Received of Rev. H. Booth, of Cole's Creek Circuit..... $25 00

Advocate Office, March 6,

* * * Persons making remittances will please see that they are acknowledged.

By Rev J. W. Shipman (n. s.) Dr. H. Ford, Burkeville, Texas..... $ 2 50
(N. S.) Rev. H. Powell, Jasper, Texas..... 2 50
Rev. T. H. Russell, on account..... 5 00
Capt. Robinson, 2 extra copies, N. O..... 5 00
By Rev T. G. W. Price (n. s.) N. O. d. Sinky, Marion, Ala. Less 50c..... 2 00
By Rev J. A. Clements (n. s.) James Watts, (n. s.) Miss. M. A. Scott, Berkeley, Miss..... 5 00
By Rev D. A. J. Parker; Rev Thos. Owens, Rocky Springs, Miss. Less $2 50..... 2 50
By Rev W. H. Crenshaw: N. R. Knox, Mrs. H. Williams, Baton Rouge, La. Less $5..... 2 50
(N. S.) A. D. Camp, Bethlehem, Ala. Less 50c..... 2 00
By Rev. J. Abney, for self, Mt. Enterprise, Texas..... 2 50
(N. S.) Isaiah Hudson..... 2 50
By Rev. J. Murchison (n. s.) Charles Pascoe, Woodville, Mi. Less $2 50..... 2 50
By Rev J. L. Cotton: (n. s.) Mrs. E. McCurdy, Selma, Ala. Less $2 50..... 2 50
(N. S.) T. Creswell, N. O..... 2 50
Mrs. S. B. Thomas, Jackson, Miss..... 2 50
By Rev R. Alexander (n. s.) C. C. Tolson, New Berne, Ala. Less $2 50..... 2 50
By B. Barefield, P. M. (n. s.) James Sample, Gilmer, Texas..... 2 50
(N. S.) Miss Malvina D. Morgan, Mississippi City..... 2 50
By Rev H. L. Nash: H. G. Roberts, Edward's Depot, Miss. C. Pecha, Clinton, Mi. Less $3 50..... 1 50
By Rev A. Skinner (n. s.) D. Stout, Evergreen, Ala. (n. s.) S. S. Howell, S. Butler, Ala. Less $5..... 2 50
By Rev. T. M. Bateman: (n. s.) J. H. B. Field, Columbus, Mi. Less $2 50..... 2 50
By Rev J. W. Ellis, Jr. (n. s.) James D. Imug, Cahawesville, Ala. Less $2 50..... 2 50
Rev W. A. Ferguson (n. s.) Mrs. E. M. Beasley, Napoleonville, La..... 2 50
By Rev. H. Sterns (n. s.) A. T. Shepherd, Bloomsboro, Ala..... 2 50
(N. S.) B. H. Cross, Hickory Grove, Ala..... 2 50
By Rev D. Shuman (n. s.) Dr. C. Irby, Montpelier Ala. (n. s.) Col. J. K. Bryan, Jefferson, Ala.; (n. s.) Elijah Curley, Jefferson, Ala., Less $7 50..... 5 00
Rev. L. A. Reed, on account of subs credited..... 15 00
By Rev E. W. Griswold (n. s.) Wm. Dunbar, Trinity, La.; (n. s.) H. Stampley, Oakly, La. (n. s.) Wm. Murphy, (n. s.) Martha Boutlier, Harrisonburg, La.; J. C. Cockerlina, Waisburg La., Less $7 50..... 5 00
By W. Bowers (n. s.) T. A. Scales, Dr. A. W. Jones, Brownsville, Ala.; D. L. Myers, Livingston, Ala., Less $7 50..... 5 00
By Rev Wm. Vaughn (n. s.) martin Dominick Greensboro, Ala., Less $2 50..... 2 50
By Rev G. W. Martin: H. M. Baisey, Tuscumbia, Ala., Less 50c..... 2 50
Mrs. C. P. Danks, to March 6, 1851..... 5 00

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

On this universally interesting subject, we take the following remarks from a secular paper of this city:

Industrial Fair in New Orleans

We hope our citizens will not forget that it is proposed the Fair shall take place in this city in the month of May, 1853. Some action should be shortly taken by the public, and immediately after the election, by the authorities, to invite the attention of the entire South-west to the project, and to induce them, planters, mechanics, inventors, manufacturers, to prepare to forward articles to the Fair. The members of the Legislature of Alabama, gave the project a cordial endorsement, and it is now for New Orleans to take some action in the premises, by way of initiative. A preliminary convention of delegates is to meet in this city in May next, and it would be well for our State and city authorities to see that we are creditably represented. It is designed that the proposed Fair shall be annually renewed at Mobile, Natchez, Memphis, or some other Southern point.

The idea seems to us an excellent one and the project in every way feasible. The Fair would most probably gather together, from the different sections of the South, much valuable material for comparison and improvement. The resources of the South and its agencies of cultivation and production are extraordinarily obscure to most of us. Men, only a hundred miles apart, use different implements for the same purpose not infrequently, and know nothing very accurately of the particular machinery or implements used by each other. Of course, there may be merits in both which would suggest to the practical and experienced man the design of a more useful piece of machinery. Where several different instruments to accomplish the same end in Arts, mechanics or agriculture should be brought into the comparison, they would produce a more perfect result. Besides, a hundred things, now but partially known, would have their merits practically brought forward, thus benefiting all parties.

We do not anticipate that the project will be very brilliant at the outset. We may have no "Mountain of Light," such as the Koh-i-noor diamond; but we will have made a commencement in bringing the peculiar industry of the South—peculiar from ours being the only "planting" section in the world—to a comparison of experience and an interchange of improvements.

The Fair, if the project be urged with spirit, will bring an immense mass of the people of the South to be present here, and see such a novelty as the first great Southern Industrial Exhibition! The great commercial Emporium of the South, and entirely dependent upon its advantages, prosperity, the city of New Orleans could scarcely slight an enterprise so interesting in its character and so important in its aims—to say nothing of the more immediate object of bringing a great throng to our city, to quicken its commerce and make a brief but busy epoch in its history.

JUDICIAL WISDOM!—A decision which bears rather heavily on the feminine population, was decided in the Supreme Court yesterday. We give it in full:

Mary Eliza Yates, wife, vs. T. Dwight Lougland. Appeal from East Baton Rouge. Rosich delivered the opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff has sued her husband for a separation from bed and board, on account of cruel treatment, as Mrs. Dorsint and Mrs. Bore did before her; and the evidence shows her to be, though yet in her teens, fully equal in vigor and strong mindedness. Her traits and gestes remind one of those stern matrons of the Salonian race who built the temple of the "Dea vici pleca," where they compelled their injured and down-trodden husbands to kneel and pray that they might be opposed.

Unbridled and abusive from her wedding day, habitually calling her husband names unfit for ears polite and vilifying him on all occasions to his neighbors; it it were true, that on one or two occasions he forgot himself for a moment which is only shown by bear-ay evidence he might well plead as an excuse the provocation given to him. It is shown beyond a doubt that, in a room of pitiful and forgiving disposition and that he bore with Christian patience the ills of his domestic life.

We are of opinion that this demand is reconvention is fully made out, and that he is entitled to a separation from bed and board.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed, and that there be judgment for defendant for his reconventional demand, and that he is hereby separated in bed and board from his wife Mary Eliza Yates. Plaintiff to pay costs in both courts.

RESOLUTION OF THE AUDITOR.—By a resolution of the Senate, the Auditor of Public Accounts was required to furnish a statement to the Senate of the Receipts and Expenditures of the State from 1820 to the present time. Below is the reply of the Auditor, accompanied by his official statement:

A. B. PEACHY, President of the Senate:

In answer to a resolution of the Senate, requesting the Auditor of Public Accounts to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, the amount of the Annual Receipts and Expenditures from 1820 to 1852, I have the honor to transmit the accompanying statement.

Very respectfully, L. DEBARRIS, Auditor Pub. Accts.

STATEMENT showing the amount of the Annual Receipts and Expenditures from the year 1820 to 1852.

Years.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Excess.	Receipts.
1820	$507,290 71	$310,056 38	$197,234 33
1821	503,168 67	364,848 60	138,320 07
1822	467,553 90	372,343 88	95,210 02
1823	482,377 99	394,659 30	87,718 69
1824	582,251 82	500,867 15	81,384 67
1825	456,699 34	396,394 75	60,304 59
1826	561,825 36	501,531 37	63,294 99
1827	852,216 57	758,881 91	93,334 86
1828	1,107,802 14	986,032 32	120,770 12
1829	809,504 20	811,121 68	85,482 57
1840	778,224 24	642,000 92	136,224 22
1841	758,500 83	700,822 78	57,677 05
1842	588,716 65	501,591 23	87,125 42
1843	648,509 64	560,065 54	84,237 21
1844	872,177 61	616,084 98	255,492 63
1845	3,602,889 72	3,510,818 39	352,071 33
1846	1,245,715 94	985,813 28	301,785 61
1847	1,418,856 63	675,082 06	263,115 69
1848	1,351,265 17	872,702 50	478,562 67
1849	828,965 91	329,758 00	299,200 92
1850	1,016,441 56	1,001,859 30	325,426 47
1851	1,101,673 01	852,787 54	348,886 37

L. BOUDOUIN, Auditor of Public Accounts.

DISTURBANCE.—Mr. John Swiler, son of the well-known Capt. Joseph Swiler of this city, who was severely scalded and otherwise injured by the explosion of the towboat Mary Kingsland on Sunday last, died about three o'clock yesterday morning, at his residence in Gretna Mr. S. who was a Bailee pilot, was a passenger on the towboat coming up to see his family. This is the third time the Mary Kingsland has exploded.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following are the returns of this institution for the week ending with Saturday: Admitted 374, discharged 355; deaths, 40; remaining, 1014.

ROBBERY.—A countryman, recently arrived in this city states that he was robbed on Saturday of $125, and of a quantity of clothing which he had purchased at an auction store. His story is exactly like that recorded by us a hundred times—with the mere variation of names—toughing the proceedings at mock auction establishments. He bought a number of coats for several times their value at the instance of a bystander, who agreed to take them off his hands at an advance. He would exchange with him. He was then inveigled into a low drinking shop where one man seized and ran off with his recent purchases, while three or four confederates robbed him. The sufferer, in this instance, is more stupid than those of his class generally, for he cannot tell the shop at which he purchased the clothing, nor the grocery at which the robbery was committed.

MRS. BENNETT ON THE CATHOLIC POLICY.—The New York Herald contains interesting letters from France and Spain, written by the wife of the proprietor of that paper. In respect to Louis Napoleon, she represents him as being far more popular in France than he is supposed to be by the American people. She says that "there is no truth in the stories told about his being afraid of assassination. He goes about freely, and almost carelessly, and is everywhere well received. He has more moral and popular power than is generally known or understood in America." And this is attributed to his judicious use of patronage, which is said to embrace millions of the people. Another source of his popularity is stated to be the increased security which his coup d'etat has given to men of wealth, who were in dread of having agrarianism introduced by the socialists. She says, "acts of extreme severity, viewed at a distance, and unexplained here, seem to be quite different things, where it is believed they are called for and required by circumstances and necessity."

EXPLOSION OF THE TOWBOAT MARY KINGSLAND.—The towboat Mary Kingsland, Capt. Phillips, on her way up the river having in tow a ship bark two brigs, and a schooner, when at Poverty Point, this morning at six o'clock exploded her three starboard boilers, killing Geo. Heiney, the second engineer, also two firemen, and one deck hand. Mr. John Swiler, one of the Bailee pilots was seriously injured; Captain Phillips slightly, also one fireman and two deck hands slightly injured. The Mary Kingsland is very much shattered in the hull and upper decks, and her machinery much broken. The towboat Star was dispatched immediately to bring up the wreck. The Phœnix brought up the bodies of Mr. Wilson (clerk board) and Mr. James Watters, (fireman). Also two of the wounded, Capt. Phillips and Mr. Swiler.

NEW INSURANCE COMPANY.—The Mississippi Mutual Insurance Company" is the title of a company recently formed, and about to go into operation at Aberdeen, Miss. It is to have power to deal in exchange, issue promissory notes, discount, and in short, to have most of the privileges of a bank.

MRS. GAINES'S CASE.—In alluding to the case of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines which has recently been decided against her in the United States Supreme Court, a Washington paper says:

She commenced the prosecution of her claim, as the daughter of Daniel Clark, to his real estate, about nineteen years ago, when she was Mrs. Whitney. Subsequently, she married General Gaines, who espoused her cause as well as her, and devoted his fortune to its prosecution. General Gaines expended, to the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, the proceeds of two estates which he owned—one at Louisville and the other in Tennessee—which he sold for about $100,000. He also expended his pay and emoluments, amounting to about six thousand dollars a year. Some of Mrs. Gaines's friends have also advanced considerable sums in her aid, being confident that her title was clear and would be established.

In the Paterson case, which was a factitious one, Mrs. Gaines succeeded. At that time Gen. Gaines was tendered an offer of compromise, which he refused. He subsequently again refused it, when he was in a state of actual destitution, saying he would have a complete victory or none. In the case against Relf and others, the decision of the Circuit Court was against Mrs. Gaines and the Supreme Court has affirmed it.

A CORRECTION.—A paragraph is going the rounds of the newspapers, stating that it was the answer of Gen. Lafayette to the address which, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, I made to him upon the occasion of his last visit to this country, was prepared by me, though pronounced by him. This is a mistake, which, in justice both to his memory and to myself, ought to be corrected. It was composed by himself as the style abundantly shows, on the morning of his reception by the House of Representatives he breakfasted with me alone, and I stated or read to him the address which I intended to make to him on that day. The expression occurs in it, that he was in the midst of posterity; on reading which I remarked to him that it would afford him a fine opportunity to pay a handsome compliment, which he might do by saying, Nor and that he found himself surrounded by the same patriotic men attached to liberty, devoted to free institutions, and with all the high attributes which distinguished his revolutionary compatriots. The General seemed pleased with the idea, adopted it, and incorporated it in his answer. This trivial incident could have been the only foundation of the paragraph. H. CLAY.

Washington, Friday, Feb. 20

SALE OF A VALUABLE PICTURE.—Leutze's great national picture of Washington Crossing the Delaware was sold at New York on the 21st ult. for Ten thousand dollars.

From Texas.

By the mail last evening of the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Lawless, we received Galveston papers to the 27th of February.

LEGISLATIVE.—Among the acts passed by the late Legislature was one to incorporate the People's Line of Mail Steamers. It is expected that the company incorporated by the act will be understood to be composed of their corporate character, to sustain competition with Harris & Morgan's line. They are required, within a certain time to have three or four low pressure steamers plying between New Orleans, Galveston and Matagorda Bay. The fare between Galveston and Newtorleans is limited to ten dollars, the freight between the same ports is fifty cents per barrel. An act was also passed relinquishing to the counties of the State the State taxes for the years 1852 and 1853.

BRAZOS RIVER.—The Civilian of the 27th says: The river Brazos is so low by the during Friday and Saturday last, that boats could not get to Columbia. There is no doubt that it will continue unnavigable for steamboats throughout the spring.

Washington's birthday was celebrated in due style at Houston and several other points.

ARRANGEMENT.—Henry D. Platt, Boston has been appointed surveyor of the Customs for the Port of Corpus Christi, Texas.

MURDER.—A duel occurred on board the steamship Cincinnati, on the evening of the 21st, while she was lying at Lavaca. The crew got hold of a decanter of brandy with which they got drunk and finally refused to do duty. When the Captain attempted to enforce obedience to his orders, he was assaulted and struck. Two of the men were arrested and have been sent to Galveston for trial. The names are Jacob Smith and Patrick Priddy.

SUICIDE AVERTED.—The Reveon of the 27th says: The steamer Dillon struck a snag about three miles below this city last night, while on her way from Galveston to this city, and narrowly escaped sinking.

NEW ORLEANS ARENA.—The San Antonio Ledger of the 14th ult. says: "We are creditably informed that our fellow citizen Major G. T. Howard, has been appointed Indian Agent in place of Judge Rollins, deceased. The Major has lived for many years upon this frontier, and has had much experimental knowledge of Indian character, and we have no doubt but that he will prove an efficient agent."

AN OCCURRENCE FIRE.—A fire occurred recently in Washington which destroyed property to the amount of $20,000. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

LATE FROM PIEDRAS NEGRAS.—The San Antonio Western Texan of the 19th ult. has the following:

Mr. James T. Pearock and six others arrived here on the 12th instant eighteen days from Presidio del Norte from which we learn that the Mescalero and Apache Indians were almost daily committing depredations in that vicinity, plundering the inhabitants and driving off their stock.

We learn from Mr. Pearock, that Gen. Cordero, Governor of the State of Chihuahua, had entered into a treaty with the Comanches, by which the latter have stipulated to kill 50 of the Mescaleros and Apaches. More than about two weeks before he left, a party of Mexicans and the Comanche chief Labbock, with six of his warriors, had just returned from an expedition against the Mescaleros, having taken four scalps, and captured some 150 head of animals.

The report of the country as being in a miserable condition. The Indians are constantly crossing the Rio Grande into Mexico, where they rob and kill the inhabitants in all directions with impunity and their forces the river into Texas.

Mr. Pearock is of opinion that there is a large number of Indians between the Pecos and the Rio Grande, divided into small depredatory bands, making incursions into Mexico and the lower Rio Grande valley.

PERUVIAN.—The Colorado Tribune of the 19th says: "Thos. J. Crockett, a nephew of the celebrated "be sure you're right then go ahead," David, died at San Augustine, in the Red-lands, a few days since, aged 80 years. The deceased was an enterprising merchant of that city, where he was highly esteemed for his industrious and honorable dealings with all whom he came in contact. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity."

INFLUENZA.—The San Antonio Herald speaks of a disease resembling influenza or grippe, and in some instances assuming a pneumonic type, prevailing to a considerable extent in that section of country. Several very sudden deaths had occurred from it. Several similar cases have occurred in the vicinity of Matagorda.

Foreign Details by the Cambria.

ENGLAND.

Parliament was opened on Tuesday, February 3. Lord Palmerston entered and took his seat unnoticed, and was passed without recognition by Lord John Russell and Sir Francis Baring. After the address had been moved by Sir William Bulkeley, Sir Benjamin Hall called upon Lord John Russell for some explanation in reference to the resignation of Lord Palmerston. As we have already published by telegraph, the principal cause assigned was the course of the noble lord in reference the coup d'etat of Louis Napoleon.

The Duke of Wellington had approved Sir Harry Smith's conduct in the Kaffir war. The fault was that he had not opened roads through the woods.

The Earl of Ellenborough gave notice of questions regarding the expiration of the East India Company's charter.

Right Hon Robert Vernon Smith has been appointed Secretary at War, in the room of Hon. Fox Maule, appointed President of the Board of Control. Mr. Smith is Representative for Northampton.

Sir William Molesworth is to have a Ministerial appointment.

Lord Broughton retires from the Board of Control, and Mr Fox Maule takes his place.

It is stated that the Marquis of Lansdowne will be specially raised to an Irish dukedom.

The inquiry into the Amazon accident is concluded. The report is not yet made known.

A VILLAGE SWEPT AWAY.—One Hundred Persons Missing.—The Liverpool Albion, of Tuesday and Wednesday last, have received most alarming destruction of life and property in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire. One truly awful calamity has occurred at the village of Holmfirth, near Huddersfield, by the overflow of a reservoir used for supplying the woolen mills and a number of the dwellings in the neighborhood with water, and known as the Bilone Reservoir. On Thursday morning about one o'clock it burst with a tremendous roar, and the whole torrent down the valley with terrific force, carrying away an immense mill, built of stone, with all its heavy machinery, etc., several outbuildings, two rows of new buildings at Holmfirth, and part of the village of Hinchcliffe Mills. Nearly all the inhabitants were asleep at the time, and were swept to a considerable distance, a number of bodies having been taken from the river fifteen miles from the spot. One hundred persons are missing, and more than sixty dead bodies are said to be lying at the inns.

In the neighborhood of Manchester the rivers were so swollen by the rain that many of them overflowed their banks, submerging all the low grounds in the neighborhood. A great portion of the Peel-parks mill's water was. A large portion of Lower Broughton was also submerged the ground in some places being covered to a depth of nine feet. On the south side of Manchester, near the lower part of Oxford street, a good deal of property was destroyed, and the inhabitants of some of the houses in Little Ireland were compelled to take refuge in the upper stories, in consequence of the basements being flooded several of the mills in the neighborhood had to be stopped in consequence of the lower stories being flooded. A reservoir belonging to Mr. J. Brooks, at the Heaphill Cotton-mill, near Stockport, is said to have burst its banks destroying machinery and other property to the extent of nearly £1000.

HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—London, Saturday, Feb. 7, 1852. The House of Lords met yesterday at 5 o'clock, p. m.

The Earl of Malmesbury called the attention of the House to the report that a quantity of powder had been exported from this country to the Cape, for the use of the enemy. He wished to know whether steps had been taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent the continuation of this baneful traffic, and for the punishment of those concerned in it.

Lord Grey stood up to reply. But on receiving information of the existence of the practice he had written a dispatch to the Governor of the Cape, directing him to take measures for its effectual suppression. He expressed his surprise and regret that this illegal trade had been allowed to subsist—considering that the laws for its prevention were so numerous and severe.

In reply to the Marquis of Londonderry Lord Grey said that for reasons stated in the dispatches with the unanimous consent of his colleagues he had felt it his duty, and it was the most painful he ever had to perform to advise the recall of Sir Harry Smith.

With respect to the successor he would only say he had applied to the Commissioner-in-chief for his advice in the matter, and it was on his recommendation that Major Gen. Cathcart had been appointed to the post.

The House adjourned at 6¼ o'clock.

FRANCE.

The Electoral Law is published. Each Department is to return one Deputy for every 35,000 electors and one more if the number exceeds 25,000. The suffrage is direct and universal, and the vote is given secret. All Frenchmen of 21 years of age, possessed of civil and political rights, are electors, and all electors of 25 years of age are eligible. A special law will regulate the mode of voting in the army for the election of the President. The number of Deputies is to be 260. The Electoral College will meet on Sunday, or a festival day if possible. No armed force can, without the consent of the Electoral College, be present at the sittings or near the place where the Assembly meets. The Electoral Colleges are convened for the 29th February.

Col. Vaudrey is appointed Governor of the Tuileries, with the rank of General Officer of Brigade. The general decoration of the members of the Legion of Honor is re-established as adopted by the Emperor.

Eighteen hundred Toulon convicts had consented to form agricultural colonies in Cayenne.

The Paris Bar will protest against the tribunals confiscation. The President says that the decrees does not embrace the Chapel at Brèux, the family vault of Louis Philippe.

A decree, just published specifies that when it may become necessary for one or more Councils of State to be nominated to a committee, or examination, or take part in the execution of any law, such nomination shall be made directly in virtue of a decree of the President of the Republic.

The Moniteur declares that the intention attributed to the Government of interference with the insurance establishments, or of imposing a tax on income or rent is false, as well as other similar reports.

The resignation of M. Dupin as Attorney-General to the Court of Cessation is accepted, and he is replaced by M. Delangle Ex-Attorney General to the Court of Appeal.

M. Millet, chief of the insurgents at Bourg, is sentenced to death.

A scene took place at the theatre which produced a considerable sensation among the persons present. A man was arrested in the hall when in the act of speaking violently against the President of the Republic. When conducted by the police agents outside the hall, the man arrested as once made himself known to those as one of their colleagues. That declaration however, did not prevent the others from carrying him before the Commissary of Police—probably to calm down the emotion which the whole incident had produced. This is the first exploit of the new Minister of Police.

The military commissions instituted to judge the insurgents of December, are to cease their operations throughout all France. They are replaced in every department by a mixed commission consisting of the Prefect, Military Commandant, and Procureur General, which will decide with the shortest delay on the fate of the accused.

The Duke of Aumale and the Prince de Joinville have addressed a letter to the Legislative Assembly, requesting the sequestrators of their father (thanking them and the [illegible] of most of all parties who had resisted the infamous [illegible].

General Cavaignac is writing his memoirs.

SPAIN.

The Spanish papers protest against the threats of Gen. Concha has again resigned the post of Captain-General of Cuba and the Government will accept his resignation.

The dagger recovered from the wound inflicted on the late attempt to kill her. It appears that when the assassin, Martin Merino, approached the queen he knelt down and being in clerical robes, she was in the habit of performing services at the church of San Sebastian here no obstacle was thrown in the way of his design, as it was supposed he had a memorial to present to the queen. Just when she came close up, he suddenly struck at her with great force with a dagger which he had concealed up his sleeve. The queen mechanically put forward her arm to keep the blow off, and providentially that arm was guarded and the blow fell on it, the force of the arm was greatly broken by the contact.

The weapon struck her on the front part of the right side, penetrating the eight several folds of her mantle of velvet and gold and cutting through the stays—the wound [illegible] which diminished the effect of the blow, which [illegible] has not injured any vital organ. The only wound that the knife had been wounded. The assassin at the moment of striking exclaimed, "Come ye three kings" (Take it, you have now got enough!)

The Queen's first thought was for her child. Martina she exclaimed, Que sucede el Infante? (My child!—Is the young heir aware of [illegible])

There was a banquet at court that day. The King Consort drew his sword. One of the royal huissiers struck down the assassin who fell full length, and was secured by the Duke of Tamames and other members of the royal suite. The Queen was taken to her own chamber, where she was immediately surrounded by her ladies and attended to. She was very much agitated for some time.

Martin Merino, who committed this detestable crime was a native of Arnedo, Province of Logrono, sixty three years of age, an ex-Friar of the Franciscan Order but secularized in 1821, on his own application. He was removed last evening in a coach to the Saladero prison, and the cavalry escort who have accompanied him, had some difficulty in preventing the crowd from the palace from doing summary justice on him.

He is generally cool, and evinces not the least compunction for his acts. His only inquiry was: "Is the Queen dead?"—and when told she was not he expressed surprise, and said that he had put her hard enough. At other times he acts admirably to those who speak to him but his general manner is that of a would cynical sneer. He had performed mass at 11 that morning.

There are very contradictory accounts about him. The Lagunas says that he was always of ultra revolutionary ideas, and was in every possible way against the [illegible] Ferdinand VII., and emigrated in 1824, while the Conde Mirasol describes him as a "[illegible] saying that he emigrated as anti Liberal (from 1820 to 1823), that he served as a Captain in the Carlist army during the civil war and came in under the Convention of Bergara. He had been acting at Madrid for some time as assistant-curate of the Parish of San Sebastian and San Milan. He is said to have been engaged in an attempt against the life of Queen Christina during her regency, and to have had in an opportunity for carrying it out. He was executed by the garote on Saturday, Feb 7, and died calmly.

SWEDEN.

A powder magazine at Londeton, near Lidingsham, exploded on the 24th. The shock shattered several thousand panes of glass in the city of Stockholm, particularly in the palace. The magazine contained 2800 cwt. of gunpowder, and the loss is estimated at 114,000 thalers. Two houses only have been tonght among the ruins.

The destruction of the magazine was so complete that it was impossible to find where the building stood. Two workmen were injured by sawing through the iron plate, which guarded the doors when the heat or sparks thereby ocasioned set fire to some grains in the wood-work. In Stockholm it was thought there was a fearful earthquake, and the sittings of the Cabinet Council were for a moment suspended. The persons engaged in sawing were suspected of the prompted by plunder.

TURKEY.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle states that a complete counter-revolution has taken place in the Government of the Sultan Reschid Pacha, the most liberal and enlightened minister ever placed at the head of the affairs of the Ottoman Empire, has been dismissed, and has been succeeded in the Cabinet by a minister who is known to be devoted to the interests of Russia. We find the confirmation of the report, however, in many other papers.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS,

Large Arrival of Gold—Return of the Hermann.

NEW YORK, March 2

The Chagres steamer Crescent City has arrived here, bringing one million three hundred and thirty thousand dollars worth of gold dust.

The Bremen steam packet Hermann had returned to the port in a leaky condition. Having struck on the bar at the entrance of the bay as she left this port.

NewYork Cotton Market.

The Cotton market is inanimate and prices unsettled, but without any quotable change in prices. To-day's sales embrace 2000 bales.

Steamer Baltic at Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 2

The business in both Houses of Congress has been unimportant to-day, both have adjourned over to Wednesday, to attend the grand banquet to be given to-morrow in Board Hall. Collins steamer Baltic, now lying in the Potomac.

The personal controversy between Mr. Rhett, of South Carolina, and Mr. Clemens, of Alabama, has been settled without a duel.

Later from Europe—Arrival of the Steamship America—Cotton Advanced—English Ministry Resigned.

HALIFAX, March 4—12:25 c. m.

The Cunard steamer America has arrived here with dates from Liverpool to the 21st February. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, February 21

There has been an active demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the last steamer, and the sales of the week reach 74,000 bales, of which exporters have taken 5000 and speculators 25,000 bales. The demand has been good from the trade, and freely met by holders. Prices have advanced ¼d ₱ lb., and the quotations are now for Fair Orleans 5¾, Middling Orleans 5. Fair Uplands 5¾, and Middling Uplands 4 13-16d.

Trade in the manufacturing districts has considerably improved since the last steamer. The London Money market is without change. Consols 87¼. Flour is in fair request, and the quotations are for Western Canal 22s 6d, and for Ohio 23s. ₱ bbl.

The Ministry have resigned.

The Gaines Case.

BALTIMORE, March 4

The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Mr.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Capture of the Sea Serpent.

[We do not vouch for the correctness of this story. This is about the time of year such marvelous reports start around. It does'nt hail from Nahant however. The latitude and longitude of it is suspicious. [Ed. N. O. C. Ad.]

SHIP MONONGAHELA, at Sea, Feb 6, 1852

To the Editors of the N.Y. Tribune—A small vessel has just been reported from my masthead; and as she is apparently bound into some of the Northern ports, I intend to speak her, purposely to acquaint through your widely diffused journal, the people of the United States with the fact of the existence and capture of the Sea Serpent—a monster deemed fabulous by many—but the truth of whose existence is forever settled, and I trust I will be excused in saying by Yankee intrepidity.

On the morning of January 13, when in lat. 3 deg. 10 min. S., and long. 131 deg. 50 min. W. the man on the look-out, seated on the fore topmast cross-trees, sang out "White water," and in reply to my "Where away!" said "Two points on the lee-bow." Supposing it to be made by sperm whales, and very anxious to obtain oil, I ordered the ship to be kept off and immediately went aloft with my spy-glass. I will observe that for several days we had been struggling along with very light and baffling winds, but at daylight of the morning of the 13th the wind had drawn to the south southwest, become steady, and threatened to become a gale. I was aloft nearly half an hour before I observed any thing like "white water," and then I presumed it to be made by a school or rather shoal of porpoises, but wishing it to be made certain, I ordered the mate, as it was seven bells, to turn all hands, square in the yards and send out the port studden-sails. It being my breakfast hour, I urged the man to keep both eyes open, and came down, but before I reached the deck my attention was called to the sudden and vehement cry of Onnetu Vanjan, a Marquesan Islander, "O! Look! Look! Me see! Too much! Too much!"

All eyes were instantly directed to the savage, to ascertain where he was looking, and then all eyes turned to the lee-quarter. I just had time to see "black skin" when it disappeared. The native was excited, and in reply to my questions, said, "No whale—too much—too big—too long—me no see all same dat feller—me frald." Not being able to tell which way the animal or fish was bound, I luffed and came aback, ordering the lines in the boats and the crews to "stand by." The horizon was scanned in every direction for nearly an hour, when giving up all hopes I braced forward and went below. The native continued to look with eagerness, pushed on by the observations of the crew, who asserted that he had seen nothing, but he proved the truth of his sight in a few minutes by uttering another cry, and with more vehemence than the first. I rushed on deck, and the first look, not a mile to leeward, rested on the strangest creature I had ever seen in the ocean. It was apparently still, but "sobbing" up and down, as we say of sperm whales. I knew it was not a whale. The head I could not see, but the body had a motion like the waving of a rope, when shaken and held in the hand. Every eye in the ship regarded it attentively, and not a word was spoken or sound uttered. In a few minutes the whole length of the body rose and lay on the water, it was of an enormous length. Presently the extremity or tail moved or vibrated, agitating the water, and then the head rose entirely above the water, and moved sideways slowly, as if the monster was in agony or suffocating. "It is a Sea Serpent," I exclaimed, "stand by the boats." There was a hesitancy, and the Mate said: "Of what use is there lowering for him? we only lose time and gain nothing, besides." I abruptly checked him, and ordered all hands called aft. When they had mustered, I told them I wished to "try" that fellow—I urged them with all the eloquence I possessed, telling them there was but few who believed in the existence of the Sea Serpent, and that a wish had been expressed that a whale-ship might fall in with one, that we could attack him, and should tell of seeing him when we got home, we would be laughed at and derided, and the very first question would be, "Why didn't you try him?" I told them our courage was at stake—our manhood, and even the credit of the whole American Whale Fishery, and concluded by appealing to their cupidity; holding out that we might possibly get into some southern port.

"I do not order one of you to go in the boats," I said, "but who will volunteer?" Let me say to their credit every American in the ship stepped out at once, followed by all but one native and two Englishmen. I ordered the boat-steerers and officers to examine and see that every thing in and about the boats was in perfect order. I had already jumped into my boat when the Serpent began to move quite rapidly, and it was necessary to stand after him. The wind was piping up strongly, but as we gained I continued to carry all sail, hoping to be able to lower before the gale rendered it impossible. The Serpent worked to windward, which compelled me to haul on the wind, and soon after I carried away my forestop gallant mast; this was most unlucky for us, and what was still worse, we lost sight of the monster. We repaired damages with all possible dispatch, and still kept on the wind hoping to see his snakeship. In less than an hour we saw him again, but some ways to windward; soon ascertaining that he partly turned and was headed haft our beam, I put the ship about on the other tack. The wind had increased so much that I was obliged to put a single reef in the fore and mizen topsails. The Serpent disappeared for a few minutes again, but when he rose he was a mile ahead of the ship and going slowly to leeward, having made a complete circuit.

I frankly admit my hopes were feeble ever really capturing him, and the gale made me hesitate about lowering, but the time arrived, the Serpent was still, and we nearly a half mile to windward. I come to with the head yards aback to have a better control of all the ship, and told the ship-keeper to keep close to us, and by no means to lose sight of us for an instant. We lowered, myself taking the lead, and in a few strokes, the wind and sea carrying us to leeward, I told the boat-steerer, James Whittemore, of Vermont, to "stand up;" with calm and cool intrepidity, he laid hold of the iron, (harpoon,) and when I beckoned with a movement of my hand, quick as thought both of his weapons were buried to the socket in the repulsive body before us. I shouted "starn," but there was no visible motion of his snakeship. I shifted ends with the boat-steerer, and cleared away a lance as quick as possible, beckoning them to pull up that I might get a lance, when a movement of the body was visible, and the head and tail of the monster rushed as it were to touch the wound.

The frightfulness of the head, as it approached the boat, filled the crew with terror, and three of them jumped overboard. I instinctively hell out my lance and its sharp point entered the eye—I was knocked over and felt a deep churning of the water around me—I rose to the surface, and caught a glimpse of the writhing body, and was again struck and carried down; I partly lost my consciousness under water, but recovered it when I rose again; in the bloody foam, the Snake had disappeared, and I shouted, "Pick up the line." The third mate, Mr. Benson, caught a light of my line near the end, and bent on his, which in an instant began to be taken out rapidly. The mate picked me up as soon as I rose to the surface, and in a few minutes all were picked up—one was severely bruised and another insensible, but he recovered and both are now well. The Snake had taken my line, the third mate's, and was taking the second mate's, when I ordered the mate to bend on and give his line to the ship. The Snake was sounding, and I cautioned the officers not to hold on too hard for fear of drawing the irons. At first the line went out rapidly, but decreased gradually, nevertheless I was obliged to get up a spare line out of the fore-hold and bend on. For fear that the ship would by its weight on the line draw the irons, I put on several drugs and gave the line to the mate, when it became stationary. There was now out four boats' lines, 225 fathoms in a boat, and two-thirds of another line, 100 fathoms more—in all one thousand fathoms, six feet in a fathom—six thousand feet—better than one mile and an eighth, an enormous depth, and the pressure at that distance is inconceivable.

It was now blowing furiously, and I scarcely dared to carry sail enough to keep the ship up, the boat was in peril, and I was obliged to take the line to the ship again, and run the risk of the irons drawing. I made the end of the line fast, and took in all sail but enough to keep her steady, and waited in alarm the snake's rising. At the parting of the line, or the irons drawing. At 4 P. M., the wind began to shift, which favored us a little; at 5 P. M., it, to our great joy, began to abate.

8 P. M.—a sudden lull; line taut. The night was beautiful, the sky clear, wind scarcely a breathe and sea rapidly falling.

No eye was closed in the ship, we were speculating on our prey. It was evident he was on the bottom. He staid down a long time; but on reflection I considered that was his forte—that he was at home there. At 4 P. M., of the 14th, sixteen hours after he went down, the line began to slack. I had it taken to the windlass, when we got nearly two lines "hand over hand," then there came a strain again. This strain continuing, I told every body to bear a hand and get breakfast, and just before we were through, the cook cried out "Here he is." In no time all were on deck, and sure enough he had risen; but all that was visible was a hunch, apparently the blight of the Snake, where he had been fastened to. I lowered three boats, and we lanced the body repeatedly without eliciting any sign of life.

While we were at work, he gradually rose to the surface, and around him floated what I took to be pieces of his lungs, which we had cut with our lances. To make our work sure, we continued to lance, eagerly seeking for his life, when he drew himself up and we pulled away, and then witnessed the terrific dying struggles of the monster. None of the crew who witnessed that terrible scene will ever forget it—the evolutions of the body were rapid as lightning, seeming like the revolving of a thousand enormous black wheels. The tail and head would occasionally appear in the surging bloody foam, and a sound was heard, so dead, unearthly and expressive of acute agony, that a thrill of horror ran through our veins. The convulsive efforts lasted ten or fifteen minutes, when they suddenly stopped, the head was partly raised—it fell—the body partly turned and lay still. I took off my hat, and nine terrific cheers broke simultaneously from our throats. Our prey was dead.

Luckily he floated buoyantly, and we took him alongside, and while doing so he turned over, lying belly up. Every eye beamed with joy as we looked at him over the rail, and the crew again cheered vociferously, and I joined them. We now held a consultation as to what we should do, and I had requested all hands to offer their opinions. After a short talk, all of us felt convinced that it would be impossible to get him into port, and then we concluded to try and save his skin, head and bones if possible. In the first place, I requested a Scotchman, who could draw tolerably, to take a sketch of him as he lay, and the mate to measure him. It was now quite smooth, and we could work to advantage. As I am preparing a minute description of the Serpent, I will merely give you a few general points. It was a male; the length 108 feet 7 inches; 10 feet 1 inch around the neck; 24 feet 6 inches around the shoulders; and the largest part of the body, which appeared somewhat distended, 49 feet 11 inches. The head was long and flat, with ridges; the bones of the lower jaw separate; the tongue had its end like the head of a heart. The tail ran nearly to a point, on the end of which was a flat firm cartilage. The back was black, turning brown on the sides, then yellow, and on the centre of the belly a narrow white streak two-thirds of its length. There was also scattered over the body dark spots. On examining the skin we found, to our surprise, that the body was covered with blubber like that on the whale, but it was only four inches thick. The oil was clear as water, and burned nearly as fast as spirits of turpentine.

We cut the snake in, but found great difficulty, and had to fleuse him; the body would not roll, and the blubber was so very elastic that when stretched twenty feet by the blocks, it would when cut off, shrink to five or six feet. We took in the head, a fearful object, and are endeavoring to preserve it with salt.

We have saved all the bones, which the men are not done cleaning yet. In cutting open the Serpent we found pieces of squid and a large blackfish, the flesh of which dropped from the bones. One of the Serpent's lungs was three feet longer than the other. I should have observed that there were ninety-four teeth in the jaws, very sharp, all pointing backward and as large as one's thumb at the gum, but deeply and firmly set. We found it had two spout-holes, or spiracles, so it must breathe like a whale; it also had four swimming paws, or imitations of ones, for they were like hard loose flesh. The joints of the back were loose, and it seemed as if when it was swimming that it moved two ribs and a joint at a time—almost like feet. The muscular movement of the Serpent after it was dead, made the body look as if it was encircled by longitudinal ridges. We were nearly three days in getting the bones in, but they are now nearly clean and are very porous and dark colored.

The heart I was enabled to preserve in liquor and one of the eyes, but the head, notwithstanding it is cool, begins to emit an offensive odor, but I am so near the coast now that I shall hold on to it as it is, unless it is really like to breed a distemper. Every man in the ship participates in my anxiety.

2 P. M.—I have just spoken the vessel; she proves to be the brig Gipsy, Capt. Sturges, eight days from Ponce, P. R., with oranges and merchandise, bound to Bridgeport. He has kindly offered to put these sheets in the post-office when he arrives. As soon as I get in I shall be enabled to furnish you a more detailed account.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES SEABURY, Master Whaleship Monongahela, of Newlledford.

Miscellaneous European Items.

The Spanish Royal Navy now consists of one line-of-battle ship and two in construction, five frigates, six corvettes, eight brigs of first class, three of second class, two brig schooners, three schooners, and twenty-one steamers of all sizes, of which five are at Cuba, five others employed as packets between the Peninsula and the Antilles, and four at the Philippine Islands, or on the way there. There are also eight transport ships. The coast-guard service is stated to comprise six steamers, two brig-schooners, five schooners, three mistreos, fourteen feluccas of first class, twenty of second class, and sixty-five smaller vessels.

No small degree of excitement has been created by the discovery of a body imbedded in the walls of St. Stephen's Chapel, London. While the workmen were chipping an old stone wall of the chapel, they came upon something rolled up in canvas, and on uncovering it a human form was disclosed in a perfect state of preservation. A wooden pastoral staff was found by its side, such as was carried by the mitred abbots of the olden time. Mr. Barry was sent for, and in the meantime the remains were strictly guarded, in order that an examination may be made. The walls in which this interesting relic was discovered, form part of the chapel built by Richard II., in 1398, the money for the purpose having been raised by a tax imposed on all foreigners then residing in the kingdom. The body must, therefore, have been imbedded nearly five hundred years. It was found in the wall of the crypt, under the high altar, where in the old monasteries, there was generally to be found a small chapel, underneath the great public church. To be buried in this position was a mark of distinction reserved for the founder.

The Gazette de France says: "Some time back there was an idea of establishing an immense electric light-house on some lofty part of the Capitol, in place of the gas lights. We understand that this plan is about to be carried into execution, and that already preparations have been commenced for the purpose on the top of the tower of St. Jacques-la-Boucherie."

The Jesuits have been attempting to obtain a decree disabling the Jews from holding any public function. As the government of Louis Napoleon lately made an emphatic protest in favor of the Jews in a radical Canton of Switzerland, where they were threatened with proscription. It is not likely, with M. Fould for his Minister of Finance, and Baron Rothschild for his banker, that he will be guilty of any unkindness toward the race of Israel.

The terror in the French provinces goes on increasing daily. In many parts of the country the troops go out and beat the woods for men, as if they were hunting game. A detachment of the 55th regiment, after a long chase, lately caught 27 men in a forest at St. Tilbery in the Herault, at the unsportsmanlike hour of two o'clock in the morning. In the same neighborhood the papers speak of arrests having been made by the dozen, and by the score, by the military Cafes and public houses without number have been closed.

The costume of the French Senators will be magnificently embroidered, at least if we may believe the designs which an artist has been ordered to draw. It is not yet known whether the coat will be in cloth or in velvet; the cut of it will be quite French, but more elegant than any that has yet been seen. In bringing embroidery into use for functionaries, it is wished to give a fresh impulse to that branch of industry, which has long been suffering severely both in Paris and at Nancy.

M. de Tscherbenin, Russian Privy Councillor, has arrived in Berlin. He is said to be the bearer of dispatches from the Russian Emperor to Louis Napoleon, of which the Czar opposes any attempt of the French President to put on his head the imperial crown, as being incompatible with the treaty of 1815.

It is thought not improbable that the Emperor of Austria may take the imperial crown of Germany, which the King of Prussia refused in 1849.

DIVIDEND.—A dividend of four per cent on the capital stock of the Commercial Bank of Wilmington, N. C. has been declared by the Board of Directors, out of the profits of the last six months.

APPOINTMENT.—Col. H. M. Burton, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., has been appointed Consul to the Island of Thomas, situated south of Cuba, in the West Indies.

FIRE AT NASHVILLE.—The Union Hall Hotel, at Nashville, was destroyed by fire on the 25th ult. Loss not ascertained.

THE PARIS POLICE.—A Paris correspondent of the New York Tribune, in a gossiping letter, has the following

The Tribunal of Correctional Police continues to furnish lively and entertainment to its visitors. The Judges are as severe as ever, but the prisoners are facetious to a remarkable degree. Mr. Baudemont was taken before the court on Saturday last, in charge of vagrancy. He was said to be in bad spirits at the fresh accusation brought against him. "Monsieur," said the president, "you do not reply to my question." "Oh, I beg your pardon, sincerely, but I have a bad cold, and do not hear well. I quitted my limits to come to Paris." "But you were ordered not to come to Paris." "That is precisely why I came. But don't suppose that I care any thing about Paris. I want to be sent to Noukahiva." "Well if you can't reply to my question, hold your tongue." "Why did I come to Paris, you ask? Because I saw a placard stuck upon a post, stating that all those rascals that broke their ban and came to Paris, should be sent to Cayenne or Algeria. I should prefer Noukahiva, but Africa let it be. What difference does it make to me? I am a worn out good-for-nothing old hack. I have been commanded twenty-six times. I have many conclusions on my back, that I don't care a straw for. France is my native land, I know, but I prefer traveling. It would improve my mind. Sending me to Africa, to Noukahiva, to Cayenne, to Caleutta, to Pekin, to Timbuctoo or any where else, only do send me some where. In France I do nothing but vegetate in prison. Do you call that a social position? I start—I start—I am—I am sixty-two years of age, and I must think of settling down to something, or else what will become of me when I am old. I should like to know. You will confer a great favor on me if you will send me to Noukahiva." The Tribunal condemned the fellow to a year's imprisonment and five years' surveillance by the police. "More surveillance," cried the prisoner; "why, I shall be under surveillance to the end of my days." At my age it's a dreadful bore. Come, now, send me to Noukahiva, and then I shall be out of the way." "The question is decided," said the President, "now hold your tongue." "Just think of a man that's been dunderheaded twenty-seven times and can't get himself sent to Noukahiva! My eyes, what a shame!"

One can hardly help laughing at the impudent garrulity of this veteran sinner; but his want of tact is painfully evident. Had he not made it palpable that he was desirous of seeing foreign parts at the expense of the State, he would have been transported to Cayenne, according to the letter of the decree of December 8. But as the Court was somewhat disposed to gratify the blackguard's inclinations, he is sentenced for five years more to that inhospitable soil, and perhaps to spend his declining age in the house of his fathers.

A TEMPERANCE LESSON.—I began also in Behalf of the Mobile Savings Bank.—We have fallen on in the paper on a lesson which is worth printing. The story runs thus: It was told by the Rev. J. B. Owen, A. M., at a recent lecture in Liverpool:

A Manchester calico-printer was, on his wedding-day, persuaded by his wife to allow her two half-pints of ale a day as her share. He rather winced under the bargain; for though a drinker himself, he would have preferred a perfectly sober wife. They both worked hard; and he, poor man, was seldom out of a public-house as soon as the factory closed. The wife and husband saw little of each other except at breakfast; but as she kept things tidy about her, and made her clothes, and even selfish advance for housekeeping meet the demands upon her, he never complained. She had her daily pint, and he, perhaps, had his two or three quarts; and neither interfered with the other, except at odd times, she succeeded by one little gentle artifice or another, to win him home an hour or two sooner at night, and now and then to spend an entire evening in his own house. But these were rare occasions. They had been married a year; and on the morning of the wedding anniversary, the husband looked askance at her meat and comely person with some shade of remorse, as he observed, "Mary, we've had no holyday sin' we were wed; and only then I had but a penny in my pocket." "Well, John," said she, "but I'm got the pint o'ale!" "Gotton what?" said he. "The pint o'ale!" was the reply. John didn't understand till the faithful creature rambled down in old stocking, from under a loose brick in the chimney, and counted out her daily pint of ale, in the shape of 365 three-pences, (1 s. 24 1-2d.) and put it into his hand, exclaiming, "Ther shall have thy holiday, John." John was ashamed, astonished, conscience smitten and charmed. He would not touch it. "Hasn't thee had thy share?—then I'll hev no more," he said. They kept their wedding-day with the old dame; and the wife's little capital was the nucleus of a series of investments that ultimately swelled into a shop, factory, warehouse, country seat, a carriage, and, for aught Mr Owen knew, John was mayor of his native borough at last.

THE STEAMER GLASGOW.—Hard upon the unhappy Amazon came the mishap of the Glasgow, which threatened to be a calamity no less terrible. But the latter steamer escaped, although entirely disabled, with the loss of her second officer and a seaman. We find the following account of the affair by a passenger:

We left Glasgow on the 8th, and on passing down the Clyde a ship near to Bowling struck us, from which our cut-water was damaged, causing delay till Saturday the 10th, when we left at one o'clock, P. M. Dropped the pilot at Greenock, and encountered gales and head winds till Monday the 30th. Then commenced blowing a hurricane, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the ship could be kept against the wind and sea. The storm increased at 10 o'clock on Tuesday, the 30th, and the seas shipped seas continually. About half-past six in the evening of the same day, the vessel was struck on the starboard aft quarter with a tremendous sea, which swept away the bulwarks from the fore-mast aft, carrying away the wheel-house, the captain's deck-room, the greater part of the smoking-room, the mate's cabin—which was on deck, and the companion. The sky-lights of the after cabin were also destroyed. An immense volume of water came rushing down the companion, till it was about three feet deep in the saloon. A large body of water was also in the engine-house, the engine having at this time ceased to act. The after part of the vessel was now under water. The captain called to the engineers and firemen, "Keep up the fires, for your lives." The full steam being put on, and the men working up to their middle in the water, the vessel was raised. The seas continued to sweep over her with great force, giving her great blows and shocks—some of them smashing the bulwarks both in the starboard and larboard bows. The four men at the wheel were thrown down at this moment, and another man and boy immediately went and seized it. Mr. Paton, the fourth mate, then came to their assistance, and it is impossible to speak too highly of his conduct. It was meritorious to a degree. At this time, Mr. Robertson, the second mate, was washed off deck by a heavy sea, and seen no more; the third mate had an arm broken, and was obliged to be removed below, and four other seamen were also disabled. Among the passengers all of which exerted themselves to the utmost of their ability to assist, were a gentleman and his wife, with four children, two girls and two boys, the eldest ten years of age. It was truly affecting to see the parents in the cabin explaining to their children the perilous position in which they were placed, reading prayers to them, and commending them to prepare for eternity; and although when the storm was at its height, the poor little creatures hid themselves down upon the tables in the saloon, hand in hand, they and their parents, with no other hope than that the ocean was that night to be their graves, but it was otherwise ordered. The vessel managed to brave the storm. On Wednesday, about two o'clock, at considerable risk of being caught in the trough of the sea, from her great length she was put about, and although the weather was rough, she went away before the wind in gallant style. We sighted Cape Clear on Monday morning about six o'clock, and arrived at Greenock on Tuesday evening.

TURKEY.—The official Almanac of the Turkish Government for the year 1268 of the Hegra, or 1852 of the Christian Era, contains valuable information upon the governmental details of the Ottoman Empire. It seems that there are Departments of Marine, Commerce and Police, and also of Agriculture, Education and Public Prosperity. The number of officials in these departments depends upon the Sultan's will. Disposable Effendis and Beys, especially if poor, are usually called into these places which are lucrative. The Department of Police is composed at present of 33 associates, all Muslim, but rarely more than 6 or 7 are present at a meeting. It is noticeable that none of the Christian officials in the departments are mentioned, although they are the heart and soul of the business. The Quarantine Commissioners—all Germans—are not only not mentioned, but the existence of the institution is ignored in the Almanac. The same is true of the Directors of the Medical School and others, while the honorary Directors, whoare Muslim, are all named. Capt. Slade, who may wear a diamond on his turban, and who takes the rank of Admiral in the Marine, is also omitted in the list.

These facts show that the Turkish Government has yet to fear religious fanaticism. The extension of civilization by means of the press has a place in the Government estimate. There are 31 periodical publications in the whole country; 11 of them appear in Constantinople, 5 in Smyrna, 3 in Egypt, 8 in Syria, and 4 in Moldavia and Wallachia. They are in the Turkish, Arabic, Greek, Greek-Turkish, Armenian, Armenian-Turkish, Moorish, Bulgarian, Wallachian, Servian, German, French and Italian languages. The periodical official journals which appear in the Turkish language, for more than half of the inhabitants of the Empire are conversant with that, consist of a small one in Constantinople and another in Egypt. A medical bulletin has been recently added to them. Most of these sheets appear weekly. Turkey has 6 foreign Embassadors—in Teheran, (Persia) Athens, London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. The Embassadors in London and Paris are Greek-Turks. Eighteen foreign powers send Ministers to Turkey.

RIOTS AGAIN.—In the reply of Bishop O'Connor of Pittsburgh, to Kossuth's Address, the following excellent advice occurs:

"There may be some who think otherwise, but the most of us feel convinced that the moment the United States go abroad as the armed propagandists of any political creed, their fate as a free nation is sealed. It is not that we should be afraid of other nations—but the bad panic alone created by wars for opinions, the endless strife to which every sword will give rise—the necessity for large armies arising from them, would destroy any republic that could be framed by the wisdom of man. The interest, the passions, the hereditary feuds of races and parties fused into one mass by the equal institutions of the country, would soon dazzle us, and military fame would become the road to power and get above. Where those things lead by written in the history of many republics that flourished and dazzled the world with their deeds, and then died. It would be sayin that our country is not peopled by human beings, to go, dead that like causes here should not here produce like results.

"Thus, at least I, for one, have understood the maxim which I considered the foundation of the policy which has made and will preserve this nation great. If others are willing to learn from it, so also the true meaning of the words, or to disregard the parting advice of the immortal Washington I will ever consider that advice as a lesson of wisdom, which that great man learned from the history of the world—not a lullaby to prevent the babe from hurting itself during its weakness, but a warning voice from the Father of his Country, telling of the rock which has proved fatal to so many, and where dangers threaten in a special manner, those conscious of power.

"With these convictions of the interest of that power to which before all others, we have sworn allegiance in the temporal order—convictions that were shared by our fellow citizens of every class, until Kossuth landed on our shores—having, moreover, the additional reason, stated above, for adhering to this traditionary policy of the country—we find ourselves naturally opposed to the attempt who invites us to embark on a sea where we, ourselves have not yet ventured, but which we can no call unknown."

A STRIKE AT CINCINNATI.—It is stated that there is a general strike at the Phœnixville (Pa.) iron rolling Mills owing to a recent reduction of wages. The strikers demand a return to the former rate of wages before they will go to work.

Louisiana Interior.

THE WEATHER.—The Concordia Intelligencer, of the 28th ult., says: "The weather for the past few days has been delightful. The balmy fullnesses of spring are all the year around us, and the forest and the field have put on their freshest garniture. We trust that we shall have no need to say, but that we may say and sing for the rest of the season.

"Sweet Summer's a comin', cold Winter's gone."

THE MISSISSIPPI.—The Concordia Intelligencer, of the 28th ult., says: "The river at this point is still rising and is now 34½ feet above low water mark."

The Baton Rouge Gazette, of the 27th ult., says: "Look out for your levees, the river is rising rapidly."

LAND SALES.—The Plaquemine Sentinel, of the 28th ult., says: "Since the exceedingly severe rain of Friday night, 20th inst., the bank of the bayou within the limits of our town has sunk in many places and to a considerable extent—the worst place being opposite the residence of Mr. F. Smith, where half the levee fell in. This puts our corporation to a considerable expense; but we are happy to see our Mayor active and vigilant in remedying the disaster. A short distance above the mouth of the bayou, a large semi-circular slide of the river bank has also occurred, extending towards the bayou and making the upper bank of the bayou at the mouth a narrow neck of land which must soon give way. In which case the mouth will be made a third wider. We are fully justified in asserting, that during the present rise, two-thirds of the drift of the Mississippi enters the bayou."

RED RIVER.—The Alexandria (La.) Democrat of the 28th of February says:

"Our river, which has been lying so low for several months past, as to be considered in a fair way to lose its fair name in this world, has suddenly taken a home-opathic dose, and is in a fair way to recover its wonted activity, and restore life and animation to all coming within its influence. It is now in good navigable order for the largest class boats all the way to Shreveport."

The Feliciana Whig records the sudden and accidental death of Mrs. Sarah Montgomery, wife of Major Thomas Montgomery. On Sunday morning, the 15th, the train of cars on the Clinton and Port Hudson Railroad stopped near the depot at Clinton to discharge some freight, when Mrs. M. opened the front door of the passenger car, and received her death wound by the accidental discharge of a musket, which had been placed against the door by a negro, who was assisting in discharging freight. The unfortunate lady, who was accompanied by her children, expired almost immediately.

RIVER LAFOURCHE.—The Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday says: "Bayou Lafourche is now in fine steamboating order, and rising rapidly. We have great fears of remarkably high water the coming season."

RIVER PLAQUEMINE.—The Sentinel contains the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of that Parish relative to Bayou Plaquemine. A series of resolutions were adopted setting forth that the drift which annually passes through Bayou Plaquemine is rapidly increasing the obstructions to navigation on the navigable routes to the interior and the Atakapas; that in the opinion of the meeting the increase in the width and depth of the Bayou which has taken place within the last few years, and the great fall in the stream (eighteen and a half feet in twelve miles) afford good grounds for the belief that the Mississippi would eventually take its course to the sea in this direction, unless measures were taken to prevent it. The following are the concluding resolutions:

Resolved, That from sources of information to be relied upon, it is believed that nearly two millions of acres of land are rendered incapable of cultivation, and consequently useless to the State, through the periodical flood of water passing into Bayou Plaquemine, and submerging the lands in the direction of its course.

Resolved, That this meeting unanimously recommend to the Legislature of this State, as an act of great public utility—reclaiming an immense quantity of public lands, securing uninterrupted navigation to the western interior, etc.—the propriety of locking and camalling the bayou, and that our delegation are requested to urge the expediency and necessity of such a measure.

Resolved, That it is the belief of this meeting that locking and camalling Bayou Plaquemine would be more a work of public advantage and importance to the State generally, than to any one section of it; it would secure continued navigation from the Mississippi river to all the interior parishes west, besides giving to the State the benefit of the large amount of public lands which would be brought into market through the completion of this work.

MAILS TO CALIFORNIA.—A Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says:

"I learn that the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads—which is, by the way, a very practical—not to say radical committee—are prepared to make a report in favor of the acceptance of Mr. Vanderbilt's offer to carry the United States mails from New York to San Francisco, across the Isthmus of Nicaragua. Mr. Vanderbilt offers to perform the service at half the rate which Mr. George Law and Messrs. Howland & Aspinwall now receive, and to do it in less time by several days."

The correspondent further states that Congress will probably terminate the contract with Mr. Law, and others according to its terms, by buying the ships at the sum fixed in the contract, $1,500,000. By this operation, continues the writer, they will save to the public treasury $2,500,000, during the eight years of the remaining term of the contract, besides getting the ships clear and for nothing. To continue the contract with Messrs. Law & Co. will require $8,000,000. But Mr. Vanderbilt will do the service for $1,000,000. It will, therefore, be determined to buy the ships, and yet save $2,500,000.

THE MATERIAL OF WAR.—The materials of war belonging to the French Government are valued at 435 millions of francs. The sum is thus divided: Provisions, 27 millions; Military Hospitals and their furniture, 37 millions; clothing and camp furniture, 45 millions; 72,800 horses, and their trappings, 52 millions; fodder, 15 millions; Artillery department, 208 millions; Engineers' instruments, 11 millions. The Artillery department contains 4,968 bronze cannon, 2411 iron cannon (all battering pieces); 3800 bronze field pieces, 276 mortars, 632 howitzers, 220 bronze swivel guns, 17,074 gun carriages—field, battering or casemate; 2,903,801 flint and percussion guns, belonging to the State, but in the hands of the army and the National Guards; 151,021 musketoons, 184,536 pistols. The Arsenals contain—6,091,234 cannon balls of various weights—835,393 bombs, 1,000,000 shells, 212,215 grenads, 22,000,000 lbs. of bullets, 22,000,000 lbs. of powder, 80,000,000 cartridges, 60,000 lbs. of powder contained in projectiles, 60,000 lbs. of ingredients for the manufacture of powder. Since 1815, during 35 years of peace, the army has been kept upon a footing of war, at an expense of 13,600,000,000 francs, or in plain English, $2,700,000,000—two thousand seven hundred million dollars.

THE FLORIDA INDIANS.—It will be seen by the following from the Jacksonville Republican, that the Indians in Florida are getting very troublesome, and that fighting has actually commenced. The remote settlers are in danger, and the Government is called upon to act with energy and promptness:

"In addition to the reports current from various quarters of Indian forays beyond the prescribed Indian boundary, we give place to the following note which Gen. Hopkins has, politely handed us. We have also seen a letter to the same officer, dated as far back as November 11, 1851, from Captain Jarnagan describing a trail of Indians and hogs that they had driven off, by Blissett and brother Hope, especially if poor are usually called into these places which are lucrative. The Department of Police is composed at present of 33 associates, all Muslim, but rarely more than 6 or 7 are present at a meeting. It is noticeable that none of the Christian officials in the departments are mentioned, although they are the heart and soul of the business. The Quarantine Commissioners—all Germans—are not only not mentioned, but the existence of the institution is ignored in the Almanac. The same is true of the Directors of the Medical School and others, while the honorary Directors, whoare Muslim, are all named. Capt. Slade, who may wear a diamond on his turban, and who takes the rank of Admiral in the Marine, is also omitted in the list.

"Millerville, Orange county, Feb. 10, 1852.

"Sir—Jarnagan has been with the Indians again; he has captured two, and they think another was killed; and no doubt the ball is opened as the war whoop has been heard in our land. We know not what may become of our families. We want aid speedily. We think our families are in great danger.

"Yours, truly. JOHN HOPKEY.

"General R. Hopkins."

The rumor that the Governor had given authority to raise troops is denied.

UNITED STATES BRANCH MINT.—The following is a statement of the deposits and coinage at the Branch Mint of the United States at New Orleans, during the month of February, 1852:

Deposits.

Gold...$482,576 60, of which $474,084 76 Coll.
forein gold	$482,576 60
Silver...$16,054 52, of which $2,728 01 parted
from California gold	16,084 52
Total amount of deposits	$498,661 51

Coinage.

8,500 double eagles	$170,000 00
12,000 eagles	120,000 00
44,000 quarter eagles	110,000 00
64,500 pieces Total coinage	$400,000 00

No delivery of silver coins.

THE TEHUANTEPEC RAILROAD.—The Washington correspondent of the Charleston Courier says:

The Tehuantepec Railroad Company will resume their operations on the route in the course of a month or two with a force sufficient to repel any attempt to obstruct their enterprise. Whatever may be the present disposition and decision of the Mexican Government as to the reëstimation of the Garay grant, or the ratification of the Tehuantepec treaty, no doubt is entertained that they will ultimately yield their objections to both. The first object of the company will be to construct a temporary road for the transportation of their own material, etc., as well as passengers and freight. The route lies through a beautiful and salubrious country, and it must become the favored route of travel to the Pacific.

VESSEL CAPTURED BY PIRATES.—The Hillsdaler Chronicle, of January 17, contains a narrative of the capture of the British vessel Violet, on the Rill Coast, by four boats loaded with pirates, numbering about one hundred and fifty men who killed the master and one of the men, took possession of the vessel, and sent the crew on shore. The survivors of the crew reached Tunguis after several weeks of suffering.

SAD ACCIDENT BY FIRE.—At Pierre Jacques, Newfirmswick, recently, a Mrs. Campbell left the house for a short time, leaving three little girls of the ages of two, five and seven years alone. They were amusing themselves by running round in a circle, when they became giddy and all three fell on the floor near the fire that it communicated to their clothes. When the mother returned the youngest girl was dead and the other two died soon after.

MONARCH CORPORATION.—A bill has passed the House of Delegates of the Maryland Legislature, uniting the seven leading coal companies under one charter, by which they are empowered to hold 12,000 acres of land, issue stock to the amount of $5,000,000, and perform other large operations.

SMOKING HIS ZEAL.—Mr. Lucius R. Cobleigh, a hotel keeper in South Twelfth street, Philadelphia, recently became a convert to temperance, and to show his good zeal in the cause, he made a general crash and smash of his liquor utensils on the pavement in front of his premises. Casks of Jamaica apple-brandy, old rye and Scotch whisky; decanters of mild gin, tumblers, and empty glasses, with every thing else breakable, were flung in one fragmentary or atomic condition. Such a scene of destruction, says the Pennsylvanian, naturally attracted a crowd of spectators, some of whom showed the deepest concern, sorrow and indignation, while beholding what they considered a wanton waste of the precious liquids. Some of the old soakers were seen licking the pieces of broken bottles with an eagerness which showed a highly cultivated taste for stimulating beverages.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW IN NEW YORK.—The New York Commercial Advertiser of the 21st ult. contains a long article on the present aspect of the temperance question in that State, and particularly in the city, and it shows conclusively that even if the Maine liquor law could be got through the Legislature its provisions could never be carried out in the city of New York. Leaving out entirely the abstract question of right or wrong, the law is impracticable, and a force as great and as obedient as were the soldiers of Louis Napoleon would be unable to enforce it. The Advertiser thinks, however, that the temperance folks might, by united effort, obtain the abolishment of the Sunday traffic in liquor, and also the passage of a law separating entirely the liquor trade from all others, forbidding vendors from selling any thing else.

ENGLAND.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of the inhabitants of the Tower Hamlets, England, was recently held to give an expression to public feeling in regard to the French coup d'etat, and the threatening aspect assumed by the despotic powers of Europe against the independence of England. They adopted resolutions denouncing in strong terms Louis Napoleon and his coup d'etat.

THE ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF LOUIS NAPOLEON.—The assertion that Louis Napoleon had been shot at has hitherto had hardly any better form than rumor. The Cabinet's full news vouches for its truth. The Prime President was not only shot at once, but by three different individuals. Rumor has this three, but only one is a substantial fact. This fact is as follows: On Thursday night, the 22d ult., between 12 and 1 o'clock, the President was leaving the Elysée to pay a visit to Mrs. Howard, his mistress; some six or eight officers were with him. As he came down the alley towards his carriage, a devoted, stationed at the gate, leveled his short rifle, took aim and fired. The ball whistled past Napoleon's head, slightly grazing his hair. The aim of the assassin (sharpshooter) is usually supposed to be unerring; but in this occasion his sight was dim. It was midnight, and he fired round an angle of the palace; besides this, he knew that death lurking upon his arm, and as he drew the fatal trigger his nerve failed him, and his ball flew wide of its mark. He refused to speak to expl

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference. { J. C. KEENER, W. E. DOTY, R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAWLEY, T. W. DOUGLAS, W. RILEY, M. D. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 6. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 58.

SMILES AND TEARS.—By Rev. Wm. Pea

"All thou happy little child,
On this clear, bright summer day
In the sunlit sporting wild,
Art thou happy?" oft we pray
If I had that pretty thing,
That lay down to ponder tree
I would laugh and dance and sing
Oh! how happy I should be
Then I caught the butterfly.

Placed it in his hands securely
Now, me thought, his pretty eye
Never more will look demurely
"Art thou happy now?" said I.
Tears were sparkling in his eye
For the butterfly was dead
In his hands its life had sped.

"Art thou happy," maiden fair,
On this long, bright summer's day,
Culling flowers so rare,
Art thou happy? tell me, pray
If my Henry were but here,
To enjoy the scene with me;
He whose love is so sincere,
Oh! how happy I should be."
Soon I heard her lover's tread,
Sounding on the gravel lightly;
To his loving words so sweet,
Tender glances answered brightly

"Art thou happy now?" I said
Down she hung her lovely head
Henry leaves for foreign skies!
Tear-are in the maiden's eyes

"Art thou happy," mother mild,
On this bright, bright summer's day
Gazing on thy cherub child,
Art thou happy? tell me, pray
If my baby-boy were well
Thus the mother spake to me,—
Sighingly my heart would swell
"Oh! how happy I should be."
Then the cordial I supplied.
Soon the babe restored completely
Cheeks that pined and sighed,
On his mother smiled he sweetly
"Art thou happy now?" I said
Would his father were not dead!
Thus she answered me with sighs
Scalding tear-drops in her eyes

"Art thou happy," aged mom,
On this glorious summer's day,
With thy cheeks all pale and wan,
Art thou happy? tell me pray
"If I were but safe above,
Spake the old mom unto me
To enjoy my Saviour's love.
Oh! how happy I should be."
Then the angel Death came down,
And he welcomed him with gladness
On his brow so pale and wan,
Not a trace was seen of sadness
"Art thou happy now?" I said.
Yes—he answered with his head
Tears of joy were in his eyes,
Dew-drops from the upper skies.

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

BY J. S. MAFFIT.

[Continued.]

Such is the mighty power of the "almighty dollar"—its shiny side—reversed by a dark counterpart, inky as night and black with perdition! What buys prostitution to the scorched bosom of insatiate Desire, and brings the wanton, as an adder, to warm on the heart of unthinking youth, and then leave a sting which shall rankle until that heart shall become ashes, and in its place the coil of the cold and desolate serpent of remorse shall hiss and writhe forever. What buys ten thousand wine cups of the crushed red grape—and the seething lava of the distillery, to pour upon the drunkard's unnatural thirst—drink—drink—drink—until from the parched throat shall shriek out in another world that unavailing cry for one poor drop of cold water to cool the tormented tongue that shall never taste wine nor water again! What arms the desolating cannon with its thunder, and gives breath to the braying trumpets of War! One answer, and one alone, comes up to almost all the ills and desolations of human existence: and that answer, in all ages and in all languages, has been and ever is the same. It rumbles out in the ruinous voice of the earthquake—in storm—in terror—in despair—the "almighty dollar," the "dollar-almighty!"

Every production of the green earth, from the thousands of gay bouquets that bloom on its bosom, to the diamonds of the purest water that sparkle deep in its bowels, comes at the call of the "almighty dollar," and pays obedience only to its power. It buys health, pleasure, medicine, sickness and death. It arms the midnight assassin with his dagger, and gives the robber his pistol; then it turns round and arrests the assassin and murderer, and brings them relentlessly to the halter! It is a weapon of power and defence: it can disarm tyranny and master even the rigors of ice-hearted bigotry.

The modes adapted to obtain the "almighty dollar" are as various and ingenious as can be imagined by the most ingenious speculator on human capacity. Not a few would make marriage that sacred and holy ritual of love—the stepping stone to fortune, and breathe out affection and adoration to woman, when in their heart of hearts they only wedded her broad lands and accumulated stocks. No speculation on earth can be conceived of so low and base born as this, to prostitute affections that ought to be as pure as the starlight of angel eyes, to groveling and sordid mammon!

The northern loan speculator in marriage, like a wild goose in winter, flies southward, and tells his Adonis' curls and lisps out his simpering and hollow-hearted nothings at the feet of some Southern widow or heiress, more blessed with lands and slaves than with intellectual and personal attraction. The thing without a heart works his vile breath all up into lover's sighs, and dries off all the amorous pantings of a blacksmith's bellows. He feigns despair, and rolls up his eyes in almost hopeless adoration, "like a duck in a thunder storm," then goes to the county or parish records, and searches diligently into the validity of title deeds, into total amounts and possible incumbrances, lest he—the greatest and most consummate cheat imbuing—should be cheated in bargaining away his worthless impersonation of self for opulence and independence! Let such marriage rituals be celebrated with such music as the unrelenting and untiring tongue of a Zantippe only can discourse! Let such nuptial pillows be filled with toads, and the owl-faced nightmare be the third lodger in the bridal bed! And, by day let the remaining third of the allottment be the shivering white negro—the slave of slaves on the opulent plantation!

See now this picture of "gloom and glory," and ponder a moment on Vicissitude! Know how chill is poverty's comfortless breath—how frozen the kiss of its white and bloodless lips! The beautiful and tasteful mansion, shadowed by its sylvan bowers, rises on the sight, approached by a pave of majestic simplicity of elegance. The blush of warm-tinted and gorgeous curtains bespeak the home of luxury. Enter the lofty portals and feel the mind itself expand in the wide halls and the lofty vaulted rooms. The foot falls noiseless into the downy carpets. The form is reflected in rich and flattering mirrors, and the couches, redolent of ease, look more inviting than violet banks on the margin of young rivers. The sweet-souled and the accomplished are the proprietors of that home of elegance and plenty. Fashion has made in her choicest lower, and the lovely children of as lovely parents, who never knew want or peril, are dressed by the cunning hands of Persia, and accomplished by the most celebrated masters of many lands. The high-souled and generous father, wound into the ecstacy of almost universal benevolence by such a noonday sun of worldly prosperity, lends his wealth and his credit throughout his wide circle of acquaintance, and expands himself to the utmost to produce happiness among all those whom he loves, and for whose happiness his warm affections are interested. But hark! there is a crashing sound. That monstrous Lerna, called credit, has writhed and rolled in his demon spasms, and in his contractions has crushed a thousand nascent hopes, and splendid fortunes. Why looks that father so pale, and why turns his eye in such affright towards the entrance to his now joyless halls? His wealth has sunk in the whirlpool of commercial and monetary revulsion, engulphed by the shipwreck of others. The merciless avengers of prostrated credit leave him without a name, honor or a home. The sound of a hundred chariots of fashion, that once rolled up his avenues, is now hushed. No calls are made upon the poor! None come to see him who can not lend, and has no music and dinners in his halls!

'Tis a melancholy task to descend with fallen grandeur into the low, obscure and needy walks of life—going lower and lower every step! The crushed hearts of those too tenderly sheltered, and so mentally unprepared for disaster and ruin, are but ill prepared for the dark and dismal scenes of poverty. Fallen from the high estate of affluence, and secure of overwhelming calamity. A little further on even this gloomy reverse of the picture darkens; and the hand of death now assails the poverty-stricken family. One by one they sink into the grave, and the midnight pall obscures for one world so bright a morn of terrestrial happiness! Happy they if they but find the jewel of adversity, and gain treasures that can not pass from them! Such are the ups and downs of the "almighty dollar."

Mammon laughs over the groveling and devising modes in which miserable wretches cringe to the golden deity to gain a single smile from the Moloch of Wealth! It was the custom of a miser in Vermont, where the Green Mountains furnish a gratuitous supply of fuel that a hundred centuries can not exhaust, to sit all day over his fire, with a basin of water, to prevent the too rapid combustion of his fire. He compelled his wood to burn endwise, as a broadside, full length fire, would have compelled him to more expense in carting that necessary of life. Every one has heard of the grand lesson of economy taught by one English miser to another: making him a call at night, he was received by the light of a farthing rush candle. He explained his business, that he wished some conversation, when instantly the light was blown out, with the saving remark that it was just as easy to talk in the dark! On the awful field of Waterloo hundreds of greedy men and women fought with the vultures to get at the bodies, for the purpose not only of stripping off the remnants of clothing, but what was more desperate still, of knocking out the teeth of the poor thousands of the slain to sell for the purposes of dentistry; and for this same purpose, at a later day, American men struggled with the buzzards over the slain of the field of San Jacinto, in Texas. Squalid rags and loathsome beggary become, with many, the stepping stones to the possession of immense sums of gold. The quilted and many-colored garments of the wretched mendicant often are lined with still more sordid gold, gained by all the lying arts of false mendicity.

Yet these are not the worst phases of the great universal money-getting mania. There may be such men, as honest and generous and noble-minded engaged in exchange and brokerage. There are thousands of such: but the note-shaver, the extortioner, is the vulture of society. He lives on Misfortune and Ruin. He gloats upon commercial distress—himself often devising and bringing about those pecuniary revulsions which enable him to extort his two and three per cent. per month, for the yellow coin which he has previously extracted from similar suffering.

Nor is the fancy stock dealer any better than his fellow thieves who gain iniquitous wealth on false pretences. The kite flyers of fictitious bills of credit, not drawn on actual commercial credits, are no better than other swindlers who found chartered banks without capital, and issue as money that which is not the representative of a single dollar; all which must depreciate and perish in the pockets of the poor dupes of such barefaced and wholesale rascality. Oh, but once while on earth did the blessed Saviour of mankind ever raise his pure and holy hands against a human being! It was when he whipped a drove of money changers from the Temple, and used words to the recreant and rascally extortioners more stinging than the thongs of his whip of cords—"My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Death, a grim, spectral tyrant, has no more regard for gold than he has for human life. How suddenly does the miser unclench the hand that grips his purse, when death touches him with his cold finger and naked, as he came into the world, so naked he goes from it; dependent as a puling infant, when the last sickness is upon him; dependent even for a covering of earth for his poor remains; as dependent as the poorest beggar that ever in vain solicited charity at his flinty and marble door! The generation of heirs leap like hungry lions on the miser's estate, to all of whom his death comes as a glad-some dispensation, long wished for and anticipated. His name is forgotten in a day, and the magazines of wealth, for which he ruined his soul and lost his heaven, are scattered to the four winds of heaven by thankless inheritors, who curse him that he did not leave more of that which he gathered at the price of his own damnation!

It is reported of one of the most absorbed and basest millionaires of Boston, in the last generation, (reported of Hon. Wm. Gray,) that in his dying struggle a dreadful thought of his want of the "one thing needful" rushed on his departing soul. In the immensity of his mighty business he had neglected that. Grasped he to his physician, "Save my life for two days, and I will give you ten thousand dollars!" "Alas," said the doctor, "you can not live an hour!" "I am forever undone!" was the response of the possessor of nine millions!

The chest of the brothers Rothschild, dying some years since in England, his corse enclosed in double and gorgeous sarcophagi, was to be conveyed from England to the family burying vaults in Frankfort. So large was his body and the enclosures, that the sumptuous hearse could not accommodate it, and it was equally impossible to crowd it in a private carriage. A dray was the only conveyance at hand upon which it could be placed. As a bag of salt or hogshead of sugar, or a bale of cotton, the great financier of Europe was borne down to the quay. The dray became obstructed by the immense press of drays coming up from the shipping, and the body of Rothschild, the great, was detained for hours amidst the lumber of a noisy commerce! All his millions then could not accelerate his passage to the grave of his fathers.

At that moment his wealth fed half the armies of Europe: it was the base of nearly every political movement, and as his huge person monarchies either "let slip the dogs of war," or called back their panting bloodhounds from the field. The autocrat of the almighty dollar, at whose nod thrones tottered or were established in the old world, little recked he of the poor figure his remains made in leaving England! What a lesson for purse-proud wealth!

Is there no angel of the yellow mines who can infuse a divinity of mercy and benevolence into the metal, as it sleeps in the chambers of the rock, to counteract its power forever with the beautiful purposes of love, to wean it from destruction, and to create it, through all time, to the beginning of nature, to glorious art and the researches of "star-eyed Science!" Can not this ravening lion of power, when unchained from the rock, or let loose from the sunless cavern, be made to become a lamb in meekness, while its elephant shoulders, move on the giant purposes of utility, and make earth a sweet minnie paradise! It is a red, thunderbolt in the hands of vice; it is, in the hands of benevolence, the balm of consolation and the healing of human woes. The one makes it a slave of lawless passion—the other makes it an angel of mercy. With it the one forces the beautiful—the helpless and the confiding simplicity of infancy, where virtue's loveliest flowers lie-ken, and corruption festers in the warm heart of impassioned beauty: with it the other rescues the Magdalen from ruin, builds a refuge where she may hide her poor, outcast head from the storms which Passion rolls back on the erring votaries of pleasure to teach them that God loves virtue and hates vice! Poor wrecked, outcast being! Those bewildered passions implanted in our nature for the life-springs of our highest and purest enjoyments, in thy perverted nature are now careering currents of liquid fire, scorching thy poor heart to a cinder, and charring thy once pure soul to an Ethiop's blackness! Save her, shelter her, ye who have wealth and that richer precious opulence of benevolent philanthropy! Snatch her from the yawning abysms of perdition, ye who build hospitals for sickness, and who tenderly watch over the felon in his dungeon, to lead him through to honor and usefulness.

And what is this wondrous wealth, this Talisman of power for which a crazy and frantic world forever rave and sweat, and moil on through struggle and suffering, which sternest duty never imposes upon any disciple of the virtues? What is it but dust! The yellow gold and the white silver corrode. The rust eats into their substance, and the wild winds scatter that dust amidst nature's uncounted particles. Nor is the gold and silver the only or the greater part of earth's wealth. Paper and ink are the evidences and the representative of the most of that which men value upon earth: rags and lampblack—so perishable by fire or by flood—so wearing away when the wings of Time only wave over them so gently. The Doomsday Book of England is marvelously old, musty, illegible: yet it is the waning evidence of the old aristocratic land tenures and feudal privileges of a thousand years date. Where are the title deeds of the Roman lords, who held the soil of England before Jesus Christ came a babe into this poor world! What a satire upon human wealth to look over the deeds, the indentures, the rent rolls, the cognizances of a father or a grandfather deceased! The yellow, stained paper, the waning ink, show how swift human possessions are fleeting away, as the track of the sea-bird to Tarpa's desert strand!

The irony, so bitter and cruel, which wealth maketh itself wings and flies away, is vividly pictured by the graphic Eugene Sue, in his "Wandering Jew." With the perseverence and craft of Mephistocles, the diabolical Jesuit, Rodin, has followed the wealth he sought through blood and crime. With death and the most terrible suffering he wrestled and overcame all by the mastering power of his will. With the arts of the tempter of souls himself, he pastures the several heirs to the immense inheritance, and makes them victims to death through their own passions, as they are moved by his diabolical machinations: and when the day of claim arrived, and no living heir stood between Rodin and the mighty wealth that had accumulated through ages in the Weird family allied by blood to the "Wandering Jew" when Rodin calls on the custodian of that wealth, ascends with him to the darkened chamber, unappalled sees the embalmed corpses of all the heirs doomed to death by his own devices; with glistening eyes sees the steel casket opened, the immense drafts, payable by honor on the most ancient Banking Houses of Europe, counted out to the exact and identical sum sees them placed back again in the steel receptacle: is told they are all his: and, at the moment his nervous and bony fingers are about to gripe the avails of a life's toil and soul's forfeiture, the custodian touches a spring, an indamable composition within the casket ignites—and lo, in blue flame, that immense wealth on paper becomes thin air!

Fiction, as it is, there is genius of sublimity in the picture, and the lesson of the Parable is not in vain!

Even the diamond itself is resolved to charcoal in the flames; but what Alchimy can reinstate that charcoal as a diamond!

[To be continued.]

Godly Desires.

The following extract is from Caughey's Revival Miscellanies. It is the conclusion of his sermon on the "Omnipotence of Faith," on the text, "What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." [Mark 11:24.

"Desires," says an old writer, "are the souls of the mind. What is it that hurries the poor drunkard to the drunkard's grave, with a velocity swift as time? Why, desire: deep, intense, burning desire: desire hardly surpassed by the damned, as they thirst for the lake of fire. What is it that hurries the thief to plunder his neighbor, to stamp his own character with infamy, and endanger his life? Why, desire for wealth not his own. What is it that works up man to a point when he can commit a crime, the recollection of which chills his blood—a crime that brands him with the foul deed of murder? Why, desire.

"If you desire salvation, then, says Wesley, look for it every day, every hour, every moment. Why not this hour, this moment? Certainly you may look for it now, if you believe it is to be obtained by faith. And by this token you may surely know whether you seek it by faith or by works. If by works, you want something to be done first. You think you must do this or that. Then you are seeking it by works unto this day. If you seek it by faith, and just as you are, then expect it now. It is of importance to observe, that there is an inseparable connection between these three points: expect it by faith, expect it as you are, and expect it now. To deny one of them is to deny all of them: to allow one of them is to allow them all. Do you believe we are sanctified by faith? Be true to your principle, and look for the blessing just as you are, neither better nor worse, as a poor sinner that has still nothing to plead but Christ died. John Fletcher says, 'Come, text naked promise by a naked faith.' Deal in naked faith, faith stripped of feeling: with a soft heart, or a hard heart; just such a heart as you have now. If you are seeking to weep more, to get a softer heart, before you come to Christ, then you, till now, are seeking salvation by works. You see the condition God requires—desire, prayer, faith. Desires are the sails of the mind. Have you your sails up? Yes, some of you have. O, my dear brother, you are on the very edge of the fountain. Said the poor woman, 'If I can but touch the hem of his garment, I shall be made whole.' The crowd passes around him. I am weak with the loss of blood; I fear I shall never reach him; I shall die in the attempt. Well, if I tarry here, I die; I can but die. I will make the attempt.' Borne this way and that way, by the waves of the people, now she is being borne nearer and nearer. 'If I can but touch the hem of his garment.' Now, trembling, pale, agitated, she stretches out her hand and touches, and is made whole. Now, sinner, Christ is in the crowd; he is nigh thee; he is passing by thee; touch him, touch him, and live."

In America some years ago, there was an old gentleman who had constructed an electrifying machine. The students from one of the colleges went to his house to see this wonderful machine. He began to wind round and round and round, till the machine was charged with the electric fluid. "Now, my lads," said he, "take hold of each other's hands; now you that stand before there, touch that brass ball." He touched, and sudden as lightning the shock was felt through the whole group. And if ever this promise was charged with electrifying, galvanizing, strong power, it is now. What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them! See! see that vessel leaving the port of Liverpool. (Now, don't laugh at my seafaring language.) "Ship ahoy! whither bound?" "New York, sir." "Now York! when do you expect to get there, captain?" "Good vessel, sir, fair wind: I expect a short voyage." "Why, man, you have not a rag of sail up. I'll tell you where you'll get if you don't take care; you'll get to the bottom. Now, here comes another vessel: 'Ship ahoy!' whither bound?" "New York sir." "New York!' when do you expect to arrive there, captain?" "Look aloft, sir, the compass stands direct to a point, fair wind and a fine breeze." How finely she's rigged—mainsail, topsail, top-gallant sail! See how she bounds on before the breeze! The desires are the sails of the mind. Have you got your sails up? Yes, yes, bless God! I see many of you have many of you in the gallery there, and many of you below there, have your sails up. Come

"Blow, breeze, blow a gale of grace!"

"Now, let all get down before the Lord; all of you in the gallery there, and all of you below. Now, 'What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.' It is not a cold, lifeless trust, but a good, bold, hearty venture on Christ. I can not doubt the truths of my Lord: I can as soon doubt his divinity as his truth: I can as soon doubt his Godhead as his veracity. 'What preparation,' says one, 'is necessary?' 'What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.' God can not lie. I will die rather that doubt my God. God is not a man, that he should lie. The devil does not care a rush for a Christian believing that God is able, willing, waiting and anxious to sanctify the soul. Nor does he care for him believing that God will do it some time. Nor it is faith in the present tense that the devil dreads—believing that God does just now do it. This simply and fully taking God at his word is the great spell. Come, my dear brother! come, my dear sister! don't be afraid to step into the sea to Jesus, as Peter did. Hark! he bids you meet him. Now step, so to speak, on the naked promise, and the Spirit and the blood will fully cleanse. If ever my God was here, he is here now. Touch the promise—touch the hem of his garment. I know some of you are touching. He is saving some of you; I know my God is saving some of you. Let your inmost soul cry out—

"Tis done—thou dost this moment save;
With full salvation bless;
Redeem'd upon Thy throne I leave,
And spotless love and peace.

"What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

St. Paul.

That the Gospel is the power of God is proven from the supernatural effects that have followed its proclamation. The human heart, which is "deceitful and desperate" and a moral embodiment of "enmity against God," has, under the divinely transforming and remedying power of Christianity, been made to possess and to exemplify all the lovely characteristics of that wisdom which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy.

The Gospel (we suppose) might have been made such an instrument in the hands of Omnipotence, as irresistibly to have compelled the belief and practice of mankind, without employing the agency of either angels or men: but this would have been destructive of our moral agency, one of all those mutual dependencies and sociabilities by which man is bound to man.

The Gospel is the wisdom, as well as the power of God: this is seen not only in the solution of that awful mystery, and in the answering of that most momentous of all questions, How can God be just and yet the justifier of the sinner: but in all those nice adjustments and adaptations which we behold and admire in the working and application of the Gospel!

When we take a survey of the social and intellectual aspects of human society, an almost infinitely variegated scenery of necessities and circumstances is presented. Now it is in adapting the agencies of the Gospel to all those necessities and varied circumstances, that the wisdom of God is most eminently and wondrously displayed. There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God that "worketh all in all." This multiform and varied manifestation of the wisdom of God in the Gospel, is no where more conspicuous than in the calling of men of variod gifts and varied social position, to the work of the ministry. The adaptedness of Gospel agencies to peculiar times and peculiar necessities, was strikingly evinced in the call of Saul of Tarsus to be a "witness and a minister" of Jesus Christ. Prior to the call of St. Paul to preach Jesus and the Resurrection, no man of profound ability and varied learning had yet appeared before the world as the advocate of the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth. The pride of the philosopher and the lofty confidence of the learned would forever have prevented their hearing "the truth as it is in Jesus" from the unlearned and the unknown. To arrest the attention, compel the respect and silence the sneering objections of such as were too self-confident and proud to hear or be influenced by men of humbler claims, Paul was no doubt called to the work.

Tarsus, the birth-place of St. Paul, was only second to Athens and Alexandria in its literary claims and the polish and refinement of its population. From this seat of learning St. Paul was sent to Jerusalem, and brought up at the feet of one of the most eminent doctors of the law, and learned in all the wisdom and tradition of his fathers.

So varied were the abilities and acquirements, and so abundant the labors of this first and most far-traveled of all the apostles, that a modern writer, of no mean ability, thus said "that of all the great men the great that ever lived, perhaps St. Paul was the greatest." Certainly he was "One of the few immortal names

That were not born to die."

His great powers were not given for kingdoms, nor continents, but for a world, and for all eternities. His great [illegible] and high attainments, well adapted him to grapple with and successfully put to silence the learned doctors of Judea, the philosophers of Athens and the master-spirits of Rome, and every where to call forth and impress the higher and more cultivated classes of society.

St Paul is the greatest missionary whose labors have blessed and built up the Church—and though a thousand and eight hundred years have rolled away, his peerless names still stands highest and brightest on the archives of immortal fame. On the broad fields of Europe, Asia and Africa, he scattered, with a liberal and unwearied hand, the seeds of Eternal life. On the battlement of the most renowned and proudest cities of his time, he first planted the standard of the Cross. As an embassador from the Eternal Throne, he passed through civilized and savage lands, negotiating with immortal minds the momentous interests of eternal life and eternal death. And yet with all his great abilities and abundant labors, he was, like his Master, thinly clad and coarsely fed: he had no foot of land, "no cottage in the wilderness;" he "counted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord," and wherever he toiled and perilled, on the land or the sea, he constantly proclaimed and wrote it high upon his banner: "God forbid that I shall glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

Hannibal and Napoleon, on their march to the conquest of Italy, scaled the frozen Alps, but Paul the Apostle scaled the more inaccessible alps of the human soul, to win its affections to the Saviour, and gather immortal laurels to wreath about the Redeemer's Cross.

Paul's history was alike laborious and eventful. He was often "troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." He walked by faith, as seeing Him that is invisible, "praying without ceasing, rejoicing ever more, and in every thing giving thanks."

Armed with the whole armor of God, he endured hardness as a good soldier, never casting away the shield of his confidence, but was faithful even unto death, and died attesting that he had fought a good fight and had kept the faith: was ready to depart, believing that when his earthly house dissolved, he had a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

J. B. WAKELY.

New Orleans, March, 1852.

Losses by Religion.

Near London there dwelt an old couple. In early life they had been poor; but the husband became a Christian, and God blessed their industry, and they were living in a comfortable retirement, when a stranger called on them to ask their subscription to a charity. The old lady had less religion than her husband, and still hankered after some of the Sabbath carnings and easy shillings which Thomas had forfeited from regard to the law of God. So when the visitor asked their contributions she interposed, and said, "Why, sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we first began: my husband knows that very well. Have we not, Thomas?" After a solemn pause, Thomas answered, "Yes, Mary, we have. Before I got religion, Mary, I had an old slouched hat, a tattered coat, and mended shoes and stockings, but I have lost them long ago. And, Mary, you know that, poor as I was, I had a habit of getting drunk and quarreling with you: and that you know I have lost." And then I had a burdened conscience and a wicked heart, and ten thousand guilty fears; but all are lost, completely lost, and like a mill stone, cast into the deepest sea. And, Mary, you have been a loser too, though not so great a loser as myself. Before we got religion, Mary, you had a washing tray, in which you washed the hive; but since then you have lost your washing tray. And you had a gown and bonnet much the worse for wear; but you have lost them long ago. And you had many an aching heart concerning me at times; but those you happily have lost. And I could even wish that you had lost as much as I have lost; for what we lose for religion will be an everlasting gain."

The inventory of losses by religion runs thus: a bad character, a guilty conscience, a troublesome temper, sundry evil habits, and a set of wicked companions. The inventory of blessings gained by religion includes all that is worth having in time and eternity.

[Hamilton.

A THING LARGER THAN GOD.—Robert Hall once wrote the word of God on a small slip of paper, showed it to a friend, and asked whether he could see it. He replied, "Yes." He then covered the word with a guinea, and again asked, "Can you see it?" and was answered "No." He did this to show his friend how easy it is for the world to shut out of the mind a sight and sense of God. A very small object placed immediately before the eye will prevent it from seeing the sun. This object, thus placed, does not extinguish its light, nor destroy its existence; it is still in the heavens, diffusing its light through the whole solar system, though the eye of this solitary individual does not see it. He may imagine that the object near his eye is larger than the sun, but still it is a very small particle of matter. The love of gold may so fill the mind that there is no place left in it for the great God of the universe. In the view of such a mind a guinea is larger than God. This fact furnishes the following query: Does the world, or God hold the highest place in our hearts? Which is the largest, a guinea, or God? [Pur. Rec.

One of the most powerful poisons known is nicotine. Twelve drops applied to the tongue of a dog has caused death in two minutes. Nicotine is extracted from tobacco.

How to Make a Sermon.

Mr. Editor: Once, after having vexed my soul near the close of the week, with concentinual reflection and painful anxiety about an appropriate subject upon which to prepare a discourse for the coming Sabbath, I found, one morning, in my Bible, the following from the hand of my help meet, upon the subject, "How to make it easy to write sermons."

"First, think of the lukewarm professor, bringing disgrace upon the cause of Christ, by an ungodly walk and conversation; his need of spiritual life; how many souls are stumbling over him into perdition, who, otherwise, might be saved.

"Next, think of the bleeding Saviour, thus brought into disrepute by these false witnesses; his groans on Calvary, while bearing the burden of our sins; of his meek resignation to his Father's will; of his forgiving spirit, which extends even to us: of his anxiety and love for the souls of sinners. Then think of those who are bringing hell into souls, by scoffing at his dying love; and how many are perishing around us every day, because they neither know nor care any thing about the right way.

"Last of all, remember God saves just such souls through the labors of his servants. To save a soul from death! Is it not worth many, many sermons! Then sing, 'My faith looks up to Thee,' etc.

I need not tell the effect of these few lines upon my own mind, nor that I have kept them for frequent perusal, under similar circumstances. By inquiry, I find that many others are sometimes similarly affected, in view of Sabbath day services. It seems to me some reflections like the above can not fail of being a complete antidote to this disease, if faithfully applied. Strange as it may seem, the glorious and all-important subjects with which the Christian minister has to deal, fail sometimes to furnish a ready theme to inspire his heart and loose his tongue! But it is only when he closes the avenues to his soul. Let these be open, and the Bible, eternity and the human soul, in its present condition and its destiny furnish themes that crowd upon his soul for utterance.

Christian Fellowship.

The eccentric Rowland Hill used to say, that when Churchmen and Dissenters, Presbyterians and Independents, Methodists and Quakers, should unite and hold prayer meetings together, the devil would no longer wait for the mighty angel to come down from heaven to bind him in the bottomless pit, but would run away and hide there, of his own accord, and for very despair shut himself up a thousand years! Blessed be God! the holy Scriptures encourage us to hope for the day when Christians of different denominations shall meet and recognize each other on the broad platform of evangelical faith and holiness—when the scales of bigotry shall fall from their eyes, and the mists of prejudice shall be dissipated by the sweet beams and breezes of charity; and all who call themselves Christians shall cease to despise and persecute one another for slight differences of opinion in matters not fundamental, and

"Each heart shall quit its prison in the breast,
And flow in free communion with the rest;"

and the senseless cry, "I am of Paul," "I am of Peter," "I am of Apollos," shall give place to the grand catholic confession, "We are of Christ!"

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"I Would Not Live Always."

O! who would here forever live,
When heaven has so much more to give,
Of true immortal bliss?
Where tears will all be wiped away,
The mind no more to grief a prey,
Felt in a world like this!

To-day we may with friends be blest,
With warm affections be caressed—
To-morrow they may die.
Our hearts with grief may then be filled,
And all our fond affections chilled,
And tears bedim the eye.

Our prospects may look bright and clear,
And not a cloud in Heaven appear,
While we, with joy elate,—
May feel that we shall grasp the prize
Held out to fascinate the eyes
In fancy's blinded state.

Alas! how quick the scene is changed,
And all our plans of life deranged,
By adverse winds which blow.
Prostrate before the tempest breath,
Our prospects are laid low by death,
While waves of sorrow flow.

Youth, with its fair and polished brow,
May sit with joy, securely now,
While health is on the cheek;
But ah! when sickness bows the head,
And all the rose to bloom is fled,
Then truth begins to speak.

Trust not to any hope of earth,
It has no true, intrinsic worth,
For all must pass away:
A phantom's all that we can grasp,
If we attempt in it to clasp
Pleasures which here decay.

O! how desirable that life,
Free from the cares of worldly strife,
In this poor land of dreams—
To taste Heaven's own true blessedness,
With beauty's charms of loveliness,
'Mid never fading scenes.

Louisiana, 1852. S. B. T.

An economical application of time brings behind-hand method, and enables us to drive our business, instead of our business driving us.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Missionary Reports.

German Missions.

To Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, South.

Dear Brother in Christ: Duty calls me again to give a Report of the German Missions in New Orleans. In the providence of God, it falls to my lot to labor for the fifth year in the first German Mission in this City. Various have been the trials through which we had to pass in the four years that are past; were it not that a high hand and a strong arm had supported us, we should not have been able to pass unhurt through all, and still stand.

It is not an easy matter to labor as a Missionary in this City. It is not only not fashionable here to attend Church and preaching on Sunday, as it is in the Eastern and Western cities, but just the reverse. If the generality of people do leave off working on Sundays, then they must needs go to spend the Sabbath in visiting the theatres, circuses, and ballrooms, which are on these days, during the Winter season, in full blast. The house of God is the last thing that the crowd thinks of. Those, therefore, that are hungering and thirsting for the word of Life, are the least number.

Another disadvantage is the fluctuant state of the population. During the winter season, we generally have a dense population, among whom are many that love the Sanctuary of the Lord. At every winter season, therefore, we have an ingathering of members; but as soon as the spring arrives, off they move again; so that when the time summer sets fairly in, we are dwindled down again to a small number. In our operations we move on rather slowly; yet we move safely on Gospel ground. We can not report of sweeping revivals, where, in a few weeks, hundreds are converted and gathered into the Church; but we are trying, by the help of God's spirit, to keep His work constantly alive among us—we are steadily in the progressive.

Our meetings are generally well attended; our Sabbath Schools are prospering and increasing; Our class meetings are not only a must-be-so, because it is a part of the economy of the Church, but a means of grace for the greater part of our members. It is true, there are some that would most willingly have done them away; others, also, that attend our meetings regularly every Sabbath, would willingly join our Church, were it not that they then would have to go to the class meeting. A number of such have attended on my ministry these four years, and are still attending; but they cannot join on account of our class meetings, and for their accommodation we cannot alter our rules.

The first mission is still in a prospering condition. The preacher and the members have, after four years congregating together, not lost their love nor their respect for each other. The Society is in peace and harmony sweetly joined, all striving to enter in at the narrow gate. The number of members in the Society is, at present, 60. I have, during the past year, received 32 on probation; and yet, with all that, we have, by removals, decreased in number. The financial state of this Mission is encouraging. There has been raised in the Mission, during the last year, $903 53. Part of this money was spent in liquidating a debt of $746 00, and the rest was spent in the Mission for Church purposes. $40 00 have been collected in monthly Missionary prayer meetings; $4 40 for the Bishop; $2 50 Conference collection; $4 85 for the Bible cause; $10 for Tracts.

After we shall have built a new Church, for which we have the finest prospect now, we flatter ourselves that, by the smiles of Heaven, we shall grow up into a large society, which, in a few years more, will be fully able to support its own minister. The Sabbath School connected with this Mission, is in a well managed and prospering state. From 50 to 60 children attend the school. It has four officers; eight male and five female teachers; all of whom are zealously engaged in this, their labor of love. There are about 150 books in the library. There was collected during the year, in money, for this school, $64.

The second Mission has been growing during the last year beyond our expectation. Bro. Paule, the Missionary, is appointed to it the third year. He has had great and hard trials in his labors; and many, under the same circumstances, would have given up in despair, but not Bro. Paule, His motto is: "Lord, let me prosper or die." The society numbers 42 members, all united and well disciplined. $234 were raised in the Mission during the year—all of which was spent on the Mission for Church purposes. $30 were collected Missionary money, in their monthly prayer meetings; $2 50 for the Bishop, and $4 Conference collection—no Church debt.

The Sunday School connected with this Mission has three officers and ten teachers, and about fifty children attend the School. They have about 78 books in Library. Money collected for the school, $17. This school is in a healthy and prosperous state.

The Third Mission has not been as prosperous during the last year as we could have wished; but still we have not labored in vain. Brother Maas is appointed to it as a Missionary; a young man prudent and pious. He has good prospects at present. Several of the Society gave us much trouble; after we had borne with them long we, disposed of them: since that several have been converted, and others are earnestly groaning for ddiverance from sin. At the close of last year, this Mission numbered thirty-two members had two Sunday Schools, four officers, and eight teachers, sixty children in attendanse, seventy books in Library, and collected seventeen dollars for Sunday School purposes. Also raised in the Mission $66 95, all of which was spent for the Mission; $9 40 were raised for Missionary money; $5 55 for the Bishop; $4 40 Conference collection. Lafayette was connected with it, but is now joined to the first Mission, as it is more easy to supply it this.

Your Missionaries have been cheered up and encouraged at the last session of our Conference. They have learned that the M. E. Church, South, is not cold and indifferent towards the stranger that comes among them. We look forward with pleasing anticipations to the time when the German missions in this city shall occupy as prominent a position as they do in Cincinnati, or in St. Louis, or any where else. There are Germans enough here to work upon; 40,000 is the lowest number, which is swelled from year to year by continual immigration. Only let us have one good Church built in the first place, and paid for, and the second will not long be behind in being built. I bless God, for the fine prospect we have, of soon erecting our long wished, and long talked of Church for this Mission. You, dear brother Sehon, have given us the start at once. The Lord bless you abundantly for your visit to us here. Be assured, we will pray for you.

Having been requested by Brother Keener, and Brother McTyeire to visit the Alabama Conference with them, I improved my short stay in Mobile, in laboring among my German brethren there. The number of the Society is small yet: there are now about twelve members. Brother Carl Herwig is appointed by the Presiding Elder to serve the Mission this present year. They labor under a very great disadvantage: they have no meeting-house at all; the place where they hold their meetings in, is too bad, the people will not go into it. Mobile is a prominent place for a German Mission. It is my serious impression that if something more was done for that Mission, it promises a glorious harvest. It is true, it has met with some failures, but this is no reason that it should be neglected. There are about 4000 Germans in Mobile, 300 families of them are Protestants. I know of no place to which I would more willingly go as a German Missionary than to Mobile. There is no other German Church in the place as yet of any kind, and there are a great many Germans that would hail the day when the M. E. Church, South, would build a German Church, for that would be a token to them of stability. Oh that the whole Church would pray the Lord of the Harvest to send laborers into these fields.

John M. Hoper.

New Orleans, March 4, 1852.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, March 13.

The Progress Party in Religion.

There is something of severe truth as well as severe sarcasm in the followiag paragraph. It closes a letter we received yesterday from a Methodist Preacher of "olden time." He has long been a watchman on the walls of Zion, and though of the "olden time," his pulpit strength copes with the strongest of this day. Let the Church ponder over it.

* * * * * * *

"My religious prospects here don't suit my notions; but they are not utterly dark. The Church and the world, in these days, are in such close alliance and easy relations, that my old stereotyped mind can no longer be trusted as a type of Christianity. This is the day of progress; and the progress party in the Church have left me far behind. I am still creeping on with the class meeting and prayer meeting party. But the new type—easy chair class of our people—never make any sacrifice of ease or indulgence; and if they got to heaven on the basis of the religion they are living upon, many of us are doing works of supererogation.

Yours Truly,"

L. P.

Minutes of Louisiana Conference.

The publication of these minutes has been delayed, as before announced, in order to procure certain documents necessary to their completion. They are now presented under a very neat form and judicious arrangement, in a compass of 39 pages. The statistical and other informatiou here furnished, is indispensable to every member of the Conference and ought to be in the hands of every member of the Church. Presiding Elders' and Preachers' orders will be filled at the Advocate office—as they are here deposited. Persons ordering a supply of the minutes will do well to order not less than 25—as they cannot be sent by mail, unless at great expense and prepaid. Please be specific as to addresses, and what place and whose care the package must be sent to.

A Sanctified Pen.

Do the thinking men, the praying men, the working men of this day need be told that it is their duty to write? And not to write anything, but to sanctify their pens: to record facts that have a quickening, elevating effect upon grovelling humanity: to trace thoughts for the million readers—instructive and such in their moral bearing, that dying they would not wish to blot a line. We are fallen upon peculiar times, and they that would be useful must adapt their means to the age we live in, as well as to the end we aim at.

"I fancy," says the Rev. Edward Irving, that if the spirit of God were to choose out twelve men from the house of God, with whom to finish the great work of converting men, especially the men of this country, and for that purpose were, as a second Pentecost, to bestow upon them special gifts, the gift of writing powerfully would be the chief one; and the ability to write powerfully seems to me a greater accomplishment of a soldier of Christ than the ability to preach powerful discourses. The one sends a dart, which, though well directed, may fly wide of the mark, and having once spent its strength, is useless forever; the other is the ancient catapulta, which will discharge you a thousand darts at once in a thousand different directions; and it hath an apparatus for making more darts, so that it can continue to discharge them forever. To use this most powerful of intellectual moral instruments in the service of God, is a noble inabition, which should possess the soul of every Christian. He doth in a manner multiply his soul thereby, and give to his ideal thoughts a local habitation and a name."

New Paper.—The "Christian Telegraph" is the name of a moral and religious paper, published at Atlanta, Ga., by Rev. B. S. Anderson, of the Methodist Protestant Church. The first number is a very fair sheet

Conference Action on Missions.

The Louisiana Conference, though small in numbers and among the youngest of Southern Conferences, has ample resources within her bounds and should not be behind in the Missionary spirit, which now signally characterises the Church, and we hope will not. Liberal things have been devised for the present year. This is an item of the Minutes which we give in advance of their issuance, as too early a start cannot be made in the work. One or two churches have raised their apportionment already.

Q. XVIII.—What is the action of the Conference in relation to Missions?

A. 1. The Conference Missionary appointment for 1852.

In order that the Missionaries of the M. E. Church South, to China, the Indian tribes, the Germans, California, the Slaves, and the Poor districts of the work, may be sustained and the Missions enlarged proportionably to the increasing interest of the Church in the cause of Missions, and the urgent demands of our Missionaries to be reinforced and supported by the Church at home; and that, for these purposes, we may greatly increase the Missionary collections of this Conference:

Resolved, That this Conference raise the sum of $4,280 for the Missions of the Church South, for the year 1852.

Resolved, that we apportion to the different Stations and Circuits, in proportion to their ability and numbers the above sum in amounts as hereafter stated.

Resolved, That the amount put down by the Conference to each Station or Circuit, shall be apportioned to its different societies in proportion to their several abilities, by the Presiding Elder of the District, and the members of the first or the second Quarterly Meeting Conference.

Resolved, That, in order to aid the Circuits and Stations in collecting their apportionment, the P. Elder and P. in Charge form Missionary Societies, and Sabbath School Missionary Societies, and also appoint and hold two-days Missionary Meetings, at which sermons shall be preached, and collections taken up, and prayers offered for the cause of Missions.

NEW ORLEANS DIST. MISSIONARY APPORTIONMENT.

McGehee Chargo	$300 00
Felicity street	300 00
Moreau street	100 00
Wesley and Soule Chapels	100 00
German Missions	100 00
New Orleans Circuit	25 00
Plaquemine	150 00
Thibodaux	50 00
Donaldsonville	30 00
Houma	50 00
Napoleonville	30 00
	$1235 00

BATON ROUGE DIST. MISSION'Y APPORTIONMENT.

Baton Rouge	$150 00
Lake Providence	100 00
Point Coupee	50 00
Water Proof	150 00
St. Joseph's	60 00
Richmond and Madison	100 00
Monticello	60 00
	$670 00

OPELOUSAS DIST. MISSIONARY APPORTIONMENT.

Opelousas	$150 00
Franklin and Pattersonville	150 00
New Iberia	100 00
Chicot	100 00
Hawe Creek	50 00
Alexandria	125 00
	$675 00

MONROE DIST. MISSIONARY APPORTIONMENT.

Menroe	$100 00
Bastrop	100 00
Farmerville	100 00
Homer	100 00
Jackson	150 00
Columbia	100 00
Trinity	100 00
Bœuff Prairie Circuit	50 00
	$800 00

SHREVEPORT DIST. MISSION'Y APPORTIONMENT.

Shreveport	$150 00
Caddo	200 00
Mansfield	200 00
North Bosier	25 00
Natchitoches and Natchitoches Circuit	75 00
Red River	100 00
Minden and South Bosier	150 00
	$900 00

Total Missionary Appor. for 1852.. $4280 00

Reading Room of Centenary Institute, Alabama.—We learn from a letter of the 1st March, that a "Reading Room and Library Association" has lately been formed by the students of Centenary Institute, Summerfield, Alabama. An exhibition of a most commendable spirit and literary taste and enterprise.

Roll On.—The following cheering notice we clip from the Southern Mirror, of the 4th instant, published at the seat of Centenary College, Louisiana, and within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference. We take it as an indication of the Missionary ball in motion. The Alabama wave should roll this year over Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and on:

"A Missionary meeting was held in the M. Church in this place on last Sabbath, the result of which, in collection and pledges amounted to something more than three hundred dollars. Knowing the size of the congregation and something of the pecuniary affairs of the members of the congregation, we must say this was most liberal. It it was not done alone by the few who are rich, but by all; the young, the old, the rich, the poor, the ministry and layity, all doing something, and many of them liberal indeed.

Remittances.—Bills of small denomination, though good at home, depreciate very rapidly as they travel abroad. We are led perpetrate this very dull and self-evident propositiun in finance, because we have received in payment of subscription a few bank notes for 50 cents, and even so low as 25 cents, utterly unavailable.

Protestantism in Mid-Europe.—The Church of Prussia is the only Protestant Church in mid-Europe. Existing in the midst of Catholicism, hardly having a predominance even in its own territory, and surrounded by the Greek and Romish communions, it has acquired a very peculiar character.

Methodist Press.

Day of Fasting.—The five Bishops of the M. E. Church, North, have published in the Advocate and Journal of the 26th ult., a recommendation to the ministers and members to observe Friday, the 2d day of April next, as a day of fasting and prayer in view of the General Conference about to convene:

"That God would vouchsafe to the General Conference the spirit of wisdom and meekness, and holiness, that in all their deliberations they may seek, and reach, such conclusions, and adopt such regulations, as shall conduce to the peace, spiritualty, and rapid extension of the Church, and be promotive of the glory of God."

We doubt not many earnest prayers will be offered up to the Head of the Church in the Southern Section of Methodism in behalf of the deliberations of so large and important a body of Christian ministers.

The St. Louis Ch. Advocate.—Doctor M'Anally puts out an excellent Church paper. We regret to see, from his last editorial, that the enterprise is rubbing the bottom in getting through the first year. But serving so large and important religious interests to the West, as it does, and directed with ability, and withal favorably located, it must succeed. We suggest that our brethren in St. Louis materially erred in not starting out with, and sticking to the cash plan. Our readers will join heartily with the editor in the following paragraph:

"That a paper devoted to the interest of the Methodist Church ought to be sustained in this city none will deny. With one exception, this is the largest city in the bounds of the Church, South; and with the exception of New Orleans it exercises an influence over a larger extent of country than any other city in the bounds of the Southern branch of the Church. And that such a paper will be well sustained here in the end we have no doubt."

The Northern Agitation.—Both editors of the N. and L. Advocate present well digested views on different aspects of the present lay movements, North. Dr. M., on the main subject, Mutual Rights, takes position and argues to it:

"Upon a careful analysis of the polity of the M. E. Church, we are impressed with the beauty, efficiency and harmony of the system, and are thoroughly convinced that the rights and privileges of the laity and ministry are mutually guarded and protected."

Dr. P. takes a striking relative view of the matter:

"One of the strong arguments, in former days, against the erecting of a separate and distinct ecclesiastical connection, was the fear of changes in the organic law of the Church, and that the discipline would be unsafe in other hands. How does the process of passing events demonstrate that subject now! Let the North answer for itself, in the following extract, which we are permitted to take from a private letter, written by one of the first ministers of the M. E. Church, North: 'I believe,' says he, 'you will be the only true Methodist Episcopal Church in a few years, if our people keep on innovating.' The writer of this letter is an itinerant, and now fills one of the most important and responsible stations in the Northern connection. It is addressed to a brother minister in the South."

Correction.—A correspondent in Zion's Herald gives the latest news about the slaveholding P. E. elected to the General Conference from W. Virginia. This correspondent, after denying the statement, (which we believe has not been questioned before, and which was made by a writer in the Boston as well as Richmond paper) presents the delegate elect himself as saying in writing:

"You inquire, 'Is the Rev. Mr. Titchenell, Presiding Elder of the Clarksburg District, and delegate to the next General Conference, a slaveholder?' I answer, no, emphatically, no! Neither in theory nor in fact, nor do I ever intend to be."

Baptism—New Book.—The Richmond Advocate continues its able strictures upon Dr. Howell's "Evils of Infant Baptism." Dr. Summers has concluded his upon same subject in the S. C. Advocate. They are to form the Appendix of the New Book which the Church is expecting, and which will, doubtless be a book for the times. The Editor thus speaks of the MS. which he has examined:

"Dr. Summers has in readiness for the press a work which is the result of many years' patient examination of the subject of Baptism. The nature, perpetuity, subjects, administrator, mode, and use of Baptism, are discussed in a systematic and elaborate style of argumentation and illustration. We have had the pleasure to examine the work in manuscript, and frankly give it as our opinion that it will be worthy to be put among the text-books of the Church, on a subject which is made to occupy a very prominent place in the religious world now-a-days, by the strenuous and unceasing efforts of immersionists to disseminate their peculiar views."

Revs. D. B. Leyne and E. B. Lockley.—We have received from these Missionaries a letter addressed to the members of the Alabama Conference, and written on leaving Havana. It seems to have been delayed quite out of time—dated 31st of January—and then to have taken an elbow route, via New York, instead of coming directly. They have our thanks for the very hearty and complimentary things said touching the kindness of their reception and entertainment while in the Crescent City. We subjoin, at this time, as being of interest, the postscript, which is in confirmation of what has already extensively obtained as a serious charge against this Nuvigation Company:

"Great imposition has been practiced on the passengers of the Empire City, by her commander, Capt. Lewis, in transferring us to the Philadelphia, to await the arrival of the Georgia. Instead of being shipped from the Empire, on the Georgia, according to contract, we were subjected to the inconvenience of being down to sleep, wherever we could, without pallet, blanket, or any sleeping accommodation, though we paid for state rooms in the first cabin. The officers on this line of boats are dead to all feelings for the passengers: politeness they have never known, or have entirely forgotten. They take pleasure in offering indignity to all sects and ages. It requires much grace to bear so much insult. Will the Church papers please copy this! If the secular press will also copy we think they will do some service to the travelers to the West. We are variously estimated on board, from ten to thirteen hundred passengers.

Literary Notices.

The Christian Sacraments. By Rev. Orceneth Fisher. Published by J. Ball. New Orleans: 1852. 18mo. pp. 240.

The author is a prominent member of the East Texas Conference. The preface informs us that the first edition of this work was hastily prepared and published to meet an emergency—from which the present revised edition has proceeded, enlarged and suited in its form for general use and preservation. It disenses, in an excellent spirit and with much fairness and perspicuity, the nature, design, mode and subjects of Baptism, and also the nature, proper use, perpetuity and proper subjects of the Lord's Supper. The style adopted is that of catechism, and seems particularly to have in view the youth of the land. The author well observes: "First impressions are most lasting, and an error once imbibed is very hard to be eradicated. If our children, while they are children, were properly catechized upon the various points of controversial theology, we should have very little to fear on that point in after life. But it is to be feared there is among us a culpable neglect in this thing. The points in controversy we deem non essential, and therefore let them slide, until the enemy comes along and magnifies our non essential into all important subjects: the wrong side of the question is presented; our children become bewildered; their faith is unsettled; they falter; they are gone! We may mourn over our children; for they may never return to us."

Perhaps some will differ from Mr. F. when he includes seekers as proper subjects of baptism with regenerated believers and infants. Of course, in all the points at issue between Methodists and others, he is, out and out, Methodist. The Q. and A. kept up through the book do not prevent the connection of clear and forcible argument. We hail always with peculiar satisfaction a book arising in this section of the Church. The author and the publisher have both done a good part by the book. For sale by J. Ball.

Exposition of the Apocalypse. In a series of Lectures. By Orr Scott, Evangelist of the Methodist Church. Marietta, Ohio. M. W. Dodd. New York: 1851. 12mo., pp. 437.

It is the consent of all who study the Revolutions that their meaning may be ascertained, satisfactorily, to a greater extent than is at first conceived possible. The author gives one more definite ideas, if not more correct, than many writers on the Apocalypse. He has constructed and appended to the book a very ingenious chart, marking off the chronology in longitudinal columns, and representing leading events starting or ending in them. The reader, if he enlarges not his critical and exegetical knowledge of this portion of the Bible, will not fail of this spiritual benefit: he will have higher and nobler conceptions of what the Church of God is, and the stupendous vastness of the plans which God is carrying forward by it and for it. For sale by J. Ball.

Examples of Life and Death. By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney. New York: C. Scribner, 1852. 16 mo. pp. 300.

A charming little volume by a writer not excelled in her sphere. The 24 subjects selected are of various ages, sex, attainment, professions.

"Lo! all mankind are students;—how to live
And how to die, their two great lessons still."

Homœopathy; an Examination of its Doctrines and evidences. By W. Hooker, M. D. New York: C. Scribner. 12 mo. pp. 149.

This is a Prize Essay and altogether readable to other than professional men. It treats homœopathy as a delusion—a great absurdity. For sale by J. Ball.

Methodist Pulpit—Professor Deems.

The last number is promptly to hand. Contents: A well written Sermon by Rev. W. Spillman, M. D.—local preacher, Columbus, Miss.; Editorial Miscellany; Prof. D. gives us a strong article on lay representation—pro.

Ladies' Repository—Dr. Tefft.

Chain of Sacred Wonders—Dr. Latta.

These very agreeable visitors are all come—the latest due.

The Holy Bible; illustrated by maps and engravings. J. Ball. Phila.: 1850.

The publisher has laid on our table a copy of his excellent edition. It has been highly spoken of by the best judges. The maps of sacred geography are among its valuable peculiarities—the marginal references clear and copious. Gilt, binding and clasping rich and substantial. Fine for present making.

Blackwood, for February. New York: Leonard Scott & Co.

Contents—Duke of Marlborough;
My Novel, or Varieties of English Life;
A Canter to California;
Struggles for Fame and Fortune;
Longfellow's Golden Legend;
Bull Fights, in pictures;
Cupid in the Cabinet;
The Old Soldier;
Results of Revolution in Europe.

The author of "Golden Legend" is put, beyond comparison, at the head of American poets, and may be considered an equal competitor for the palm with any of the younger poets of Great Britain."

Homestead Exemption.—A homestead Exemption bill has passed both branches of the Tennessee Legislature, securing the person intending to take the benefit of it, as he has intended before the Deputy or executing

A. B. Society—Agent's Report.

Bro. McTyeire: I ought to have embraced an earlier opportunity to acknowledge the receipt of the following sums, handed to me by yourself, at the late session of the Louisiana Conference, for the American Bible Society:

Shreveport, per Rev. L. Parker	$5 40
Caddo, H. H. Read	36 25
Mansfield, A. E. Goodwyn	31 20
Trinity, E. W. Griswold	1 00
Vermilionville, H. A. Morse	7 75
New Orleans, J. M. Hofer	4 85
Franklin, P. M. Goodwyn	7 70
Columbia, M. Davies	1 00

In addition to the above, I have received the following from other sources, from the same benevolent institution:

Col. V. P. Winder, Terrebonne, La.	$25 00
H. N. Smith and lady, Woodville, Mi.	60 00
Mrs. Wm. J. Fort, Bayon Sara	30 00
C. L. Mathews, Esq., do	30 00

I have received on subscription for the Bible House in New Orleans, the following:

T. H. McManus, Jackson, La		$30 00
C. W. Eason,	"	25 00
Mrs. E. Keller,	" paid	5 00
R. S. Vaughn,	"	5 00
Mrs. E. L. Singleterry,	"	5 00
Col. D. Pipes, Sr., Clinton, La.,	paid	20 00
William Silliman,	" paid	25 00
A. D. Palmer,	"	100 00
H. H. Knox,	"	5 00
Cannon Melson,	"	5 00
Elizabeth Kent,	"	5 00
Charles Trotter,	"	5 00
Mrs. H. Overton,	"	5 00
Wm. East,	"	25 00
Wm. Sandle, Jackson, La		25 00
F. D. Higginbotham, Clinton, La		5 00

I regret exceedingly that I have not been able to accomplish more in this great and good work. My extreme debility has prevented.

Some of the persons in Louisiana and Southern Mississippi, who became life members of the Am. Bible Society twelve months ago, I regret to learn, have not yet received their certificates. The fault, however, has been none of mine. I remitted the money promptly, and directed the certificates to be sent accordingly. Will those who have not received them, be good enough to let me know, by letter, at New Orleans? I will have the matter attended to without further delay. Persons writing to me at New Orleans will please direct their letters to the care of W. H. Foster, Esq.

E. H. Hatcher,
March 1, 1852. Ag't Am. B. Society.

Bible Cause in Montgomery, Alabama.

Bro. McTyeire: I have caught upon idle pen to drop you a few lines touching the Bible cause in Montgomery. Dr. Styles has been with us several days, and has been hard at work preaching the Gospel and pleading for the Bible; and he has not pleaded in vain. Many noble hearts have responded to the call, and have determined to have a Bible house in Montgomery. Why, sir, the house is built and paid for, and situated in one of the most business parts of the city. It is a beautiful brick building, long, high and airy. This building cost, it is said, $15,000. It is a present from Mr. Abner McGehee to the Bible Society here—he is a member of the Methodist P. Church, and a brother to him of Mississippi, the man whose liberality is so known abroad. Mr. A. McGehee has not only given the above build'ng to the society here, but he has been busy in circulating among the people to raise subscriptions to purchase Bibles, and his efforts and those of others have raised several thousand dollars; so that there will be an immediate purchase of Bibles. God be praised for the prosperity of the cause in Montgomery. The agents, Rev. T. P. C. Sheiman and Rev. S. Pilley, will have an eye to the building up of this establishment, in collections through the State.

Yours Truly,
C. D. Oliver.

Officers Bible Society.—Elbert Holt, President; W. Boll, Treasurer; Richard Jones, Secretary; and there are a Board of Managers.

Montgomery, Ala., March 3, 1852.

British Wesleyan Matters.—While expecting full and late accounts of the important proceedings of the "Committee on Memorials" from our correspondent, who is one of the Committee, we take the following from the London Watchman, of Feb. 11:

"On the 3d instant, the Committee appointed by the Conference to consider the Memorials, the suggestions of the Manchester meeting, and other documents, and to report upon the recommendations contained in them, met at Centenary Hall. All the members appointed on the minutes were present, with the exception of Dr. Newton, whom indisposition prevented from attending; and Dr. Bunting also has, from the same cause, been but occasionally present at the sittings. At the beginning it was decided that every communication, whether from Circuits or individuals, should be read at full. This occupied both the morning and evening sitting of the first day, with a very large portion of the second. After this, the Ministers freely expressed their views on the whole of the questions opened by the Memorialists; each entering at such length as he thought well into the subject, and making the recommendations he deemed worthy of consideration. It may be supposed that where there were fifty members, such a full expression of sentiment would occupy many sittings. When all these general suggestions were fully before the Committee, the consideration of individual points was entered upon, and in that the Committee continues to be engaged.

From this statement it is evident that the conclusions of the Committee are yet to be ascertained, and therefore neither we nor others can certainly tell what they are to be."

Change.—W. H. Fowler, Esq., has purchased the Eutaw (Alabama) Whig. We feel it no loss to lose a good subscriber in Mr. F., and get in return so excellent an Exchange."

Sad to Think Of.—A correspondent writes from South Louisiana, 5th inst.—"A week from last Sabbath, about 4, P. M., death took a man here at the gambler's table."

The only protestant ecclesiastical body that has given in its adherence to Louis Napoleon, is the Directory of the Lutheran Church.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Priests.

From Deuteronomy 10:9, we learn that the Lord allowed the Levites, or priests, under the old dispensation, no lands or portion with their brethren. He himself became security for their support, that they might feel their dependence more fully. What lesson does this fact teach the ministry of the Church now! What is the state of that minister's mind, who, forgetting this principle, plunges in among the loaves and fishes to provide for himself?

The poor.

"He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord;" because God has especially charged himself with their support and protection, in that they fear and trust in him. What a remuneration for the lack of wealth! what a blessing to be poor!

God's plans and purposes.

Numbers, 14:34.—"After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise." Margin, "or altering of my purpose."

As God's treatment of men, both as nations and individuals, takes constant cognizance of their character and conduct, so both his plans and purposes are subject to change to adapt themselves to the changes in men's course. The principles of God's government never change—his purposes do often. See Jer., 18th chapter. So, Mr. Editor, your friend of the Puritan Recorder must try again.

H.

A Wonderful Adventurer.—Dr. Kane, who is widely known as one of the enterprising spirits who sailed in search of Sir John Franklin, in Mr. Grinnell's expedition, and who is at the present entertaining the people of the Northern cities with a series of lectures descriptive of his observations and experiences in the Arctic seas, appears, from accounts in some of the papers, to have led a life of unexampled adventure, and almost unparalleled wanderings, even before his voyage to the polar regions. Certainly an American, of whom we have ever heard, has seen as much of the perils of the world, or even of the world itself.

According to these accounts, he was Surgeon of the American Legation to China, and, on his way to the Celestial regions, spent some weeks on a foot-tramp through the orange groves of Brazil, and about a month in tiger-hunting near Bombay. Hence after a dozen unsuccessful attempts to smuggle himself into the forbidden lands of China, he went over to the Philippines, and by aid of the good Monks of the interior of Manilla, explored its fastnesses and volcanic wonders. He was the first man to descend into the great crater of Taal, lowered down twelve hundred feet over the brink, by a bamboo rope tied around his middle, and brought back a bottle of its sulphur waters, burning off his beard in the lava cinders. Leaving China, after a second visit, in which he encountered shipwreck, he passed to India as physician of the Dremedary Dugore, and was palanquined for three months through the wonders of its mountain architecture, the ancient glories of Candy, the mysterious passes of the Ghaut country, visiting Madras, Pondicherry, and every spot that would have read of in the trial of Warren Hastings. Next, to Upper Egypt, and Abyssinia, crossing the Desert on his camel to the basis of Jupiter Ammon, climbing at break-neck risk to the top stone of the sounding Colossus of Memnon, and exploring the tombs of the Pharaohs for a fortnight, three weeks with Prof. Lepsius and his associates.

Wrecked again while passing down the Nile and wounded, in an encounter near Alexandria, he pushed across to Greece, and traversed every scene of classic interest, climbing to the Hermitage Spring, and sleeping on the shore of Marathon. He returned by Italy, France, and England, only to rest a few weeks, before a visit on the coast of Africa. Renewing here some acquaintances which he had formed in Brazil, he was allowed to inspect the entire machinery of the slave trade, and to pass up into the interior under firman of Dersouza, the great intendiary between the chiefs of the slave-making districts and the Brazilian carriers. The fever was his pay for this trip, and he was sent home by Commodore Read, invalided. Perfectly patched up from the effects of this expedition, he volunteered for service with the army of Mexico, and was ordered with despatches on a dare-devil race through the country, over land left to overtake Gen. Scott. Availing himself, at Perote, of a miscreant escort of Mexican birds, that Gen. Worth had employed as a decoy company, he got into a series of fights, in the last of which he received the swords of Generals Guona and Gen. Torrejon, and had his horse killed under him, and was himself dangerously wounded, while protecting the lives of his prisoners against his own men. Subsequently he was cruising, and practising hydrography on the coast survey, up to the moment of receiving a telegraphic dispatch, accepting his long proffer of services for the Arctic expedition. And the vice fever in the Canton river, the plague in Egypt, the yellow fever at Alexandria, congestive at Puebla, and the African fever on the coast. These, and wounds, and an organic disease of the heart, which he has had from boyhood, have been his preparation for the hazards he is encountering now.

Life in Paris.—A Paris letter writer describes a scene in the police courts:

The tribunal of Correctional Police will become a resort for those who are in search of amusement, and if it only held its sessions in the evening, would seriously interfere with the receipts of the theatres. The following scene was enacted amid great applause on Saturday last: Mr. Belloie was arraigned for the crime of having stolen a hat. His countenance, which was placed at the bar, was that of an injured innocence itself. "Really, it's too bad to make me shell every tear I have, to myself between two hanks for having made to take about a hat." "A mistake!" said the President, "a mistake done on purpose." "An accidental mistake, an interested impartial President. I submit it to your ripening judgment and your lofty wisdom." Then upon the complainant, a stout gentleman of a cune, deposed that while he was playing dominoes in a cafe, on the 29th of November last, the prisoner walked off with his hat, and that he could not have mistaken it for his own, as he carried it in his hand instead of putting it on his head. "That was because I was too hot on the 29th November!" "Too hot on the 29th November! The reason was, you scoundrel, it was too big for you, and would have betrayed you had you put it on your head." "I was tormented with domestic anxiety," replied the culprit, "by a hole whose fidelity I had good reason to suspect, and I took the hat without knowing what I was about." "But it seems you are a regular hat-stealer, put in the President, "for no fewer than seven hats were found at your lodgings." "That proves, sagacious President, that no need to take the hat of this gentleman, the fact is, these hats were not stolen, but purchased by me." I have a passion for hats of all sizes and shapes, just as Lablache has a passion for snuff-boxes, and as Goethe had a fancy for rotten apples. A friend of mine, who formerly lent me money, is now ready to furnish me with cash, to prove to you that he has confidence in esteem and confidence, and to satisfy you that I could not have stolen the hat." A friend alluded to here swore solemnly to the good character of the prisoner, but judge was inexorable, and Mr. Belloie was sentenced to thirteen months confinement. The curtain fell, amid thunders of applause.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Mr. Editor: Did you ever hear any thing that answered to the following description?

"The clear language, and cold as it is clear,
Falls soporific on the listless ear;
Like quicksilver, the rhetoric they display
Shines as it runs, but, grasped at, slips away

There are 255 churches in New York city, 93 have been organized since 1840.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Obituary Notices.

Our beloved sister, MARY FENNER SANDERS, is no more. Her maiden name was Comprender. She was married to Mr. Romulus M. Sanders on the 25th of February, 1851.

During a revival of religion in this place, in 1849, she was a subject of converting grace, and joined the M. E. Church, of which she lived an acceptable member until the day of her death.

Her last illness was severe and protracted: so much so to admit of those spiritual exercises that arm one for the last conflict, and give a full triumph over death. All that she said, however, indicated that she was strong in faith "giving glory;" and that her hope was an anchor to her soul in this storm of sickness and death.

On the 12th of February, she entered the "saints' everlasting rest," aged 21 years, 5 months and 8 days; having been a Christian 2 years and four months; a wife 14 months and 4 days, and a mother 26 days.

On the 13th, the day after her death, her funeral was preached from Phil. i. 21. She was then borne to her grave and buried with her kindred dead, by those among whom she had been brought up, and whom she had preceded in her entrance into "the rest that remains for the people of God."

As the Pastor of the Church, with pain I have had to record of many who entered the Church at that revival, "they have withered and decayed;" of others, "they are still growing and bringing forth the fruits of righteousness," of our much loved sister Sanders I record, "a ripe shock, gathered in Heaven's garner, FOREVER SAVED!"

O. L. Nash.

Clinton, Miss., Feb. 2, 1852.

P. S. Nashville and Louisville Advocate, please copy.

The Rev. GEO. B. CONE, who died on the 15th of January, was a native of Connecticut. He was left, when a small boy, an orphan. While a studednt of the Oneida Conference Seminary, his piety and perseverance attracted the notice of his teachers. He entered the Sophomore class in Wesleyan University and graduated reputably while that institution was under the fostering care of the late Dr. Fisk. Punctuality was a prominent trait in Brother Cone, in religious duty, as well as in all other duties that portain to a college life. His rule was to neglect no duty assigned to him, however inadequate he might think himself to the task or seem to others, but to perform it to the best of his ability. His suavity of manner, together with his activity and religious zeal during the revivals of religion, which sometimes occurred in that institution, rendered him a favorite among the pious, and popular with his brother students. Brother Cone filled some honorable stations as an instructor of youth. He was teacher of the Ancient and Modern languages in Troy Conference Seminary for several years, and filled the station with acceptability. He was appointed principal of Rhode Island Conference Seminary, but his health during the cume South and was a teacher in Macon Female College, Georgia. Here he passed through a severe ordeal by the loss of his wife, who also had been sometime in feeble health. He was afterwards connected with the Female College in Macon, Mississippi; and, lastly, in the Columbia Female College, Tennessee. Even that climate was too cold for his delicate health, and he returned again to a warmer latitude, where he contented himself by teaching a select school. Chaste and instructive in conversation, he gained the affections of his pupils. Indeed, no one could be long in his society without being benefitted by his conversation and pious oxample.

His Sabbaths were usually occupied by preaching in destitute places, where his pious labors appeared to be most needed. Though rigid in discipline to himself, he was charitable to others. He seemed to "hold communion with Heaven, and walk with God in the garden at every hour in the day, without wishing to hide himself." Brother Cone was called away in the prime of life and usefulness. In his last sickness he lingered but a few days, and life ebbed out with scarcely any pain. Far from the sepulchre of his parents repose the ashes of George B. Cone. But his grave is not as among strangers, for it was watered with the tears of affection by those who valued learning, and love purity. The writer of this notice, who was a class-mate, offers this as a rude memorial for the virtues of him whose character he admired. Those who knew him best loved him most.

"By foreign hands thy dying eyes were closed;
By foreign hands thy decent limbs composed;
By foreign hands thy humble grave adorned,
By strangers honored, and by strangers mourned."

V. L. Hopins.

Eutaw, Feb. 29, 1852.

California Mission.—(Miss. Conference.)

Brother McTyeire: Please acknowledge $25 00 received from Rev. W. H. Watkins, of Natchez Station for the California Mission.

J. M. Jones.

The Mss. of Tasso.—A curious case, of much interest to the lovers of Italian literature, has just been decided in the Secret Council at Rome. We find the particulars stated in the London Athenæum: About seventeen years ago the Count Alberti, a Roman noble and officer in the army, announced the possession of a quantity of unpublished manuscripts in the handwriting of Tasso, throwing new light on his personal history. Part of these he sold, in 1838, to Mazzaroni, a bookseller at Ancona, and the remainder in the succeeding year to Olualta, a bookseller of Lucca.

On the publication of the Lucca papers, the Ancona purchaser had Count Alberti arrested in the charge of having sold him forged documents and autographs. A commission of examination, after sitting seven years, condemned him, and he was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment.

Alberti appealed, and a second commission, with larger powers, was appointed to re-examine the whole case. They have been nearly seven years in their inquiries, while the Count was undergoing his punishment; and now, just as his term of imprisonment is over, they have decided to reverse the sentence and pronounce him innocent. He proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the manuscripts had been left by the Abbe Mercantonio to Prince Gustavo Palcombri, from whose library they had come to Alberti. This is a hard case for the Count, and a very unfavorable specimen of the sctrrity or discriminaiion of Roman justice.

The firm of "Rothschild Brothers," consisting of Anselm Meyer Rothschild at Frankfort, Solomon Meyer Rothschild at Vienna, James Meyer Rothschild at Paris, and Charles Meyer Rothschild of Naples, has been prolonged till the end of June, 1852, when a meeting of the family will be held to decide upon its further continuance.

Mr. Forter, of Nashville, Tenn., has invented a ride which loads and primes itself. It can be used as a revolver by putting on a cylinder with eight loads; or by applying another apparatus, called the "magazine," sixty charges of powder and ball may be fired as rapidly as a watch ticks.

While the express train was passing Holidsburgh N. C., on Monday evening, the horses attached to the Newtown stage became frightened and ran away, breaking the driver's back. Mr. Follett, the contractor, had his legs broken, and the passengers sustained considerable injury.

A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of New York to incorporate a company to construct a tunnel under the Hudson river near Albany. A survey and estimate have been made, and the plan is considered feasible. It is believed a perfect work can be constructed with a double track and an easy grade for half a million of dollars.

General Intelligence.

Proceedings of the Industrial Meeting
Held in Warrington, near the Pensacola Navy Yard.

The call for an Industrial Meeting at the Pensacola Navy Yard, as published by a committee of a previous meeting, was most enthusiastically responded to last evening by a numerous and respectable assemblage of the citizens of Pensacola, Milton, and the vicinity of the Navy Yard.

Major W. H. Chase was unanimously called to the chair, and Mr. J. W. Shippey appointed Secretary.

The chairman, after making a few pertinent remarks, and reading a very interesting paper on the subject of "diffusing knowledge among men," stated the object of the meeting, proposed that Dr. A. L. Plough be requested to address the assembly in explanation of the objects of his mission, and read several testimonials in favor of the same, from distinguished gentlemen in Louisiana and Alabama.

Dr. Plough was then introduced by the chairman, and gave an interesting history of his experience, of the influence of the mechanic arts at industrial exhibitions in general, and of the progress of the various branches of industry in the city of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana, during the last twenty years. He concluded by expressing a wish in the object of his present mission, that whereas the art of ship building has become an important item in our country, that a ship of war may be built at the Pensacola Navy Yard, proper steps to be first taken for obtaining the order or sanction of the United States Government for that object. The ship, if built, to be exhibited at the proposed Fair in New Orleans, as the product of Southern industry and Southern mechanism.

Wm. W. J. Kelly, Esq., of Pensacola, then addressed the meeting, eloquently setting forth the advantages that would accrue to the South, the State of Florida in particular, if the views of Dr. Plough, as stated by him, can be carried out, and expressing his conviction that all the citizens will earnestly unite in the effort contemplated.

On motion of Wm. Morrill, Esq., seconded by Col. Shinl, it was

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of this meeting. The following named gentlemen were appointed—Hon. O. M. Avery, Joseph Forry, Esq., and Wm. Morrill, Esq.

The committee retired for deliberation, and during its absence—Col. A. M. Landrum, of Milton, made a few forcible remarks, showing the necessity which exists for exertion among the mechanical and agricultural interests of the South, to enable them to compete with those of the North, and the certainty of a successful result of such exertion.

The Committee, having returned, presented the following resolutions, which were read by its chairman, Joseph Forsyth, Esq., and passed unanimously:

Resolved, That we cordially respond to the appeal of Dr. A. L. Plough in favor of the establishment of a Mechanics', Farmers', and Artists Exhibition and Fair, in May, 1853, in New Orleans, and that we will cooperate with him as far as our ability and circumstances will admit.

Resolved, That a delegation be chosen by this meeting to represent the city of Pensacola, and the counties of Escambia and St. Rosa, in the Industrial Convention to be holden New Orleans in May next.

Resolved, That a memorial be prepared and presented to Congress, in favor of constructing a vessel of war at the Navy-yard near Pensacola, with all the improvements that have been given to the latest classes and fast-sailing ships of the mercantile marine of the United States, with the view of developing the facilities of such constructions in time of peace at the only Navy Yard existing south of Norfolk, so that due preparation may be had therein for a time of war.

Resolved, also, That it is desirable, in the event of the favorable consideration of the memorial by Congress, that the vessel of war should be constructed and equipped in time to be exhibited as a Southern built man-of-war, at the grand Exhibition and Fair to be holden in New Orleans in May, 1853.

Resolved, That a committee of twenty-five persons be appointed, by the chair, whose duty it shall be to prepare the memorial to Congress to cause it to be numerously signed, and to correspond, in relation to it, with persons residing in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida, and with the Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida, with a view of procuring their prompt action in the premises.

Citizens' Bank Bill.—Baton Rouge, March 10.—The Citizens' Bank bill, with the veto of the Governor, came up this morning before the Senate, and the question "Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the veto of the Governor?" was carried in the affirmative by a majority of more than two-thirds, viz: 23 yeas against 8 nays.

Louisiana Legislature.—Baton Rouge, March 10.—Mr Benjamin's Corporation bill has passed both Houses, and the Tax bill, for internal improvements. [Rev. Bulln.

Maine Liquor Law.—Boston, March 9.—The Maine liquor law has passed the Massachusetts Senate by a vote of 20 yeas to 9 nays.

The Bill to abolish capital punishment has passed the House by the constitutional majority of two-thirds. [Rev. Pic.

The Strike in England.—The engineers' strike appears likely to be a failure. At Manchester about 3000 men had returned to their employment, after signing a declaration that they had abandoned the combination.

Texas Creditors.—The creditors of Texas holding first-class certificates, have called a meeting to be held in Washington on the 5th of April, to decide upon accepting the terms of the late act of the Legislature of Texas.

New Line of Atlantic Steamers.—We learn, from Quebec, that the government has advertised for tenders for three steamers to run from Montreal and Quebec, via Halifax, to Liverpool. During the season for navigation of the St. Lawrence the steamers are to run twice a month, and during the Winter are to run between Portland and Liverpool.

Outrage.—Some one entered the clerk's office of the Circuit Court in Covington, Ky., on Sunday night, the 25th ult., built a fire in the stove, and deliberately burned all the books and papers, worth, it is supposed, $75,000.

Fall of a Building.—Between 8 and 9 o'clock on Wednesday night last, the building known as the Planters' Press, in Commerce street, Mobile, fell with a tremendious crash, instantly killing two negroes. Mr. Coxe, a bricklayer, had his arm broken. The building was owned and occupied by Messrs. A. W. Perry & Co.

The Wheeling Bridge.—Petitions have been presented to Congress from citizens of four States, deprecating the decision of the Supreme Court, and praying that the Wheeling bridge be constituted a post route, by law, which is a mode that the court indicated in their decree for protecting the bridge.

Mississippi Legislature.—The two Houses of the Mississippi Legislature have agreed to adjourn on the 15th inst.

The Steam Fire Engine.—A second trial of the Steam Fire Engine took place in Cincinnati, on the 2d inst. The machine was put into operation in presence of the committee and a large number of citizens. The committee report the following: Steam was raised and the engine put into motion in 4 minutes and 10 seconds from time of lighting the fire, and in 46 seconds more water was thrown from the pipe at the end of 250 feet of hose; the stream of water was continued indefinitely. The committee are strongly of the opinion that the principle of applying steam to the working of fire engines, on the plan proposed by Messrs. Shawk, Latta & Co., is a good one, and they recommend the City Council to make an appropriation of a sum sufficient to make a proper working machine, at as early a day as practicable.

Gas—Trade with Brazil.—A Rio Janeiro circular affords the following statistics relative to our trade with Brazil. It appears that the total import of flour into Rio de Janeiro from the United States, during the year 1851 was 252,448 barrels. The actual consumption for the year was 180,101 barrels.

The exports of coffee to the United States during the year 1851 were 1,000,505 bags, viz:

New Orleans	342,214	Boston	14,125
Baltimore	269,020	Mobile	11,250
New York	258,208	Savannah	4,300
Philadelphia	70,815	California	3,300
Charleston	24,000	Norfolk	125

The total exports of coffee to Europe during the same year were 1,011,053 bags.

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 13, 1852.

Two important events, bearing greatly on the future prosperity of the Empire, have tended to make the past year remarkable, namely: the total annihilation of the slave trade, and the success of the Brazilian intervention in the affairs of the Banda Oriental, which, if carried out as successfully as commenced, will tend to open an active commerce with the River Platte, and the countries adjoining, which a narrow and blind policy have so long closed to the commerce of the world.

Release of a State Prisoner.—Mr. Huber, a state prisoner in France, has just been released, after an imprisonment of nearly twenty years. The following extract from his appeal to the President shows that the Inquisition and the Bastile still exist although not in name:

* * * * During the seventeen years that I have been a captive, suffering all that man can suffer; I have never uttered a complaint or allowed a murmur to escape me. This was not weakness, but persistance. I have successively occupied over a hundred cells. I have been dragged over the subterranean stone floors of Clairvaux leaded with irons in the stifling dungeons of Doullens, and crushed in the oubliettes of Mount St. Michael; my health has been ruined, my strength enfeebled by a long diet upon bread and water; but more than all, I have been tortured and wounded in my affections. During the seven years that I underwent the horrors of the cellular regime, I was so cut off from the world, that my mother my poor mother whom I had so much loved, had been dead five years before I was made acquainted with it; but spite of these trials, spite of my sufferings, more cruel than any ever suffered since the destruction of the Bastile spite of the tears forced by despair from my broken heart, I smothered my sobs under the arches of my prison, and refused to cry for mercy."

Yellow Fever.—Late accounts from Surinam state that the yellow fever, or black vomit, was still carrying off great numbers. Letters from Pernambuco to February 4 state that the yellow fever is quite prevalent among the shipping at that port.

A machine for the printing of 10 Lulins has been invented and put into operation in Providence, R. I. that will print twelve colors. This is going beyond any other machine hitherto made for the same purpose.

Foreign News.
By the Franklin's Mails.

ENGLAND.

In the House of Commons, on the 16th ult. Lord John Russell brought forward the second grand measure of the session, viz: to provide for the National defences. Lord John proposed to add to the regular army about as many, inch as have been sent to the Cape during the present war, that is to say, 4000 troops of the line and 1000 artillerymen, and as regards the Militia, to cover by ballot one-fifth of all the men in Great Britain between the ages of 20 and 23 in the first year of the system and of those between the ages of 23 and 24 in all succeeding years. They are to be liable to serve only for 21 or 28 days in the first year, and for 14 days in each of the three succeeding years. Except in cases of invasion or of imminent danger of invasion, they can not be called upon to serve beyond the limits of their respective counties. Two-thirds of the officers are to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant and the remainder by the Crown. It is intended that in places where there is a large Police force, such force shall be organized and trained as militiamen, and these, as well as any volunteer companies whose services the Government may accept, are to be considered as forming part of the local militia. The proposed measure is not to be applied to Ireland.—Lord Palmerston supported the measure, while Mr. Hume opposed and Mr. Cobden ridiculed it. It is not likely to be carried without great opposition and stormy debating.

Accounts from the Australian Gold Diggings to the beginning of November state that the excitement had increased a hundred fold, and the Colonists had nearly gone mad. The yield of gold was immense.

The British Government has commenced prosecuting the Irish press, and the proprietor of The Dundalk Democrat had been arrested for publishing wicked and malicious libels on the English Government.

The Overland India and China Mail, with dates from Hong-Kong to Dec. 30, and Bombay to Jan. 15, arrived in London on the 16th February. The Burmese are said to have shown the white feather, and had acceded to the demands of the British Government. All the English ships of war remained off Rangoon, as doubts were entertained of the good faith of the King. 100,000 troops having been mustered and great warlike preparations made. About 600 houses in Hong-Kong had been destroyed by fire. The rich men of Canton had been called upon to contribute large sums toward the expense of the war. reports of which are exceedingly vague.

IRELAND.

The Dublin Evening Post mentions an empire-bonnide authority, that some of the Roman Catholic clergy who have become unpopular on account of opposing secret societies that are exclusively secular, have been served with notices to desist. Whilst the Catholic priests are preaching against these combinations, some of the oldest and most independent Presbyterian ministers have been distinguished for their loud and vehement adjurations against the landed proprietors.

In the north of Ireland, a formidable combination exists against the payment of rents, and such is the state of alarm among the landlords that several had given up all notion of enforcing payment.

It is stated that the Presbyterian tenantry, in some localities, were offering a passive resistance to the collection of rents.

The Times Herald announces the death of the Rt. Rev. Dr. McNicholas, the titular bishop of Achonry.

There has been another, but happily abortive attempt to sacrifice life in the disturbed districts. It was an instance of highway shooting upon an inoffensive man, who was walking with his son and some neighbors. He was attacked by ten or twelve men, who are not yet arrested.

We remark further military movements in Ireland but of no special significance.

FRANCE.

A solemn Te Deum had been celebrated in the Church of the Madeline in Paris—the President and high functionaries assisting—in consequence of the recovery of the Queen of Spain.

GERMANY.

The Prussian troops have commenced their return home from Lombsburg.

In the Darmstadt Chamber the law re-establishing capital punishment has been carried by a majority of two.

Dr. Jacbo, the custodian of the Library and Archives of the German National Assembly, has been fined 50 Thalers by the Frankfort police for his continued refusal to deliver up the original MS. of the German Constitution. He asserts that it has been lost or stolen.

A letter from Vienna, in the Independance of Brussels, says that the design of raising a very large loan has been adjourned by the Austrian Government, but that one of 200,000,000 florins is to be raised for completing the railways. It is reported that a tax of one per cent. will be placed on the capital of real property, in the room of the income tax.

A letter from Vienna, in the German Journal of Frankfort, says that on the 9th, all the principal editors of the political journals of Vienna were ordered to wait upon the Military Governor, and receive from him instructions as to the way in which they are in future to express themselves.

A letter from Vienna, of the 12th, states that the treaty respecting the indemnity due to Russia for the aid accorded by her to Austria in the war of Hungary, in 1849, has been definitively concluded. Austria is to furnish Russia with salt to the amount of 1,057,133 florins (rather more than 2,000,000) and to pay in money 4,615,384 florins in three instalments, the first of which has been already paid.

ITALY.

A letter from Milan, in the Opinione of Turin, of the 13th, states that the forts of Milan are to be immediately completed, and that the citadel is to be established upon a permanent footing. It is also said that a loan is to be raised to meet the expenses of a war, in case it should break out.

The Cologne Gazette quotes a letter from Lombardy of the 9th, stating that emigration is increasing in Lombardy to a fearful extent, owing to the heavy taxes laid on property in that Province.

It is said that some new clue to the murder of Rossi had been found, by which new light would be thrown upon the horrid tragedy.

The anniversary celebration of the establishment of the Republic came off at Rome, notwithstanding the efforts of the authorities to suppress it.

SPAIN.

The Queen's health was completely restored. Public thanks for her safety had been celebrated in Madrid and all the Catholic capitals of Europe, with great ceremony.

The Gazette contains royal orders, directing that the poignard with which Merino committed his crime, and the pistols and balls found in his house, be broken in pieces, and his manuscripts, not of a private nature, be burned in the presence of the Judge. The body of the regicide has been burned.

Arrival of the Georgia.

The steamship Georgia, which has been detained at the South-West Pass since Friday night last, came up to the city Tuesday morning, bringing a Panama mail, which she received from the Ohio at Havana. The Georgia left New York on the 25th ult., and Havana on the 3d instant in consequence of the detention at the Pass, the Georgia will not leave for New York until to-morrow. The Falcon also sails to-morrow, direct for Chagres.

This company will henceforth run two lines of steamers, one for New York and Chagres, via Havana; the other between here and Chagres direct. The steamers on the first line will leave here on the 10th and 25th of each month; those on the second on the 11th and 26th

From Panamà.

The Georgia brings us Panama papers to the 10th ult

Electric Telegraph.—The Panamenia publishes a circular, announcing the fact that arrangements have been made for the construction of a line of telegraph between Navy Bay, the prospective city of Colon and Panama. The Government of New Granada was prompt in sanctioning and encouraging the arrangement. Mr. J. Rogers is to be President of the company.

Ice.—The Herald of the 16th ult. says: "Fifteen hundred pounds of ice arrived on Friday at Jones's Orleans House. The train started from Gorgona at 6 o'clock a. m. and arrived in this city before 2 o'clock p. m. The joy with which this grateful article was received may be imagined better than described."

Passengers on the Isthmus.—The Herald says that passengers on the Isthmus are subjected to the most outrageous annoyances constantly. The through passengers by the Pioneer were accompanied by an agent with provisions and money to send them on by a steamer or sailing vessel, but in consequence of the high price of tickets or for some other reason, after remaining in Panama two or three days, he decamped for Chagres, leaving the destitute passengers in a sorry plight. The Herald very justly denounces such rascality in the strongest terms. There are between three and four thousand passengers now at Panaum, waiting to get away.

Chagres.—A bad state of things exists in Chagres, and outrages are almost daily perpetrated by those holding official stations. A short time since a respectable merchant was seized and incarcerated in the Castle of San Lorenzo for no real cause whatever, and Mr. Gleason, our Consul there, was unable to obtain his release until he deposited it in the name of his Government.

The Gorgona Road.—The road to Gorgona is now in good travelling condition. Passengers who come in now almost daily, express themselves but little fatigued with either riding or walking. Soon the railroad will be completed thither, and then for a short and delightful trip across the Isthmus.

The Tyrant Rosas.—A correspondent of the Pennsylvanian, writing from Buenos Ayres gives a horrid picture of the state of things in that distracted country. According to his account, the Julianous Marshal Bayman is a mild character in comparison with Rosas, who for the last eighteen years has exercised the powers of Governor, and has ruled with an iron hand. During all this time his will and word have been the supreme law, and life and property are given and taken without any one daring to question his authority. During this time he has taken the lives of some five thousand citizens in the opinion of those who have resided there on the spot; and who are best qualified to form a correct opinion on the subject. He has depopulated and impoverished the land, and in raising his present army of 30,000 men his conscriptions embraced all between the ages of 12 and 60 years. The writer says: "Yesterday I passed a company of boys, undrilled not one of whom would be able to hold a musket sufficiently steady to fire with accuracy." Rosas also bribed gold and silver and issued a paper currency which alone is legal. Twenty-two of his paper dollars are now given for a silver one. It is thought that Rosas will eventually fly to England, where he has many millions invested, and which he is charged with literally stealing from the nation.

Death of Soliva in Paris.—A letter written from Paris says:

"Some days ago the Marquis de ——, a neighbor of ours, gave a large soiree. In the morning a gentleman called on her and asked for an invitation. He told her he had come by order of the Prefect of Police. The lady expressed much annoyance and indignation; whereupon he asked her whether she would have any objection to let him see the list of her invitations. She showed it to him, whereupon he told her that he would not trespass on her for the invitation, it being unnecessary. The Marquis set on foot some inquiries, the result of which was that he was assured that among the invited guests there were no less than four agents of the police.

Telegraphic Items.

Deyos Honor, March 11.

In the Senate to-day the Swamp Lands bill passed; also a bill exempting certain property of the Commercial Bank from municipal taxation. M. M. Reynolds has been confirmed Judge, in place of Strawbridge.

Washington, March 10.

In the Senate, Mr. Seward made a speech on Clark's non-intervention resolutions. No important business done.

The House was engaged in a debate on the Homestead Bill and in President making.

The National Intelligencer of this morning says there is a difficulty reported to exist between France and America.

Louisville, March 8.

Kossuth, in his speech on Saturday night, indulged in much personal reflection on Mr. Clay. He charged him with a breach of confidence and of gentlemanly courtesy in having his speech published that was delivered on the occasion of their interview in Washington, in which Mr. Clay took strong grounds against intervention. He styles Mr. Clay's position as assumptions based on assertion merely. He says the publication of that speech has provoked him out a little, and he did not answer them on grounds of personal affection for Mr. Clay. He says—I took the interview for a private one, and I refrain now from further discussion for the same cause, though I am provoked by this uncalled for publicity."

He reviewed Mr. Clay's position on non-intervention at some length, and more in terms of ridicule, than in those of argument. His speech has given much dissatisfaction here, especially to the friends of Mr. Clay.

New York, March 8, 1852.

The Earl of Derby has launched in the following list of his Cabinet: Chancellor of the Exchequer, D'Israeli; Home Department, Walpole; the Foreign Department, Lord Malmsbury; Lord President, Lonsdale; Lord Privy Seal, Lyndhurst; First Lord of the Admiralty, Duke of Northumberland. The former Ministry have consequently resigned formally. Parliament on Monday, received their formal resignations and adjourned until Friday. The new Reform bill and other Government measures are considered dead. Prior to the sailing of the Arctic, it was a question whether Lord Derby should go in with the present House, or dissolve Parliament. Lords Lansdown and Russell have declared that they will resist all efforts to impose the duty on corn. The new Ministry are generally well received, but it is reported that the opposition would refuse votes for supplies, until Lord Derby indicated clearly the principles upon which the Administration would act.

M. Barroche, the trustee of the Orleans property, has been arrested, charged with circulating seditious publications.

The alleged protest of the Emperor of Russia against the measures of Louis Napoleon, is believed to be unfounded.

M. Dupin has declared himself a candidate for the Legislature.

The Secretary of the Pasha of Egypt, had arrived in Paris on a special mission to the President.

The Bank of France in view of the large accumulation of funds has proposed to reduce the rate of interest.

The elections in Paris were to take place on the 29th Feb. and the 1st of March.

The Illustrated London News has been forbidden to enter France and is stopped at the French Post-offices.

The demand from France for the removal of the monuments from the field of Waterloo has created great excitement in Belgium.

Diplomatic relations between Belgium and Russia are about being resumed.

New York, Friday, March 12.

The Cunard steamer Asia has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 28th ult. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool, February 28.

There has been a good demand in the Cotton market during the week, and the sales embrace 54,381 bales, of which exporters took 3000, and speculators 10,000 bales.

Prices have advanced ⅛d. generally, the greatest improvement being for the better qualities. The quotations as officially fixed by the board last evening, are, for Fair Orleans 5¼, and Middling Orleans 5 1-16d. ₱ lb.

The sales on to noon to-day, embrace 6000 bales, and prices close firm at the above quotations.

Flour has met with a firm demand at 22s. 6d. for Western Canal, and 24s. ₱ barrel for Ohio.

Corn has been in fair request at 28s. 6d. for yellow and 32s. ₱ bushel for white.

New York, Friday, March 12.

The Asia brings the following items of European news

England.—The Earl of Derby has set forth a short programme of the principles which are intended to govern his administration. He says the new ministry will repudiate the franchise measures of Lord John Russell, and he unreservedly expresses his preference for the principles of the American tariff, over those of the free trade system of Sir Robert Peel. The adulsterial explanation has been well received on 'Change.

France.—Paris and the country generally yet remain quiet. Relations with Austria are of a less friendly nature, and the French Government has protested against an increase of duties on French goods introduced into Austrian ports.

When the Asia left, no American steamer had arrived at Liverpool since the Arctic.

Charleston, Friday, March 12.

The demand in the cotton market has been good during the week, and the sales embrace 10000 bales; prices close without any material change, and we still quote strictly ashidling at 7¾c ₱ lb.

The Asia's accounts have just been received, but their effects are not yet developed.

The increase in the receipts at all the Atlantic ports is now 42,000 bales, against 22,000 at the close of last week.

Freight of Cotton to Liverpool 7-16d.

New York, March 11.

Cotton is in a moderate request to-day at unchanged prices. Flour is selling at $4 73@$5 per bbl. Corn firmer with sales of 10,000 bushels Southern yellow, at 70c ₱ bu. Mess pork steady, at $15 75 ₱ bbl. Lard 8¾@9c ₱ lb.

The Cunard steamer Africa sailed to-day for Liverpool. Among her passengers are Col. J. C. Fremont and S. H. Meeks, bearer of dispatches.

Boston, March 11.

Resolutions were to-day introduced in the House, declaring the Compromise measures unconstitutional.

Letter from Mr. Thrasher.—The Havana correspondent of the Picayune sends the following extract from a letter he has received from Mr. Thrasher, dated Ceuta, Africa, January 29:

"My last was dated from Cadiz, where I received every possible attention from the American Consul. On the 10th an order was received from Madrid to send all the prisoners from Ceuta to their destination, and no exception was made in regard to me. On board the steamer I found the other prisoners and some twelve or thirteen passengers from Principe, all crowded into the cabin. We have the liberty of what is called the fort, but it is in reality a large hill surrounded by a wall, with buildings inside. We have a very pleasant and extensive view of the African coast on one side, in front of us Gibraltar, clearly distinct, and beyond the white towns of San Roque, Algeciaras and Tarifa. At our feet are spread out the alternate terraces and foliage of Ceuta, with its embattled walls, and beyond, the green land of the Moors, dotted with white cottages. In the distant view is a large building said to be the seraglio of the Emperor of Morocco. The Mediterranean sea is continually dotted with boats of all kinds, which, from our great elevation, look like cock-boats, instead of mighty ships. As I look abroad upon the waters, the diminutive objects before me bring forcibly to my mind that I am upon the top of one of the pillars of Hercules.

"On the second day after our arrival here they put iron rings on our ankles, with chains. I have mine on over my boots. Two say shave, the Captain General sent for and told me that the orders from Madrid were to put all Americans at liberty under parlon. I thanked him, and told him my case, and respectfully declined to accept on those terms, and that I expected soon to be free in my own right."

On the 30th a few lines were received from him at Gibraltar. He is free without pardon and without conditions, except not to return to Cuba. He has received a polite invitation from Mr. Barringer, our Minister at Madrid, (a glorious man) to visit him, which he intends to do.

Important Treasury Circular.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to Collectors of the Customs, which will have an important bearing on the transit business, which the Warehousing Act was intended to encourage. Previously, when goods were left in the warehouse, the duties were required to be paid before the expiration of one year, or the property was sold; but if the duties were duly paid, the goods might remain another year, entitled to debenture, if exported, or they might, at any time within the two years, be thrown upon the market. Under this circular, the duties need not be paid before the expiration of the two years; but, after the first year, they cannot be thrown on the market by the owner; they must be exported if not sent out of the country at the end of two years, the Collector must sell them; and all the goods upon which the duties and charges have been paid, must be taken from the warehouse by the owner.

Religious Revolution.—In Finmarck, the most northern portion of Norway, almost lost in Arctic snows, a revolution is now raging, which, although purely religious, is attended with all the disastrous circumstances of political troubles. The inhabitants of this desolate region, persuaded by Missionories of some sect whose tenets have not transpired, have repudiated Christianity, and especially the seventh commandment, banished the priests, and now adopt the doctrines of the Missionories, who profess to have received them directly from Heaven.

Biloxi.—The Mississippi Senate has passed a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi to the Congress of the United States now in session, praying the establishment of a custom-house at Biloxi, and a regular weekly matt between Biloxi and New Orleans.

Lake Michigan.—Navigation has been resumed on Lake Michigan, and steamers are making regular trips between Michigan ity, Chicago, Milwaukee and other

Telegraphic Items.

Deyos Honor, March 11.

In the Senate to-day the Swamp Lands bill passed; also a bill exempting certain property of the Commercial Bank from municipal taxation. M. M. Reynolds has been confirmed Judge, in place of Strawbridge.

Washington, March 10.

In the Senate, Mr. Seward made a speech on Clark's non-intervention resolutions. No important business done.

The House was engaged in a debate on the Homestead Bill and in President making.

The National Intelligencer of this morning says there is a difficulty reported to exist between France and America.

Louisville, March 8.

Kossuth, in his speech on Saturday night, indulged in much personal reflection on Mr. Clay. He charged him with a breach of confidence and of gentlemanly courtesy in having his speech published that was delivered on the occasion of their interview in Washington, in which Mr. Clay took strong grounds against intervention. He styles Mr. Clay's position as assumptions based on assertion merely. He says the publication of that speech has provoked him out a little, and he did not answer them on grounds of personal affection for Mr. Clay. He says—I took the interview for a private one, and I refrain now from further discussion for the same cause, though I am provoked by this uncalled for publicity."

He reviewed Mr. Clay's position on non-intervention at some length, and more in terms of ridicule, than in those of argument. His speech has given much dissatisfaction here, especially to the friends of Mr. Clay.

New York, March 8, 1852.

The Earl of Derby has launched in the following list of his Cabinet: Chancellor of the Exchequer, D'Israeli; Home Department, Walpole; the Foreign Department, Lord Malmsbury; Lord President, Lonsdale; Lord Privy Seal, Lyndhurst; First Lord of the Admiralty, Duke of Northumberland. The former Ministry have consequently resigned formally. Parliament on Monday, received their formal resignations and adjourned until Friday. The new Reform bill and other Government measures are considered dead. Prior to the sailing of the Arctic, it was a question whether Lord Derby should go in with the present House, or dissolve Parliament. Lords Lansdown and Russell have declared that they will resist all efforts to impose the duty on corn. The new Ministry are generally well received, but it is reported that the opposition would refuse votes for supplies, until Lord Derby indicated clearly the principles upon which the Administration would act.

M. Barroche, the trustee of the Orleans property, has been arrested, charged with circulating seditious publications.

The alleged protest of the Emperor of Russia against the measures of Louis Napoleon, is believed to be unfounded.

M. Dupin has declared himself a candidate for the Legislature.

The Secretary of the Pasha of Egypt, had arrived in Paris on a special mission to the President.

The Bank of France in view of the large accumulation of funds has proposed to reduce the rate of interest.

The elections in Paris were to take place on the 29th Feb. and the 1st of March.

The Illustrated London News has been forbidden to enter France and is stopped at the French Post-offices.

The demand from France for the removal of the monuments from the field of Waterloo has created great excitement in Belgium.

Diplomatic relations between Belgium and Russia are about being resumed.

New York, Friday, March 12.

The Cunard steamer Asia has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 28th ult. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool, February 28.

There has been a good demand in the Cotton market during the week, and the sales embrace 54,381 bales, of which exporters took 3000, and speculators 10,000 bales.

Prices have advanced ⅛d. generally, the greatest improvement being for the better qualities. The quotations as officially fixed by the board last evening, are, for Fair Orleans 5¼, and Middling Orleans 5 1-16d. ₱ lb.

The sales on to noon to-day, embrace 6000 bales, and prices close firm at the above quotations.

Flour has met with a firm demand at 22s. 6d. for Western Canal, and 24s. ₱ barrel for Ohio.

Corn has been in fair request at 28s. 6d. for yellow and 32s. ₱ bushel for white.

New York, Friday, March 12.

The Asia brings the following items of European news

England.—The Earl of Derby has set forth a short programme of the principles which are intended to govern his administration. He says the new ministry will repudiate the franchise measures of Lord John Russell, and he unreservedly expresses his preference for the principles of the American tariff, over those of the free trade system of Sir Robert Peel. The adulsterial explanation has been well received on 'Change.

France.—Paris and the country generally yet remain quiet. Relations with Austria are of a less friendly nature, and the French Government has protested against an increase of duties on French goods introduced into Austrian ports.

When the Asia left, no American steamer had arrived at Liverpool since the Arctic.

Charleston, Friday, March 12.

The demand in the cotton market has been good during the week, and the sales embrace 10000 bales; prices close without any material change, and we still quote strictly ashidling at 7¾c ₱ lb.

The Asia's accounts have just been received, but their effects are not yet developed.

The increase in the receipts at all the Atlantic ports is now 42,000 bales, against 22,000 at the close of last week.

Freight of Cotton to Liverpool 7-16d.

New York, March 11.

Cotton is in a moderate request to-day at unchanged prices. Flour is selling at $4 73@$5 per bbl. Corn firmer with sales of 10,000 bushels Southern yellow, at 70c ₱ bu. Mess pork steady, at $15 75 ₱ bbl. Lard 8¾@9c ₱ lb.

The Cunard steamer Africa sailed to-day for Liverpool. Among her passengers are Col. J. C. Fremont and S. H. Meeks, bearer of dispatches.

Boston, March 11.

Resolutions were to-day introduced in the House, declaring the Compromise measures unconstitutional.

Letter from Mr. Thrasher.—The Havana correspondent of the Picayune sends the following extract from a letter he has received from Mr. Thrasher, dated Ceuta, Africa, January 29:

"My last was dated from Cadiz, where I received every possible attention from the American Consul. On the 10th an order was received from Madrid to send all the prisoners from Ceuta to their destination, and no exception was made in regard to me. On board the steamer I found the other prisoners and some twelve or thirteen passengers from Principe, all crowded into the cabin. We have the liberty of what is called the fort, but it is in reality a large hill surrounded by a wall, with buildings inside. We have a very pleasant and extensive view of the African coast on one side, in front of us Gibraltar, clearly distinct, and beyond the white towns of San Roque, Algeciaras and Tarifa. At our feet are spread out the alternate terraces and foliage of Ceuta, with its embattled walls, and beyond, the green

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

BY ONE WHO SAW IT.

Not long since, I was returning home rather late in the evening, from a visit to a friend; 'twas midwinter, the weather was very cold indeed; the angry wind dashed the drifting snow into the face of the pedestrian, and the biting frost nipped with a keenness that made those who were exposed, covet warm fires and feather beds.

I was passing hastily along one of the most fashionable streets of the city, when as I approached a gas light, I saw by its glare a small lad emerge from the door of a splendid mansion, holding under his arm something rolled up into a bundle; then in a moment after, I was startled with a vehement cry of "stop thief," and as the boy trotted on, I gazed eagerly to see from, whom and whence the sound proceeded; when the same voice, with the same words, again sounded on my ear. It was a man-servant, who had just darted from the aforesaid mansion, and was now evidently pursuing the lad, which, together with the sound of a policeman's rattle, caused him to halt and gaze with a look of surprise, as though at a loss to know what it all meant.

"That's him, 'tooch 'im!" ejaculated the waiter, observing the watchman ahead of him; upon which "Charley" seized the boy by the shoulder, while the other took from under his arm the bundle, which, being unrolled, proved to be a dress-coat. "My master's werry best invisible green," as was a-hangin' in the hall, near the door. I swow, you little varmint ye, yer one o' that craft as goes about robbin' gentlefolks' entries, are yer? Here, watchman," he continued, addressing said functionary, who was now joined by a fellow Knight of the Star, "put him in the lock-up till mornin', then, in the name o' my master, I'll appear agin 'im."

Up to this the lad seemed paralyzed, but when the officers turned on their heels and forced him to go with them, while the servant took the coat and retired, he began to realize his situation and burst into tears.

"None o' yer cryin'," my young blade, we'll larn you what it is to sneak into people's front doors and steal," exclaimed one of the police, in a tone of derisive triumph, as he shook him roughly by the arm.

"O please let me go and get the coat and take it home," said the little fellow, imploringly, "I didn't steal it, I was taking it to the gentleman that mother made it for; it's so dark I lost my way, and thought that was the house till I read the silver plate under the bell-knob; I wasn't inside the door even, but I saw it was partly open when I got on the top step, and—"

"No yarns, my little dove," interrupted the other of his unwelcome guardians; "queer time o' night this to take work home, besides, the hired man ought to know the coat, he says his master sent him to get it and give it a brushing again morning; and just as you were putting down the steps with it, he missed it off the nail, and why shouldn't he suspect you when he saw you with it under your arm?" continued he, with a taunting sneer.

"Indeed, sir," returned the boy, crying as if his little heart would break, "mother's sick; the reason she didn't send it sooner, she's so weak she couldn't even press it with the iron; if she had, the gentleman would have seen it was a new coat; she hurried to get it done to-night, though I had to prop her up with a pillow, and hold the candle for her; we've had scarcely anything to eat all day, and she told me if I got paid, to stop at Dutch George'a meat shop, because he keeps open till twelve, and sells most everything, and buy a chop and a loaf of bread, and three cents worth of wood, for the doctor said she must have some mutton-broth to strengthen her, or she might be taken from us."

"I say, Davy, the cub'a good at spinnin', ain't he?" exclaimed one of the watchmen, with a brutal indifference to the child'a touching appeal.

"Old bird at the business, in course," replied his companion; "but we'll cage him comfortable, I'll warrant."

At this he again broke ont in a pitiable cry, beseeching them to let him go back and get the coat, or else send, as he could not go himself, for that purpose.

As they came near a gas-light, I approached sufficiently to get a glimpse of his countenance, which displayed tears of agony rolling down his cheeks, while I heard the words, "my poor mother," in a smothered tone, escape his lips. There, was something in his features, though seen but imperfectly, which seemed to more than half convince me the child had been accused falsely. I felt moved.

"Gentlemen," said I, addressing them mildly, "there may be some mistake in this affair; would it not be better to try and ascertain first whether the boy's statements be true or false?"

"That'll be tried to-morrow mornin' at nine o'clock; sich fabrications are nothin' new to us," replied one, while the other, in a tone bordering on contempt, reprimanded me severely for daring to interfere with officers on duty, upon which I asked the boy where his mother lived; at this the latter officer, in an overbearing manner, threatened to arrest me if I attempted further interference; and before the child had time to reply, they hurriedly turned a corner and were soon out of sight, and lurking doubts of the boy's innocence, in spite of my feelings to the contrary, prevented me then from taking further trouble to ascertain; but there was a heartrending tone in the lad's cry, as it died on my ear in the distance, which made me return home with feelings of sorrow not unmingled with self-reproach. The boy's story may be true, thought I, and this thought haunted me through the night, as I tossed sleepless on my pillow, wishing for morning; for having heard when the hearing was to be had, I determined to repair to the spot as soon as I had swallowed my breakfast. So accordingly, when morning arrived, after drinking my coffee, void of appetite, I bent my steps toward the Mayor's office, where, after waiting a half hour, the man who caused the arrest the evening previous, made his appearance, accompanied by a fellow servant, the former having the said coat rolled up under his arm. Soon after the two officers made their appearance also, leading the boy, whose countenance looked pale and sorrow-stricken in the extreme, while his eyes gave strong indications of a night spent in vested grief.

In a few moments the high functionary gave notice that he was ready to hear what the parties had to say; upon which the bearer of the coat stepped forward and said, pointing to the victim: "I have come to clear, not to convict, this boy, yer honor. I will briefly state the case: master makes a practice of hanging his coat in the hall near the front door; last evening I had occasion to fetch it, but when I approached the place where it usually hung, I found it missing, while, at the same time, the front door was half open, which convinced me at the time that some one must have stole it, as it had been hung there but fifteen minutes before; I at once went forward and looked out, when I saw, by the street lamp, this lad hurrying along with a bundle under his arm; I immediately cried "stop thief," upon which the officer, (bowing to both, not being able to recognize the real one) sprung his rattle and seized him, and was soon joined by a fellow functionary; and then I unfurled the bundle, your honor, and felt confident it was my master's coat, which I kept, at the same time requesting the boy's safe keeping till morning; then returning to the house, I hung the coat in the usual place, but, (continued the speaker,) to clear the lad, this morning, to my great surprise, I found I had been mistaken, for I discovered the real coat lying behind the umbrella stand, which occupies a place in the hall right under where the coat hung; but, singular as it may appear, the coats resemble each other as much as possible. I lay the whole affair to the wind, which was very high at the time, and which I now believe forced open the front door, for it has a faulty latch, and blew the coat off the nail; therefore, as a return for the unjust detention of the boy, I now make him a present of a half-eagle, desiring his pardon for my hasty error." And advancing, he placed a bright five dollar gold piece, together with the coat, in his hand, and took his leave. The little fellow, who, till now, had preserved the stupid silence of despair, not appearing to notice the import or drift of his accuser's speech, gazed at the coat and coin as though he doubted his senses, then burst into tears, while the word "mother," in a half audible, abstract tone, escaped his lips, around which now played a gentle smile, 'twas a smile of joy, forgetting his recent crying troubles; as he looked at the half-eagle, and thinking of the comforts it gave him the power to place before his mother.

He put the money carefully in his pocket, the Mayor at the same time telling him, in a kind manner, that he was at liberty to depart when he saw proper, while the two "Charlies" muttered something in an undertone about some folks taking delight in giving people trouble for nothing. In a few moments we left the office, I shortly overtook the boy, whom I found again in tears and sobbing.

"Don't cry, my good little man," said I. The child started at the sudden sound of my voice, then in a moment recognizing by it the person who tried to intercede for him the evening previous, he seemed to survey me with a look of confidence; "I am going to go home with you," continued I, in as kind a manner as possible, "you say your mother is sick?"

"Oh, sir," he replied, "very sick! Last night she worked past her strength to finish this coat, so that we might get some victuals, and herself a little broth to do her good, for she's been sick ever since father died," continued he, wiping the tears from his cheeks; "so I was hurrying along with it as fast as I could, and lost my way; the rest you know, sir; but I won't take it to the gentleman now; I'll go and attend to my mother first."

At length we reached a narrow, dirty street, at the far end of which stood an old dilapidated tenement ready to fall in ruins. We arrived at the door, and the lad entered abruptly, requesting me to follow. 'Twas a poverty-stricken apartment. He then led me up a rickety pair of stairs; near the top, occupying one corner, stood an old bedstead, upon which lay his mother with an infant sucking at her breast; he approached it, holding out the glittering coin, then in a moment uttered a wild shriek, and fell on her neck in a swoon. Alas, reader, she must not, she was dead! The detention of her boy, her only remaining earthly hope and comfort, had been protracted longer than her frail nature could bear; she died, 'twas supposed, about three in the morning, without a soul near to hand save her unconscious infant, while her darling child was locked in a damp cell of the station-house.

A VISIT TO POMPEII.—Naples this season is delightful. I open my window in the morning, and look across the beautiful bay towards Pompeii. To-day I was awakened by the voice of our courier, who announced the hour we had determined on last evening for a visit to Pompeii. We were soon ready, and at 9 o'clock we were passing out of Naples on the road to the buried cities.

It is a jaunt of about two hours only, and soon we were ushered into the silent streets of Pompeii. You know the story by heart of this dead and ghostly place. Much as I had dreamed of Pompeii and its wondrous history, the scenes of to-day have more than fulfilled my expectations. There stood the Amphitheatre as it stood two thousand years ago, and as we walked over the deserted seats of stone it required no very strong imagination to people its vast space again. I saw the wheel ruts in the streets, the posts where the chariot horses were fastened, the chafing of the bucket as it rose and fell with water, the names of the citizens on their houses, and the tomb stones of their dead.

Wandering about, we looked down lang and silent streets, where once the busy hum of human voices filled the air. We saw the workmen excavating a house which probably belonged to a wealthy citizen. We walked into the garden and saw the statues and fountains looking as fresh as if the owner would soon return and all would go on as before. It was a strange and thrilling picture of the past, and as we came out of the door on the Mosaic pavement in front of the mansion, we looked through a rent in an old wall and saw Vesuvius spouting up fire and smoke. The only living occupants of Pompeii beside the guides, are the beggars. A more heaven-forsaken set of wretches never before existed. There is scarcely a whole man among them.

Some are blind, some are lame, but all are miserable to a degree I never before conceived possible. It is astonishing how little body a beggar wants to thrive on. Give a man his head and never mind about the rest of the system. Beggars without arms are cr ying out for alms at every turn in Pompeii, and a pair of good solid legs cannot be found in the whole city. To-day I saw something in the road shuffling toward me, which I at first took for a game cock, as it wore a red feather on the top of its head, but as it came nearer I discovered it was a man cut off just below the waistcoat pocket. It was a lively little junk too, and I doubt not but that I shall meet the other half of its body begging in Herculaneum to-morrow on its own account. Perhaps the whole affair comes together once or twice a month, and has a quiet little set down to divide the spoils equally.

Go where you will you meet Americans. We had no sooner set foot in Pompeii, and were busy exploring the Temple of Isis and the sacrificial altar, when in came three curious Yankees and joined our party. The other day, on reaching the top of Vesuvius, I descried a man sitting astride a block of lava. I don't know why, but I marked him at once for one of my countrymen. As I advanced toward him, I could not help noticing the cool manner in which he and Vesuvius were taking a morning smoke together. His long nine was run out like a bowsprit, and he took the whole affair as calmly as one would look upon a kitchen fire at home. As soon as I came up with him he bawled out, "Hallo, stranger! Pretty considerable lot of lavy raound here! Any news down below? Ye haint tuckered aout, be ye?" On my asking him if he had looked into the crater, he replied, "Yaas! but I burnt the laigs of my trowsers, I tell yew!" He turned out to be a man from NewEngland, who came up from Mrrseilles to see the volcano, and a more delightfully verdant gentleman is not common in these parts. As we came through Portici I read upon a Roman pillar, "Erected by Cornelius Drscol." Could this have been an ancestor of our friend, with his i knocked out? Ask the gentleman in Court street.

We returned from Pompeii by the light of a full Italian moon; passing on the road troops of fat monks, waddling to their wine and wassail, crowds of beggers, merry as larks over their gains, and lines of donkeys laden with boughs, which gave the branches an appearance as if Birnam wood was at its old tricks again. [Boston Transcript. J. T. F.

ON THE RIDING OF FREE HORSES.—A Didactic. Newspapers, remarks the New York Tribune, are designed to furnish information to the public and a livelihood to those employed in producing them. Their income is derived from two sources; first, from sale or subscriptions; secondly, from the charges paid by those who see fit to use them as a means of communicating with the public for their own advantage or profit. There is probably not a daily paper in the world, certainly none in America, that could live a year without that large portion of its revenue derived from advertising, nor, indeed, could the publicity now secured by advertisers be obtained for twenty times the present cost in any other form than that of the sum paid for newspaper.

If a man applies to a lawyer, a doctor, a tavern keeper, a merchant, for any of the commodities whereby the latter makes his living, he expects to pay therefor. He never says, "If you want pay for this, you can have it;" paying is a matter of course. But if he goes to an editor to get his axe ground, he generally pays when he can't help it, but he seems to think it rather mean that payment is expected.

Publicity is a vital element of success in almost every business. If a man were to-morrow to invent a machine which would do the work of a forty-horse steam engine for one-eighth the cost, whether in building or running of such a steam engine, he would be long in making a fortune of it if there was no press. By the aid of the journals, he might acquire wealth from his invention in the course of two years, while in their absence he would very certainly go down to his grave in poverty, though some future generation would not fail to profit by his labors. The press is to business what the electric telegraph is to intelligence—it condenses years into minutes.

Editors are generally helping this or that fellow-citizen make his fortune every day. Very often they are compelled to throw gold into the lap of this or that inventor, manufacturer, property holder, etc., in the naked fulfilment of their duty to their readers. Thus we have all been helping Mr. McCormick make his fortune with his reaper this year; but we did not do it at his request nor for his sake, and he need not thank us. But if he had asked any of us to make his reaper known to every body, he might to (and we will trust would) have insisted on paying for the service, no matter how much we benefitted our readers at the same time.

Here is one great cause of general obfuscation on this subject. "You did so and so," which helped Jones in his business; why not do me much for me?" Why, sir, if a farmer chose to give his right hand neighbor half his farm would that give his left-hand neighbor a claim to the other half? If I did him a good turn without asking any nids of him, that is my business; if you make money, pay me for the service you required. The fact that I chose to help A. B. for nothing gives C. D. no lien on my purse, and no right to command my labor for nothing.

There is many a journalist now languishing in poverty while dozens to whose success in business he gave the first impulse roll by him in their carriages, and have forgotten his very existence.

There is no country save ours in the world where journalists are expected to do so much work for the special benefit of others, without recompense. Generally, out of this country, editors are inaccessible, if not anonymous; they may let you know what they think, but not who think it. You can not walk into an editor's room in London or Paris, and ask him to devote his time and his columns to your own advancement or profit. Here this is done every day, even by utter strangers. Half an editor's time—sometimes his whole day, throwing over his proper work into the night—is given up to receiving the calls, listening to the stories, and obeying the requests of one good-natured friend after another, who drops in to try his chances of getting ten times as valuable an advertisement out of him for nothing as he would be likely to get out of the publisher by regularly paying. If he fails, he loses nothing, for he has plenty of brass left; if he succeeds, he has used his time to decided advantage. And this is civility abused—thus is good feeling imposed upon.

THE FIGHT AT CAMARGO.

We received Monday a copy of the Rio Bravo; which contains an official report of the recent fight at Camargo from Col. O. F. Johnson, of the Liberating Army, which varies somewhat from the account furnished us from the Brownsville Flag. We give the report entire, together with the note of Col. Wheat:

LIBERATING ARMY, NEAR CAMARGO, }
February 22, 1852. }

Sir—In obedience to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, I have the honor to submit the following report in writing, of the operations before this place yesterday and last night, which, in substance, I made verbally on the field of battle.

On the 20th inst., the forces assembled at Roper's Rancho, seven miles below Camargo, consisted of the following number, to wit: Major Roundtree's battalion, under Lieut. Mason, and Captains Adams and Wilkinson, ninety-four men, officers and privates, and the second battalion, commanded by Major McLaun, consisted of three companies, under Captains Metlerw, Thomas, and White, numbering one hundred and six men. In addition to these was a squadron of Mexican horse and infantry, under Col. Garcia, consisting of thirty men, and fourteen Carlos spins. The entire force, when assembled, amounted to two hundred and forty-four men, with one 12-pounder gun, under command of Col. Wheat. With the exception of the squadron of Mexicans and the spies, the whole force was placed under my immediate orders. We met, at the outset, with great difficulty in procuring teams to transport the cannon and to draw the ammunition. We finally secured, however, a broken down team of mules to haul the gun, and several yoke of oxen and carts to convey the ammunition, muskets, etc. We commenced our march towards the city of Camargo, and moved on slowly and leisurely, after throwing out spies and videttes to apprise us of the presence of the enemy. Nothing of moment occurred during this march until we arrived within about two miles of Camargo, when we halted and formed in order of battle. Roundtree's battalion on the right, resting upon the San Juan river and fences, and McLane's battalion on the left, with the artillery in the centre, covered by a detail of Capt. Adams's company.

We were here informed that a reinforcement of nearly a hundred men would join us very soon, from the left bank of the Rio Grande, and we waited upwards of an hour for their arrival. They did not come, and as our men had had nothing to eat or drink during the day, we determined to advance and take possession of a place near Camargo, designated as the "Brick-yard," for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to prepare their dinner. We accordingly proceeded in the order above-mentioned towards Camargo, until we had reached within a mile of the Main Plaza of the town, when we made another temporary halt in the middle of a small open plain. We were here suddenly attacked by the enemy in force. In our front, who opened upon us four pieces of cannon and about three hundred muskets and rifles. The enemy was concealed in the chaparral in our front, and the first intimation that we had of their presence was by their furious and well concentrated fire. Their cannon were not more than four hundred yards from our line, and a large portion of their musketeers and riflemen less than two hundred yards. We instantly advanced our right wing along the river towards the enemy's cannon, and moved our artillery up to the bank of the San Juan, and the left wing also into the position first occupied by the right. We returned the enemy's fire instantly, from our entire line, and Col. Wheat answered their artillery by vigorous and effective discharges of grape, canister and round shot. The firing now became for a few minutes quite severe, and the enemy's cannon balls flew thick, but was soon by a portion of the enemy's cavalry to charge our left wing. One or two rounds of musketry, however, checked it, when the entire left wing began to waver, soon fell into disorder, and it became necessary to withdraw the men from their position and form them in rear of our cannon, under cover of the bank of the San Juan. A stand, however, had been formed them which could not be restrained, and after reaching a place of safety they broke and shamefully fled from the field. The example of two or three men, who had held commissions in the army, and who were among the first to run, like cowards, no doubt contributed to produce this disaster.

Before the battle had continued half an hour at least seventy of the 2d Battalion had fled or skulked. There were hardly twenty men remaining with Major McLane, and the three captains who had commanded it. To the honor of these officers, they stood their ground and performed gallant service with Roundtree's battalion during the final struggle. At the commencement of the fight Roundtree's battalion was ordered to advance along the San Juan, and take the enemy's artillery in flank. This service was most gallantly performed, and after more than one hour's severe fighting they reached a point where they could begin to make an impression upon them with their rifles and muskets. The effect was instantly visible. The enemy was obliged to move their guns to a greater distance from the bank of the river, and to sustain themselves, ordered a charge of their entire cavalry upon our artillery in the center. Their cavalry, as it passed the rear of Roundtree's battalion, was roughly handled, but they advanced to the charge with much steadiness until they had attained a point less than a hundred yards from our guns, when Col. Wheat opened a well directed fire of canister upon the head of their column which swept it from the ground as if a whirlwind had passed over it. The remainder of the column, consisting of about three hundred men, wheeled and fled, at the same time a charge was made by Hundtree's Battalion, led by Major McMicken, Adjutant-General, which silenced their guns and drove artillery, infantry and cavalry, in a confused hell mell mass, through the city of Camargo. The enemy abandoned a large quantity of ammunition, guns, etc., and quit the field of battle with every mark of terror and defeat to characterize their conduct. Unfortunately for us we had not a horse, and could scarcely rally, after the field was won, forty men to secure the advantages of our hard earned victory.

Shortly after the commencement of the battle an accident occurred at our gun which disabled two of our most experienced artillerists, and to this accident is to be attributed some of the most serious difficulties we had to encounter. Once or twice, during the hottest of the battle, Col Wheat was left at the gun entirely alone, and several times he was left with none to aid him at the gun but Sergeant Miller and Private Bartel, and twice large times I was myself compelled to assist them in moving and managing the gun under a perfect shower of grape shot and musketry. The conduct of Col. Wheat throughout the entire conflict was above all praise. Major Roundtree, and all the officers and men of his battalion, acted with a degree of gallantry and firmness worthy of the most experienced veterans. Major McLane, the captains and some twenty men of his battalion, also bore themselves as became fearless soldiers. Capt. Mason, of the Ordnance Department, Major Howell and Col. Basse, of the Quartermaster's Department, Major Norton, Commissary, and Private Bowling, of Roundtree's battalion, the three last named acting as my aids, behaved in the most heroic manner. No duty was too arduous or too dangerous for their performance. They never flinched under the hottest fire. I feel myself relieved from the trouble of detailing all the particulars of this contest. The whole took place under the immediate eye of the commander-in-chief, who at the crisis, when the fate of the day seemed to hang upon a hair, rushed into the storm of bullets, and by the courage and presence of mind contributed greatly to reanimate the spirits of his men, and to snatch victory from nearly twenty times our number.

We have to deplore the loss of ten of our men killed and twenty-three wounded, including myself. We had, as I have already stated, all told, only two hundred and forty-four men. Of these the Mexican squadron was nearly as objective and was not in the action at all. The Carlos spies were in the commencement of the fight, but speedily ran away or skulked. About seventy of the 2d battalion and four of the first ran away early in the action, thirty-two were killed or wounded and a considerable number were secreted in the chaparral under the river bank. The number of men actually engaged in the fight, and by whom the victory was gained very little exceeded fifty. The number of the enemy, from the most authentic information I could obtain, and upon which I fully rely, was about seven hundred men, three hundred of them being cavalry and lancers, and the remainder being infantry, riflemen, and artillerymen, with four pieces of cannon. The average of the enemy's cannon shots was six to one. It is believed that about one hundred and fifty cannon shots were fired on the field by both sides. The battle lasted from two in the afternoon, till half-past four, when the enemy broke and fled, after spiking two of his guns. He did not halt an instant in the city of Camargo, but rushed through the town, and in such trepidation that I am assured that some twenty-five or thirty of his cavalry were drowned in the San Juan as they plunged in to escape us. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded was considerably over a hundred and among the number were eight or ten officers of rank in the army.

During the engagement the enemy placed a company of sharp-shooters under the bank of the San Juan, to take us in the rear, by whose fire we were considerably galled, but the gallant charge made by Roundtree's battalion headed by that officer and Major McMicken, very soon rid us of these troublesome neighbors. After the enemy had retreated we fired several cannon shot into the city of Camargo, which took effect on the church and neighboring houses, producing very considerable consternation among our enemies. This no doubt hastened their sudden flight. The gallant charge made by Roundtree's battalion headed by that officer and Major McMicken, very soon rid us of these troublesome neighbors. After the enemy had retreated we fired several cannon shot into the city of Camargo, which took effect on the church and neighboring houses, producing very considerable consternation among our enemies. This no doubt hastened their sudden flight. The gallant charge made by Roundtree's battalion headed by that officer and Major McMicken, very soon rid us of these troublesome neighbors. After the enemy had retreated we fired several,

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference: J. C. KEENER, W. E. DOTY, H. H. RIVERS, D. D.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DOUGLASS, W. MURRAH, Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 7. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 59.

Paraphrase of Psalm XVI.

Preserve the soul whose humble trust
Will never cease to call Thee "mine;"
The ever Pure, the ever Just,
Who dost in thy own lustre shine,
Forever giving; for thy store
Flows, unreplenished, evermore.

What can my goodness profit Thee?
And yet my heart, like Thine, must flow;
Therefore, with those I yearn to be
Who most resemble Thee below;
That all the raptures of my breast
May spend their floods in outspread rest.

O Lord, thou only fount of bliss,
There is no other God beside!
I start with hideous fantasies
To see the Big upheaving tide
Of growing griefs hem in the crowd
Whose heads at idol shrines are bowed!

Their chalices of foaming gore
Pressed madly to blaspheming lips,
My shuddering hand shall never pour,
Unclasped in heathen fellowships;
No names of mystic wickedness
My thankless tongue shall ever bless.

The Lord fills full my brimming cup;
He is my tranquil heritage!
'Tis thou, unseen, who buildest up
The lot of my advancing age;
Dost mark each pleasant boundary
Wherein my goodly portions lie.

Thee will I bless, whose secret voice
In stillest midnight counsels me,
And bids my quiet reins rejoice
With inmost knowledge fresh from Thee:
Who stand'st beside me, and before,
And mak'st me moveless by Thy power.

Therefore my joys forever spring,
My glory ever triumpheth,
Though Time's remorseless years shall bring
My flesh into the dust of death;
There will I rest in certain hope,
And wait till Thou shalt raise me up.

Whence strike these strange prophetic beams;
New powers which I can never tell?
I see a light that darts and streams
Up from from the hidden deeps of hell!
Thine Holy One arise
From blank corruption to the skies!

Death's unproductive dignity
Thy soul can never tolerate;
Thou, Lord of Life, nor e'er on Thee
The grave shall shut its mould'ring gate,
Nor suffer God-engendered clay
To melt in its foul arms away.

Show me the radiant upward road
To where the urns of joy are full,
Fast by the crystal throne of God,
Where creeping mists can never dull,
Those fruitful lands that always lie
Girt round with immortality.

London, 1851.

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

BY J. N. MAFFIT.

[Continued.]

It would be much too revolting to the sensibilities of an enlightened and cultivated audience to describe the mean and tortuous devices of the mere money-getter, the debased disciple of Mammon, who, contenting himself with the dim light of his gold, forgets even that there is a sun in the heavens; or, that thought has a flash keener than the diamond's sheen. Let coarse and rustic satire call out in boisterous mimicry, "John, have you watered the whisky?" "Yes, sir." "Have you poured a pailfull into the molasses cask?" "Yes, sir." "Have you sanded the sugar?" "Yes, sir-ee!" "Then come up to prayers!" Over such coarse pictures of human degradation refinement blushes; yet nearly all of the countless millions of tricks in trade, devices to make bad goods sell as perfect and superior articles, the sombre chiara obscura light of the shops to hide imperfections in color and texture, are quite as bad in practice, and not a whit better in principle, than John's sanding the sugar!

The spirit of Trade comes over a whole community—a nation—a world—until every virtue flounders in the deluge of barter as the people of the old world struggled and suffocated in Noah's flood. They sell every thing; their very religion is a portion of their barter, and by spending so many hours in church on the Sabbath, or in religious meetings on secular days, it is calculated to the amount of a single dime how much patronage of the religious community they are to receive back in return. If a donation is made to the Bible, Tract, or Missionary Societies, is it not duly trumpeted from newspaper to newspaper and from magazine to magazine, so that the friends of those holy charities will know at whose store to make their purchases, and to direct their friends. To patronize those who unostentatiously do good with their wealth is a generous and laudable principle; but to do good and promulgate the act for the furtherance of mercantile credit is akin to the conduct of the dove-traders and money-changers in the Temple, who awoke the anger and blows of the Lamb of God, whose heart of immense benevolence was usually as placid as the "waves of deep Galilee."

A comic story is told of an emigrant husband and wife in the Far West, who with much difficulty had achieved the purchase and the still more difficult transportation of a barrel of Monongahela to their forest-girded cabin. They held a congress between their lone selves, the secluded two, and unanimously resolved that not a single drop should be drawn from that barrel unless paid for—ready money down. The wife, that gentler, better half of man, happened to have half a dime, the only coin in the house, and she purchased a glass of the liquor from her husband. He, then, with the same coin, purchased one from his wife. They had no company—no visitors—still trade was brisk; money changed hands as in the most prosperous times in the commercial world, and not a drop from that barrel was sold without the silver equivalent. The recipient of the last glass paid for it—the Monongahela was gone—and the best of all was that the amount it had produced was far from sufficient to purchase a successor.

Trade seems to be the national disease. It is ravenous, insatiable, unsettling and revolutionary. The Eastern Yankee who dwells within half a mile of sunrise, swaps horses until his last exchange, brought down to an infinitessimal in value, too poor to swap, is sold for a jackknife, and then a brisk trade in knives is commenced and run down to a cipher. At length he sells the rock-bound hillocks where his father toiled, and where he himself was born, and loses himself in the magnificent opulence of a Western prarie. The attachment of beasts to their homesteads, their confiding affection to their masters, are perpetually broken up and disorganized by the rapidity with which they pass from hand to hand. The wife and children scarce know husband and father on his return from abroad, who may have traded not only horse, dog, and jackknife, but swapped away his hat, boots and coat! "What do you ask for it?" "What is it worth?" "What did you get for it?" "How much did you make by that bargain?" are the questions rung like bell chimes from one end of our land to another, and not only "from morn to dewy eve," but far into the solemn midnight, and those small hours when the starry eyes of heaven are heavy with their unwinking vigils!

What will not our countrymen sell? The early forefathers commenced by selling the skins of the wild beasts. They whipped the otter, the beaver, and the martin out of their skins. They sold New England rum to the "poor Indian" for his peltries; for that gain dooming him and his wood-born tribes to the besom of national extinction by drunkenness; tumbling, without remorse, those noble chieftains and forest kings into a drunkard's grave! They bought and sold human creatures with "a skin not colored like their own," until the land groans under a Helot race, a sad bequest from our old English sires and Puritan fathers. The Southern slaveholder sells the fair quadroon, through whose veins his own or his children's blood may course, to be a priestess in the impure temples of Pleasure. The Northern Abolitionist, one side of his face bathed in tears of compassion for the sufferings of the poor, full-fed and contented negroes of the American cotton fields, has the other side of his face radiant with smiles on receipt of large returns from a cargo of New England rum shipped to Africa, and destined to accomplish the final woe of thousands, and scatter madness among the degraded heathen tribes of the Niger and the Gambia. They sell the cotton of the South, the wool of the North, the tobacco of Virginia, the hemp of Kentucky, the rice of the Carolinas, the coal of Pennsylvania, the wheat of New York, and the pork of Ohio. Nantucket and New Bedford have burnt up the whales of the two great oceans, and when the spermaceti lamps were beginning to burn low, Cincinnati sets fire to her millions of swine, and Chemistry tortured the inflammable gases from the coal mines to light up street, palace, hall and cottage. Scarce a buffalo is left to bellow at the base of the Rocky Mountains—their hides being marketable. Gleaning ocean, air, earth, we have begun to trade upon the seasons; have shaved the icicles from the hoary beard of Winter, and sold his pure and chilly crystals in Constantinople, in Calcutta, and in Canton. We have traded upon religion, politics, and philanthropy. We have coined money out of anti-Masonry, Millerism, and anti-Rentism. The trade in the "isms" has been and still continues fierce and tremendous. We have traded in patriotism, and the halls of Congress bellow with the shouts of those who cry these wares. And far too loud and importunate even, at times, becomes the worldly cry of benevolence itself, when its soft silvery voice of entreaty is changed to the hoarse tones of bigoted denunciation, and becomes the grating horse-leech cry of "give, give, give!"

Is this an exaggerated and distorted picture! Say ye, who read deep into the mysteries of the human heart, and the organization of the social tie. Say ye, who are versed in the philosophy of mind and the economy of social happiness. It is but the Babel voice of a world roaring, thundering, clamoring for that one great good, the almighty dollar.

Is it alone for comfort, competence, means of usefulness, that such struggle and outcry are made! Would it were so. But, alas! nine-tenths of all this is for an imaginary good, for a power and happiness in accumulation which can never be realized, never known. Huge estates are like masses of quicksilver; they require the most strenuous and untiring care to keep them in a fixed and permanent position. They quiver, roll from side to side, and what power in man is sovereign enough to keep them from waste and depletion! Mounted on a large estate a man is like the rider of a flying dragon whose bridle-reins are wreathed of the subtle lightnings!

Is it true that such is the passion for trade among the American people that we sell, not only what we have, but also that which we have not? Have we not sold State bonds until the owlish demon of Repudiation, cold and unearthly as the imp of the nightmare, sits upon the bosom of slumbering, annihilated State credit! Has not widowhood and orphanage in the Old World wept in tears of blood, shivering in cold and comfortless garrets over the treachery of the boasted "land of the free and home of the brave!" And, indeed, if we did sell something when we sold "State credit," the annals of brokerage will sustain me in the assertion that "fancy stocks," hanging in the atmosphere of the money quotations, like changeable clouds in the horizon, puffed up and blown hither and thither by financial winds, are as much less than nothing as the curl-cloud of summer skies is less ponderous than the mountain rock, far above which it plays in fantastic shapes and fairy lightness.

Talk of flying kites, the boy's pastime of a summer's eve; that is nothing to the flight of the broker's "kites," the army of "accommodation paper," and bubbles of the noisy Exchange, darkening the atmosphere of trade. I speak not against the passage and value of legitimate bills of trade, arising from veritable transactions, and drawn against surplus shipments of the great staples of the country. Providence as well as moral honesty watch over the flight of these missives of a just and equitable exchange. They come to a happy maturity as naturally as the peach ripens.

Can it be possible that beauty and childhood are both infected with the mania of the "almighty dollar;" that woman's richest smiles borrow illumination from the jewels of wealth; that silks and gaudy attire, which come alone at the command of the "dollar almighty," enhance even in seraphic minds the value of the latter to such an exorbitant degree that poor virtue is forgotten in the shine and splendor of gold! Are not children even taught to consider money as the only key which unlocks the magazines of pleasure and happiness? Are not they taught by that master teaching, that of example, the example of parents, and brothers and sisters they revere and love, that gold is the one thing needful, the ultima thule of labor and of life!

Fain I turn me to more pleasant themes, to scenes where wealth is the angel and minister of benevolence, the servant not the master of humanity. On the dark background of human cupidity, avarice, and all-grasping passion, see the rainbow reflections of heavenly benevolence! Streams of consecrated wealth flow out from this to the most distant lands. Take one picture from the pencil of the Mission angel, flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach to all nations. It is in India's farthest and most benighted recesses. A dark and gloomy city is around; above its dwellings tower the pagodas of the Brahmin superstition and bloody idolatry, with here and there a minaret surmounted with the crescent, the sign of the Turkish Mahommedan. No sound of a church-going bell is heard in that city, although the day is that of the Christian Sabbath; but silently and by stealth, so as not to attract the Moloch of idolatry, see a few Oriental looking forms, with the flowing mantles of the East, steal into a private garden-gate, ascend a back stairway, leave their crimson sandals at the door, and enter a dark room with small windows placed high, near the top of the house. There, at a small table, sits "the teacher," the veteran Missionary from our own beloved America to that land benighted. Reclined on mattresses, after the manner of the oriental clines, are eleven disciples gazing, wrapped, absorbed, and tearful upon "the teacher," whose subdued yet impassioned voice, in their own language, is giving the details of the Crucifixion of Jesus Christ. With the progress of the story each bosom swells, and tears roll down in penitential profusion at the sufferings of the "Man of Sorrows." They taste the symbols of the flesh and blood of Him who died for them; even in that idol-worshipping and cruel city, at the risk of all of their lives, they taste the sacramental feast. But who is that fair and intellectual form, sitting like an angel among the worshippers, breathing the flakes of gold made by the gorgeous beams of an Indian sun pouring through the high windows into that sombre room! She has not yet learned the language of the East, but her snowy bosom heaves with the mighty spirit of the scene; and one in heart, as in emotion and hope, she too partakes with those rescued idolaters, the symbols of a Saviour's love. It is our own, our beloved "Fanny Forrester," and the eleven disciples around her are the revered Judson's "first fruits" to Jesus, in the city of Idols!

See thus the results of wealth, of American dollars, in planting the indestructible seed of our holy religion in the very citadel of Idol worship; seed destined to spring up through storms of persecution and seas of blood into the mighty overshadowing tree of Protection to Human Rights and full and entire "Freedom to worship God!"

[To be continued.]

The Doom of Rome.

The Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel is addressing a series of letters to Rev. Emanuel Feyant, D. D., an Italian missionary in England, on the claims of the Roman Church, its hierarchy, its worship, its doctrine, its sacraments, and its discipline. In the first, Mr. Noel subjects the claims of "the Impostor" to a searching scrutiny, and concludes with the following prediction:

"One thing I will predict, from the signs which are multiplying around us. You may endeavor to warp the minds of your partizans from infancy: you may exercise the influence of the Confessional to prevent the study of the Bible; you may impoverish the education of those within your power; you may compress and chain down the minds of thousands and of myriads; but you will yet see such an insurrection of the Catholic masses of Europe against your priestly sway, that while you are arguing about 'the rock,' you will find your sandy foundations giving way; and while you are proving your possession of the 'keys,' your prisoners, despite of keys and bolts, will burst from your thraldom forever."

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.—When men love and admire us, we think it is for some merit in ourselves, and for a natural working of pride can love them again. It is for the same reason that we love God so little, notwithstanding his superabundant goodness to us in Christ, because it lays us low, strips us of all excellence, and can only be received in a deep sense of our own unworthiness.

THE PAGAN QUESTIONING IN DEATH.

THE OUTWARD DARKNESS AND THE INWARD LIGHT.

O mist of night and blindness, that most hang
Before the life to come!
O tomb! that closes once with iron clasp,
And is forever dumb!

Ships, which go forth upon the boundless main
And perish far at sea,
Are tossed in fragments to the land again—
But naught returns from thee.

No whisper comes from all the generations,
Through thy dark portals thrust;
No breath of life, among the buried nations,
One moment stirs their dust.

No souls beneath, ever struggling into sight,
Heave up the silent ground;
Though the green sod above them is so light—
So frail the crumbling mound.

I listen by the sea, to catch some tone
From spirits that are fled;
There is no voice in its eternal moan—
No voice of all its dead.

The stars look coldly down when man is dying,
The moon still holds its sway;
Flowers breathe their perfume round us; winds keep
Naught seems to pause or stay. [sighing;

Yes! blindly on—o'er all that thinks and feels,
The universe must roll;
Though at such turns its adamantine wheels
Crush out a human soul!

Toward you bright vault of heaven I dare not raise
The cry of my despair,
Lest I should hear the echo which betrays
That all is empty there.

Yet has my soul within the gift of seeing
Beyond this earth and sky;
I feel the immortal instinct of my being—
I know it cannot die!

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Recollections of Bishop Bascom.

BY ONE OF HIS STUDENTS.

It would be impossible for one who intimately knew the Bishop, while living, to write of him otherwise than with feelings of mournful reverence and enthusiastic admiration. So completely did he wind himself into the affections of such, that we suppose their opinions are to be received with a few grains of allowance; yet how much does this speak with regard to his social and moral qualities, as manifested in private life! He had enemies, (this was almost inseparable from such greatness as his) but we recollect no one of them who had known him sufficiently long, or with sufficient intimacy, to justify their honest judgments on his character.

In order thoroughly to understand and appreciate a man, especially such a man as the Bishop, moving amid duties at once exalted, onerous and complicated, we must not observe him only from the ordinary stand-point of the world at large. We must have some acquaintance with his private relations. We must pass from the whirl and bustle and activity, where a thousand minor and more delicate phases of character elude us, into the calmness of the private circle, where the inner life is fully unfolded; where apparent aberrations are removed and real faults extenuated. The public life of a great man is the ocean in storm, where amid the rocking waves are caught but few and uncertain glimpses of his real character; his private life, the quiet lake sleeping embosomed amid the mountains, its surface unscarred by the tempest, its waters limpid and pure, in whose calm depths his image is reflected in its faintest outline. Amid the high duties of public life the mind displays its powers; in the gentle offices of private life the heart reveals its beauty and pours out its sweetness; and, by as much as the manifestations of the latter are more important than those of the former, by so much do they afford better indices of character. To an intimate associate these manifestations are as the open windows of the soul, through which he can behold the thousand harmonizing and conflicting feelings with which every great and earnest mind is disturbed.

To Bishop Bascom these remarks may be said eminently to apply. He who studied his character, only as it appeared in such public duties as his high office in the church required, studied it to little purpose. To such an one, therefore, there often appeared strange contradictions, which, to those better acquainted with with him, needed no explanation. His was a lofty, independent nature that bore with it the consciousness of its own integrity, and, possessed of that consciousness, it seemed careless (perhaps, too much so) whether the world applauded or derided. His public acts were often misunderstood, and, therefore, censured. He took no especial pains to correct the public. It was nothing more than he expected. All great souls before him had been misunderstood, and why should he expect to escape this common penalty of greatness. He knew facts would reveal the truth, and he was patient until time should vindicate him. This, time rarely ever failed to do. He seems to have learned well "to labor and to wait."

Whether his intellectual efforts or his moral character became the subject of unfair and severe criticism, he was equally satisfied to wait until vindicated. When Kepler was ridiculed, even by the learned, for his professed discoveries in astronomy, did he grow impatient and pine? No. How noble was his answer!—"If God has waited five thousand years for one who could comprehend these wonders of his universe, can I not wait one thousand years for one who can appreciate my discoveries?" Such was the spirit of the Bishop. It was not the great object of his life to be appreciated; he had his own great work to do, and he was determined to do it, looking to the consciousness of having done that work for his reward.

Is it not an indication of a great mind that it can preserve itself unruffled and serene amid slander and obloquy? and that it can move on amid the yellings of "Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart," and all the pigmies surrounding it, as heedless of their barking as though they were not? He knew there was a circle of dear and honored friends in whose keeping he was willing to entrust his character. He knew they understood and appreciated his motives.

A distinguished member of the Kentucky Conference once made the following remarks to the writer: "I have been on terms of the most intimate friendship with him for many years, and I have yet no serious fault to find with him. Several times he has seemed environed with difficulties seriously affecting his moral character. Notwithstanding my attachment to him, it seemed necessary that I should give him up. However, I waited, and in due time he would entirely extricate himself, and come out with a character brighter and more unsullied than he ever possessed before." This was the experience of others who knew him well.

Sometimes a cloud hung over him which bid fair to darken his name forever. His friends became anxious; they trembled for him; but, ere long, new facts developed themselves, the cloud passed away, and he stood forth the same pure and glorious man he had ever been. There is a remarkable instance of this which we learned during our acquaintance with him. An enemy, of talent and influence, assailed him in public with accusations serious and bitter. He was present, and was expected to defend himself. He declined making any answer to the charges. His silence was mistaken for an admission of guilt. His friends looked sad and mortified. He simply told them "to wait." In due time all the circumstances of the case were made known. He could not defend himself without making statements which would have ruined his adversary irreparably. To save him the mortification of such a revelation he was willing to bear for a time no small amount of odium. He refrained from pure sympathy when a few words would have sufficed for a complete vindication of himself. How few instances of such forbearance are recorded! How noble the character in which a fruit so commendable was so eminently exhibited! This is but one among many parallel instances known to his friends. He never took pains to give them publicity.

The Bishop was a remarkably poor financier. He was continually embarrassed with pecuniary difficulties. He seems to have thought little on domestic economy; on the true worth and uses of money. Yet, he was by no means extravagant. He cared little for the useless luxuries of life. His difficulties resulted from two things: his improper management, and his frequent charities. During his Presidency of the University every seeker of charity found his way to the Bishop's house, and rarely did one go away unrelieved. He applied his money to every purpose which offered amelioration to the suffering. His was a peculiarly feeling heart, and he entered to its very depths the sights of distress. His soul dwelt too high to be affected very seriously by dollars and cents. He knew it was the lot of the greatest on the earth to be poor, and he did not attempt to make it otherwise with himself.

And has it not generally been thus? How many glorious intellects have been trammeled and almost ruined because it was the fortune (rather say misfortune) of the possessors to be wealthy. Satisfied with what the world often worships, they have neglected to seek that higher and nobler praise which Intellectual eminence secures. Why should such a mind as Bascom's trouble itself about a thing so paltry as wealth! Did he not possess a wealth of intellect within him—a soul glowing with the unquenchable fires of angelic genius! Oh! when he looked within, and beheld the vast intellectual possessions there, what cared he for the accumulation of that paltry trash the world calls money?

Yet his pecuniary embarrassments gave him no small amount of uneasiness. His obligations to meet his engagements pressed heavily upon him, and his frequent inability, from circumstances beyond his control, was the occasion of many bitter moments.

Many would have supposed that a mind of such gigantic compass, so accustomed to dwell in a region of most elevated thought, could with difficulty come down to intimate and pleasurable companionship with men of common mould. This arises from a mistaken notion of true greatness. The capacity to comprehend the little is necessarily included in the capacity to comprehend the great. He felt that the lowest had needs as well as the highest. He felt that, however highly endowed, he was a man of like passions with his fellows; that his mission was to them too; to benefit, not only in great deeds, but in gentle words and kind offices—in all those little nameless acts which constitute the elixir of human fellowship. His entire freedom from anything like affectation or haughtiness in private life; his amiable deportment: his pleasant and familiar conversation, by which the inferior forgot his inferiority, and became perfectly easy in his company, afforded occasion of remark to all who met him thus. And thus, those who were thrown into daily association with him learned to love him with an ardor proportionate to the intimacy of that association. If his flaming intellect led captive their admiration in public, his winning address and good heart bound them to him in private with a stronger, a sweeter, and far more enduring ties.

F.

Demopolis, Ala., March 2, 1852.

[To be continued.]

Holy Life.

The beauty of a holy life constitutes the most eloquent and effective persuasive to religion which one human being can address to another. We have many ways of doing good to our fellow creatures, but none so efficacious as leading a virtuous, upright and well ordered life. There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongues of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a degree of hallowed remembrance and associations. The beauty of holiness beaming through the life of a loved relative or friend, is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's ways, and raise up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty or warning. Christianity itself, I believe, owes by far the greater part of its moral power, not to the precepts or parables of Christ, but to his own character. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four brief biographies of the Man of Nazareth has done more, and will do more, to regenerate the world and bring in an everlasting righteousness, than all the other agencies put together. It has done more to spread his religion in the world than all that has ever been preached or written on the evidences of Christianity. [Chalmers.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

St. Peter.

St. Peter was a fisherman by profession. At the period of his call to the apostleship, he was considerably advanced in years, for he was already a married man—first Pope, as the Romanists say he was—for the healing of Peter's wife's mother of a fever was one among the first of Christ's miracles. The Apostle Peter took an active and prominent part in planting churches and spreading abroad the gospel of the grace of God. He had the honor of first preaching the Gospel in its fullness, to his countrymen at Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost. Perhaps the success of St. Peter's Pentecostal sermon was never surpassed by himself, and never equaled by any other from that time to this.

He also had the honor, after he was supernaturally convinced it was the will of God, of preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, at the house of Cornelius, the Roman centurion, on which occasion St. Peter uttered that great and God-honoring truth, "that God is no respector of persons," "and while Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word."

St. Peter is the author of two inspired Epistles. The first, addressed to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia; and the second, without any particularly designated locality, but "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." The Epistles are less argumentative and doctrinal than St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, Ephesians, and the Epistle to the Hebrews, but perhaps more practical and hortatory. They are written with great earnestness and plainness.

It might have been supposed that as St. Peter was one of the oldest and most prominent of the apostles, that he would have been commissioned to write one of the sacred biographies or gospels of his Divine Master; but either because he had so basely betrayed his Lord, or that God deems it best to divide the honors of his kingdom among many, he was never directed to write a Gospel.

Ecclesiastical tradition tells that St. Peter visited Rome in his old age, and suffered martyrdom by crucifixion during the persecution of the bloody and infamous Nero.

In the sacred biographies of our Lord, written by Mathew, Mark, Luke and John, we have several anecdotes of St. Peter incidentally related, which serve to throw great light upon his more prominent and peculiar characteristics. Every man has, no doubt, his own idiosyncracies, but some men's stand out in much bolder relief than others. St. Peter's did. He never said or did any thing by halves—he was none of your non-committal men, who balance themselves astride conflicting opinions until they shall see which will gain the ascendency. No; he expressed himself boldly and without reserve. Peter seemed more impulsive than considerate. He would boldly, impulsively assume positions, that more thought would have shown him were untenable. Impulsive men generally dare to do what more cautious men are afraid to attempt; and though they sometimes do great things, they necessarily often fail. But impulsive men are not without a mission in the world; they are suggestive to slower and more thoughtful men, who by their thoughtfulness work out to a successful consummation the possibilities which the impulsive suggest, but often fail to accomplish. We conclude, then, that the impulsive man is an important element in carrying forward the great ends of human society, the absence of which the thoughtful and pains-taking class could never supply.

But from this digression to Peter: and let us illustrate what we have been saying about Peter's ardent and impulsive character, by reference to several incidents in his history.

St. Mathew tells us that upon the occasion of Christ walking upon the sea, and assuring the startled disciples that it was not an apparition, but himself, their master and friend, that Peter, without a moment's reflection, requested that he might be enabled to walk on the water also; but he had gone but a little way before he began to reflect upon the singular danger of his position; instead of trusting only to the power of his Master, he began to reason and reckon with his fears, and began to sink, and was only saved by committing himself again to his Master, crying "Lord, save me."

At another time, when the Saviour announced the solemn and deeply affecting fact, that he would suffer many things of the elders and chief priest, and be killed and raised again the third day, Peter, without a thought as to the awful and imperative necessity of the death of Christ in order to pardon and eternal salvation, with a natural outburst of human feeling and affection, rebuked his Master, saying, "Be it far from thee, Lord; this shall not be done unto thee." Much in the spirit of one of the kings of Europe, during the middle ages, who, when a priest was descanting upon the solemn tragedy of Calvary, upon the unparalleled agony of suffering love displayed by the Saviour in the midst of indignity and scorn, said: "Holy father, if I had been there with my good knights, it should not have been."

We see the same spirit again, when Christ was washing the disciples' feet; not comprehending the design of the great lesson of humility, he drew back with horror, and said, with his usual haste and boldness, "Thou shalt never wash my feet;" but on the instant that he learned the necessity of the act, he took at once the other extreme, and exclaimed, "Not my feet only, but also my hands, my head."

At the last and solemn supper, when Christ announced the painful and humiliating fact that one of his own disciples and intimate friends would betray him into the hands of enemies, Peter affirmed that although all should be offended, he would not; "if I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise." This he said from the impulse of the most generous and devoted friendship. But he soon found that his self-confidence was sadly misplaced. Peter no doubt learned a lesson of human frailty in his cowardly and ungrateful denial of his Master, which he never afterwards forgot. His repentance was as deep and sincere as his fall had been sad and shameful. Nor was it long delayed, for no sooner had the Master's sad and upbraiding eye turned upon him, than overwhelmed with shame and contrition, he went out and wept bitterly. And afterwards, when thrice interrogated, thrice replied, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." And when the fullness of the heavenly baptism came upon him, how boldly, first of all, did he in the face of the very mob that had cried out concerning his Lord, "Crucify him, crucify him," and in full view of the bloody rocks of Calvary, preach Jesus as the Son of God, the Prince of Peace, and Lord of Glory. And through all life's changing and eventful fortunes, he lived to fulfill the Master's bidding, "Feed my lambs, feed my sheep."

And even through the cruel and shameful agony of death by crucifixion, he was found faithful, and did not in death deny his Lord; but having loved him in life, he loved him still in death, and doubtless now enjoys that "inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled, reserved in heaven for all that are kept by the power of God, through faith, ready to be revealed in the last time."

J. B. WALKER.

New Orleans, March, 1852.

Bunyan and Dante.

Some years since any one who should have ascribed to the "Pilgrim's Progress" higher commendations than that of being a vigorous and whimsical book, would have been set down as either ironical or perverse. Cowper was hardly enough to praise, but not sufficiently so to mention Bunyan, "lest so despised a name should shock this sickliness of taste in instructed readers is happily passed away; and they who have access to the choicest treasures of literature are the first to admit the surpassing invention and fancy of the author of the "Progress," the "Holy War," and the "Life and Death of Mr. Badman." M. D'Israeli calls Bunyan "the Spenser of the people;" but, as it seems to us, there is in this comparison an important difference overlooked. No one forgets the allegories in Spenser, or enters into them with a personal sense of interest or participation. They are exceedingly beautiful, like the finest tapestry, or a series of pictures in compartments; but the pleasure they give is purely a contemplative one; whereas Bunyan strikes us with the force of his convictions, and the realities of his visions. We walk with flesh and blood, in spite of the bold and significant names of our allegorical companions, and our senses, even more than our fancy, are employed in following Christian from the "City of Destruction" to the gate of the Celestial City. We should rather call Bunyan the "Dante of the people." That both composed a "Vision," and employed extra-mundane objects and beings, is not to the purpose; the resemblance between them lies in the activity and the energy of the plastic imagination in each; in making credible, present, and tangible, as it were, their own creations; and mixing and under-propping them by means of those dread realities which the ideas of death and an untried existence hereafter implant in the hearts of all men with a force of conviction that supersedes and transcends experience. Dante and Bunyan, dissimilar in their characters and fortunes, and unequal in knowledge and in genius, have yet so much in common in their several qualities of intellect as to render the "Bedford Tinker" nearer akin than either Eschylus or Milton to the descendant of Caccianguida. [British and Foreign Quarterly.

MAN'S WAYS AND GOD'S WAYS.—A man is circumscribed in all his ways by the providence of God, just as he is in a ship; for although the man may walk freely upon the deck, or pass up and down on the little continent, yet he must be carried whither the ship bears him. A man hath nothing free but his will, and that indeed is guarded by laws and reasons; and although by this he walks freely, yet the Divine Providence is the ship, and God is the pilot, and the contingencies of the world are sometimes like the fierce winds, which carry the whole event of things whither God pleases. [J. Taylor.

THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH.—"Mr. Thompson," said an Irish Catholic in the West to a Presbyterian minister, "Mr. Thompson, here is one thing that I never could understand—who is the head of the Presbyterian Church? You know that I am a Catholic, Mr. Thompson. You know that his holiness, the Pope, is the head of our church. And you know that the King of England is the head of the Episcopal Church. But who is the head of the Presbyterian Church? I never could understand that, Mr. Thompson. Will you be pleased to tell me who is the head of the Presbyterian Church?" "The Lord Jesus Christ!" answered the minister, "the Lord Jesus Christ is the head of the Presbyterian Church." "Do you say so!" exclaimed the Catholic, lifting his hands and eyes, and stepping back. "Do you say so, Mr. Thompson? The Lord Jesus Christ is the head of the Presbyterian Church! Well, Mr. Thompson, there is none better. Catholic as I am, I confess that. There is none better. Thompson, there is none better!!"

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, March 20.

Two Practices That Do Harm.

CRITICISING SERMONS.

The critic upon the sermon just preached is Satan's bird, to take away the word out of the heart. He will seldom be to the hearer a profitable companion—especially for the first few hours after service. He is not the person for you to walk home with from church, if you would get any benefit by going to church. Drive away this bird from you, and all of this feather. Some birds follow the path of armies for the slaughter. This bird follows the footsteps of the 'sower,' and alas, makes much of his labor vain.

When you have been convinced of sin, or comforted, under the ministrations of the pulpit; when you have been strengthened in the "inner man," and wrought up to the holy resolve of walking in newness of life, what benefit does he confer who shows you that the sermon should have been discussed under three heads instead of four: that the plan was faulty, the elocution defective, the style inelegant! Does this help forward the work of the Holy Ghost, and lead you on from hearing these things to the happiness of those who do them! The hallowed influence of the best Gospel sermons may be checked before this cold, irreverent, sneering subtilty. The best frames of the soul are dissipated before it. The mind is left dark, the heart hard.

These criticisms do not always proceed from an enemy, and the more the pity. They are not professedly invidious, or seemingly ill natured. But so it is; they kill off the sermon, and that effectually. Table talk has outdone pulpit talk. The jest, the ill-timed critique has rooted out the last serious impression.

It is well if reaction does not follow counteraction. The solemn performance of God's embassador is brought into contempt, and the hearer begins to feel contempt for himself for having been unduly affected by means inadequate and contrary to scientific rule. He will be on his guard the next time. He will not suffer himself to be led off again. Hereafter, this pulpit cheat, this trick of the sanctuary, as he has learned to esteem it, shall not carry him away! If he feels, there shall be a cause! And henceforth the stubborn rebel is braced, and the hard heart steeled. All this comes of criticising sermons.

CRITICISING PRAYERS.

This eats as doth a canker. Social prayer meetings have been broken up by this unfortunate, yes, wicked spirit of criticising prayers getting abroad among the members. The timid have been quite discouraged by it, and the cross to them rendered unbearable. Others have felt their earnestness balked, and labored under powerful and painful temptation to offer up prayers to the itching ears of the congregation, instead of God. When one comes forth from that privileged place—the concert for prayer—making ridiculous or contemptuous allusions to the broken speech or the lame thought of a brother's or sister's earnest petitions to the Throne of Grace, even the mind of an honest publican must revolt at it. How such things restrain prayer! It is a breach of Christian fellowship; a flagrant violation of the bond of confidence, love and sympathy. And, were it not that such stood perilously in need of the means of grace, the best judgment against them would be a sentence of exclusion from those privileged places, where God's children hold audience with Him, and where He manifests himself to them as He does not unto the world. In the persons of such critics does Satan present himself when the Sons of God appear before Him. Ardent, indeed, must the soul be that does not feel the damper of such a presence.

To say no more; there is an unction concerned in all right preaching and praying, wherein the Father of spirits, that rises far beyond the legitimate sphere of the critic. He has no rules that reach the case. There is a wind that bloweth where it listeth; let him, let all bow before its breath, nor too curiously or profanely inquire whence it cometh or whither it goeth. Might it not be an impiety as well as absurdity were our earthly anatomy to apply her laws to the fiery "cloven tongues" of the Holy Ghost!

THE EFFECT OF GOOD EXAMPLE.—Alabama Conference! look at this.—Two months ago we said: "The eyes of Methodism (every where) were upon you." Here is an example in point. A writer in one of the Advocates of the Church, North, is endeavoring to rouse up the Conference to great deeds in the missionary cause, and thus ends his stirring appeal:

"How long will it be before the Philadelphia Annual Conference, in her missionary appropriations, will emulate the example of the Alabama Conference of the M. Episcopal Church, South, which has recently 'rolled up' twenty-six thousand dollars for this good work!!!! We trust not long."

PERSONAL.—Rev. J. Boyle, D. D., of St. Louis Conference, arrived during the week, and is spending a few days in this city. The Doctor's health is much improved by his travel southward. He indulges the expectation of soon returning to his charge, Fourth St. Church, in St. Louis, in sound condition. Long may he be spared to Zion.

Louisiana Liquor Law.

"From Maine to Louisiana" used to be a favorite expression of extension with the orators. If any thing had gone from one of these points to the other, it was considered as having traversed our whole country pretty thoroughly. And verily, the liquor law, or a liquor law, and a wholesome one, too, has lately been enacted in both these States. The intermediate points of the Union may therefore be considered as hopefully interested in the subject. The Spirit of Temperance Reform is abroad. From Maine to Louisiana, from Massachusetts to Ohio, the people are roused. They have long been thinking of it and suffering under this EVIL, and now they are talking, writing and voting upon it.

This movement will characterize much of this year's legislation throughout the Union. Why should not society protect itself from the devastations of this destroyer! Counterfeiting and stealing are punished. The murderer is hanged and the felon imprisoned. Shall the rumseller, who is often the cause and source of all these evils together, be the only offender against the health, peace, property and safety of his fellow men, from whom they are powerless to protect themselves?

Quarantines are established for cities, and a plague and pest house are never located in the midst of communities. And yet dramshops may be located at any good "stand," and the attendant evils forced upon a community, whether they will or not! The times of this ignorance of social rights and remedies are passing away.

We confess that when noticing, some months ago, the incipiency of a measure to restrict or prohibit the liquor traffic in this State, our hopes were feeble that any thing could be done so soon, or with so much satisfaction to the temperance party. It seemed too much in advance of the times and public opinion. On the 25th of last month the ACT below given was passed in the Legislature of Louisiana. The bill originated in the Senate, and was presented to that body by the Hon. John McVea. It passed the Senate and House almost unanimously, received the signature of Gov. Walker, and has become a law.

"AN ACT concerning the Licensing of Drinking Houses and the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors in this State.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the passage of this act, the Police Juries of the parishes, the Selectmen of the towns, and Mayor and Aldermen of the cities, shall have the exclusive power to make such laws and regulations for the sale, or prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors as they may deem advisable; and to grant or withhold licenses from drinking houses and shops, as a majority of the citizens and voters of any ward, parish, town or city may so determine by ballot.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, etc., That the State does hereby relinquish all right and title to grant licenses in any parish, town or city in the State, in which said license is not granted by the legal authorities of said parish, city or town; but shall, through the legally constituted officers, collect the State tax license from such licensed drinking houses and shops whenever established, according to existing laws.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, etc., That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the present act be, and are hereby repealed."

This law will not give as much offense as the famous Maine liquor law, nor can as much political capital be made out of it. We think it will work as well as that. It leaves this matter where it ought to be left—in the hands of the people, and subject to the control of those directly interested. No matter how stringent may be the law enacted against this traffic, its provisions would be inefficient where public opinion was not favorable. If any ward, parish, town or city wish to rid themselves of the nuisance of tippling houses, this law affords them an opportunity to do so. If the people have a will for relief, here is a way, and a short, simple, effective one. On the contrary, if they wish to curse themselves, to lay a snare in the way of their children and neighbors, to corrupt their servants and to tax themselves for the support of vice, they are at liberty to do so.

We shall look with much interest for the first local action under this law. It will be an honor worth bearing that will be awarded to the parish, ward or town that takes the lead. The Baton Rouge Advocate of the 4th instant, thus remarks upon it:

"We congratulate our Temperance friends and the Order of the Sons generally, on the passage of this excellent and favorable law. The friends of the cause give that zealous and indefatigable advocate of Temperance, the Rev. Mr. Harmon, great credit for the passage of this bill; and indeed, we are told it was mainly to his personal exertions in laying the subject before the members, that it was passed with such unanimity."

PROGRESS OF THE ADVOCATE.—The interest which the members of the Conferences, and the patrons of the paper have displayed and are displaying from week to week, in extending its circulation upon a sound cash subscription basis, is very encouraging to us. As they cheer us on so substantially, we would cheer them on heartily. Our receipts speak well—from every point of the compass. Brethren have our thanks, and while doing theirs so well, we feel bound in conscience to do our duty in giving the Church and world a religious paper, not only acceptable, but useful. Meantime, it will be remembered, while the new ones are being attended to, that the old subscribers, whose subscriptions are running out, are not to be overlooked. We should regret to part with any of those with whom we have gone so pleasantly along through the first hard year.

College Endowment.

The communication in another column, from President Rivers, will be read with a home concern by the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana. These two Conferences are united upon Centenary College, and what they do for the Church and the world, in the cause of a high and liberal Christian education, must be done in this College. United they have ample resources, and the Church and the world have a right to expect much of them. The friends and supporters of this College no longer doubt this one fact—true of all colleges—that an endowment is necessary to perpetuity. And they are moving to secure it. The Mississippi Conference has resolutely undertaken to endow one professorship. By a courtesy as deserved as it will be popular, the Conference have named this the Winans' Professorship. What the Louisiana Conference will call their professorship we are not yet advised. We like the suggestion that this be left to be determined by the donation of a generous sum—say one half the endowment, and let it bear the donor's name.

Lagrange College, Ala., has already gone forward in the matter. A few weeks ago we advised our readers of the movements of President Pierce toward endowing a professorship in Emory College, Ga. And now for Centenary College; we are authorized, as an initial step, to state that a METHODIST of Louisiana (his name shall be forthcoming, and it is a good name,) will be one of the hundred to endow the professorship of Natural Science by giving one hundred dollars each. Are there not ninety and nine others who will respond before the Commencement, in July next?

The Alumni of this College, of whom a goodly number are blessing the land with their labors and usefulness in various honorable professions, might take up this matter, and take it through in quick time. This is a case wherein the children ought to provide for the parent, and not the parent for the children. We should be happy, from week to week, to chronicle success in this affair.

METHODIST PRESS.

REVIVALS.—The W. C. Advocate reports many delightful visitations of grace.

PREACHERS AS PROFESSORS, ETC.—Rev. J. Bayley is writing some excellent articles in the R. C. Advocate on this subject in answer to Rev. G. W. Langhorne. The editor continues his able strictures on Dr. Howell's work.

OBITUARIES.—Our Charleston contemporary refers with just satisfaction to his obituary column, and says:

"It is a fact deeply interesting to us that Dr. Olin, on his death-bed, asked that the obituary column of the Southern Christian Advocate should be read to him. It was the last time he asked for anything to be read to him."

BASTROP ACADEMY, TEXAS.—We learn from the T. W. Banner that Prof. Gabor Naphegyi, a Hungarian exile, has accepted the chair of Natural Philosophy, Languages, [modern, we suppose,] and Chemistry in this academy. The editor speaks highly of his accomplishments, and adds:

"President Hancock certainly deserves all the credit in engaging the services of Pr. N., and will be fully appreciated by the parents and guardians of the students at Bastrop."

LAY MOVEMENT.—The Ch. Ad. and Journal, referring to the very small attendance upon the Philadelphia Convention, which was so respectably headed, and which had been got up at much expense and pains, says:

"On any respectable call made on our membership, to assemble and take into consideration real grievances, a larger result than the above would, we should think, be exceedingly probable. We presume the great public expected a different result. The noise that has been made about the matter, and the sympathy which the movement has found in many quarters, authorized the opinion, among those who did not understand the facts, that the lay members of the M. E. Church would be in motion, and that a revolution in her government might be reckoned upon as a thing of course."

Zion's Herald, from which our extracts of the proceedings of the Convention are made, and which is doubtless one of the "quarters" alluded to above, informs us that:

"The burden of the prayers offered was that the great Head of the Church would guide this movement aright—that the Spirit would inspire it—and that if it be of God it may succeed, but if it be not of God it may come to nought. It would seem, too, that the original movers were actuated not by the disaffection of ministers or members to the M. E. Church. No aspiring, ambitious spirit started the movement for personal power or renown."

And also that—

"Some nervous, excitable spirits in the Convention expressed themselves imprudently—and said that they considered the admission of lay delegates to the General Conference not worth an effort to obtain, unless they could also be admitted to the Annual Conference. Some said that the late division of the Church, North and South, never would have occurred had there been lay delegates in the General Conference: (such a sentiment was received with much clapping of hands.)"

The Philadelphia Christian Advocate, (a new M. E. C. paper, just issued) remarks upon the Convention:

"It is one of the most important ever held since the organization of the Church. The change in the discipline of the Church which it contemplates is very great, and its effects must be of moment, no matter what may be the immediate action of the General Conference."

☞ Our table has a few books, etc., upon it, a notice of which, from a press of other matter, is necessarily postponed.

Centenary College, La.

JACKSON, March 10.

MR. EDITOR: As I am frequently receiving letters of inquiry in reference to Centenary College, suffer me to present the following information to the public:

1. The Sessions invariably commence the first Monday in October; close the last Wednesday in July.

2. Each Session is divided into two terms; the former closes first of March, with the Junior Exhibition; the latter with Commencement exercises at the end of the Session.

3. The College has fine libraries, a good Chemical and Philosophical apparatus, a valuable Mineralogical Cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

4. There is, in connection with the College, a Preparatory Department, efficiently conducted by an experienced Principal, assisted by the Faculty.

5. The entire expenses for Board and Tuition amount to one hundred and sixty-one dollars per Session of ten months.

6. The State possesses permanent interest in the College, as it has the privilege of educating ten students free of charge for tuition.

Editors throughout the State would confer a favor by inserting the above information.

Truly, your friend, R. H. RIVERS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—Rev. Mr. Campbell, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, returns his thanks to the ladies of Morgan St. Church, for distinguished kindness shown him, in his ministerial labors there. We are pleased to hear an intimation that Rev. Mr. C—— intends gathering a congregation in our city, connected with that excellent branch of the church to which he belongs. Doubtless he would succeed well. There is room enough, and gladly would we welcome among us another pure banner of Protestant Christianity.

[Special Correspondence of the Advocate.]

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

WESLEYAN AFFAIRS.

The important Committee on Memorials, appointed by the last Conference, assembled on Tuesday, the 3d inst., and closed its sittings on Friday night last, the 13th inst.

All regards had been for some time converging towards it, and during its session have been fixed upon it. It is undoubtedly the most important committee that has ever been summoned to consult upon the affairs of British Methodism.

Such a crisis has never previously occurred in Methodism. From 1795 to 1797 were years of disturbance and violence—still we find that even during these years of agitation a steady, though small, increase is reported in the minutes, and the new Connection, or Kilhamite party, on their secession after the Conference of 1796, only took away with them some 5000 members. In 1828 and 1829 there was another agitation, the principal and almost only seats of which were Leeds and Southwark, (London) arising out of the famous Leeds Organ-case. But this made no important impression at the time on the Connection at large, though it left behind it a seed and sediment of evil, which operated as a ferment at a later day. In 1835, Dr. Warren made a pretext of the Theological Institution for getting up a third agitation, the legitimate offspring of the second, in conjunction with the political temper of the times. 1792-97 was a period of democratic and revolutionary excitement in general politics; it was at this period that arose the first great Wesleyan agitation, after Wesley's death. 1828-34 was another similar epoch—the epoch of the repeal of the Test and Corporation acts, of Catholic Emancipation, of the French Revolution of July, of British Parliamentary and Municipal Reform. During this period were stored up the materials for agitation and combustion in the Wesleyan body, upon which Dr. Warren and his confederates worked in 1835 with so great effect. But no preceding agitation is to be compared with the present.

The Wesleyan Association, in 1835-6, took away about 21,000 members, including those Protestant Methodists, as they called themselves, who had originally seceded in 1828-9, in consequence of the Leeds case, but who afterwards coalesced with the secession of 1835. Perhaps 8000 or 10,000 more may have left the body, who did not go with the Association. But the actual loss in the present controversy, as calculated from the Conference of 1849 to that of 1852, (to come) can not be estimated at less than probably 90,000 members. After making every allowance for the increased dimensions of our body as compared with former epochs, it will be seen that this is an immensely greater loss than any former one. Our net loss last year, you will remember, was 56,000. There can be no doubt that we shall number still several thousands less at the coming Conference. From about 360,000 members in Great Britain, (Conference 1850) we shall be reduced to less than 300,000. In 1849-50 (the cholera year) although we reported a net increase of about 10,000 members, there can be no doubt that our actual loss by agitation amounted to several thousands.

It was to consult in reference to what was to be done in such a crisis as this that the Committee met to which I have referred. The agitation, it is true, has almost spent itself; but its disastrous effect, not only in numerical deduction, and impaired resources, but still more in wide-spread suspicion and distrust, and, in many places, in sad and deep despondency, still remain, and do not seem likely very soon to pass away.

What are the causes of this condition of things? The immediate and exciting cause is the righteous expulsion of several disappointed and envious men. They were able men, energetic men, unscrupulous and malignant men. They have plied the trade of agitation well. They have known neither remorse, nor pity, nor decency. The principal predisposing causes have been the spread of an evil-eyed democratic and chartist spirit among the masses, prevailing political susceptibility and animosity, and the revolutionary character of the times which have been passing over us. Minor predisposing causes have been injudicious administration (too lax very often, and sometimes too harsh and autocratic) on the part of some of our too perpetually itinerant ministers, ignorance on the part of the people of the laws and principles of the system to which they have attached themselves, and a want of conformity in respect of some of our Wesleyan institutions to the character of the age in which we live, and of the modern generation which fills that age. In particular, the lay influence which exists and operates so powerfully in British Methodism, has not been adequately recognized, or brought out in public view and rightful, authentic exercise, in our existing organization.

Methodism includes a vast amount of lay influence; virtually this possesses all the force and enjoys all the consideration that is desirable. But this has not been made sufficiently apparent in our actual organization. Hence looking at the letter, rather than the working of Methodism, the seeming, rather than the reality, agitation has been able to find in some of the deficiencies of our existing arrangements a poor pretext for the wrongs it has inflicted.

The above are the sentiments of many of the ablest and most attached laymen and ministers belonging to Methodism. What is alleged by such persons, is not that Methodism has been oppressive, or that it has been immovable, far less that it has retrograded; but that it has not adapted, moulded, re-arranged, developed itself with sufficient promptitude, or with a just sagacity, so as to meet the exigencies of these times when all things move with railway speed.

Methodism has not, we say, been stationary. Much has been done during the last fifty years in many departments, by way of organically recognizing and developing lay talents and influence—of providing legitimate modes and channels for their exertion. But still we have too often been a stadium too late in our onward march. We have too often conceded, when it would have been more wise and right to have proffered.

These sentiments were shared by a considerable proportion of the members of the Memorial Committee. They were implied in not a few of the memorials addressed to the preceding Conference, which had been submitted to the consideration of the Committee. There were still, however, a few of our most pious and honored ministers, and a considerable proportion of our best and most respected lay members, who saw no necessity for making any change in Methodism, and even, in some instances, earnestly deprecated any movement in the direction of concession.

Such were the circumstances under which the Committee met in the Centenary Hall. They resolved that their sittings should be strictly private; a wise resolution, and one which no doubt principally contributed to the forbearing, brotherly and perfectly frank and confidential character of the deliberations.

First, the memorials were read, which occupied twelve hours, and after that the best part of nine long and close days were given to the attentive consideration of the matters involved in the important commission entrusted to the Committee. The temper of the meeting was lovely; the mind and spirit of the Lord were eminently present; all spoke with the most complete fullness and unreserve, their innermost sentiments, and all were heard with the most brotherly and indulgent kindness. There reigned a delightful unanimity of heart; and there resulted a wonderful unanimity of judgment.

Dr. Beecham, the ex-President, took the lead in considerable proposals for modification. He, however, and all with him, firmly resolved to maintain intact the true and original principles of Methodism—the peculiar responsibility and (therefore) authority of the pastorate, as the ruling power in the Church; the authority of the District meetings, as representative committees of Conference, possessing, ad interim authority; and the supreme jurisdiction of the Conference, as the collective pastorate. The question of lay delegation was not raised, as there was not a single letter or memorial, private or official, from circuit or from individual, which so much as mooted that point.

The propositions submitted to the meeting by the ex-President, related principally to the constitution and functions of the quarterly Meeting. After a long and minute discussion, they were, with some not unimportant modifications, adopted by the committee. As finally amended, they are substantially as follows:

That the Circuit Quarterly Meeting, for all legal and juridical purposes, be defined to consist of, first, the ministers and supernumerary ministers of the Circuit; second, the Circuit Society and Poor Stewards; third, the Trustees of the Circuit, being members resident in the circuit; fourth, the Leaders of the Circuit; fifth, Local Preachers of three years' full standing.

That all new powers conferred upon the Quarterly Meeting can only be exercised by it as thus defined.

That this defined Quarterly Meeting have free liberty, at the time of the June quarter day, (the last quarter day before the Conference) to memorialize the Conference on any matters of any general connectional interest, or specially affecting the particular circuit to which it belongs.

That this defined Quarterly Meeting be also, [under the presidence (pro hac vice) of the Chairman of the District] constituted a jury of appeal for the re-hearing of any case in which the superintendent minister of the Circuit conceives a particular leaders' meeting to have brought in a false and factious verdict. The sentence is, in all cases, reserved in the hands of the chief pastor, who, however, is bound (according to the law of 1835) to take a week's interval prior to pronouncing, and to consult his colleagues and the principal leaders and friends. In extreme cases of circuit disaffection or rebellion, an appeal from the Quarterly Meeting to the authority of the entire District Meeting is still left to the Superintendent.

The authority of the Minor District Committee, as a court for prompt resort, in case of a charge against a minister, is left untouched, but so far as concerns a member appealed against by a pastor, it is superseded by the above provisions. The memorial law, with its restrictions, is also done away by the above regulations.

In addition to adopting these propositions, the sense of the law of 1794, as to the trust of Trustees, was discussed and defined.

The question of codification received considerable attention, the American Book of Discipline being repeatedly referred to as proving the practicability and desirableness of drawing up a code. Many difficulties however, lie in the way; and all that the committee felt it could do at present, was to recommend the selection and arrangement, in a complete and intelligible form, of the laws immediately affecting members and officers as such.

The method of securing the assistance and concurrence of our circuits throughout the connection, in measures of legislation, was debated at considerable length, and very liberal opinions on this subject prevailed; although few or none thought it would be right to give the circuits, on all matters, an absolute veto on Conference legislation. There was not time, however, to discuss the question fully, so as to bring about a satisfactory agreement in the views of the members of the Committee. All that was done for the present, therefore, was to recommend that all Superintendents be directed to read and explain all new laws in the September Quarterly Meetings, so that the circuits may have a fair opportunity afforded them of considering the law, and, if they think fit, of exercising their constitutional right (granted in 1797) of suspending its operation for twelve months.

Another subject, brought by several speakers before the Committee, was the necessity of strengthening lay influence and circuit representation in the District Meetings. Dr. Beecham himself was anxious some thing should be done to secure this very desirable object, but for want of time to define and mature the details of a plan, this matter lies over for the present.

For the like reasons several other exceedingly important matters are postponed. Among these are the method of securing a yet fuller proportion of lay influence in the Connectional Conference Committees and of connecting all of them, in the way of definite representation, with the lay element in the various District Meetings; and the desirableness of securing an annual concourse of lay gentlemen belonging to all the connectional committees, to meet the President and all the clerical members of committees, for the purpose of mutual intercourse and consultation, and of receiving a formal charge and valedictory from the outgoing President on the evening immediately prior to the opening of the new Conference.

Much was said, too, about providing some public and solemn method of introducing new members into the Church, absent modifying our itinerancy, and appointing "Bishops" with diocesan jurisdiction and adequate powers. "What we want," said one of our D. D.'s, "is government."

But at present we can not see our way clear to recommend any thing on these points.

Dr. Newton was absent from us through ill health; Dr. Bunting was seldom able to be present, and breaks fast; Dr. Dixon was present, in fine temper; so was also Mr. Steward. Dr. Beecham was our leader, and led admirably. George Marsden gave us his blessing; and our excellent Professor, Thos. Jackson, bestowed on us his hearty God-speed. The amiable and learned Dr. Hannah, our President, was in the Chair. Dr. Beecham was large and liberal in his views, yet sound and safe. Among the most resolute reformers present, were the young authors, William Arthur and J. H. Rigg.

In a month or six weeks the committee reassembles, to meet a gathering of principal laymen in one of our central towns. Afterwards their revised and completed Report will be handed to the Conference. I will duly chronicle progress.

February 20, 1852. X. Y.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION.

Before going to press last week a brief and unsatisfactory report of this Convention had reached us. We, however, deferred any notice till the full and correct accounts of the Northern Church papers should be at hand, as they are now.

The Convention met according to appointment on Wednesday, March 3, in the Nazareth M. E. Church, and was called to order about 10 o'clock by T. J. Hamilton, of Kensington, on whose motion Colson Heiskell, of Trinity Church, was called to the chair. Messrs. G. J. Hamilton, of Kensington, and Dr. J. B. Chrisman, of Trinity Church, Phil., were then, on motion of John Huff, of Nazareth Church, appointed secretaries, when the Rev. Dr. Cooper, pastor of Nazareth Church, was called upon to open the Convention with prayer. He commenced by reading the 6th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and after the singing of the 218th hymn, offered up an earnest prayer. The Convention then being organized temporarily, it was—

Resolved, That the Executive Committee of twenty be invited to take seats in the Convention, and to participate in its proceedings.

The mover of the resolution said he believed most of the members of the Committee were delegates to the Convention; but there were some eight who were not, and it was the purpose of his resolution to bring them in. Adopted. It was—

Resolved, That a committee consisting of one from each delegation to be appointed by the respective delegations, and one from the committee of twenty, to be appointed by the Chairman, of this Convention, be appointed to prepare resolutions expressive of the sense of this Convention.

Upon calling the names of persons who had been appointed by their several churches as delegates, the number was ascertained to be 170. Many of these were not present during the Convention. The number of separate churches which reported the appointment of delegates was 46. Of these 23 are in the State of Pennsylvania, 15 belonging to Philadelphia city. The number of churches actually represented in the Convention was about 30. There were but two delegates from New England; and the States represented were Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, and Massachusetts. Three churches in New York appointed delegates—Madison, Vestry Street, and Duane Street.

The Convention, on motion of Prof. Allen, spent the rest of the morning session in devotional exercises.

In the afternoon the Convention was permanently organized by the appointment of Wm. H. Allen, President of Girard College, as President, with Vice Presidents—Messrs. Colson Heiskell, Philadelphia; J. D. Shea, Pittsburg; Samuel Watkins, New York; Jabez Pratt, Boston, Mass.; William G. Lord, Newark, N. J.; N. G. Deal, Washington City; Lewis B. Loder, Brooklyn, N. Y.; F. H. Root, Buffalo; W. P. Tilden, Philadelphia; Prof. Blumenthall, of Carlisle, Pa. Secretaries—J. B. Crisman, Philadelphia; G. J. Hamilton, Kensington; F. S. Gilbert, New York; Saml Norment, Washington City.

Judge Whiteman, of Philadelphia, chairman of the committee to prepare resolutions submitted the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas, this Convention is deeply impressed with the responsibility it has assumed, but is, nevertheless, confidently assured, as the result of its observation and information from various parts of the extended work of Methodism, that the time has fully come when the expediency of change in our church polity is clearly indicated by that Providence which it was always the glory of our church in its early history, to watch and follow;

And whereas, we, as members of that church, feel that our happiness and our usefulness are identified with the prosperity and effectiveness thereof in carrying out the great object of its mission, to spread Scriptural holiness through all lands;

And whereas, we believe that the feature in our constitution which invests the clergy of our church exclusively with legislative and governmental powers and prerogatives is by no means essential to its prosperity; but, contrariwise, very detrimental, furnishing a very prolific cause of murmurings, contentions, and disaffection to our own members, and a bar to the increase which, under other circumstances, would accrue to our church, the thoughtful and considerate in very many instances declining to place their religious interests where they can exert no controlling influence; to say nothing of the want resemblance to other Protestant churches, which, without any exception, recognize the right of the laity to participate in making and modifying the laws by which they are governed; leaving the Methodist [Episcopal the only Protestant church in the United States which refuses the co-operation of the laity in its legislative councils:

And whereas, we verily believe that no only greater effectiveness will be secured by the change sought, a fruitful source of contention and just cause of complaint removed, and the fair proportions and arrangements of our Zion, in comparison with other Protestant churches, stand out in a prominent and advantageous position; but all the financial, benevolent and charitable enterprises growing out of our economy vastly promoted, and a fair and full remuneration to our churches, preachers and their families rendered certain as it ought to be. Therefore

Resolved, That this Convention hereby declares, in its deliberate judgment, that the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to be so amended as to admit of the introduction of lay delegates into the General and Annual Conferences, under such restrictions as shall not conflict with the rights of the clergy in their appropriate ministerial and pastoral duties and privileges, yet so as to secure effectually the voice and influence of the laity in the legislating or rule-making department of the church.

Resolved, That this Convention hereby respectfully petitions the General Conference to give this subject the thought and attention which its importance requires, and in accordance with the spirit and aim of the first resolution, so to modify the Discipline of the church as to provide for lay delegates in our General and Annual Conferences.

Resolved, That with a desire, as well to save the time of the General Conference, as to facilitate the object we seek, we suggest the following general plan, as, in our judgment, fully meets the case:

1. That every circuit or station should be allowed annually, at the last Quarterly Conference for the year or otherwise, to elect one lay delegate (who, by virtue of his election shall be a member of Annual Conference) for every effective minister, in full connection whom such circuits or stations support.

2. That the delegates thus elected join the clerical brethren in an election at such time and in such manner as the Discipline may prescribe in electing delegates clerical and lay in equal numbers to the General Conference.

3. The expense of all the delegates, lay as well as clerical, to be paid as such expenses are now paid, so that the poorest member of our church may be qualified as well as the most opulent.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions and preamble, duly signed and certified by the officers of this Convention, be forwarded to one of the Bishops, respectively, requesting him to lay the same before the General Conference as soon after the opening of the session as he may judge proper.

A motion was made and carried, to take up the first resolution, whereupon it was moved to adopt the resolution. E. Otis, of Chelsea, Mass., moved to amend the resolution by striking out the words, "annual." In support of his motion he remarked that from what he had learned, the desire of the brethren calling the Convention was to secure the voice and action of the laity in the law making department of the Church. He did not fully understand the temper and spirit of the Convention, but he judged that they were really friends of the Church, and only wished, by the proposed movement, to increase its effectiveness. If the object was to reach the spring of action of the Church, it would be necessary to have a voice in the General Conference. The Annual Conferences are not legislative bodies, hence, in this respect, it would be of no use to send delegates to those bodies. They are administrative, to carry out the rules and regulations adopted by the General Conference.

The business of the Annual Conference is exclusively ministerial, as laid down in the section of the Discipline describing that business. If brethren examine it, they will find that the laity have nothing which they can do in the regular business of an Annual Conference. The Annual Conference should appoint lay brethren, a proper number, to aid their ministerial brethren in the committees which have this temporal business in charge. Let them also have a voice in the Conference on the subjects with which they would be intrusted. Thus the time and expense of a large number of lay members of Conference would be saved. This plan, it seems, is pursued by some of the Southern Conferences, and is found to produce admirable results.

Mr. White, of Allegheny City, said the society of which he was a member, passed resolutions which instructed their delegates to vote for the lay representation in both the General and the Annual Conference. The question arises, what is the object of a representation?

If it is to control the appointments—to impose itinerancy and the Episcopacy—then as an individual was opposed to it. If it wanted the Church, in that respect, to remain as she was—to use the same instruments with which she has worked so good. If the aim is to break down the itinerancy, that over Church will assume Congregationalism. The question will be Episcopalism or Congregationalism.

Several speeches were made, and resolutions offered and referred.

The debate was made to embrace the subject of the respective powers and duties of the Annual and General Conferences, and the propriety of lay delegates in each of canvassed by the several speakers, all favoring the sending of lay delegates to the General Conferences, and the only question before us as to the good or ill result of sending them also to the Annual Conferences.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Convention, at about 6 o'clock, on motion adjourned until 7½ o'clock.

The Convention reassembled at the appointed hour, and was opened with prayer. After some other business was dispatched, and a new resolution introduced and referred, the consideration of the resolution under discussion in the afternoon was resumed and continued until adjournment.

THURSDAY.

The Convention reassembled at 9 o'clock, in the Trinity M. E. Church, in Eighth st., being opened as usual with prayer, and the journal read.

Several communications were presented from various churches, some of whom did not send delegates to the Convention, by the Secretaries, most of them sympathising with the design of the Convention, in one or two instances suggesting some plan of operation, and in one instance referring, for the principles which that Church approved, to Dr. Bascom's bill of Mutual Rights, published several years ago, and familiar to many of our readers. In two or three instances, such as St. George's Church, Philadelphia, and St. Paul's M. E. Church, the communications expressed opposition to the object of the Convention; the St. George's, on the ground that according to the call in the address of the Executive Committee of twenty, the door was left open for any one not a regular delegate to attend as a member—thus giving no security for a fair expression of the sentiments of the churches. The St. Paul's brethren objected on the ground that all similar movements, both in Great Britain and in America, had resulted disastrously to the interests of the Church.

After some discussion on other resolutions and substitutes introduced, which were finally referred back to the committee, the Convention resumed the consideration of the first resolution reported by the committee on resolutions yesterday, the question being upon the motion of Mr. Otheman, to strike out of the resolution the term "Annual Conference." The question was called for from various parts of the house.

Considerable and able discussion followed. Mr. Cummings had had the opportunity of frequent intercourse with prominent members of the Southern Church, and had carefully inquired as to their policy; and this policy of lay representation had been found to work admirably as far as it had been adopted. The Southern General Conference, which sat at St. Louis in 1850, resolved, in order to render their operations in temporal affairs more efficient, to authorize the several Conferences of the Church South to take action on the subject of lay representatives, and many of them had adopted schemes growing out of that resolution. The Virginia Conference had acted immediately, and similar plans had since been adopted by the South Carolina, Tennessee and Alabama Conferences, and it all had been found to work effectually. The first effect of this action that had come to them had been the announcement in the Northern papers, of the fact of a large increase in the funds of the Alabama Conference—a much smaller Conference than theirs—[the Philadelphia]—and which had raised upwards of $25,000, nearly $27,000 for Missionary purposes. The fact was doubted at first, and when it afterwards came authenticated, the question was asked, "How has this happened?" and the answer was, "It has been accomplished by the operation of this new system: by the incorporation of the laity and their vigorous, earnest and energetic action into Conference movements." Such results, he had little doubt, would follow this policy every where. In Tennessee the lay representatives were bona fide members of the Conference for all practical purposes, and entitled to vote upon all questions touching the affairs of the Church, except questions relating to the character of the preachers, which the preachers claim the exclusive right to settle among themselves.

[The reader will be struck with some inaccuracies in statement and reasoning here.]

When Mr. C. had concluded, the question on the amendment was called for from various parts of the house, and the call persisted in to the prohibition of further debate, which several gentlemen desired.

Several delegates had come with instruction from their churches to go against any proposition to introduce lay representatives into the Annual Conferences.

In approaching the decision of the question, it was moved that the vote be taken by delegations; but that being refused, a rising vote was called for and resulted, yeas 37, nays 70.

So the amendment was lost.

The question then recurring on the original resolution, it was adopted, with few dissenting.

The Convention adjourned till 3 P. M.

In the afternoon session, after prayer and reading the minutes, Mr. Ashmead, from the Committee "on Resolutions offered," reported the annexed, which were read:

1. Resolved, That those circuits or stations, who sympathise with the action of this Convention, but who have found it inconvenient to send up delegates, be requested to take such action in the premises as will put the General Conference in the possession of their views on this important question.

2. Resolved, That the members of this Convention are now, as they have ever been, strongly attached to the itinerancy and the episcopacy of our Church, and they earnestly recommend the General Conference to adopt any measures that may be found necessary to strengthen the latter, and perpetuate the former, as they regard them both as a great means of our past success, and essentially necessary to our future prosperity.

3. Resolved, That this Convention appoint a committee of ten, to meet in Boston, during the session of the General Conference, whose duty it shall be to lay before said Conference the memorial and resolutions of this Convention, and advocate the objects set forth in them to the best of our ability.

4. Resolved, That the said committee shall also receive all communications of churches not yet heard from, and correspond with all such as may be favorable to the movement, in order to obtain as full an expression of our brethren under the jurisdiction of the General Conference as can be attained, and strengthen thereby their hands in the cause which they are commissioned to advocate.

After attending to financial business, the second resolution, reported on Wednesday, was next taken up and adopted, by a vote of 72 ayes to 2 nays, a division having been called for.

The third resolution was amended by Mr. Cummings, so as to add after the words, "That every circuit or station should be allowed, annually, at the last Quarterly Conference for the year, or otherwise, to elect one lay delegate, (who, by virtue of his election, shall be a member of the Annual Conference,") the words "with the right to vote on every subject except in passing on the character or trial of the preachers." The resolution passed as amended.

The resolutions reported by the committee in the early part of the afternoon's session, and laid on the table, were then called up, considered and adopted.

The blank in the third resolution was filled, after sundry ineffectual motions as to the number, with "ten," viz: Jabez Pratt, Boston, Chairman; Samuel Normeut, Washington, Dr. H. D. Sellers, Pittsburgh, Samuel Ashmead, Philadelphia, Francis H. Root, Buffalo, Samuel Watkins, New York, W. R. Deacon, Burlington, N. J., John Whiteman, Philadelphia, Cornelius Walsh, Newark, N. J., and Lewis D. Loder, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The preamble presented by the committee on Wednesday afternoon, was then taken up and passed.

A communication was read from the Secretaries of a meeting held in St. George's Church, February 14th, disapproving of the object for which this Convention has been convened, and refusing to send delegates, as requested to do in the circular addressed to said church.

A communication was read, containing the proceedings of a meeting held in St. Paul's M. E. Church, on February 21, deeming it inexpedient to appoint delegates to the Convention, and cautioning the brethren of other churches to beware of the object, as by said meeting it was considered dangerous to the harmony and success of the M. E. Church.

The Convention adjourned to meet at 7 o'clock P. M.

The evening session was not well attended. Several gentlemen addressed the Convention upon the subject of the lay representation, and gave their views at length as to the salutary effect the admission of representatives into the Conference would have upon the entire Church.

Mr. Norment, of Washington City, made an extended address to the Convention on the general subject of lay representations, which the Convention requested for publication.

The Convention at a late hour adjourned sine die.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—The Postoffice address of Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, P. E. of Monroe District, is now Vernon, Jackson Parish, La.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

DIED—In this city, 16th inst., of consumption, LEE COCKRELL, of Cooper county, Missouri, aged 24 years.

He had been a Christian and a member of the M. E. Church for the last third part of his life. His end was peace. Kind friends, and those who knew the heart of a stranger," ministered to him in his last sickness, and buried him. A FRIEND.

Advocate Office, March 13.

☞ Persons making remittances will please see that they are acknowledged.

By Post-Master: n. s. H. Tatum, Warrior Stand, Ala.....$ 2 50
By Rev. J. D. Fisher: n. s. R. H. Hudson; n. s. Martha Leverett; n. s. S. A. Fitts; n. s. J. J. Alston; n. s. R. R. Jeffries, Unlontown, Ala. Less $2 50.....10 00
N. S. Rev. Jno M. Baker, Milton, Fla.....2 50
By Rev. W. J. Stafford: n. s. Rev. J. J. Cowart, Clarendon, Ark. Less $2 50.
By Rev. R. Randle: n. s. Miles Ware, Frankville, La; n. s. A. Kennon, Minden, La. (All right.) Less $5 00.
By Rev. H. A. Morse: n. s. E. M. Richardson, Pattersonville, La.....2 50
n. s. Mrs. M. S. Rowman, Jeanneret's, La.....2 50
Mrs M. F. Peebles, New Iberia, La.....2 50
R. F. Patten, Perry's Bridge, La.....2 50
By Rev. P. E. Green: n. s. J. W. Winborne, Monticello, Ms. Less $2 50.
N. S. " W. J. Brown, Jackson, Ms.....50
By Rev. J. W. Hoddord: n. s. James Mink; n. s. Dan. Clewer; n. s. Jno. Garner; n. s. Miss S. A. Cooper, Montevallo, Ala.....10 00
By R. H. Leonard: For self, Talbotton, Ga.....2 50
n. s. Rev. R. W. Bigham, Panama.....2 50
By Rev. D. Duncan: n. s. Benj. Doran, Hampden, Ala; n. s. Joseph Agee, Hampden, Ala. Less $5 00.
By Rev. D. C. Wells: n. s. S. R. Arnold, Smith's Mills, Mi.....2 50
" n. s. W. H. Beck, Grenada, Mi.....2 50
By Rev. C. D. Oliver: n. s. W. H. Smith, Montgomery, Ala. Less $2 50
By E. A. Taylor, P. M.: J. Shaw, Dayton, Ala.; Dr. A. S. Vaughn, Remopolis, Ala.....5 00
By Rev. T. W. Norman: Jos. Sykes, Columbus, Mi. Less $2 50.
N. S. Jno Parker, Middle.....2 50
Judge Clark, N. O.....2 50
N. S. D. J. Watson, N. O.....2 50
Wm Duncan, N. O.....2 50
Robt. Brown, N. O.....2 50
N. S. J. G. Nelson, N. O.....2 50
By Rev. T. W. Manning: n. s. J. H. Vernon; n. s. E. A. Hill, Athens, Mi.; n. s. J. W. Manning, Hope, Ala.; n. s. Wm. Rundle, Bastrop, La.; Capt. H. Tyrone, Splunge, Mi.; Wm. Wise, Quincy, Mi.....15 00
Rev. Wesley Smith, Texas.....2 50
Rev. L. Pierce, balance on acct. of subs.....1 00
N. S. A. Ledlis, Whinlington, Ark.....2 50

MARCH 20.

By Rev A N Ross: n s Maj Lyde, n s Dr Job Taylor, n s Rev Hill, Marshall, n s Mrs Sturdivan, H Hill, Texas. Less $10 00.
By Rev J Hamilton; Mrs E Battle; A Burden; H W Goodman; R A Baker; G Haig; J S Goodman; L Claiborne; C W Nesbitt; T Owen; Rev T J McCoy, Mobile, Ala.....25 00
By Rev D Duncan: n s A H Dicy; n s C W Collins, Person, Ala. (Certainly, not restricted to 20 new subs. We will receive 40, or more).. Less $5 00.
By Rev H A Morse: n s Mrs S Robbins, Pattersonville, La; n s Wm Thorns, Breaux Bridge, La; mrs M A Mills; mrs J T Lee, Vermillionville, La. (The back numbers begin as requested.)
By Rev S Lynch: n s T M Kimble, Hickory Hill, Penn. Less $2 50.
By Rev W F M Linfield: C Mayerhoff, Enterprise, Miss; n s miss Anabelle McRae, H. Creek, Miss.. Less $5 00.
By Rev J W Lancy: n s John M Ragan, n s Chas G Bowen, Macon, Miss; n s Robt P Lancy, Columbus, Ga. Less $7 50.
By Rev W L Patton: n s Geo W Tolson, New Berne, Ala. Less $2 50.
By Rev H Rivers: n s Dr T S Jones, Jackson, La. Less $2 50.
Wm Webb, Pensacola, Fla.....2 50
By Rev J W McClethen: n s J H Randal, Providence, Ala. Less $2 50
By Rev J T Roper: n s Aaron Packer, Missouri, Ala; n s James Tucker, Mt Serene, Ala; n s Joel Hamilter, n s Bryant Bass, Ft. Browder, Ala; and $5 on acct. (All right.).....15 00
By Rev C McClellan: n s A M Given; n s Mary L. Shelby, Talbala, Miss. Less 5.
By Rev. A. T. M. Fly: n. s. Walter Shropshire; n. s. Elizabeth Middleton; n. s. Catharine A. King, Woodville, Mi.; and $2 50 on acct.....10 00
By Rev. C. C. Maybee: n. s. R. R. Powell, Yazoo City, Miss. Less $2 50.
By Rev. T. Moody: Dr. J. H. Webb, Sumterville, Ala; Wm Godfrey, Jones' Bluff, Ala.....5 00
n. s. Mary A. Swilley, Jones' Bluff, Ala. Less $2 50.
By J. Sims, P. M.: n. s. W. B. Barnes, Grenada, Miss. Less $2 50. (The arrangement you propose is satisfactory.)
By Rev. S. M. Boyd: n. s. Moses M. Saunders, Eutaw, Ala.; n. s. Benson Powell, Jones' Bluff.....6 00
By Rev. A. Meehan: n. s. Rev. C. W. Sandal, Dunville, Texas. Less $2 50.
By Rev. W. Moores: n s E. McClure, Lamartine, Ark; A Godbold, Cunchilta, Ark; n s Rev J Beecham, Mt Moriah, Ark. Less $7 50. (The directions will be attended to in A. G.'s paper.
By Rev O M Addison: n s W Williams, Rocky Mill, Texas. Less $2 50.
N S J U Payne, N O.....2 50
By Rev A Skinner: n s Rev N Evans; n s W Woodstock, Greenville Ala. Less $5.
Letter was received and acknowledged.
By A J Wright & Co: Mrs S B Thomas, Jacksonville.....2 50
By Rev Miller, Atchafalaya, La.....2 50
N S Mary Foster, Keachie, La.....2 50
By Rev J H Adams: n s Dan McCook, Cotton thin Ga. Less $50.....2 50
By Post-Master: n s Mrs E A Sterling, Hamilton, Ala.....2 50
By Rev J W Cannon: n s Mrs Sturdivan, H Hill, Texas. Less $10 00.....2 50

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the return of this institution for the week ending on Saturday evening: Admitted, 305; discharged, 315; died, 48; remaining, 1052.

DEATH FROM MORPHINE.—The Coroner yesterday held an inquest on the body of Margaret Moore, residing at 173 Dauphin street, aged 35 years, and a native of England. It appeared that the deceased had been in the habit of using large quantities of Morphine. There was evidently no intention to commit suicide. The jury rendered a verdict that death was occasioned by the introduction of the Sulphate of Morphine in the stomach.

LATER FROM LIBERIA.—Later advices from Liberia state that the Grando, the rebel chief, had been captured, and his forces entirely routed by the troops of the Republic under President Roberts. Grando was about to be executed, that being thought the only means of restoring tranquility and saving the colonists from subjection. Several battles were fought, and a large number of the insurgents were killed. The loss to the Republican forces was seven killed and twenty-seven wounded, nearly all of whom were in a fair way of recovery. President Roberts, in the campaign, learned that the rebels were instigated to revolt by a trader, who had supplied them with ammunition, and had promised them presents, equal in amount to the duty he paid to the Republic, if they would overthrow the Republic. Considerable distress had been occasioned by the war, and appeals are made to the Colonization Societies in this country for relief. Buchanan is the name of a new town started on the coast, which bids fair to become an important port. It is expected to be to Liberia what New York is to the United States. A Brazilian Charge had arrived, and was to be formally received.

FRIGHTFUL MORTALITY.—The Jonesboro' (Tenn.) Democrat, of the 19th ult., states that a few days previous a disease similar to the cold plague broke out in the family of Rev. Wm. Reed, of Washington county, of which three of his children died within a few hours after they were attacked. A fourth child was attacked with this mysterious disease while returning from the funeral, and died shortly afterwards. The Democrat states that Adam Singer's family suffered from the same disease. Also, that others have been attacked with the same malady. The Democrat says: "It is fearful in its operation; in a few hours hurrying those it attacks from earth, in spite of every remedy our physicians have yet prescribed."

DEATH OF MRS. E. J. SHUCK.—Information has been received of the death of Mrs. E. J. Shuck, consort of the Rev. J. L. Shuck, for many years a zealous missionary in China. Mrs. S. died at Shanghai in November last.

A lad ten years of age, named Henry Myers, was run over by the locomotive, at Mansfield, on Monday last. Both his legs were nearly cut off. The little fellow had his legs amputated, but lived only a few hours after. When told by his mother that he must die, he said: "I know it, but I'm not afraid. I went to Sunday school, mother."

The contumacious Queen of Madagascar is reported to be dead. Her death occurred immediately after the defeat and degradation of the flower of her army, in a contest with a belligerent chief in November last. This Queen was a bitter enemy of the Christians and her persecution of the native converts would have been unendurable had it not been for the influence of her son in mitigating their severity.

RIOT IN GRAND RIVER.—The Plaquemine Sentinel learns that a raft has been formed in Grand River, preventing steamboats passing through that channel. It likewise states that if the drift continues running in the same quantity for a week longer, Bayou Sorrel would be choked up—in which case, navigation to the Atchafalaya in that direction will be entirely cut off.

ICE BRIDGE IN MARCH.—On the 3d inst. teams with heavy loads were crossing over the Connecticut river on the ice, at Hartford.

FOR CALIFORNIA.—A large company is forming in Arkansas to start for California from Fort Smith about the 1st of April. The overland route from that point is represented to be an excellent one.

APPOINTMENT.—Hon. John E. Moore has been appointed by Governor Collier, of Alabama, to the seat on the Circuit Court Bench in the Fourth Judicial District, made vacant by the resignation of the Hon. L. P. Walker.

FALLING OFF IN IMPORTS.—The imports at NewYork from foreign ports during the month of February, fall below those of the same period last year, exclusive of specie, to the amount of $2,731,088, and a decline in the value of those thrown upon the market of $1,621,881. The falling off in imports during January and February, is estimated by the Journal of Commerce at 26 per cent.

A LETTER FROM MEAGHER.—A gentleman in NewYork has received a letter from Mr. Meagher, dated Hobart Town, August 28, 1851. Mrs. Mitchel, and her children had arrived there in excellent health. Mr. Mitchel had taken a farm, upon the proceeds of which he intends to support himself and his family. O'Brien and his companions are well, but feel intensely the death-like existence which they are doomed to drag out in that receptacle of drugs and outcasts of English villainy.

EMIGRANTS ON THE ISTHMUS.—Several of the passengers by the Empire City, recently arrived at NewYork, returned from Panama in consequence of being unable to obtain a passage from that port to San Francisco. About 5000 passengers are at present on the Isthmus, and many more are on their way.

THE MINT BILLS.—The California and NewYork Mint bills will soon be reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in the House. The California bill will probably be acted on first, and should it pass, it is generally thought that the NewYork bill will fall. California demands a Mint on the ground that she produces the gold to coin, and about the only objection urged to the demand, is the expense of such an establishment in that country.

THE RIVER AMAZON.—The Admzon, with its tributaries is said to afford an inland navigation up and down of not less than 70,000 miles. The country drained by that river, and the water courses connected with it, is more than half as large as Europe, and it is thought to contain nearly as much arable land within it as is to be found on all that continent. It has resources enough to maintain a population of hundreds of millions of souls.

FRANKLIN.—It is rather a curious incident, that when the Americans sent Dr Franklin, a printer, as Minister to France, the Court of Versailles sent M. Girard, a bookbinder, as Minister to Congress. When Dr. Franklin was told of it, "Well," said he, "I'll print-the Independence of America, and M. Girard will bind it."

THE TRADE OF BOSTON.—The Boston Traveler mentions the following facts of the trade of that city. During the last five months over 85,000 cases of boots and shoes have been shipped from that port. In the same time nearly 120,000 bales of cotton have been landed there. The receipts of coal from Philadelphia alone last year were over 300,000 tons. Everything else used in manufacturing, and required for home consumption, is in about the same proportion.

HUNGARIAN IMMIGRANTS.—A party of twenty Hungarians have reached Cincinnati en route for Missouri to purchase a tract of land to settle upon and cultivate. The party is in charge of Capt. Gratzey, and they have sufficient means to purchase 10,000 acres of land, and all the necessary agricultural implements for cultivation, and to stock the same.

Much better than traveling about the country with a princely suite at the expense of the people.

GOVERNMENT BILLS PROTESTED.—Bills to the amount of $13,000, drawn by officers of the army and navy on the Government, have been sent back from Washington unpaid, because the appropriations made for these departments have been exhausted, and they will not be paid until new appropriations are made.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—This distinguished soldier was wounded in the battle of Corunna, January 16, 1809; was left for dead upon the field of battle, and was reported in the dispatches of Sir John Hope as among the killed. That dispatch was published in the London Gazette of January 24, 1809. Acting upon this intelligence, his brother, Richard Napier, proved the will in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and obtained letters testamentary upon it in February of the same year. On the 5th of the following May Charles James Napier came in person into Court and received back his will, the probate being canceled. Readers are aware how eventful has been the hero's life since then. The remarkable facts above narrated may be found in Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Reports, vol. 1, page 83.

THE NEW YORK HERALD AND THE ART UNION.—The Recorder of NewYork has rendered a decision on the motion made some time since on the part of the counsel for Mr James Gordon Bennett, editor of the NewYork Herald, to quash the indictment found against him for libel upon the "American Art Union." He stated that the association was not a constitutional one; that its aims and practices were not such as the constitution countenanced and as it was therefore an illegal association, the indictment must be quashed.

A LARGE PUBLIC BUILDING.—The new State House at Columbus, Ohio, is to be the largest building of the kind in the United States, and will be much larger than is necessary. It is 304 by 181 feet, and covers an area of 55,056 square feet. That of Pennsylvania is 180 by 80 feet, covering an area of 14,400 square feet, and that of New York, 113 by 90 feet, covering an area of 10,256 square feet.

FROM PORT AU SPAIN.—Advices to the 19th ult. have been received from Trinidad. Sugar grinding had nearly ceased and business was rather dull: owing to heavy rains. American produce was scarce. Good sugars were offered at 31½c., without purchasers. At least six thousand tons of shipping were in port, waiting cargoes.

A venerable gentleman in Virginia remitted to the publishers, last week, payment for his fiftieth year's subscription to the National Intelligencer.

Notice has been given in the Legislature of Ohio of a bill to prevent any further settlement of colored people in that State.

A fellow seven feet high passed through Charleston on his way to California. On being asked why he ventured on so hazardous a journey, he replied, they didn't want him any longer down in Maine.

The boats of the Erie Canal, if they were placed in a line, would reach from Albany to Utica. There are 501 of them.

The Coroner of Philadelphia recently held two inquests in one morning over two bodies of females. The verdict in each being—death from excessive intemperance.

Private letters from London state that after the Bank reduces the price for gold outsiders continued to take it at the previous rates, and it is thought the Bank would recommend its action on the subject.

Hon. Alexander Duncan, several years in Congress from the Cincinnati District, was drowned on the 24 inst., while attempting to draw from the water a duck he had shot a few miles from home.

Contracts have been made in NewYork for the construction of two steamships for the route from San Juan del Sud to San Francisco. They are to be first-class steamers, with walking-beam engines.

N. P. Willis has sailed for Bermuda on a voyage for health. He is accompanied by his father-in-law, Hon. Joseph Grinnell. He has been suffering for some time of a severe pulmonary complaint.

The Arctic brings intelligence that the Emperor of Austria has conferred the order of the Iron Crown upon Chevalier Bulsemann, as a mark of approbation for his course at Washington.

Singers' salaries are high at the Imperial Theatre at St. Petersburgh: Grisi and Mario have each £5000 for a season of six months; Mdme. Medori, who is rapidly rising in her profession, has £2000; and the other principal singers, male and female, are paid in proportion.

It is computed that there were 7,881,457 persons carried on railroads in the United States last year, of which only 88 killed and 41 injured. Most of the killed were employees of the companies. There were 11,957 persons carried for every mile of road.

One hundred and fifty of the pupils of the College Louisle-Grand have been expelled in consequence of a revolt which recently broke out among them on the subject of some punishment inflicted after the banquet of St. Charlemagne.

The Greenfield Gazette says a letter passed through the Post office in that town, directed to

Mr ———
Beau Ball,
Know ham
Shier

Mr. Weed writes from Genoa that, as the portrait of Columbus was destroyed by the recent conflagration in the Congressional Library, the American Consul at Genoa is endeavoring to obtain a copy of the only original in existence, which belongs to a family in that city.

It is mentioned as a remarkable circumstance that within the past month ice made firmly into Lake Ontario, a distance of some three miles from the piers, to the depth of four inches. Such a thing is not in the recollection of the oldest inhabitant, and may not be seen again for a century to come.

A negro on Long Island recently drank a pint of brandy on a wager, when partly intoxicated. After remaining insensible for fifteen hours, he revived and drank freely of cold water, but soon after died. The Coroner's jury returned a verdict that the deceased died from drinking too much cold water.

A party of eight Georgians, hunting in Florida lately, are reported to have bagged in six days 48 deer, 57 turkeys, 3 alligators (one 18 feet 9 inches long,) one panther, and five head of wild cattle. Hanging such game as this is seldom equal to Cumming's bagging an elephant in Africa.

Ex-President Tyler is out with a letter on intervention, in which he intimates that we cannot do too much for Kossuth just now; but thinks that in about twenty-three years, "the oppressed nations may bring their complaints to the bar of the American Senate, as of old to Rome, with the certainty of being heard."

A letter from a passenger by the Empire City, which left NewYork for Havana on the 9th of February, states that during the passage, no less than three emigrating Californians were swept overboard by the heavy seas received on deck, and lost. They were understood to be all from NewYork—names not given.

There are in Paris 879 millinery establishments, of which 867 are managed by females. The houses occupy a personnel of 2717 of workwomen, and the business for Paris alone amounts to nearly 13,000,000f. a year. Under the head of millinery is included the making of bonnets of different kinds, caps, head-dresses for soirees, and fancy articles for the toilette.

The last number of the Cherokee Advocate gives the substance of the President's Message in verse, after the manner of the singing geography, adapted to the tune of "The Whistling Wag." The editor says that their documents are not to be prosy, and he has employed a competent poet for the accommodation of that large portion of the public, which is drilled at these annual recitations in their usual shape."

The Albany Atlas publishes a letter from Gerrit Smith, addressed to Gov. Hunt, of NewYork, in opposition to the opinion expressed by the latter, in his message, favoring the scheme of Colonization. He stigmatizes the Colonization Society as an unparalleled compound of hypocrisy, meanness and malignity, and as the shameless servant of the slave-holders. He contends that it is the right of the colored people to remain in America; that it is needful most of all for the purpose of regaining their self-respect and the respect of others."

Noticing the case of a lady who was said to have bled to death in consequence of the extraction of a tooth (which we have, however, contradicted) Dr. Addington, of Richmond, Virginia, says he never fails to stop the bleeding by packing the alveolus, from which the blood continues to trickle, fully and firmly with cotton moistened in a strong solution of alum and water. He cured a brother physician in this way whose jaw had bled for two weeks.

The moral and physical effects of the present luxurious use of tobacco are to be considered by a preachman tract. The Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association not long since offered a hundred dollars to the author of the best tract on this subject, and appointed Rev. Doctors Cox, Lansing and Skinner, committee of award. The consideration of the moral and physical effects of a native plant so extensively used as it is at present, will be very opportune and valuable.

Roger Sherman was Representative in Congress from Connecticut; his business had been making shoes. John Randolph rose, and with his usual squeaking sound, said, "I should like to know what the gentleman did with his leather apron before he set out for Washington?" Mr. Sherman replied, imitating the same squeak, "I cut it up, sir, to make moccasins for the descendants of Pocahontas."

The receipts of Christy, the negro minstrel, are from $1000 to $1200 per week, and he has realized in the last two years upwards of $100,000.

A gentleman of Edinburgh is said to have recently purchased an antique bust, which purports to be that of Antonio Augusta, the second daughter of Marc Antony and the celebrated Octavia, the sister of Augustus.

The Edgefield (S. C.) Advertiser states that Mr. W. Dorn, in a mine which he works in that district, has realized within one week eight thousand dollars in gold, with the labor of eight hands.

Epes Sargent, Esq., of the Boston Transcript, has in press a work called "The Standard Speaker." It will contain articles in prose and poetry for declamation in schools, academies, lyceums, colleges, newly translated or compiled from the most celebrated orators, authors, and popular debaters, ancient and modern, with a preliminary treatise on oratory and elocution, and notes explanatory and biographical.

LETTERS FROM THE EAST.—The following is an extract from a letter written at Constantinople:

The success of Louis Napoleon has inspired the people of this capital—I speak only of the Franks—with no little surprise. Truly, we live in a century of prodigies; its events carry us back to the palmy days of Roman usurpers and of Asiatic despots. We have just seen the strange spectacle of a great people—"the grand nation"—succumb before the personal ambition of an adventurer, and all the usurpations after liberty crushed in an hour, without scarcely any one venturing to raise a hand in its behalf.

In the papers of this place and of Smyrna, I perceive that Te Deums have been chanted by order of the French Legation on the results of the usurpation of Louis Napoleon. In Smyrna, the consul, with his attaches, the officers of a French brig of war stationed there, and all the French in the place, attended at the ceremony. The brig fired twenty-one guns, and the Turkish fortress of the town responded to it. Here the Legation attended at the church in full uniform, and the Minister, the Marquis de Lavalette, made the French citizens an address on the occasion. This noblemen married the widow of Hobbs, the late American banker of Paris, and has said that a considerable portion of her large fortune has been loaned to Louis Napoleon, who, on becoming President, found himself subject to more expenses for his support than he had previously been.

THE JAPAN EXPEDITION.—It is understood that the large squadron which is about being fitted out under Commodore Perry, with the ostensible and primary purpose of visiting Japan, is also designed to keep an eye on the Sandwich Islands, and to be in readiness to check any movements which any foreign power may be disposed to make against that nation.

The following is the list of vessels composing the squadron: the steamer Mississippi, flag-Captain McClinney, having on board Commodore Perry, commander of the squadron; steam frigate Susquehanna, Captain Buchanan; steamer Princeton, Commander Sidney Smith Lee; sloop-of-war St. Mary's, Commander George A. McIntrider; sloop-of-war Plymouth, Commander John Kelly; sloop-of-war Saranac, Commander William L. Walker; brig Perry, Lieut. Fairfax; store-ship Supply, Lieut. Arthur St. Clair; Napoleon B. Harrison, naval storekeeper, afloat to the East India Squadron.

The Susquehanna, Plymouth, and Saratoga, are already on the Pacific coast, awaiting the arrival of the remainder of the squadron. The St. Mary's is now on the way to Japan, having on board the Japanese sailors, and, on reaching Japan will await the arrival of the squadron. The residue of the squadron will probably get under way in the course of April.

The objects of the expedition, says the Washington correspondent of the NewYork Commercial, are well known. It is designed to effect a landing at, if possible, the capital of Japan, at all hazards; and orders have been given to make various explorations on shore and to leave no efforts untried to open commercial intercourse with that long sealed people. It is supposed the squadron will be absent eighteen months.

BRITISH PENNY POSTAGE.—The number of chargeable letters delivered in the United Kingdom for the year 1851 was 496,500,000, an increase of 13,500,000 over the previous year. Besides these, there were about 91,500,000 franked letters. In 1839 the whole number of letters delivered was 76,000,000.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

BOSTON, March 13.

The ship Prentice has arrived here from Spain, having on board as passengers all the American prisoners sent in Spain from Cuba.

NEW YORK, March 13.

The Asia brings information of the death of the Right Rev Dr Murray, Archbishop of Dublin, who died on the 20th of February.

The French Government had protested against an increase of duties of the products and manufactures of France introduced into British ports. [A previous dispatch made this out as American, instead of British ports. Ed.]

WASHINGTON, March 13

The Senate did not sit to day.

The resolution appropriating $500 000 for the extension of the Capitol was brought up, and after some debate, passed.

BATON ROUGE, March 10.

LEGISLATURE.—The House has appropriated $5000 to the Medical Department of the State University, and $2000 to the Mechanics Institute of NewOrleans, and passed an act reducing fees of Recorder and Registers of NewOrleans.... The Senate has rejected the House bill to abolish Penny Laws. The Swamp Land Bill passed to its third reading.

The Governor has signed the Congressional District Bill.

WHIG CONVENTION.—The Convention organized by the appointment of Walter Brashear, President; T. W. Chinn, Judge Morgan, James Sidley, T. Vaughan and W. Christy, Vice Presidents; J. B. Walton and J. E. Layet, Secretaries.

No other names but Fillmore and Crittenden came before the Convention, and they were carried amid a storm of applause.

The following gentlemen were named as electors: Jacques Toutou, Christian Roselius, J. F. Kenner, B. W. Watterston, Alex. Dechouet, J. Darrett.

Twenty Delegates were selected from each Electoral District, and fifty from the State at large.

Resolutions were adopted declaring the Compromise as a general settlement, and recommending a course of State policy.

One Week Later from Europe—Arrival of the Niagara—Important Commercial News.

HALIFAX, March 17.

The Cunard steamer Niagara arrived here at 4 o'clock this morning, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 6th instant—one week later than received by the Asia. The following is a summary of her commercial news:

LIVERPOOL, March 6.

The Cotton market has presented an active appearance since the departure of the Asia, and the sales of the week embrace 78,000 bales, of which exporters took 9000, and speculators 20,000 bales. Under the active demand which has prevailed, both from the trade and for speculation, prices have further advanced ⅛d, and the official quotations, as fixed last evening, are as follows: Fair Orleans, 5¼d.; Middling Orleans, 5¼.; Fair Uplands 5⅜d., and Middlings Uplands 5d. ₱ lb.

CHARLESTON, Friday, March 19.

The cotton market has been active during the past week, and the sales reach 12,000 bales. The quotations for middling are 7¾ @ 7¾c ₱ lb.

The increase in the receipts at all the Atlantic ports, compared with those of last year to the same date, is 60,000 bales against 42,000 at the close of last week.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 19.

Colonel William S. King, one of the Editors and proprietors of the Charleston Courier, died at 2 o'clock this afternoon, after an illness of fifteen days, of pneumonia.

Adjournment of the Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, March 10, 1852.

Both Houses of the Senate adjourned at half-past 12 o'clock last night. The Governor has refused to sign the Registry Law for NewOrleans, alleging as a reason, that he had not had time to examine it.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, March 17.

Kossuth leaves here this evening in the steamer Alex Scott, bound for NewOrleans.

The river here is rising rapidly, and is now higher than it has been at any time since our city was visited by the flood. Pork is active, and 5000 bbls. Mess have sold today, at $15 ₱ bbl. Lard is selling in barrels at 6, and in kegs at 9c. ₱ lb.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS BY TELEGRAPH.

QUICK PASSAGE.—The ship Joseph Walker has arrived at Liverpool from NewYork in fourteen days.

AFFAIRS AT ROME.—Many arrests have taken place, and confiscation in the Roman Provinces, of persons who celebrated the anniversary of the late Roman Republic.

ENGLAND.—Steps have been taken to revive the Free Trade League, which will commence a new political agitation in case Lord Derby attempts to restore the protective policy.

TREATIES RATIFIED.—Washington, March 12.—The Senate has ratified the treaties made with Persia and with Costa Rica.

THE EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.—New York, March 13.—Advices received from the Hague state that the Japanese, hearing of the Naval Expedition under Commodore Perry, from this country against them, have asked the assistance of Holland to repel the invaders. [Ple.

From Texas.

By the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Lawless, we have dates, as late as the 12th, from Galveston.

CROPS IN THE WEST.—The editor of the Indianola Bulletin, who recently passed through Lavaca county, says the old farmers state that they never had such good stands of corn and cotton. He saw saw some corn, last month, eight inches high. The major portion of the crops has been planted.

As a proof of the advanced state of vegetation, we notice that, some week or two, they had green peas in Victoria.

LEGISLATURE.—The new districting bill. It is thought, will require an extra session of the Legislature.

NEW COUNTIES.—The Austin Gazette states that, at the recent session of the Legislature, three new counties were created, making the whole number of counties in the State ninety-four. The new counties are, Orange, taken from Jefferson county; Burnett, taken from the northwest portion of Travis county, and Hidalgo, taken from Cameron county, on the Rio Grande.

INDIANS.—The San Antonio Ledger of the 29th ult. says, that on the day previous the body of a Mexican youth named Navarro was brought to that city for interment. He, with others, was out on the "Chaeon" for the purpose of hunting wild cattle, and was killed by the Indians while sitting at his camp fire, on the 24th instant, near dark. His surviving companions report that the party of Indians consisted of about fifteen in number. The Chaeon is a water-hole, fifteen or twenty miles West of the Medina river.

The Western Texan says that the last courier in from Laredo passed three dead Mexicans on the route.

FROM SANTA FE AND EL PASO.—Capt. Skillman, the mail contractor, had arrived in San Antonio, sixteen days from El Paso.

The weather in New Mexico had been very fine up to December 27. Not more than two or three inches of snow had fallen.

The Legislature of New Mexico was in session, and had got into a pretty stiff quarrel with the Governor. The Governor and Legislature are also at loggerheads with the Secretary, and each is trying to demolish the other—on paper.

Colonel Sumner, the Commander of the 9th Military Department, has taken active measures to prevent Indian depredations and to punish parties offending against the laws for the protection of the Indians.

The Governor, in his message to the Legislature, alludes to attempts by certain parties to instigate the Pueblo Indians to hostilities, and the Legislature proposed calling on the Executive for the proofs to substantiate the charge.

The Indianola Bulletin learns from Mr Brauns, who came in Capt. Skillman's company, that "the Indians have been troublesome since the removal of the troops from El Paso. They killed seven soldiers in the Jornado desert between El Paso and Santa Fe—caught a party of Mexicans near El Paso, tied their hands behind them, and sent them into the town with their compliments to the authorities. They were driving off stock continually. Business at El Paso, for the want of protections, was entirely stagnated, many merchants are selling at Presidio del Norte, 175 miles below, and design making that the main route to Chihuahua, as it is 200 miles nearer, has more water and grass, and is safer.

The people of the Rio Grande anxiously desire to have a post

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LABOR AND TIRE NOT.... By M. A. Bancroft.

"Work, while the day lasts."

Go! stand upon the beach.
And mark the spreading sail;
Count, if thou canst, the snowy sheets,
Unfolded to the gale;
Work—ere that human freight shall sleep,
Death's darkest slumber, in the deep.

Scout thou gay pleasure weave
Bright rainbows of delight,
A shadow they will surely leave,
Yet now they charm the sight;
Turn thou and pray, for Satan's snare
Is circling round the young—the fair.

Send forth the piercing thought,
And reach earth's distant bound.
Say—canst thou find a spot,
Where sin doth not abound?
Then may'st not: on the farthest shore
Strife doth her deadly arrow pour.

Then let not pleasure's strain,
The voice of duty still;
Try father, God, calls yet again,
Rise! and his word fulfill.
Press boldly on, ere death's dark hour
Shall claim thine all, of mortal power.

Work; in the morning dawn
Begin thy toils anew;
While freshening zephyrs tread the lawn,
And kiss the sparkling dew.
Press forward, like the rising sun,
Nor pause thou till the goal is won.

Perchance the heat of noon
Is gleaming on thee now;
Yet faint not, for the twilight soon
Will dew thy burning brow.
And purer is the rest so sweet,
To those who've trod, with weary feet.

Work; doth the sunset hour
Of rest come on apace?
Then mean the time when labors n'er,
Thou'lt find a resting place;
Toil on, with double vigor now,
E'e twilight darkness shades thy brow.

'Tis well; the stars come forth,
And smile upon the form
That nobly, though with humble worth
Earth's toils have meekly borne;
'Tis finished, and a glory sweet
Shall crown thy rest at Jesus' feet.

Seafield, Conn.

The Haunted Cloister;

OR, THE FRANCISCAN'S CRIME.

Many years ago---it were idle to say how many---a youth of sixteen took the vows in the chapel of Saint Francis. He was a welcome accession to the brotherhood; for, although not nobly born, he brought with him a weighty dower, the produce of the many successful ventures of his deceased father.

His person was tall and graceful, somewhat too haughty for his birth and calling, and strangely betraying his nature. His voice was the most musical of the choir and his eyes as keen as that of the mountain eagle. Such as I have described him did he live for several years among the brotherhood of Saint Francis, pitying some and despising others, feeling and looking as though he held himself to be superior to all.

Perhaps there is no assumption before which the common herd of mankind prostrate themselves more blindly than this; some few murmured, but their murmurs were too studiously subdued to reach the ear of the young monk, and he came and went at length unquestioned; and when they saw him busily engaged far into the night, with a spirit untired by the fasts or penance of the day, poring ever huge volumes, which, to them, were as mysterious as the stars, even the murmurs ceased, for they felt that he was not as one of themselves. Had the prior a missive to forward to the general of the order, it was he who penned it with a ready skill, at which the good old Sacristan, who had hitherto acted as secretary to the brotherhood, crossed himself in wonder.

Needed there a messenger of trust to a distant community, it was ever the strong-limbed and clear-witted brother Henriques who was selected for the duty.

Perhaps in those years the monk was happy; be that as it may, it was the nearest approach to happiness which he was ever fated to know. His proud spirit was satisfied—his supremacy, both mental and physical, unhesitatingly admitted, and his caprices respected. Rigorous and uncompromising in the observance of the rules and even some points of his conventual duties; careless of comfort, when its sacrifice held out the prospect of a prouder gratification; patient under the infliction of the senseless gossiping of the narrow-minded and superstitious brotherhood; zealous at the altar, and indulgent at the confessional, it was no wonder that the supine community of Saint Francis were often glad to depute the young monk to the performance of many of their more difficult duties. Years wore on thus: the studious Henriques had succeeded in possessing himself of the small tower, beneath which was excavated the prison vault of the monastery; and there the faint light of the lamp, by which he pursued his solitary studies, might be seen glimmering far into the night.

It chanced on a sweet midnight, that a special messenger arrived at the monastery, on a mission to the prior, and that his errand required instant attention. The half-awakened and anxious superior instantly dispatched a yawning lay-brother to summon Father Henriques to a conference. The obedient brother obeyed the command reluctantly, for whispers had begun to grow among the community that strange sounds might be heard to issue from the dungeon-vault, by any one who had the courage to listen to them; and one of the monks even asserted that he had seen a slight figure, clad in a loose robe of white, flit past him, and disappear beneath the shadow of the building. The monastic records were searched for an elucidation of the mystery; and a fearful tale, connected with the tower, served at once to give credit to the asserted appearance of the apparition, and to increase ten-fold the terror of the brotherhood. In their good-natured superstition, the monks warned Henriques to abandon the tower, on which it was palpable that a curse rested, which had now begun to work, and which even his piety, although it had become a proverb in the neighborhood, had failed to counteract. The listener crossed himself and whispered a few mysterious tales of the like description, which he had gathered from ancient volumes, and to which the monks lent a greedy ear. He spoke hurriedly and hoarsely, like one whose fears choked his voice; but had his auditors noted the expression of his lip, they might have read there a scorn which belied his words.

Great was the wonder of the trembling group, when, despite all these dark legends, Henriques resolutely declared his determination of remaining in the occupancy of the tower, of searching into its hidden mysteries, and exorcising the spirit of darkness which now dwelt in its recesses. Time wore on; a gloom had gathered on the brow of the monk, and there was a fearful meaning in the silence which he obstinately maintained on the subject of the midnight visitations. "The time is not yet come!" was his universal reply to all the questionings of the brotherhood, and while he grew every day more stern and taciturn, the secret remained unrevealed.

Such was the state of things when, with quivering lips and trembling heart, the lay-brother went forth at midnight to obey the bidding of the prior. The moon, as it has already been remarked, was shining brightly in the heavens, when he sallied forth into the cloister which communicated with the vaulted tower; but ere he had traversed the paved court, a cloud passed over the sky, and the night wind moaned drearily among the recesses of the building. "Sancta Maria, ora pro me!" murmured the old monk, as he glided along; "Sancta Maria, ora pro me!"

Little was the pious man comforted, however, by his hasty prayer, when, on reaching the foot of the tower, he was conscious of a low, wild laugh, which wandered past him on the night-wind. Hurriedly he withdrew his hand from the iron-studded door, and his hair bristled upon his head as he became certain that his senses had not deceived him; but that he really heard the voice of the mysterious father Henriques, in converse with a spirit. He could not distinguish a syllable; but at times the supernatural accents died away in a heart-broken moan, and at times swelled into music. But necessity adjoits of no volition; and brother John remembered the command of the prior, as, with quailing heart, he beat upon the door. There was an instant silence, and in a few seconds it was opened by the stern and silent inmate of the tower.

"How now!" asked father Henriques, as, by the light of the lamp which he held fu his hand he discovered the pale lay-brother. "Speak!"

The trembling monk endeavored to obey, but the words fell disjointedly from his lips.

"What means this?" asked Henriques, sternly. "You look like one who has seen an evil spirit."

"And you, father!" was the rejoinder. "Did not hear you, as I drew near, battling with an of darkness? You spoke—why, I could have that I heard voices."

"Go, in peace," said his companion, haughtily, "your lips have touched the vine cup once too often, or your dreams have been evil. What seek you?"

The inferior told his errand.

"It is a strange hour," said the other, "but I am ready. Return you to the priory; I will but seek my cloak, and follow on the instant."

It was some months after this incident, that the whole brotherhood were aroused at the same hour by wild shrieks and fearful moans, as of one in the last agony—a suffering being battling for the life which was fast ebbing away—a creature warring against the fiat of the Creator. Each raised himself on his narrow pallet to listen; each at once traced the inexplicable sounds to the vaulted tower. Ere long they had all left their beds. The sufferer could be no other than the pious Father Henriques, dying beneath the devilish tortures of the fiend whom he had failed to dislodge from his chosen dwelling. To the timid there is safety in a crowd, and accordingly the monks, who singly would have shrunk from so unholy a contact, ventured forth in a body, with the prior at their head, to succour their suffering brother.

When they reached the tower all was silent; they beat upon the door, but there was no reply; and, gathering courage from curiosity, they at length lifted the latch and entered; still there was no sound, and they ascended the stone stair slowly and cautiously. When they stood before the entrance of the monk's cell they paused for an instant, and then suddenly and hastily pushed back the door.

One glance sufficed to explain all. On the low couch of Henriques lay the newly-made corpse of a female, so young and so lovely, that in her form, death seemed beautiful. Her long dark hair was untressed, and fell about her like a garment, on which her white arms gleamed out with dazzling whiteness. The monk knelt beside her, pale and ghastly; his deep voice breaking forth at intervals as he groaned out, "My wife! my wife! the dream of my existence, the solace of my solitude! couldst thou, indeed, not survive the knowledge of the sacrilege which thou hadst unwittingly committed? Better that thou shouldst have abandoned me when my treachery was first apparent, forgotten me, any thing but died, my wife! my wife!" He did not even look upon the intruders as they entered, but continued gazing with dilated eyes and parted lips upon the corpse. A murmur ran through the brotherhood; the prior approached the wretched culprit with words of vengeance and violence, but he spoke in vain. The punishment of the widowed husband was inflicted by a higher hand, the wretched Henriques was a maniac! They hurled her whom he had loved silently in the dark recesses of the dungeon-vault, and he stood by and laughed, as the earth was heaped upon the body. He was mad for years, a howling, furious maniac, whom neither the scourge nor the chain had power to intimidate; but at length light broke upon his brain, and all the past was but an evil and a dreary dream. He yet remembered how, in one of his secret missions, for the furtherance of some conventual speculation, a young bright vision had crossed his path, and that, regardless alike of his vows and of his duty, he had won thet creature of beauty to his bosom, ere she knew that he was already wedded to the cloister. Memories were with him also of long years of concealment and self-condemnation, patiently and sweetly borne for his sake. Nor had he forgotten how all had at length terminated.

He could trace, in his hours of solitude, the mental outline of a bed of death, unhallowed, unpitied, unsanctified by the holy offices of the church; he could trace—but why should we dwell on the monk's maddening memories?

Ten years of penance and vigil and abstinence followed upon his malady, and then he was again received, a repentant sinner, into the bosom of the church. Life had but one joy left to him; it was, to steal away from the world, and sit in bitter rumination beside the gloomy sepulchre of her whom he had loved and lost.

The Mormons of Salt Lake.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer:

GENTLEMEN—I read, the other day, a remark of yours that you supposed the late news by the way of Oregon, that the Mormons had declared themselves absolved from, and independent of the United States, originated perhaps in the departure of the United States civil authorities from Salt Lake. In this supposition you are in error. I left California on the 16th of December last, and we knew of the rupture of the civil authorities with the Mormons at least eight weeks before that. The trip between Salt Lake and Sacramento is often made in less than two weeks. There is a monthly mail between Portland, Oregon, and Salt Lake; also between Sacramento and Los Angeles and Salt Lake. The communication between the Mormon settlement in Los Angeles and Salt Lake is kept open the whole year round.

Although the Delegate from the Territory of Utah disbelieves the statement brought by the last steamer from California, yet I am satisfied he is in error. I believe every word of it. In fact it does not surprise the people of Oregon and California. We had all been looking for news of open defiance on the part of the Mormons to the authority of the United States. The great body of these people are English Chartists, and the rest are made up of fanatics and enthusiasts of our own country and other parts of the world. I have no hesitation in saying that the statement brought by the last mail will be confirmed, and that the Government will have to take some very decided means to subdue and restrain these people, or they will do immense damage to life and property. Besides their control over a large number of warlike tribes of Indians, their numbers will be greatly augmented by emigration during the ensuing year.

To show that the Mormons are not blind, and that they are already encroaching upon their neighbors, I ask that you will publish the following letter which I find in The Sacramento Times. Very respectfully,

A CALIFORNIAN.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM CARSON VALLEY.—The subjoined letter contains matter of deep import, and, being from a reliable gentleman, commands attention. The statements as to Mormon aggression, as well as concerning the condition and resources of the Valley, are full of interest at this juncture:

CARSON VALLEY, Thursday, Dec. 18, 1851.

Messrs. Editors: I embrace the opportunity of writing which is afforded by the mail under the charge of Mr. Hanson, who is resolved to attempt the mountains, and, if possible, deliver his charge at Sacramento, which I trust he may succeed in doing.

Authentic information has reached us to the effect that large companies are now fitting out at Great Salt Lake for emigrating hither, with the avowed intention of controlling the settlement as part of Utah; and therefore subject to Mormon rule, which causes some excitement and alarm in our community, principally composed of men who regard all identity with Mormonism as disgraceful, and hence to be deprecated. Many have suffered the dying ordeal of those indignities which Brigham Young's creatures are wont to inflict on patriotic citizens who, passing through the Mormon settlement, have dared to avow publicly their attachment to the institutions of our country, and are resolved never to endure a repetition of such here.

The time has at length arrived for a general break up at Salt Lake. The dupes are beginning to discover that they have been misled; the knaves that their victims are bankrupt, and their trade no longer profitable. Some excitement is necessary to the very existence of Mormonism, and Brigham, after insulting the United States officers, would, forsooth, also at the extension of territory; and the interests and honor of our infant settlement are to be made subservient to his ambition; but I trust we are no near California for any such pollution.

Our mines are paying very well indeed, and afford a prospect of continuing profitable. Our valleys abound in the finest possible food for stock at all seasons of the year, and are well adapted to agricultural purposes. Our lakes and streams are plentifully supplied with excellent fish and other game. Our mountains are clothed with magnificent timber for all the purposes of building, etc., and isolated from our neighbors by snowy mountains and desert plains. Nature seems to indicate that we should form a distinct division.

The territory of Utah comprises an area of greater extent than the whole of the New England States, and our numberless valleys comprise an aggregate which would form an extensive State in themselves. Why, then, should we be made dependent upon either Utah or California, when there are such formidable natural impediments to obstruct our identity! [Sacramento Times, Jan. 16.

From Jamaica.

We have received through the mail 6les of the Kingston Journal to the 28th ult.

LEGISLATIVE.—The Legislative Assembly has been occupied with a proposition to send delegates to London to represent the distresses and needs of Jamaica to the British government. Four gentlemen, members of the Assembly, were appointed on the mission. It was then proposed to add Mr. McVicars, a black man, also a member of the Assembly, to the delegation. The other delegates thereupon arose severally in their seats and declined to serve. A delegation is to be sent out by private subscription, and several hundred pounds have already been subscribed.

SMALL POX.—The Journal learns from the Falmouth post that the small-pox continues to rage in that town and throughout the Parish. The number of cases in the Stewart Town District up to the 19th ult., was 767, with 34 deaths. The loathsome disease still prevails in other parts of the Island.

MARINE ACCIDENT.—The Brigantine Concordia while running out of Falmouth harbor was taken "aback" by the sea breeze which set in suddenly, and driven on the reef. She was got off, however, without sustaining material damage.

TURKS ISLAND.—The Turks Island Gazette says, "There is a strong probability that the salt season will commence very early this year. Perhaps it is premature, but so far the weather has been good, and the different cultivations are in an excellent condition."

FORTUNE UNCLAIMED.—A committee of the New York Legislature, after an investigation into the trust funds of the Chancery Court, have reported that there is nearly a million and a half of dollars held in trust; and that the rightful owners of nearly a million of this large sum are unknown. Whose they were in litigation there is there [illegible] to speak. Whose are the [illegible] about!

Arrival of the Arctic.

Protectionist Ministry in England---Dates: Liverpool and London, February 25---Paris, February 24.

The Collins steamer Arctic arrived at New York on the morning of the 8th inst. at 6 o'clock, after a splendid passage of 11¾ days.

At 10 a. m., on the 27th ult., in lat. 51 20, long. 17 04, the Arctic passed steamship Europa, bound East.

ENGLAND.

The Earl of Derby has undertaken to form a new British Ministry. The following is its composition, according to the Times:

THE NEW MINISTRY.—The following has been forwarded to us as a complete list of the new Government, so far as it was formed up to last night:

First Lord of the Treasury and Prime Minister—The Earl of Derby.

Chancellor of the Exchequer and Leader of the House of Commons—Mr. D'Israeli.

Lord Chancellor—Sir E. Sugden.

Lord President—The Earl of Lonsdale.

Lord Privy Seal—The Marquis of Salisbury. (with a seat in the Cabinet.)

Secretaries of State.—For the Home Department—Mr. Wampole.

For the Foreign Department—Lord Palmerbury.

For the Colonial Department—Sir John Packington.

First Lord of the Admiralty—The Duke of Northumberland.

President of the Board of Control—Mr. Harries.

President of the Board of Trade—Mr. Henley.

Postmaster General—The Earl of Hardwicke.

Secretary at War—Mr. Beresford.

Vice President of the Board of Trade—Mr. G. F. Young

Woods and Forests—Lord John Manners.

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (not in the Cabinet)—Sir John Y. Buller.

Master General of the Ordnance—Lord Combermere.

Attorney General—Sir F. Thesiger.

Solicitor General—Sir Fitzroy Kelly.

Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—The Earl of Eglintoun.

Secretary for Ireland—Lord Naas.

The Chancellorship of Ireland has been offered to Lord Chief Justice Blackbourne.

Attorney General for Ireland—Mr. Napier.

Solicitor General for Ireland—Mr. Whitside.

Lord of the Treasury—Marquis of Chandos.

Lord of the Treasury—Mr. Bateson.

Under Secretary of the Home Department—Sir W. Jolliffe.

Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs—Lord Stanley.

Judge Advocate—Mr. Bankes.

Secretary of the Admiralty—Mr Stafford.

Chief Commissioner of the Poor Law Board—Sir John Trollope.

Joint Secretaries of the India Board—Lord Jocelyn and Mr. Henry Baillie.

Under Secretary of the Colonies—Lord Desart.

Joint Secretaries of the Treasury—Messrs. George A. Hamilton and Forbes McKenzie.

Clerk of the Ordnance—Colonel Forester.

The Household:

Lord Steward—Duke of Montrose.

Lord Chamberlain—Lord Exeter.

Master of the Horse—Lord Jersey.

Comptroller of the Household—Hon. Cecil Forester.

Vice-Chamberlain—Lord Worcester.

Captain of the Yeomen of the Guards—Lord De Ros.

The Lords in Waiting will probably be Lords Morton, Byron, Munster, Templemore, Glengall, Galway, Canterbury, Wynford.

Parliament had adjourned over till Friday, the 27th, in order to allow Lord Derby to complete his arrangements. A dissolution of that body will at once take place, to be followed by a new election.

It was proposed at a meeting in Manchester, that on account of Lord Derby's accession to office, the Anti-Corn Law League should be renewed. The movers await Lord Derby's formal announcement of his intentions.

Philip Griffith, Esq., Secretary to the English Legation at Athens, is appointed Secretary at Washington.

The recent brilliant Aurora Borealis was visible throughout England and upon the Continent.

Count Paul Esterhazy has addressed a letter to Lord Dudley Stuart on occasion of the dissolution of the Hungarian Committee. He says, in the course of the letter:

"The dissolution of your benevolent committee is a circumstance as deeply felt by my fellow exiles as the reasons which determined this your resolution, are thoroughly appreciated by all of them.

"You end as you began—as you have acted since, with energetic perseverance—you end with benevolence, a sense of justice and sincerity; you abstain from cherishing in others hopes you cannot give."

In Ireland, the resignation of the Russell ministry has been hailed with unbounded joy. There is nothing especially important in the Irish news.

FRANCE.

M. Bocher, administrator of the Orleans estate, with MM. Delavaigne and Hovyn Tranchere, have been arrested in France for having in their possession insurrectionary documents in favor of the Orleans family.

The Siecle publishes the following definitive list of opposition candidates for Paris: Dupont de l'Eure, General Lamoriciere, General Cavaignac, Carnot, Goudchaux, Hyxio, Eugene Sue, and Ferdinand Lasleyrie.

M. Dupin has declined to stand as a candidate to the Legislative corps for the Nievre, or for any other department.

By decree in the Moniteur, a prize of 50,000 francs is instituted in favor of the discoverer who shall render the Voltaic Pile applicable with economy to industry as source of heat, to lighting, chemistry, mechanics, or medical practice. Scientific men of all nations are admitted to compete during five years for the prize.

The Government has taken measures to suppress the candidatures of exiled ex-representatives.

The President is laying out large sums of money at the Palace of St. Cloud, which is to be one of his summer residences. The triumphal car, with a colossal statue of the Emperor, is ordered to be finished and placed on the Arc de l'Etoile by August 15.

By decree of the President of the Republic, the powers of the members of the Councils-General, Councils of Arrondissement, and Municipal Councils, subject to re-election, are extended to three months.

The Corsaire gives the following picture of Paris at this moment:

Scarcely seven days separate us from the solemn hour of the elections, as M. Berger, by a recent proclamation, reminds us. France is in full peace, as one of the last "communicated notes" of the Moniteur clearly proves. Things are in their normal state at Paris. Money is circulating; people labor in the workshops, laugh in the theatres, and promenade in grand toilette on the Boulevards. The press has only soft phrases like the sighs of the Æolian harp. At the Bourse the Five per Cents have reached 106f. 60c. Every day announces a prosperous situation; we have the return of the fallen ages. And yet—how strange!—notwithstanding these indications of prosperity, Paris does not appear to think more of the elections than of the discovery of the squaring of the circle. We see neither placards of electoral committees nor candidates' circulars, nor voting papers. In the oldest times of the monarchy, the electors called the competitors to explain themselves before them. Who now thinks of these old usages? No one. The most that people know is that there are two or three journalists (MM. Amedee de Cesena and Loula Veron, for example) who think of the honor of sitting in the Palais Bourbon. Whence comes this inexplicable indifference? Philosophers and moralists.—seek! A good deal has been said about the indifference of the Neapolitan people; has it passed the Alps?

PRUSSIA.

Berlin, Feb. 21.—Count Arnim, the leader of the liberal party, friend of Lamartine, Prussian Embassador at Paris during the February revolution, and afterward liberal Minister in Berlin, has been tried for calumniating his Government by his writings. He was convicted and sentenced in a fine. This is the first time a Minister of State has ever been arraigned in Prussia. An appeal is spoken of.

The French Government has remonstrated against the decision regulating the navigation duties on the Rhine without consulting France. The Prussian Cabinet has replied that it was free to France to take part in the negotiation, but that there was no treaty that gave her the right to interfere in the commercial arrangements of Germany.

AUSTRIA.

The Emperor of Austria has conferred the decoration of the Iron Crown upon M. Hulsemann, the Austrian Charge d'Affaires in the United States.

BELGIUM.

Count Alexander Stroganoff is designated for the new post of Russian Minister Plenipotentiary in Belgium, where that power has been hitherto represented by a Consul-General. To facilitate this change, which is connected with the establishment of more intimate relations between the two states, twelve Polish officers, who have served twenty years in the Belgian army, are invited to retire or be placed en disponibilite.

SWITZERLAND.

The elections for the Canton of Tesino have resulted in the return of 58 conservative, and 56 democratic Deputies. Disturbances are reported to have taken place at Lugano, but the statement is contradicted by the Democratic journals.

The papers of the Canton, of Vaud state that France has addressed three demands to Switzerland, viz: one concerning the Jews of Bale Campagne, another on the refugees, and a third on the press, besides some observations on the state of Berne. The Federal Commissioners at Geneva have desired the Cantons on the French frontier to send in lists of all the refugees residing there, and to report all new arrivals.

The Bund, a journal published at Berne, says that the note of France relative to the refugees and to the abuses of the press was supported by England. But this statement appears to be without foundation. The Chargé d'Affaires of England, in a conversation with the President of the Confederation, simply testified the desire of his Government that, in the affair of the refugees, Switzerland, while scrupulously respecting international law, should maintain the right of asylum recognised in every country enjoying liberal institutions. There was no question of the liberality of the press.

The Cabinet of Vienna has no intention of disputing the right of asylum to political refugees in Switzerland. All that it has done has been to remonstrate against the abuse of this right. It respects the principle of neutrality guaranteed to the Helvetic Confederation.

ROMAN STATES.

In spite of the police and French army, the Anniversary of the Republic has been celebrated at Rome by the firing of petards, scattering of flowers and display of Bengal lights.

The Opinione, of Turin, of the 20th, quotes a letter from Rome stating that the French troops are building vast barracks for cavalry in the gardens of the Convent of St. Calistus, in the quarter of Transtevere. "They will cost," it is said, 600,000f. to the city. The same correspondent adds that the French are providing gabions and other material of defence, and that they await reinforcements of cavalry and artillery, as if they expected military events to take place.

TUSCANY.

The publisher of the Arte has been sentenced to one month's imprisonment and a fine of 60 livres for an article containing, in the words of the indictment, "political allusions to events in France."

PIEDMONT.

The Presse, of Paris, says that the French Government had demanded the extradition of three Frenchmen, accused of taking part in the insurrection of December, who had fled to Savoy. The Sardinian Government granted the extradition, but the refugees, warned in time, had escaped from the Sardinian territory.

TWO SICILIES.

A letter from Messina states that shocks of earthquake had been extremely frequent there during the whole month of January, but that their number and intensity increased to a frightful degree on the night of the 30th ult., when the whole population rushed out of doors for fear of the houses falling in. Some old inhabitants who still recollect those of the 5th of February 1783 declared that the shocks commenced a month before in the same manner, and at last ended in the total destruction of the town.

TURKEY.

A letter from Constantinople of the 7th states that the Government has just imposed a personal tax on every Turkish subject, without distinction of religion. The minimum is to amount to 20 piastres (5f. 40c.) a year, and it is thought that the whole amount will reach a sum of 100 millions.

MADAGASCAR.

The Queen, a potentate, died in November last, after the defeat and degradation of the flower of her army in a contest with a belligerent chief.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We find the following in the London Standard of February 23:

There was a great excitement in the city to-day about an affair between Mr. Peabody, the great American banker, and the Bank of England. The question arises out of a dispute of $250,000 in gold, lodged by Mr. Peabody to the Bank. This gold was consigned to Mr. Peabody by his correspondents in America, and he expected to get the value as formerly from the Bank. The Bank refused, because they would take no gold 2 carats below the standard. The question arises, whether they shall be compelled to take that gold at the price as they had been accustomed to heretofore.

We understand that Mr. Peabody does not mean to try the question. His object being to clear himself with his correspondents in America who had consigned the gold to him. But this gives rise to another question. If as we happen to know, the authorities of the Bank are divided in opinion upon the question, and as we chance to have an opinion also, we leave the affair where it is for the present. But we, with reason, know that one of the greatest authorities of the Bank is in favor of Mr. Peabody's claim as a matter of right, although Mr. Peabody himself, not wishing litigation, has, we hear, purchased £12,500 pure gold to remedy the gold under standard which he had deposited in the Bank. We leave the official correspondence between Mr. Peabody and the Bank before us. It is not necessary to refer to it. The correspondence does equal honor to both parties.

The President has received replies to the notification of the new powers conferred on him by the Emperor of Russia, the King of Sweden, the King of Greece, and the Pope.

A decree appears in the Moniteur, declaring that nothing shall be printed in the colonies without the express sanction of the Colonial Government.

The newspaper proprietors have signified their intention of lowering the price of their journals, in consequence of the late Government decrees respecting the Press.

On Friday, seventy-four individuals were ordered to suffer a day's imprisonment for having sold newspapers without being duly authorized so to do.

The restoration of Lord John Russell's Ministry was received in Paris on Tuesday, but it was expected that such an event must soon occur and it made small sensation.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.—A paper from Baron Humboldt on the Mississippi River, has recently been read before the Academy of Sciences of Paris. It states that at Memphis the river rolls away 94 the rate of 13,769,000,232,701 cubic feet a year. The 2,950th part, or 4,660,000,000 cubic feet of this volume is mud. In this mud are found 82 different kinds of microscopic creatures, 44 polygastriques, 37 phitollithaires, 2 polytemnes, and several unformed species. The volume of the Mississippi is nearly as large as that of the Ganges at high water, and two and a half times as large as that of the Nile.

The proportions of solid matter contained in the Ganges are 557 cubic feet in a second; in the Mississippi 147 cubic feet in a second; in the Nile 131 cubic feet in a second. So that the Mississippi is by far the purest river of the three.

Finally, organic life enters in the turbid portions of the river in the following proportions: In the Ganges, animal microscopic life forms from nine-third to one-fourth of the mud; in the Nile, it forms from one-seventieth to one-tenth; in the Mississippi, it forms from one-fiftieth to a thirty-third, giving from, two to four cubic feet of animated mud, which it rolls by Memphis every second.

VESSELS OF OUR NAVY.—There are in the navy of the United States seventy-five vessels; of these 11 are ships of the line, 14 frigates, 22 corvettes and sloops, 4 brigs, 3 schooners, 16 steamers, and 5 storeships. Besides these, there are a number of vessels employed upon the survey of our coast which belong to the Treasury Department, and are under the direction of the Superintendent of the United States coast survey.

Of the vessels composing our naval force proper, 6 are on the stocks, 18 in ordinary, 9 preparing for sea, and 42 in commission. They are of the class as given below:

On the Stocks.—Ships of the line 4, frigates 2.

In Ordinary.—Ships of the line 4, frigates 7, corvettes 3, schooner 1, steamers (both unfit for service) 2, storeship 1.

Preparing for Sea.—Frigate 1, corvettes 3, steamers 3, brig 1, storeship 1. 1 th

In Commission.—Ships o e line (all receiving-ships) 3, frigates 4, corvettes and sloops 18, brigs 3, schooners 2, steamers (all of which are tenders) 11, storeships 3, Total, 75.

AFFAIRS AT SAN JUAN.—The New York Times says:

"We are informed by a correspondent at San Juan, that the American residents at that place held a meeting on the 24th ult., and resolved not to pay the taxes imposed upon them by the British Consul, as agent for the Mosquito King. They then waited upon the Commander of the United States sloop-of-war, laying in the harbor, and asked protection in the event of force being used by the British authorities to secure the payment. Receiving a satisfactory reply, they informed her Majesty's Consul of their determination to resist future collection of the tribute. In reply, he threatened compulsory measures, and left at once for Hinefields, the residence of his Mosquito Majesty. As the future existence of the settlement there seems to be more trouble brewing in that quarter of the Isthmus. There is a secret organization of Americans existing at San Juan, termed 'Gallinippers,' who are said to exert considerable influence there.

"Large quantities of freight are lying at San Juan waiting transportation, and likely to wait for some time to come, as the Vanderbilt line are unable to take any freight up the river in their boats, except that arriving by their own steamers. The water is very low at present, and it is with difficulty that passengers get up the river.

"The harbor was full of craft when the Ohio left on the 25th ult." The following vessels were among the number: United States sloop-of-war Decatur, 15 guns; British sloop-of-war Sappho, 16 guns; Dutch frigate Prince of Orange, 60 guns."

IMPORTANT FROM CHILI.—Seizure of Two American Ships, with Gold Dust—Condition of the Markets.—A letter in the New York Herald, dated Valparaiso, Jan. 26, states that the late revolution has been put down and peace restored, but the writer adds:

"There has, however, recently been a terrible commotion among the State prisoners at the Straits of Magellan. Banished from their homes on account of political and other offences, they got up a revolution there among themselves—killing the Governor, taking the garrison, and declaring themselves free and independent of Chili.

"The American bark Florida, which I mentioned in a former letter as having been chartered by this government, and freighted with a full cargo of revolutionists, was forcibly seized while at the Straits, and is now in possession of the prisoners. Official information has also been given to the American Consul here, that another American vessel, (name unknown,) bound from California to New York, with a large amount of gold on board, had been captured by these renegades, who have sailed with both vessels for parts unknown. There being, unfortunately, no American man-of-war on this part of the coast at present, the English and French Admirals have both dispatched ships in search of these daring pirates, and we hope soon to be advised of their capture.

"A similar outbreak has recently occurred at the Island of Juan Fernandes, and attempts made to take the American bark Eliza, which was freighting with wood there at the time; but she succeeded in putting out to sea before they accomplished their design. This island is at present one of the depots for Chili prisoners.

"Owing to the recent political disturbances here, for fear of being pressed into the army, large numbers of the laboring population have, and are still, emigrating to California. Some 3000 are reported to have sailed from this port alone, within the past three months.

"The best brands of Chili flour are held at $8 50 per bag of 2401bs., which value American flour, under the new tariff, is admitted free of duty.

"The general stock of goods on the market is heavy and accumulating, but an active demand from the interior, as well as in this city, is soon anticipated. Freights continue scarce, and tonnage low rates. The number of American vessels in port is reduced to 9 or 10.

"There are at present from 50 to 60 English vessels in our bay, a portion of which are chartered, and by the end of next month the number will probably decrease to one-half, and we trust that future charters will be at an advance."

A cannon grape shot, weighing about half a pound, was found in a man's skull, which was thrown up by a person digging a grave in St. Andrew's churchyard, Mt. Holly, N. J., a few days since. The ample ramrod in contact with the skull, and hearing something rattle, he picked it up, and found this ball, which had entered just below the eye, and lodged in the back part of the head. The Mirror says "that during the Revolution, portions of the two great armies occupied prominent positions near that town, occasionally exchanging shots with each other; but not coming into general action. It is said, however, that quite a severe battle was fought some three miles to the east of the town, in which contest about 300 were killed, all of whom were buried in the grave-yard above mentioned."

The town of Lagos, on the West Coast of Africa, was almost totally destroye dby the British squadron, on the 26th and 27th of December. The English shipe sustained severe losses, having 30 men killed and 60 wounded. The great casualty was caused by one of the steamers having grounded within range of a battery of 13 guns. These hostilities were undertaken in consequence of the King having refused to ratify a treaty of peace for the suppression of the slave trade. An immense quantity of natives were killed during the two days' fighting, and the King or Chief was deposed and another one substituted.

